THE CRIES of PARIS.—JOHN SPLENDID: THE TALK of a POOR GENTLEMAN, and THE LITTLE WARS of LOEB, by Neil Munro. Chaps. xv.-xviii.—THE TRUTH ABOUT THE CARDINAL'S MURDER, by A. LANG.—"AI KALI!" A STORY of the PLAGUE, by J. G. CROSTHWAIT.—GERMAN COUNTRY LIFE, by G. W. STEVENS.—WITCHCRAFT and CHRISTIANITY, by H. M. DOUGHTY.—TEMAGAMI, by Archibald LAMPMAN.—ADVENTURES of the COMTE DE LA MURTE during the RAIN of TERROR: QUATREMAINS-QUATRE-PAFFES; THE AFFAIR of the CANDLE, by BERNARD CAPES.—TURK-FISHING, by EDWARD A. IRVING.—"LOOKIN' BACK"; "I MIND THE DAY," by MOIRA O'NEILL.—THE LODGER-DR.—THE DEBATE on the ADDRESS.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.
MARCH, 1898.—CONTENTS.

THE DEENNA of a GENIUS. By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. Francis Blundell), Author of "In a North Country Village," "A Daughter of the Soil," &c. Chapters VI.—IX.
"MEMOIRS of a HIGHLAND LADY." By Mrs. ANDREW LANG.
LOVE'S LIFE. } By WALTER HERRIE POLLOCK.
THE HEART of MEMORY. }
THE SECRET of the WILLOW-WREN. By W. H. HUDSON.
SUSPENSE. By ADA SMITH.
THE TYPEWRITING CLERK. By E. A. SMITH.
THE SEASON of the YEAR. By GRANT ALLEN.
AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONGMANS, GREEN & Co., London, Bombay, and New York.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."
"E. A. V.'s Memoir of Mazzini is, we are glad to see, now issued at sixpence, so that it can be procured and read by everyone interested in the development and growth of Democracy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, Fournival Street, E.C.

W. THACKER & CO.'S LIST.

O'BRIEN'S ROUND TOWERS of IRELAND. A New Edition, limited to 750 Numbered Copies at 12s. 6d. net, and the type distributed. With all the Original Illustrations, to which is added a Portrait of the Author, reproduced from MacIise's well-known drawing. [Now ready].
As the demand will probably exceed the number of copies printed, early application is desirable.

THIRD YEAR of PUBLICATION.
The NAVAL POCKET BOOK for 1898.
Founded by W. LAIRD CLOWES, and Edited by L. G. CARR LAUGHTON. With numerous Plans and Full Particulars regarding all the Navies of the World. Corrected to January, 1898. Cloth, 18mo, gilt edges, 6s. net.

HUNTING REMINISCENCES. By A. E. PEASE, Esq., M.P., Author of "The Cleveland Hounds as a Trencher Fed Pack," "Horse Breeding for Farmers," &c. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.
CONTENTS: The Cambridge Drag and Hones of Commona—Steeplechase—The Life of a Hunter—Hounds—Hare-hunting—Fox-hunting—Badger-hunting—Cub-hunting—The Greatest Run I ever saw—&c.
Also a limited Edition de Luxe, with Illustrations.

Tenth Edition, completing Twentieth Thousand.
DEPARTMENTAL DITTIES; and other Verses. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Printed on antique wove paper, and Illustrated by Dudley Cleaver. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

A SERVANT of "JOHN COMPANY"
(The Hon. East India Company). Being the Recollections of an Indian Official. By H. G. KEENE, C.I.E., Hon. M.A. Oxon., Author of "Sketches in Indian Ink," &c. With a Portrait in Photogravure. Illustrated by W. Simpson from the Author's Sketches. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE ROD in INDIA. Being Hints how to obtain Sport, with Remarks on the Natural History of Fish and their Culture. By H. S. THOMAS, F.L.S., Madras Civil Service (Retired), Author of "Tank Angling in India." Third Edition, Revised, with numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 15s.
"A book to read for pleasure at home, as well as to use as a handbook of exceeding value to the angler who may be already there, or intending to visit India."
Land and Water.

THE BEST BREEDS of BRITISH STOCK: A Practical Guide for Farmers and Owners of Live-Stock in England and the Colonies. By J. P. SHELDON and JAMES LONG. Edited by JOHN WATSON, F.L.S. Medium 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.

ROSE of DUTCHER'S COOLLY. By HAMLIN GARLAND. Crown 8vo, cloth, 403 pp., 6s.

WAYSIDE COURTSIPS. By Hamlin GARLAND. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Way-side Courtsips" is without a doubt a book to be read, and its author is a writer to be watched. We have not had such a welcome American arrival since the introduction of Miss Wilkins."—To-Day.

The CAPTAIN of the "MARY ROSE."
By W. LAIRD CLOWES, Author of "The Naval Pocket-Book." Illustrated by the Chevalier de Martini and Fred T. Jane. Seventh Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"The most notable book of the season."—Standard.

BLAKE of the "RATTLESNAKE"; or, the Man who Saved England. By FRED T. JANE. With 16 Illustrations by the Author. A most thrilling tale of life on board a Torpedo Destroyer in time of war. 6s.

THE CITY of GOLD. By E. MARKWICK. With 8 Illustrations by Harold Piffard. Cloth, gilt, 6s.

A WOMAN'S COURIER. By W. J. YEOMAN, Author of "King William III.," "Fugitive Fancies," &c. With 8 Illustrations by Harold Piffard. Second Edition. Cloth, gilt, 6s.

Important Work in the Press.
LOCKHART'S ADVANCE THROUGH TIRAH.
By Capt. L. J. SHADWELL, P.S.C. (Suffolk Regiment).
With Maps and Illustrations from Photographs taken on the spot.
W. THACKER & CO., London.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE.

Translated, with a Commentary, By J. G. FRAZER, M.A., LL.D. (Glasgow), Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, &c. In 6 vols. Illustrated with about 30 Maps and Plans, 4 Photogravure Plates, and upwards of 200 Engravings in the Text. 8vo, £6 6s. net.

NEW NOVEL BY ROLF BOLDREWOOD. PLAIN LIVING: a Bush Idyll. By ROLF BOLDREWOOD, Author of "Robbery under Arms," "The Miner's Right," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ACADEMY.—"A hearty story deriving charm from the odours of the bush, and the bleating of incalculable sheep."

NOW READY.

THE GLOBE CHAUCER. The WORKS OF GEOFFREY CHAUCER Edited by ALFRED W. POLLARD, H. FRANK HEATH, MARK H. LIDDELL, and W. S. McCORMICK. Crown 8vo, uncut edges, 3s. 6d.; Prize Edition, in full gilt, back and top, 3s. 6d.

GLOBE.—"Much time, labour, and skill have been bestowed upon the volume, and the result is a cheap, handy, and trustworthy presentation of Chaucer's Works which will hold the field, we may be sure, for many a year to come."

THE MARCH NUMBER OF

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE

CONTAINS:

- THE DIARY OF A PRIVATE SOLDIER in the CAMPAIGN OF NEW ORLEANS. Edited by Lieut.-Col. WILLOUGHBY VERNER, late Rifle Brigade.
NOVELS OF UNIVERSITY LIFE. By GEO. SAINTSBURY.
A PHILOSOPHER'S ROMANCE. By JOHN BERWICK. Chapters XII.-XIII.
THE EVOLUTION OF THE SIKH SOLDIER. By Major FRASSE.
ON LAKE VYRNWY. By A. G. BRADLEY.
GAVARNI. By THOMAS HOPKINS.
THE FAMILIAR OF MEGAT PENDIA. By HUGH CLIFFORD A GREAT MILITARY BOOK. By DAVID HANWAY.

THE MARCH NUMBER OF

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d.

WITH THE DEAD.

By I. ZANGWILL.

THE RIVER TRIP TO THE KLONDIKE. Illustrated. By JOHN SIDNEY WEBB.

THE MAMMOTH CAVE OF KENTUCKY. By JOHN R. PROCTER. &c. &c. &c.

THE MARCH NUMBER OF

ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s.

CONTAINS:

"LEWIS CARROLL."

By A. F. BROWN.

A YEAR WITH DENISE AND NED TODDLES. Chaps. I.-III. By G. E. JACKSON.

A GIANT CANDLE.

By W. S. HARWOOD.

And numerous other Stories for the Young.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

"Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier will soon have earned the title of the patriotic publishers of Scotland. Their 'Famous Scots' Series is the most typical collection of national biography that any modern publishers have undertaken."

NEW AGE.

THE FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES Of Short Popular Biographies.

The following are now ready:—

- THOMAS CARLYLE. By Hector C. Macpherson.
ALLAN RAMSAY. By Oliphant Smeaton.
HUGH MILLER. By W. Keith Leask.
JOHN KNOX. By A. Taylor Innes.
ROBERT BURNS. By Gabriel Setoun.
THE BALLADISTS. By John Gedde.
RICHARD CAMERON. By Prof. Herkless.
SIR JAMES Y. SIMPSON. By Eve Blantyre Simpson.
THOMAS CHALKERS. By Professor W. Garden Blaikie.
JAMES BOSWELL. By W. Keith Leask.
TOBIAS SMOLLETT. By Oliphant Smeaton.
FLETCHER OF SALTOUN. By G. W. T. Omond.
THE "BLACKWOOD" GROUP. By Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS.
NORMAN MACLEOD. By John Wellwood.
SIR WALTER SCOTT. By Prof. Saintsbury.
KIRKCALDY OF GRANGE. By Louis Barbe.
ROBERT FERGUSSON. By A. B. Grosart.
JAMES THOMSON. By William Bayne. [Just ready.]

The following are in preparation:—

- PRINCIPAL ROBERTSON. By Agnes Gray.
ADAM SMITH. By Hector C. Macpherson.
MUNGO PARK. By T. Banks Maclachlan.
THOMAS REID. By Professor Campbell Fraser.
WILLIAM WALLACE. By Professor MURISON.
DAVID HUME. By Professor Calderwood.
JEFFREY and the EDINBURGH REVIEWERS By Sir HUGH GILZEAN REID.
GEORGE BUCHANAN. By Robert Wallace, M.P.
Post 8vo, antique laid paper, art canvas binding, 1s. 6d. per volume.
Extra gilt binding, gilt top, uncut, 2s. 6d. per volume.
Any Three, 1s. 6d.; volume in case, 5s.
Any Seven, 1s. 6d.; volume in case, 10s. 6d.

"The 'Famous Scots' Series is rapidly carrying out its programme; and each volume as it appears is a fresh proof of the services that can be rendered by such a gallery of national portraits."—Evening Dispatch.

NEW BOOKS.

FATHER JOHN OF THE GREEK CHURCH: an Appreciation, with some Characteristic Passages of his Myetical and Spiritual Autobiography, Collected and Arranged by ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D. Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 2s. [Ready.]

THE SONG OF THE SHEPHERD: Meditations on the Twenty-third Psalm. By R. S. DUFF, D.D., Minister of Free St. George's Church, Glasgow. Post 8vo, art vellum, 2s. 6d. [This day.]

THE INVESTMENT OF INFLUENCE: a Study of Social Sympathy and Service. By NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS, Author of "A Man's Value to Society." Post 8vo, extra cloth, gilt top, 5s. [Nearly ready.]

REUBEN DEAN. By William LESLIE LOW, M.A. With 6 Full-Page Illustrations. 3s. 6d. A Story of Village and University Life in Scotland, and Adventures of the Hero in the Army Medical Service on the Indian Frontier. [Nearly ready.]

GOD'S MEASURE, and Other Sermons. By the Rev. J. T. FORBES, M.A., of Dublin Street Baptist Church, Edinburgh. Post 8vo, art vellum, 2s. 6d. [Next week.]

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS and the PROGRESS OF MAN: a Study in Contemporary Evolution. By W. DOUGLAS MACKENZIE, M.A. Large crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, 21, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

TO BE COMPLETED IN FOUR VOLUMES, Imperial 8vo (of nearly 900 pages each). Price per Volume: in cloth, 28s.; in half-morocco, 34s. VOLUME I. (A—FEASTS) Will be published on FEBRUARY 28th.

A DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE. DEALING WITH ITS LANGUAGE, LITERATURE, AND CONTENTS, INCLUDING THE BIBLICAL THEOLOGY

EDITED BY JAMES HASTINGS, M.A., D.D., With the Assistance of JOHN A. SELBIE, M.A., And, chiefly in the Revision of the Proofs, of A. B. DAVIDSON, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Hebrew, New College, Edinburgh; S. K. DRIVER, D.D., Litt.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, Oxford; H. B. SWETE, D.D., Litt.D., Regius Professor of Divinity, Cambridge. MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK have pleasure in announcing the publication of Volume I. of this Work, A DICTIONARY OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, together with the Old Testament APOCRYPHA, according to the Authorized and Revised English Versions, and with constant reference to the Original Tongues. Every effort has been made to make the information it contains reasonably FULL, TRUSTWORTHY, and ACCESSIBLE. As to FULLNESS. In a Dictionary of the Bible one expects that the words occurring in the Bible which do not explain themselves will receive explanation. The present DICTIONARY more nearly meets that expectation than any Dictionary of the Bible has hitherto been published. Articles have been written on the NAMES of ALL PERSONS and PLACES, on the ANTIQUITIES and ABOLENTS of the Bible, on the ETHNOLOGY, GEOLOGY, and NATURAL HISTORY, on BIBLICAL THEOLOGY and ETHIC, and on the Obsolete and Archaic Words occurring in the English Version. As to TRUSTWORTHINESS. The Names of the Authors are appended to their Articles, and these names are the best guarantee that the Work may be relied on. For the various Subjects those Authors were chosen who had made a special study of that subject, and might be able to speak with authority on it. In addition to the Editor and his Assistant, every sheet has passed through the hands of the three distinguished Scholars whose names are found on the title-page, and the time and trouble they have spent upon it may be taken as a good assurance that the work as a whole is reliable and authoritative. The Maps have been especially prepared for this Work by Mr. J. O. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. The ILLUSTRATIONS are confined to subjects which will be more easily understood by their aid. Among the AUTHORS OF ARTICLES IN VOL. I. are:—Prof. ADENEY, Rev. W. C. ALLEN, Oxford, Prof. J. S. BANKS, Rev. W. E. BARNES, Cambridge, Mr. J. V. BARTLET, Oxford, Prof. J. A. BEET, Prof. W. H. BENNETT, Prof. J. H. BERNARD, Dublin, Dr. F. J. BLISS (Palestine Exploration Fund), Prof. CAMERON, Aberdeen, Principal CHASE, Cambridge, Prof. A. B. DAVIDSON, Prof. W. DAVIES, Nottingham, Prof. W. T. DAVIDSON, Prof. J. DENNEY, Prof. W. P. DICKSON, Prof. S. R. DRIVER, Oxford, Prof. GWATKIN, Cambridge, Principal ELMER HARDING, Rev. R. J. KENDALL HARRIS, Rev. A. C. HEADLAM, Prof. HOMMEL, Dr. E. HULL, Prof. A. R. S. KENNEDY, Prof. LAIDLAW, Prof. MACALISTER, Cambridge, Prof. MARGOLIOUTH, Oxford, Prof. H. WADDY MOSS, Prof. J. H. ORR, D.D., Prof. A. S. PEAKE, Mr. ALFRED PLUMMER, Prof. W. R. RAMSAY, J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, D.D., Prof. S. D. F. SALMOND, Prof. A. H. SAYCE, Rev. C. A. SCOTT, Prof. J. SKINNER, Prof. G. ADAM SMITH, Prof. H. STANTON, Cambridge, Principal STEWART, Mr. Andrew STEWART, Major-General SIR CHARLES WARREN, O.C.M.G., Principal O. C. WHITEHOUSE, Major-General Sir CHARLES WILSON, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., and others.

FULL PROSPECTUS, WITH SPECIMEN PAGES, FROM ALL BOOKSELLERS, OR FROM THE PUBLISHERS.

A CONCORDANCE TO THE GREEK TESTAMENT. According to the Texts of Westcott and Hort, Tischendorf, and the English Revisers. Edited by W. F. MOULTON, D.D., and Prof. A. S. GEDEN, M.A. Crown 4to, pp. 1,040, 28s. in half-morocco, 3s. 6d. net. Bishop Westcott writes: "I can express my judgment on its excellence by saying that I propose at once to take it into the place of the 'Bruder', which has been my constant companion for nearly fifty years." Detailed Prospectus, with Specimen Page, on application.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRITICAL COMMENTARY.

Editors: Dr. DRIVER, Dr. PLUMMER, and Dr. BRIGGS. "The publication of this series marks an epoch in English exegesis." British Weekly.

NEW VOLUMES. THE EPISTLES TO THE PHILIPPIANS and to PHILEMON. By Professor MARTIN R. VINCENT, D.D., Union Theological Seminary, New York. Post 8vo, 8s. 6d.

THE EPISTLES TO THE EPHESIANS and to the COLOSSIANS. By Professor T. K. ABBOTT, Trinity College, Dublin. Post 8vo, 10s. 6d. PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED. DEUTERONOMY. By Professor S. R. DRIVER, D.D. 12s. JUDGES. By Professor G. F. MOORE, D.D. 12s. ST. MARK. By Professor E. P. GOULD. 10s. 6d. ST. LUKE. By A. PLUMMER, D.D. 12s. ROMANS. By Prof. W. SANDAY, D.D., and A. C. HEADLAM. 12s.

THE INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY.

Editors: Dr. SALMOND and Dr. BRIGGS. "A valuable and much-needed addition to the theological literature of the English-speaking nations."—Academy. NEW VOLUMES. CHRISTIAN INSTITUTIONS. By A. V. G. ALLEN, D.D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Cambridge, Mass. Post 8vo, 12s.

A HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY in the APOSTOLIC AGE. By Professor A. C. McFARLAND, D.D., Union Theological Seminary, New York. Post 8vo, 12s. AN INTRODUCTION TO THE LITERATURE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By Professor S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Oxford. A New Edition (Sixth), entirely reset and revised throughout. 12s. PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED. HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE. By Professor G. P. FISHER, D.D. 12s. CHRISTIAN ETHICS. By NEWMAN SMITH, D.D. Third Edition. 10s. 6d. APOLOGETICS; or, Christianity Defensively Stated. By Professor A. B. BAUCE, D.D. Third Edition. 10s. 6d.

* * * Prospectuses giving details of the above Series will be sent post free on application to the Publishers.

Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 38, George Street. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO., LIMITED.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS :  | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| Mr. Bodley's France ... ..   | 221     |
| Marcus Aurelius to Himself... ..   | 222     |
| The Wild Route to Klondike ... ..  | 223     |
| The Two Duchesses ... ..   | 225     |
| Dogmatisms ... ..  | 226     |
| The Friend of Burns and Beethoven ... ..   | 227     |
| BRIEFER MENTION ... ..   | 228     |
| FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..  | 229-232 |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..  | 233     |
| A BALLAD OF READING GAOL ... ..  | 236     |
| EDUCATION FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA: II, THE TRAINING OF SELECTED CANDIDATES ... .. | 236     |
| THE WEEK ... ..  | 237     |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..   | 238     |
| DRAMA ... ..   | 238     |
| CORRESPONDENCE ... ..  | 239     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..   | 240     |
| BOOKS RECEIVED... ..   | 242     |

REVIEWS.

MR. BODLEY'S "FRANCE."

France. By John Edward Courtenay Bodley. (Macmillan & Co.)

IT would be impossible to exaggerate the importance of such a book as Mr. Bodley's admirable study of France since the Revolution. The book has the three essential qualities of a foreigner's study of another land than his own: sympathy; varied and accurate knowledge of his subject; and moderation in praise and blame. A juster view of France does not exist in English; a fuller and more competent treatment of such a complex and abounding interesting subject has never been given us. The tale might be told more brilliantly, for Mr. Bodley has no pretensions as an artist, but it could not be told more decorously. What may remain to be said upon the political situation of France to-day is not worth saying, so lucid and satisfactory is the author's statement of so complicated and tenebrous a matter. There are two kinds of foreign observers we should not wholly trust: the enthusiastic stranger who hastens to adopt an alien nationality and qualify everything about it with an indiscriminate fervour; and the stranger who comes abroad prepared to find everything either a matter of grotesque joke or immoral eccentricity. To judge our neighbours well and wisely we must equally eschew the spirit of rapture, of mockery, and of ill-humour, for all these lead us into errors more grotesque than those which foreign perversity may lead us to deplore. Mr. Bodley, by reason of common-sense, fair judgment, and honest sympathy, is honourably free from these taints.

The liberality of his views may be gathered from the fact that he appears to admire with the same hearty feeling of friendship M. de Mun and Taine, Renan and M. d'Hulst, M. d'Haussonville and M. Ludovic Halévy, his brilliant neighbour in Brie, all as diverse, socially, intellectually, and politically, as it is possible for any six men of the same nationality to be. It is this very largeness of conviction that gives such value to his book. In his quality of stranger he has not been obliged to confine himself to any party, any clique, any caste. Such diversity of relations, above all in the present strenuous and blatant mood of Paris, would be impossible for a native to maintain. You must belong to one camp or the other, bound by an inviolate, if unwritten, law to shout your vilest in belabouring the opposite party, and should both chance to meet on common ground the air suddenly becomes more frozen than that of the Arctic Pole. Only a foreigner may dare express a modest opinion and humbly sue for enlightenment without the immediate fear of being rent or "spurned." Here the fast-vanishing tradition of French courtesy comes to his aid. It is counted part of his picturesqueness to walk tranquilly from one camp to the other with a friendly smile and a candid handshake, and "argue the question" without offence. His very rashness—quality dear to a dashing race—procures him immunity; and if he have good manners and intelligence, of which Mr. Bodley furnishes abundant proof in these two weighty volumes, he is sure to be welcome, however singularly free from bitter prejudice his views.

On the increasing degradation of Paris as a mere cosmopolitan centre Mr. Bodley writes:

"It is mortifying to a patriotic Frenchman, who by his talent maintains the renown of his nation, to see his beloved Paris, with all its past tradition and present capacity, assuming the aspect of a cosmopolitan city of pleasure, and becoming in the eyes of strangers a place like Nice or such-like resort of idlers, where the foreign element leads the fashion, and where the affairs of the country interest no one. For the most conspicuous Parisians, whose exploits are most widely advertised, proclaim that, apart from their lighter relaxations, their gravest ambition is to vie with exotic foreigners in diversions imported from England. Thus accomplished Frenchmen, who would have shone in salons, lament that Paris is becoming an international casino—a sad fate for the brilliant city in which, save in the darkest hours of the Revolution, for over two hundred years, from the time of the Hôtel Rambouillet to the death of M. Thiers, the intelligent commerce of refined men and women had a distinct influence on the history of France and on its place in the world."

Here Mr. Bodley touches the great sore. To-day the nobles of France constitute the unintelligent part of the community. You need only read Gyp's sparkling study of society to measure their intellectual decay. They may not be quite so improper as their novelists portray them, but everything about us furnishes us with complete evidence that they are every bit as inane. The older generation, since that gallant figure of soldier and scholar, the Duc d'Aumale, produced such adorning personalities as MM. de Mun, d'Haussonville, and de Vogüé. But to-day not a single noble of our own generation gives promise by pen or word. The class contents itself with setting an ignoble example to the country, and furnishing copy to the pornographic novelists of the hour. From the good-natured, if mordant, levity of Gyp to the blighting cynicism of Henri Lavedan, a bourgeois outsider whom it honours with its confidence, it has a formidable host of difflamers and judges to answer:

and, so far, it has not lifted a single note of complaint, or striven to revive the old tradition of aristocratic intellect that gave Paris its prestige in Europe.

With unsentimental accuracy the author reduces the glittering legend of the Revolution to its just value. Imagination has for so long been fed upon its false glory, that we have never known that the Bastille was taken for the sake of a few miserable culprits who more than merited their fate. Indeed, most of our historic illusions are based upon legends, either, if coldly examined, in themselves reprehensible, or unjustified by a particle of foundation. But, on the other hand, he is, perhaps, unduly lenient to the Napoleonic legend. But this is part of his laudable moderation. Though a shrewd observer of the endless deficiencies of the French political machinery, Mr. Bodley has no word of excessive blame for any period of its developments. One sees that any other period seems to him better than to-day's because of its confusion and widespread mediocrity. And in a measure this is a safe view. Not that tyranny, accompanied even by a Bonaparte's genius, is to be preferred to the pacific reign of mediocrity, but the contemplation of the latter-day stage of French politics and its deplorable Parliamentary system is a thing to stupefy the very angel of disorder, and drive a sage to desperation. Nothing could be more painstaking, a more excellent study of this sorry subject than Mr. Bodley's. Those whom the conflicting reports of the Press and the bewildering succession of unexplained ministries and party nomenclature leave muddled, will do well to read him, and gather clear and definite information upon such hazy questions as Parliamentary procedure, the composition of the Chamber, the Senate, the electoral system, ministries and parties. The reading will not make them cheerful or give them an exalted notion of the aptitude of the French minds for politics, nor will it convince them that the Republic method of government is the most virtuous; but it will send them to the Chamber of Deputies, warranted not to lose their heads amid its fathomless complications. The Senate he aptly describes as giving the idea "of a retreat for elderly men of education, whose faculties are undimmed, and whose favourite pastime is to meet in a debating society to recite to one another essays on abstract, legal or historical questions, with an occasional reference to topics of the hour."

Turning to more agreeable features in the life of modern France than bigoted reactionaries and intolerant anti-clericals, Mr. Bodley well remarks that

"the lives of French women of the unoccupied upper class are often in admirable contrast to those of the men. Their virtues are of the type usually attributed to the women of the bourgeoisie. They are devoted mothers, excellent housewives, and patterns of piety. The orderliness of their existence and their virile qualities counteract the undisciplined or aimless example of their husbands; and in many a household in the decorative section of society the woman is the superior, morally and mentally, of her lord."

How true this is, in all its significance of statement, can only be felt and understood by foreigners who have dwelt long enough in France on a footing of such intimacy with the people as permits of opportunity to form an opinion of value. The natural intelligence and worth of Frenchwomen of all classes are extraordinary, are such that we are constrained to believe that their presence in that pandemonium of corruption and strife, the political arena, would even serve to cleanse and lower the bedlamite note of intolerance and futile passion. Again he notes a striking feature.

"An agreeable companion of a railway journey, who in admirable language discourses on the European situation or on art and literature, may turn out to be a person of such social surroundings that an Englishman of corresponding situation would express himself crudely on those subjects, and with unrefined pronunciation or accent. Such an experience is an example of the truth that civilisation descends lower in the French nation than in ours."

An experienced French priest who had lived long in London tells him that he remarked the same difference in speech and idea between the French young girl and her British sister in the confessional box: the French girl coming with clear and precise ideas clothed in cultivated language, her mental survey in perfect order; the English girl vague, incoherent, without any notion of method or form of speech. Speaking generally, this is a very good definition of the essential difference between the sex of both races.

Not only does Mr. Bodley give full information upon the ballot, the franchise, the civil service expenditure, the payment of members and ministers, but he shows us in every path how superior the nation is to its government. All over the country, with which he has become so thoroughly familiar, in the course of eight years of diligent observation, he has ever found complete indifference to its politicians. A minister once complained to M. Claretie that while mention is continually made of authors, painters, actors, and fashionable personalities in his Vie à Paris, there is never an allusion to politics or politicians. This omission perfectly reflects the attitude of all France to its squabbling rulers. In England politicians carry their glory along with them everywhere; here it is the actors and authors, poets and painters, who provoke personal enthusiasm and excitement along their favoured path.

Mr. Bodley, without satire or ill-nature, pricks his pen in the Republican legend, painted over every building "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity," and discovers its hollowness. Indeed, the fraternity, as exemplified to-day in the affaire Dreyfus has not changed much from the day Metternich said: "Fraternity, as it is practised in France, has led me to the conclusion that if I had a brother I would call him my cousin." In most things the nation is superior to its political pretensions, but not in any one of these three claims. Liberty in France does not exist in principle any more now than in centuries gone by. Every man who wears a uniform is by nature and instinct a despot. Public and private schools, like the army and every other institution, are centres of inane and unintelligent tyranny. Equality is merely the desire of the lower to be the equal of the higher, with the fixed design to keep his own inferior his inferior still. Titles were never so rife under any monarchy, wealth in France never so vulgarly worshipped. As for fraternity, ask the Jews what they think of the fraternity practised in France to-day.

Mr. Bodley's faith in France's future lies in the appearance of another master, a modified First Consul, to guide her with a firm but implacable hand out of present scandal and disorder. But he sees no indication of the master in any present party. He himself has proved an admirable guide through the difficulties that beset the student of her latter-day history.

MARCUS AURELIUS TO HIMSELF.

Marcus Aurelius Antoninus to Himself. By Gerald H. Rendall, M.A., LL.D. (Macmillan & Co.)

It is a pleasant coincidence by which this fine and scholarly work upon Marcus Aurelius follows hard upon Dr. Rendall's appointment to the headmastership of Charterhouse. The modern schoolmaster is, as a rule, too busy a man to write books; but it is as well that he should at least have written them; should have acknowledged the tradition, made his bow to letters. Nor could a more fitting subject than the great Stoic moralist occupy the thoughts of one whose own influence upon the character of a generation of Englishmen is, in all probability, destined to be profound. The noblest of pagan teachers, we might have added, should be an excellent model for one who has proved an exception to the almost universal clerical monopoly of head-masterships, but on this topic the announcement that Dr. Rendall intends, after all, to take orders dries our pen.

About half the book consists of a new English version, the last of many, of the famous Meditations. To this is prefixed an elaborate essay, in which Dr. Rendall discusses in great detail the origin, development and doctrine of Stoicism, proceeding from this to a study of the finest expression which the school found in Marcus Aurelius himself, and of the remarkable and attractive personality which is revealed in his writing. This introduction is good from beginning to end, but it is the closing sections, biographical and critical rather than speculative, which awake the profoundest interest in the reader, even as, indeed, they seem to have sprung from the deepest enthusiasm in the writer. Of all the Greek philosophies, Stoicism was the one which most nearly approached the dignity of a religion. Certainly it was more than a mere set—more or less consistent—of intellectually apprehended tenets: it made its appeal to the soul and the heart, as well as to the brain; sought to direct the conscience, to answer the obstinate questionings of personality, even in some measure to heal the broken-hearted and succour the afflicted of spirit. And it is in Marcus Aurelius that this more intimate practical side of Stoicism becomes most prominent. Dr. Rendall well points out that in his book we have something very different from the rhetorical exercises of Seneca, or even of Epictetus. The Meditations are written "to himself": they are private jottings, the stored-up wisdom of an old man weary with the burden of a tottering empire, noting down just what seems to him to be most worthy of noting: his final criticism of life, in the solitude of the throne, or in his lonely tent "At Carnuntum," or "Among the Quadi." And the truth of what he has to say is largely independent of its relation to the formal Stoic doctrine. There is no set treatise; but you may find sudden intuitions, flashes and sidelights of wisdom, which are as wise now as they were sixteen centuries ago, because they were learnt not in the schools, but in the bitter apprehension of life itself.

Let us then first learn from Dr. Rendall what manner of person Marcus Aurelius was. As an emperor he was the last and greatest of the Antonines, that princely house which stood between decadent Rome and retribution, and staved off the débâcle "till Western civilisation was Christian, and safe." As a man, his simple laborious life stands out in sharp relief against the Nero and the Caligula whom the earlier empire had known:

"The chroniclers tell us that 'from childhood he was of a serious cast'; that his demeanour was that of 'a courteous gentleman, modest yet strenuous, grave but affable'; that he 'never changed his countenance for grief or gladness.' His bodily health was weakly from the first, and strained by overwork; notwithstanding scrupulous care it was a constant source of suffering and disablement, and in later life power of digestion and sleep wholly gave way. His private bearing and menage were of extreme simplicity. As Cæsar, he would receive at his small private house in ordinary citizen attire; abroad he wore plain woollen stuffs, and when not in attendance on the emperor would dispense entirely with suite or outrunners. In family relations he loved his mother and his children dearly, and grieved deeply at their loss; he condoned the faults of Lucius Verus, and in mourning remembered none of the mortal frailties of Faustina."

His rule was at once just and clement. He set up a temple of "Beneficence," and did his best to realise the Stoic ideal of world-citizenship. He strove and struggled for the empire, to strengthen its borders, and to shore up its ruining centre; but his own lot was pathos and disappointment and disillusion. His portrait is drawn by Julian, amongst those of the Cæsars, as of one "very grave, his eyes and features drawn somewhat with hard toils, and his body luminous and transparent with abstemiousness from food." He had some need of philosophy.

"To stand well-nigh single-handed for reason and for right, to work with worthless instruments; to withhold vain interference and correction; to let second-bests alone; to silence scruples and endure compromise; to crave for peace and spend his years in hunting down Sarmatians; to preside at the tedious butchery of gladiatorial games with the heart that cried, 'How long, how long?' to turn forgiving eyes and unreproachful lips upon the perilous debaucheries of Lucius, and the frailties of Faustina; to live friendless and exiled for his people's sake; to cling to the belief in reason and just dealing against the day-by-day experience of unreason, violence, and greed; patiently, resolutely ἀπέχεσθαι καὶ ἀπέχεσθαι: 'to endure and to refrain'; to exhaust body and soul in the long effort to save Rome; and in return for all this to partake always 'the king's portion—well-doing, ill report'; to be isolated, thwarted, maligned, and misinterpreted—this was no light bearing of the cross."

To attempt to sum up the gospel of Marcus Aurelius in a formula is, of course, misleading. You do not so learn what any great moralist has to teach. Become rather his companion, study his ways of thought, note his bearing towards individual points of conduct as they arise; absorb, appropriate his personality—so shall you be the true disciple. But do not be content with formulating him, for surely he is more than his creed. Two leading features, however, of the Aurelian discipline one may legitimately define. Veracity of intellect, detachment of will; on these he is not weary of insisting. Determine yourself to see things frankly, as they are, stripped of every illusion, sensual or sentimental. Facts cannot be turned aside; better to look them in the face, than to wrap them up or lie about them. And knowing them, know their nothingness, how powerless they are to approach or affect the central thing—yourself. Rigid fate is law of the universe, but then you are you: it is in your hands to dispose of yourself; to see and accept fate, and by submission to overcome it. It is the philosophy of the strong man armed, keeping his goods—that is, his soul is a philosophy tonic, in these latter days, not only for its bracing of the spiritual nerves, but for its "reevaluation of values," its contemptuous weighing and dismissal of the prized "external goods." In the light, then, of these principles, let us venture to string together some typical apothegms of the sage:

"In brief, things of the body are but a stream that flows, things of the soul a dream and vapour; life, a warfare and a sojourning; and after-fame, oblivion."

"Men seek retirement in country house, on shore or hill; and you, too, know full well what that yearning means. Surely a very simple wish; for at what hour you will you can retire into yourself."

"That from such and such causes given effects, result is inevitable; he who would not have it so, would have the fig-tree yield no juice."

One recalls Bishop Butler, who thus, or nearly thus, puts the same thought: "Things are what they are, and the consequences will be what they will be; why, then, should we be deceived?"

"All is fruit for me, which thy seasons bear, O Nature; from thee, in thee, and unto thee are all things, 'Dear City of Cecrops!' saith the poet: and wilt not thou say, 'Dear City of God'?"

"A mimic pageant, a stage spectacle, flocking sheep and herding cows, an armed brawl, a bone flung to curs, a crumb dropped in the fish tanks, toiling of burdened ants, the scamper of the scurrying mice, puppets pulled with strings—such is life."

"A scowl upon the face is a violation of nature. Repeated often, beauty dies with it, and finally becomes quenched, past all rekindling."

"Life is more like wrestling than dancing; it must be ready to keep its feet against all onsets, however unexpected."

"This is the way of salvation—to look thoroughly into everything and see what it really is, alike in matter and in cause; with your own heart to do what is just and say what is true; and one thing more, to find life's fruition in heaping good on good so close, that not a chink is left between."

There is, of course, as Dr. Rendall points out, a characteristic paradox and defect of Stoicism in the rigid demarcation of the self from all the impulses, appetites, and affections that really go to make up self. For Marcus Aurelius, morality is not a wise gathering among these, but a sweeping denial of them all. He makes as stern a bugbear of his Duty as any Puritan of his Sin. Therefore his ideal is one merely of endurance, his outlook profoundly melancholy, lit only by the distant vision of "the sunset splendid and serene—death." For the gaiety of temper, turning duty itself to favour and to prettiness, which is the mark of some of the greatest teachers, from Plato to St. Francis, we scrutinise in vain. Marcus Aurelius will not scowl, but he cannot smile.

A few words, in conclusion, are due to Dr. Rendall's translation. It seems to us an excellent one, scholarly, dignified, and instinct with fine literary sense, happily hitting the mean between the pedantries of Long and the lax raciness of Jeremy Collier. Matthew Arnold made a test for Dr. Rendall's predecessors of the bit about early rising at the beginning of the fifth book of the Meditations. Let Dr. Rendall endure the same comparison. This is Long:

"In the morning, when thou risest unwillingly, let this thought be present: 'I am rising to the work of a human being. Why, then, am I dissatisfied if I am going to do the things for which I exist and for which I was brought into the world? Or have I been made for this, to lie in the bedclothes and keep myself warm? But this is more pleasant.' Dost thou exist, then, to take thy pleasure, and not at all for action or exertion?"

The strict second person singular is surely intolerable to modern ears. This is Jeremy Collier, whose version Long called "a most coarse and vulgar copy of the original":

"When you find an unwillingness to rise early in the morning, make this short speech to yourself: 'I am getting up now to do the business of a man, and am I out of humour for going about that which I was made for, and for the sake of which I was sent into the world? Was I, then, designed for nothing but to doze and batten beneath the counterpane? I thought action had been the end of your being.'"

"Doze and batten" is good, and should soften even Mr. Charles Whibley's heart towards Jeremy Collier. Also it suggests George Herbert's lines:

"O foolish man! where are thine eyes?
How hast thou lost them in a crowd of cares!
Thou pull'st the rug and wilt not rise,
No, not to purchase the whole pack of stars:
There let them shine,
Thou must go sleep or dine."

Finally, this is Dr. Rendall:

"In the morning, when you feel loth to rise, fall back upon the thought, 'I am rising for man's work. Why make a grievance of setting about that for which I was born, and for sake of which I have been brought into the world? Is the end of my existence to lie snug in the blankets and keep warm?' 'It is more pleasant so.' 'Is it for pleasure you were made?—not for doing, and for action?'"

The general resemblance is more to Long, and, indeed, to the Greek, than to Collier; but the "you" for "thou" and the absence of "dost" are distinct gains, while the terse vigour of "loth to rise" and "snug in the blankets" catches something which Long misses.

THE WILD ROUTE TO KLONDIKE.

Through the Gold Fields of Alaska to Bering Straits. By Harry de Windt, F.R.G.S. (Chatto & Windus.)

MR. DE WINDT has had the skill or good fortune to convert failure into success. In the early summer of 1896 he started to carry out the singular project of journeying from New York to Paris by land, his idea being to get first to Juneau by way of British Columbia, then across the now famous Chilcoot Pass to the lakes at the head of the great Yukon river, down the Yukon to Fort St. Michael on the Bering Sea, across the Straits on ice to Anadyrsk in Siberia, next to Irkutsk, and so back to the world of road and rail. He did not succeed in carrying out the scheme; but he travelled the wild route to Klondike before the gold seekers tested its difficulty, he worked his way through Alaska, and he claims that he and his servant were the first Europeans "to reside for any length of time alone and unprotected among the Tchuktchis of Siberia." The adventures he met with form the material of a most fascinating but gruesome book of travels.

Crossing the Chilcoot would of itself be considered a notable undertaking even in Switzerland and with the aid of guides, ropes, and ice-axes. It took the party two hours to ascend a thousand feet, and here is the author's description of the final climb:

"The last 300 feet was like scaling the walls of a house. With ropes and proper appliances the passage of this mountain could be made far easier; but it was under the circumstances such exhausting, heartbreaking work, that I more than once had serious thoughts of turning back. Finally, however, at about 4 A.M., we stood on the summit, breathless, bleeding and ragged, but safe. My aneroid gave the altitude at 3,620 feet above the sea level."

The descent was easier, the travellers coasting down a distance of 500 feet in the snow; but Mr. de Windt, after all his experience of Borneo, Siberia, and Chinese Tartary, describes the crossing of the Chilcoot as the severest physical experience of his life. Money counts for little when travelling in Alaska; and on the shores of Lake Lindeman, he who wishes to proceed, be he rich or poor, must set to and build himself a boat, or rather coracle. In this the lake is crossed, after which occurs a dangerous river passage, necessitating a portage of over a mile. Lake Bennet, which was then reached, is liable to storms, one of which drove them on shore and caused a miserable delay of several days in wind and rain. The character of the succeeding journey will be easily surmised from the author's account of passing the Grand Cañon, one party carrying the luggage while the guide navigates it in a boat :

"The first pitch is down about fifty feet of smooth water at a steep incline, down which the Marjorie shoots like an arrow. In less than twenty seconds more she is dashing past us at the rate of twenty miles an hour, but although the little craft is as buoyant as a cork we can see that her occupants are already sitting shind-deep in water. Suddenly a huge breaker dashes over the bows, and, for a moment of intense suspense, she shivers and dwells as though about to settle down. But another friendly billow catches her aft and swings her forward again. . . . Presently the terrible whirlpool which has been the death of so many is reached; but the steersman is as steady as a rock, and she nears it, passes it, and leaves it behind her in safety, and the next moment is lost to sight behind the protruding cliffs."

Even more dangerous are the White Horse Rapids or Miner's Grave, which on an average drown twenty men a year; but we must hasten over this part of the route and get to the Klondike. The first hint we obtain of the necromancy of the gold-fields is at the mouth of Sixty Mile, a river that flows into the Yukon. They stopped here for the mid-day meal, hoping to replenish their larder; but were themselves compelled to part with a share of what they had.

A number of hungry miners were awaiting the annual boat that brings the supplies for a twelvemonth. They dined in the bare comfortless parlour of the storekeeper, a man in rags and gum boots. Let the author tell the rest :

"We waited till evening and then embarked to drift down to a place then known to perhaps a score of white men, but now a byword throughout the civilised world. 'So long, mates,' cried the disconsolate storekeeper, and I saw him slouch back to his dismal abode with a feeling of pity for one whose life must be passed amid such cheerless, desolate surroundings. My pity was perhaps misplaced. . . . our dejected friend no longer relies upon the sale of beans and bacon as a means of existence. He is now known as 'the Klondike millionaire,' and his name is Joseph Ladue."

An Alaska mining camp Mr. de Windt compares to a bit of Shadwell or Limehouse dropped into the midst of sylvan scenery; but "Thron-Duick" was still uncontaminated then: a residence of clean and hospitable Indians. It is hopeless to attempt, within any reasonable limits, to give an idea of Mr. de Windt's full and vivid exposition of this new gold country. One story, for the truth of which he vouches, may stand for all. When the rumour of fabulous heaps of gold began to spread in the United States there was working on a Californian fruit garden a poor man named Berry, who managed to scrape together eight pounds of his own and to borrow twelve more. With twenty pounds in his pocket he and forty companions started for Alaska. He reached Forty Mile City alone, some of his friends having turned back, and the others having died on the way. His sweetheart, Miss Ethel Bush, followed him.

They were married, and this is how they spent their honeymoon :

"Berry and his wife were among the first to reach Klondike. They took £26,000 from only one of their claims. The first prospect gave 8s. and then 12s. to the pan; and this rose suddenly to £5 and £10 the pan. One day Mr. and Mrs. Berry took no less than £120 from a single pan of earth. (A 'pan' is of sheet iron, about eighteen inches in circumference and four or five inches deep.) Mrs. Berry herself lifted out £10,000 from her husband's claim in her spare moments."

To this the following foot-note is added :

"I learn from Mrs. Ladue that Mrs. Lippy (whose husband has a claim valued at £200,000) and Mrs. Berry picked out of a dump £1,200 each in a few days after their arrival. They found the metal by poking around in the dirt with sticks."

The Mr. Lippy referred to was, as recently as 1896, living a hand-to-mouth existence as a day labourer in Forty Mile City. Less entrancing than the stories of fortune-making, of which we have given the merest samples, but of more practical value, is the advice with which Mr. de Windt concludes the chapter. Alaska, as the old-timer has it, is no "soft-snap." On the contrary, we are told "there is probably no country in the world so replete with discomforts and annoyances of every kind." The young and hardy and vigorous alone, therefore, may undertake the adventure with hope of success, and in addition to health a capital of "at least £300" is needed. The best way is to go from Liverpool to New York or Montreal, thence by Canadian Pacific to Victoria, B.C., whence steamers run to Juneau and Skagway. Those who dare to brave the passes may start in the middle or end of February; if they choose the sea journey, by St. Michael, they must wait, for the Bering Sea is closed by ice till mid-June.

"The best route into Alaska is a very vexed question," says our author. "The White Pass is now said to be worse than the dreaded Chilcoot. . . . Two new routes, however, one over the Darlton Trail, and the other via the Stikine River and Glenora to Teslin Lake, have been favourably reported on by Canadian surveyors, and one of these may possibly be opened up by the late spring of 1898."

There is no doubt but that popular interest will for the moment be concentrated on Mr. de Windt's account of the gold-fields, and, indeed, even those who do not dream of "Bonanzas," will find much that is curious and amusing in his detailed account of the "cities" that are but clusters of log-huts, the charming scenery, rapidly becoming destroyed, the mixed society of the camps. One notable difference between Alaska and California or New South Wales is the admirable order that prevails, thanks, in part, to the Canadian Mounted Police, who, among other things, forced the women who flock to the mines to put off their bloomer costume and don the skirt and petticoat; thanks still more to the general character of the people, whose sobriety and orderliness contrast with the conduct of all previous gold-seekers.

But when this craze is past it will be discovered that the more valuable part of the book is its history of the author's sojourn with the extraordinary and savage race who inhabit the Siberian shore of the Bering Straits. Rude as they are, they over-reached the white traveller. Mr. de Windt got as far as Port St. Michael in the hope of crossing on ice. There he learned from a trading party of Tchuktehis that the Bering Straits never are fully frozen over—there is always an open channel ten miles broad in the middle. He crossed over, therefore, in the U.S. Revenue Cutter Bear, and on September 8, 1896, was landed at a place called Cape Tchaplín on the maps, but named by the natives Oum-waidjih. His intention was to employ natives and dog-sleds and push on to Anadyrsk, the outermost edge of Russian civilisation. Koari, the man with whom he was in treaty, vowed it was as easy as shelling peas—"White men, plenty flour, plenty calico, give Koari. Koari give good dog, good sled—catch-um ten sleeps easy." But primitive man had no intention of fulfilling his promise. He had got the owner of much tobacco in his power, and he began, as soon as the Bear left, to extract all he could from his guest while putting him off with evasions—the fact being that he had never so much as heard of Anadyrsk. Some idea of what life was like may be gleaned from the following description of the interior of the hut where the wanderers lived :

"A thick curtain of deerskin was stretched right across the hut, separating the living room from the sleeping quarters. Half a dozen seal oil lamps are kept incessantly alight here throughout the winter. They just suffice to accentuate the perpetual darkness, and to maintain, even during the coldest weather, a temperature of 65° Fahr. The lamps, which diffuse a disgusting odour, are also used for cooking purposes. When the sleeping chamber is crowded with naked men and women and children (as it frequently was during the latter part of our stay) the heat becomes almost unbearable, and the foetid odour of unwashed humanity loathsome beyond description."

The filthiness of the people is indescribable, they find out the dirtiest way to do everything. In milking the reindeer, for instance, "the hands are never used, the milk being sucked from the animal and spat into a bowl." The most barbarous custom surviving is that of the "kamitok," or killing of old men, wherein they are akin to many ancient nations—the Germans and Aryans for instance. In Rome the aged were cast into the Tiber when past work. This is how Mr. de Windt describes the ceremony :

"The doomed one takes a lively interest in the proceedings, and often assists in the preparation for his own death. The execution is always preceded by a feast, where seal and walrus meat are greedily devoured and whisky consumed till all are intoxicated. A spontaneous burst of singing and the muffled roll of walrus-hide drums then herald the fatal moment. At a given signal a ring is formed by the relations and friends, the entire settlement looking on in the background. The executioner (usually the victim's son or brother) then steps forward, and placing his right foot behind the back of the condemned, slowly strangles him to death with a walrus-thong. A kamitok took place during the latter part of our stay."

A picture of it is given, but whether from a

kodak or fancy the author does not say. Our extracts give but a slight idea of the wonderfully fresh and vivid character of as interesting a book of travels as has been written these many years. It is done in a manly, unaffected style, and the illustrations are of the greatest interest.

THE TWO DUCHESSES.

The Two Duchesses: Family Correspondence of and relating to Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire; Elizabeth, Duchess of Devonshire; the Earl of Bristol (Bishop of Derry); The Countess of Bristol, Lord and Lady Byron, The Earl of Aberdeen, Sir Augustus Foster, Bart., and others. 1777-1859. Edited by Vere Foster. (Blackie & Co.)

THIS is by far the most interesting collection of letters which has been published for at least a couple of years, and also probably the worst edited book. If Mr. Vere Foster had seen fit to issue without notes the collection of letters which came to him from his grandmother, the Duchess Elizabeth—the fifth Duke of Devonshire married twice, and the second wife was a widow, Lady Elizabeth Foster—there would not have been a word to say. But as it is, while nothing that really needs explanation receives it, there are innumerable footnotes which simply insult the average intelligence.

Here, for instance, is the beginning of a letter from "that travelled thane Athenian Aberdeen" to Augustus Foster—characteristic enough, one may observe, as expressing the soul of a prig and of a large landed proprietor :

"Cromarre, August 20, 1804.

"DEAR AUGUSTUS,—I wrote you from Edinburgh a letter which might be called the Lamentations of Jeremiah, so dismal were the contents; however, I am now rejoiced at the intelligence that you are not to Columbize, for I this evening received your letter after a mountain massacre. I do not find this country so horrible as I imagined, or as you seem to think, and there is a sensible pleasure at standing to look around one, and being able to see nothing but one's own."

On this Mr. Vere Foster notes: "(1) Cromarre: a district of Aberdeenshire on the Dee"; (2) mountain massacre — of grouse." Nobody wants minute geographical information which can be got by a glance at a map, and nobody suspects a sucking premier of having in his hot youth massacred anything but grouse. It is, however, quite possible to be in doubt about the recondite witticism, to "Columbize," which is merely an elegant substitute for "to go to America." One is tempted to believe that Mr. Foster did not make it out. Augustus Foster did, finally, "Columbize"—as secretary of Legation at Washington. He writes, "I have at last reached this soi-disant city, as you perceive, and am settled with "Toujours Gai"—"Toujours Gai," notes Mr. Foster, "a punning designation." It is only some hundred pages further on that the reader discovers by his unaided intelligence that "Toujours Gai" is Foster's chief, Mr. Merry. Where Haydn's Dictionary of Dates or the like would help him, Mr. Foster has been indefatigable. He gives duly in a footnote the dates of Shakespeare's birth and death, and tells us that Dante is Dante Alighieri, and Titian Tiziano Vecellio. On matters of family history he is perhaps unwisely reticent. His grandmother was the daughter of Frederick Hervey, Bishop of Derry, and Earl of Bristol. This lady was married to Mr. Foster, a gentleman who owned property in the north of Ireland. By him she had two sons, but quarrels ensued and a separation. Her too discreet grandson does not hint at any grounds for the measure, and humanity is prone to suppose the worst. But it is useless to discuss Mr. Foster's editing; the thing will have to be done again, for there is a mass of interesting and valuable material in this somewhat ugly volume.

To begin with, there are the famous Bishop's letters. Frederick Hervey was the younger brother of the earl who married Miss Chudleigh, and therefore brother-in-law to the notorious Duchess of Kingston. He became Bishop of Derry—a see worth £10,000 a year—at the age of thirty-eight, and administered the affairs of his diocese chiefly from Italy, where he played the art patron on the grandest scale, and wore habitually a white hat edged with purple, a coat of crimson velvet, a black sash spangled with silver, and purple stockings. That was something like a bishop for you. He returned to Ireland to head the Irish volunteers when they marched on Dublin, but seldom dabbled in mere domestic politics; schemes for a fresh partition of Europe were more to his taste. Nothing is, on the whole, more characteristic of him than this excerpt from a letter to Lady Elizabeth :

"What I have most at heart in this moment is your brother's marriage with the Comtesse de la Marche, the King of Prussia's daughter, of which I have wrote to you so fully; but I would not on any account have you tease him about it, how ardently soever I may wish it, especially as he seems inclined to another project. But see the difference :

|  |   |
|--|---|
| ON MY SIDE.  | ON HIS SIDE.  |
| £5,000 a year down.                                      | No fortune.   |
| £5,000 a year in reversion.                              | Wife and children beggars for want of settlement.             |
| An English Dukedom which the King pledges to obtain.     | No connexion.   |
| Royal connexion — Princess of Wales and Duchess of York. | A love match like all others for four generations before him. |

Sweet Elizabeth, when occasion serves, help me to accomplish my project. I cannot, if I would, afford him more than £2,000 a year while my house is building and furnishing. What is that in London ?

|                                     |                                      |
|-------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| BUT ON MY PLAN.                     | ON HIS PLAN.                         |
| £2,000 from me.                     | £2,000.                              |
| £5,000 dowry.                       | Wife and children and no settlement. |
| £3,000 Embassy to Berlin or Munich. |                                      |
| £10,000."                           |                                      |

His daughter was not unworthy of such a father. The average woman does not find her account in being separated from her husband (without custody of her children). She, however, at once contracted an intimacy with the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire—very useful people to know; and after a period of wandering on the Continent (during which Gibbon proposed to her at Lausanne and took her refusal with his usual philosophy), she settled down at the very heart of affairs in London. All the emotions of that crowded Napoleonic period pass in procession through her admirable letters and those of her correspondents; the embittered hatred of the "tiger-apes," as the Bishop always calls the Republican soldiers; the enthusiastic admiration of young Foster for the First Consul's imperial bearing; the mourning after Trafalgar; the stupefaction at the deaths of Pitt and Fox; and all the rest. Meanwhile, from Washington, Augustus Foster sketched with a caustic pen the beginnings of a great Republic, much as an Etrurian might have written of the early Rome—an asylum for thieves and robbers, an assemblage of the worst characters and the meanest vices; even its republican simplicity lapsing into an affectation of slovenliness when Jefferson received ambassadors in yarn stockings and slippers down at heel.

Pages might be filled with quotations, but in these columns it is proper to give a preference to the purely literary interest. Lady Elizabeth and her friends were not literary, but political; their chief artistic emotion was for the young Roscius, Master Betty, in whose praise all of them were ready to pour out volumes at any moment. But matters were different when a poet of the first rank appeared in their own circle; and the curious thing is that, along with the first volume of Childe Harold, the Duchess (as Lady Elizabeth had now become) sent out to her son in Washington a consolation for the coldness of Miss Milbanke whom he then desired to marry. The passage is worth quoting.

"She persists in saying that she never suspected your attachment to her, but she is so odd a girl that though she has for some time rather liked another, she has decidedly refused them (sic), because she thinks she ought to marry a person with a good fortune, and this is partly, I believe, from generosity to her parents, and partly owing that fortune is an object to herself for happiness. In short, she is good, amiable, and sensible, but cold, prudent, and reflecting. . . . Lord Byron makes up to her a little, but she don't seem to admire him, except as a poet, nor he her, except for a wife. Your little friend Caro William (Lady Caroline Lamb), as usual, is doing all sorts of imprudent things for him and with him; he admires her very much, but is supposed by some to admire our Caroline more; he says she is like Thyrsa, and her singing is enchantment."

"He must be mad or a Caligula," the Duchess wrote of Byron after the separation, when the stories spread, though at first she had been inclined to condemn Lady Byron's action. Strangely enough, the poet's wife in her old age struck up a friendship with the son of her old admirer, and the last twenty pages or so of the correspondence are filled with lengthy letters from her to Mr. Vere Foster, all of them concerned with charitable projects or religious questions—all of them temperate, sensible, and rational. The Duchess described her very well, and probably there was not in the length and breadth of England a worse mate for Byron than this admirable icicle.

An editor knowing the period—as, for instance, Sir George Trevelyan knows it—might have made out of these papers one of the most fascinating books imaginable. As it is, they contain a deal of agreeable matter, but too much in the rough for the ordinary digestion. One more quotation may be given as illustrative of the whole :

“Marseilles, Dec., 1814.

“Frederick Foster to Augustine Foster.”

“We have seen Masséna. He is, I believe, stinging, but very civil and very interesting to see. Bonaparte on embarking for Elba sent him his amitiés, ‘C’est un brave homme, je l’aime fort’—but Masséna says, he, Bonaparte, loves nobody; that once when he was ill, Bonaparte never took the least notice of him, never even sent to inquire, and that at another time when he was also unwell, and that Bonaparte had need of his services, he used to come and see him three or four times a day. . . . Masséna and Wellington met at Paris, and, after a stare, Masséna said, ‘Milord, vous m’avez fait bien penser.’ ‘Et vous, Monsieur le Maréchal, vous m’avez souvent empêché de dormir.’”

DOGMATISMS.

Affirmations. By Havelock Ellis. (Walter Scott.)

MR. HAVELOCK ELLIS “affirms” with remarkable sincerity and readiness, with a very individual conviction, yielding to no convention, and fettered by no tradition: so much so, that he would do well to write in the first person singular. He writes of Nietzsche, Casanova, M. Zola, M. Huysmans, St. Francis—all men of emphatic personalities: as were Diderot, Heine, Walt Whitman, Count Tolstoi, and M. Ibsen, the heroes of an earlier volume. Freshness and clearness of thought, utterance at first hand, vision unsophisticated, are what he values; not, in Walt Whitman’s phrase, mere “distillations” of literature. He loves the note of bold and brave confession, of true testimony borne to true experience, of frank and free veracity; and his own writing would gain if it came to us with all the charming and audacious egoism of St. Augustine, Montaigne, Pascal, Browne, Rousseau, Lamb. Further, the impersonal “we” is somewhat less than fair and just. A writer of any philosophy and creed may say that “we”—i.e., all educated persons—believe in the law of gravitation and the earth’s rotundity. But is not “we” a little presumptuous, would not “I” be more truly modest, in such a passage as the following? It is a good example of the writer’s style:

“The religion of Jesus was the invention of a race which itself never accepted that religion. In the East religions spring up, for the most part, as naturally as flowers, and, like flowers, are scarcely a matter for furious propaganda. These deep sagacious Eastern men threw us off this rejected flower, as they have since sent us the vases and fans they found too tawdry; and when we send our missionaries out to barter back the gift at a profit, they say no word, but their faces wear the mysterious Eastern smile. Yet for us, at all events, the figure of Jesus symbolises, and will always symbolise, a special attitude towards life, made up of tender human sympathy and mystical reliance on the unseen forces of the world. In certain stories of the Gospels, certain sayings, in many of the parables, this attitude finds the completest expression of its sweetest abandonment. But to us, men of another race, living in far distant corners of the world, it seems altogether oriental and ascetic, a morbid exceptional phenomenon.”

Surely, “to me, a man of another race,” would be at once more accurate and more effective. That, says the reader, is how “Christianity” strikes Mr. Ellis; it struck Newman, Browning, Arnold in three distinct ways, but not one of them in that way. And would Mr. Herbert Spencer, or Mr. Leslie Stephen, or Mr. Frederic Harrison, assuredly not “orthodox” thinkers, put the matter quite in that way; did Renan or Strauss feel quite like Mr. Ellis? The “we” means but “I and some others”; not any overwhelming mass of trained intellects, but a certain number. That Mr. Ellis holds this, and feels that, is a fact of interest to us; the conviction and the emotion clothe themselves with flesh and blood, when personally “affirmed” as those of an individual man. “We” conveys no such sense of reality, whilst it does convey the displeasing suggestion that, in the writer’s mind, it means the élite of the intellect, those whose opinions matter. Literature, philosophic and æsthetic, would profit greatly by a greater directness of personal speech, which need not become unauthoritative and capricious in ceasing to be unindividual and pompous. As essays in composition and design, admixtures of narrative and criticism, these papers are admirable. Mr. Ellis always does what he sets out with the intention of doing, and never fails to hold his reader’s attention. His essay upon Casanova is perhaps the best. It is possible to feel nothing but an irritable dislike of that virtuoso in the arts of vice and connoisseur of profligate living; or to part company with him with a smile and a shrug of the shoulders. But, at least, he was intensely alive, a very splendid and accomplished animal of the species homo; and Mr. Ellis shows him to us in all his unspiritual, but most vital, humanity. This vigorous voluptuary, of equal strength and elegance in his varied pursuit of pleasure, was no whining sinner of the sort described, once for all, by Sir Henry Taylor:

“I heard the sorrowful sensualist complain,
If with compassion, not without disdain.”

Casanova enjoyed with equanimity his life upon a soulless plane, and went laughing through the eighteenth century with an immense relish for the satisfactions it could give him, and with never a thought of conscientious remorse; he illustrates certain aspects of his age, as does Cellini. He was not, like one of Browning’s characters, “magnificent in sin”; he strikes no moralist with shuddering horror and wonder. He is a man of no tragedy in the will, of no battle between soul and senses; he never “falls,” for his nature had no heights wherefrom to fall. The soul was omitted from his composition, and he lived a very perfect scamp, an excellent rascal, upon whom indignation would be wasted. We may deplore his existence, but hardly execrate his life. Practically, Mr. Ellis says of him, what Lamb pleaded on behalf of Restoration comedy, that all the excess and wantonness affect us, as things done in an imaginary fairyland, to which moral law and social code do not apply; and so, to censure Casanova, is to be angry with the deaf-mute or the colour-blind. Probably.

In Nietzsche, Mr. Ellis had a more difficult theme to handle. A kind of innocent Anarchist in thought, now insane beyond recovery, it is hard to vindicate for him a place among the first men of our time, though easy to point out his interest. We are too close to him: posterity must weigh in the balances his portentous and fantastic and oracular works, and decide whether the taint or strain of madness does not vitiate them from the first. But, at least, Mr. Ellis in his elaborate study, succeeds in bringing before us a living image of the man, with his passionate vivacity and decision of ideas, his proud isolation in the world of thought, his mental imaginativeness. Life, fact, reality, the definite, the concrete—these are his idols, and thought is of value to him only as it establishes us in a true relation to these. His notorious conception of “master morality” as opposed to “slave morality,” of egoism as against altruism, self-assertion against self-denial, is but his expression of love for a life of positive affirmations and doings: it is not, essentially not, a negation of all law. Gautier cries: “Tiberius, Caligula, Nero, mighty imperial Romans, at whose heels the rabble rout of rhetoricians is ever barking, I am your fellow-sufferer, and all the compassion left in me compassionates you!” That is a cry of sheer æstheticism, unrelated to any system of moral thought. Nietzsche might have cried it, but with him it would have implied a declaration of war against timid virtues of the Christian ideal, not for love of the æsthetic charm in unbridled personalities, but of the moral charm. Those monstrous men were at least themselves, fearless of the world’s condemnation; living persons, with characters not blurred, obscured, annihilated by conformity with the average and the conventional. Mr. Ellis traces the development of his mind from youth, through stages of ever-increasing vehemence, until the vehemence, which had been passion expressed with flashing brilliance, passed through a cloud of fire and smoke into the night of madness. In him the intensity of self was an obsession; and from a burning desire to preach the divine right of selfhood—if you will, of selfishness—he fell into that unimaginable state in which oneself becomes the universe, and the mind has burst its barriers. This “Pascal of Paganism” had through life the characteristic pride of the insane; a wild glory of the imagination, to be found in such abnormal natures as Blake, some of whose doctrines are strangely like those of Nietzsche. And both men, while enamoured of precision, of definite form, have left works in which form struggles for precise expression—works of colossal energy contending with chaos.

Upon M. Zola and M. Huysmans, Mr. Ellis writes wisely and well, but his subjects are more familiar to us. Leaving them aside, let us consider one point of his affirmations upon which he has always insisted. He complains that "the sexual and digestive functions," which are "precisely the central functions of life, the two poles of hunger and love around which the world revolves" are more and more withdrawn from literary treatment. That in common speech and social intercourse each generation is less and less able to handle such matters with directness, he does not deplore, but he finds the tendency disastrous to literature. It would have seemed an obvious remark that in this matter social and literary usage go for the most part pari passu; but Mr. Ellis discounts the remark by contending that outspoken writers have always required some "heroism" to be outspoken. That may be partly true, but to no great extent, and it does not touch the essentials of the question. It is undeniable that we can trace frank, plain, unvarnished mention of "sexual and digestive functions," gradually passing from great literature to lighter literature, from lofty writing to comedy and jest, from high poetry into prose fiction—and that, simultaneously with a like change in social usage. Take, from Dante, the line about the devil Malacoda: "Ed egli avea del cul fatto trombetta." Dante's age thought that devils were properly described as not merely wicked, but also, and consequently, as absurd and obscene; no contemporary would have blushed to hear the line. But could Milton possibly have written it? Yet the physical fact described is a vulgar jest in great writers of the last century; it had sunk into the realm of unseemly mirth. Luther, preaching the physical impossibility of celibacy, has this comparison: "Wer seinen Mist oder Harn halten müsste, so er's doch nicht kann, was soll aus dem werden?" Hooker or Taylor was no advocate of enforced celibacy, but would either have ventured upon such a sentence? They might have used the argument, but never the words. Or take the well-known story of Scott's aged relative, Mrs. Keith of Ravelston, who asked him to lend her Aphra Behn's novels; they had pleased her in youth. Scott, with apprehensions, lent them. "Take back your bonny Mrs. Behn," said the old lady at their next meeting, "and if you will take my advice, put her in the fire, for I found it impossible to get through the very first novel. But is it not a very odd thing that I, an old woman of eighty and upwards, sitting alone, feel myself ashamed to read a book which, sixty years ago, I have heard read aloud for the amusement of large circles, consisting of the first and most creditable society in London?" Language becomes inevitably circumscribed, as taste and manners change: and what is possible to Shakespeare is impossible to Browning, assuredly no shrinker from physical passion.

It is the same with acts as with arts.

In his finely suggestive, if unsatisfying, essay upon St. Francis and Others, Mr. Ellis tells the story of Francis stripping himself naked before the bishop and people of Assisi, in token of his self-abandonment to absolute poverty. The spectators might have thought it a mad thing to do; some did; but no one thought it indecent. Now, a few years ago, Mr. Calderon exhibited a picture of St. Elizabeth of Hungary, in which, misinterpreting a mediæval chronicler—omnino se exuit et nudavit—he represented the royal saint naked before the altar. Catholics made vehement protests, and have renewed them now that the picture has become national property. Yet, making the largest allowance for the difference in the essentials of modesty between man and woman, we doubt whether, had the incident occurred, St. Elizabeth's contemporaries would have been gravely scandalised. What she actually did was, before the altar, to make a solemn vow of self-abnegation, putting off, and baring herself of, all earthly attachments and desires: had she, like Francis, symbolised the vow by a bodily baring, none would have cried shame upon her. But this age feels differently, and is justified in so feeling. It is, for the most part, not a question of ethics, but of aesthetics: in spite of all that is sane and wholesome in Whitman's gospel, we cannot be persuaded that what is physically right or inevitable is therefore a beautiful thing in speech or literature. It is no Swift, obsessed with unclean images, but Tennyson who speaks of the body as

"This poor rib-grated dungeon of the holy human ghost,
This house with all its hateful needs no cleaner than the beast,
This coarse diseased creature which in Eden was divine,
This Satan-haunted ruin, this little city of sewers."

And surely, waiving the point about Eden, the description is exact. About some physical acts, as, for example, coughing or sneezing, there is no possibility of feeling emotion, in themselves: and there are numbers of harmless physical acts and functions, the description of which is ludicrous and distasteful. Mr. Ellis writes of one of M. Huysmans' novels that it "dwells in the memory chiefly by virtue of two vividly naturalistic episodes, the birth of a calf and the death of a cat." No harm in that: but how Fielding or Scott would have laughed, and how paltry is the waste of power upon such material! Animal suffering has often been an exquisite scheme of art, but never for the cunning presentation of mere detail. A recent clever little story dwells in our memory by the phrase "expectorations glistened upon the gaslit asphalt pavement." Risum teneatis amici?

But all the questions raised by Mr. Ellis, chiefly for love, as he affirms, of their "questionable aspects," are questions worth raising. For ourselves, we prefer our criticism to be less closely allied with physiological science, with the "sexual and digestive functions"; and Mr. Ellis has written many pages of fine criticism aptly expressed, for which we are grateful. As a scientific student of humanity, he is somewhat distressing to readers who, in presence of the great arts, care little whether they are in the body or out of the body, and not at all for the physical bases of emotion and thought. Nor will any such reader be greatly agitated by the impoverishment of the English literary tongue, whilst he can study passions of body and soul in the works of Browning, Patmore, and Mr. Meredith.

THE FRIEND OF BURNS AND BEETHOVEN.

George Thomson, the Friend of Burns, his Life and Correspondence. By J. Cuthbert Hadden. (J. C. Nimmo).

BURNS had many friends, and George Thomson was one of them. It was only to be expected, therefore, that advantage would be taken of the "boom in Burns" to connect this book with his name. But it has really little to do with Burns. It is a book of some use to biographical specialists, by reason of the business letters it gives between Thomson and a variety of famous authors. For this reason we cannot blame its issue, though it is of little or no interest to the public or to the general student of literature. Yet Thomson was not merely "the friend of Burns." He was the compiler, editor, and proprietor of a great collection of Scottish songs, afterwards supplemented by similar collections of Irish and Welsh songs, to which, both Burns and other authors of eminence freely contributed. Undoubtedly he did a great and useful work for the minstrelsy of Scotland; though, because of certain misjudgments in the setting of the songs, his collection was never very successful, and has now passed into oblivion. But as a subject for biography, it is a case of "Story? God bless you, there is none to tell, Sir!"

Thomson early became junior clerk to the Board of Trustees for the Encouragement of Arts and Manufactures in Scotland; and by that he lived when his books would have brought him merely ruin. He once made a tour on the Continent, he twice removed from Edinburgh to London, he published the collections aforesaid, and after living respectably, died respectably. That is really all. The bulk of the volume is composed of the business correspondence already mentioned. Even as a connoisseur of other men's work he was a mediocrity. The scanty evidence of his letters to his famous contributors sufficiently shows that his taste was eminently what the public calls "respectable," and famous authors reserve their opinion upon. We have not here his correspondence with Burns; in that respect Mr. Hadden has nothing to add to the information we already possess. But he snips and nips the verses of illustrious men with a complacent pedantry which the reader can by no means stand so meekly as did the illustrious men themselves. He objects to Sir Walter Scott for talking about "the glories of shade." His biographer recalls, in excuse, that Bentley could not away with Milton's "No light, but rather darkness visible." But it would be hard to find a worse critic of poetry than Bentley. Thomson must surely have been troubled by Spenser's "A little glooming light, much like a shade," and he would have been thrown into strong shudders by Vaughan's

"There is in God, some say,
A deep, but dazzling darkness."

Wonderful is the patience and courtesy of his contributors. Burns, Scott, Hogg, Lockhart, all of them, write for him without payment, and submit docilely to his meddling and nigging corrections. One is heartily delighted when Joanna Baillie at length tackles him, and refutes his alterations with feminine vigour and decision.

But the nature of the man comes out in his not very lively letters from the Continent. At Notre Dame this thorough Scotchman of his period could see only "sacerdotal and empty pomp." He went to the Grand Opera in Paris, heard Gluck's Iphigène, and declared: "The music is too continually noisy, and the singers much more ardent and impassioned than I can bear." The declaration is comic in its unconscious frankness of self-revelation. Ardour and passion absolutely annoyed him, as they do all Philistines; and you are no longer surprised at his criticism of poetry. He adds in the same strain: "The grandeur of the orchestra becomes oppressive." If he had lived to attend a Wagner opera! At his advanced age it would probably have been fatal. The marvel is how such a man ever came to appreciate Burns at all.

Still more marvellous is the fact that he admired Beethoven. The correspondence with this composer approaches somewhat nearer to interest than anything else in the book. We see Beethoven as a most "pawky" and matter-of-fact insister on details of payment and business. We see also Thomson preaching simplicity to the great musician in the most approved style of the small dealing with the great; and incidentally we get lights on the wretched state of musical education in England and—yet more—in Scotland. "There are not in Scotland twelve persons (professionals included) who could play one of your quatuors," says Thomson. Again, "Everybody finds your works much too difficult, and only a few masters of the first rank can play them." Beethoven offers him a symphony on the triumph of Wellington at Vittoria. Thomson makes the amazing suggestion that he should recast it as a pianoforte sonata; and this monster, this symphony as sonata, is to have "accompaniments for violin, &c." Great music! He asks Beethoven to compose music "in that grand and original style which belongs to you alone, but easier to perform, so that it would be more within the capacity of amateurs. . . . Simple and expressive music will always have a great charm for all listeners, and difficult music will probably be neglected."

And once more:

"Is it not true that in all the arts the highest beauty is in general found united with the most perfect simplicity? And is it not such works that obtain the most permanent and universal admiration?"

At last, after years of such lectures and exhortations to the ballad-concert level, Beethoven broke forth, in the one truly characteristic letter of the series:

"MY DEAR FRIEND,—You are always writing 'easy,' 'very easy'; I do my best to satisfy you, but—but—the fee will have to be more 'difficult,' or, I might say, 'ponderous'! The fee for a theme with variations which I fixed in my last letter to you—ten ducats—is, I solemnly assure you, so low out of mere favour to you; for I have no need of troubling myself with such trifling things. . . . I wish you may always have a real taste for true music; if you cry 'easy,' I shall retort with 'difficult' for your 'easy'!—Your friend, BEEHOVEN."

The fault, indeed, was Thomson's own. He wanted accompaniments for his songs, and he went to German composers like Haydn, Weber, Beethoven, ignorant of Scottish song. Possibly the copies of the airs sent to Beethoven were very imperfect; in any case he got no grip on the spirit of the music, and the other musicians did little better. Hence the collection failed. The task set Beethoven and his colleagues was impossible; but Thomson would not see it.

In one respect Mr. Hadden does some service to Thomson's memory. He shows that Burns and the rest of his song-writers refused to accept payment. After that initial refusal Thomson compromised matters by sending them presents of pictures, costly stuff, &c.; which Burns, at least, rebelled against. Still, it does not seem to us so clear that if Thomson had persevered with the offer of payment, instead of dropping it after the first generous refusal, Burns might not finally have taken it. Burns's dislike of the presents is no proof. There is all the difference in the world between capricious presents and honest fixed payment. The latter could hurt no author's self-respect; the former well might. At any rate, Mr. Hadden shows that Thomson, with all his faults as a critic, was an honourable, upright, and kind-hearted man; and that he has been wronged by those who have regarded him as a mercenary editor, preying on the labours of poets. For the rest, the letters he gives may be of use to future biographers of Scott, of Hogg, of Lockhart, of Joanna Baillie—of everyone except Burns.

BRIEFER MENTION.

"TEMPLE DRAMATISTS."—The Tragical Reign of Selimus. A Play Reclaimed for Robert Greene. Edited by Alexander B. Grosart, D.D., LL.D. (Dent.)

THE early editions of Selimus contain nothing to justify the attribution to Robert Greene. The play was first published anonymously in 1594, and re-issued in 1638 with the initials "T. G." The effective argument for Greene's authorship consists almost entirely of the fact that two quotations ascribed to him in Allot's English Parnassus are here found. This is not conclusive, for Allot has been shown to have made mistakes in other cases; but no doubt, in the absence of evidence for any other author, it raises a presumption for Greene. And the style and matter of the play, though they do not, pace Dr. Grosart, tell very much for the theory, are at any rate not inconsistent with it. A pretty point of literary antiquarianism is raised: but we cannot think that the interest of this is quite sufficient to justify the inclusion of Selimus in a popular series such as the "Temple Dramatists." The student will be grateful, because there is no other modern reprint save that in Dr. Grosart's expensive and limited edition of all Greene's works. But the ordinary reader will find the play intolerable. Dr. Grosart tells him that it "has passages of rare power, of Marlowe-like passion, of beauty, of melody, of distinction, of memorableness." The affection of a godfather for a bantling may be condoned; but to us there appears to be but one single true word in this glowing description—"Marlowe-like." For in truth Selimus is nothing more than a totally uninspired imitation of Tamburlaine, vacant in plot, turgid of sentiment, and wooden of metre. To reprint it, in this particular series, was an archaeological freak.

"INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY."—Christian Institutions. By A. G. V. Allen, D.D. (T. & T. Clark.)

THIS is a volume in the series so happily inaugurated by Prof. Driver's Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament, which is now, we are glad to say, in its sixth edition. Prof. Allen's treatise was originally shaped as a course of Lowell Lectures at an American University. It is a thoughtful survey of the chief institutions of Christianity in their connexion, on the one hand with the spiritual life, on the other with the development of Christian civilisation. It falls into three sections. The first deals with organisation, the orders of the ministry, the growth of the episcopate and the papacy, and the rise of monasticism; the second with creeds and the development of formal doctrine; the third with worship, embracing the divisions of the Christian year and the rites of Baptism and Eucharist. It will be seen that the field covered is very wide, and that the treatment cannot, therefore, be exhaustive; but as a careful study of the mutual relations of the institutions dealt with, and of the place occupied by each in Church history as a whole, the book should be, to students in particular, of exceeding value.

The Elements of Hypnotism. By Ralph Harry Vincent. "International Scientific Series." (Kegan Paul & Co.)

TO the second edition of this useful introduction to hypnotism Mr. Vincent has added a new chapter, in which he discusses the "Physiology of Hypnosis." Herein he gives a lucid account of the nature of nervous processes, and then attempts to explain the hypnotic reactions from the point of view of physiological psychology. Mr. Vincent expects opposition to his theory that "psychic" states are not necessarily "conscious" states. It does not seem essentially different from the psychological theory of "sub-conscious" states, but both the terms are somewhat paradoxical and perhaps, better avoided.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

A DEPARTURE FROM TRADITION, AND OTHER STORIES.

By ROSALINE MASSON.

The first of these clever stories, A Departure from Tradition, is rather to be described as a skit. We have the clever girl, who is not so clever as she thinks, married to the dull man, who is not so dull as he looks. He is appalled when, on their honeymoon, his wife quotes "enough Browning to have filled two sides of the Pink 'Un." She is appalled by the prospect of house-keeping, for is she not writing a treatise on "The Ontogenesis of the Ego"? How he manages the spring-cleaning while she writes for the Monthly Investigator, and how this "departure from tradition" answers—is the story. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 312 pp. 6s.)

HIS FORTUNATE GRACE.

By GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

In this short story we are back in the world of Miss Atherton's earlier heroine, Patience Sparhawk; indeed, that brilliant young lady is recalled on one page by her ex-sister-in-law, who exclaims with half-mocking admiration: "We can't all have seventeen different experiences before we are twenty-four, including a sojourn in Murders' Row, and a frantic love affair with one's own husband." (Bliss, Sands & Co. 186 pp.)

A MAN FROM THE NORTH.

By E. A. BENNETT.

The North-country youth who has a passion for London is the hero (in this case a weak and wayward one) selected by Mr. Bennett. Richard Larch's keen imaginative sympathies; his love affairs, begotten not of wisdom, but of loneliness and lack of purpose; and his final abandonment of his literary dreams in favour of a commonplace wife whom he can love, and a dull suburban home to which he can be reconciled, are all developed with skill and insight. The story is a study of a second-rate man who comes to know his second-rateness, and makes the best of it. (John Lane. 265 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE MINISTER OF STATE.

By JOHN A. STEUART.

This story, by the author of In the Day of Battle and Kilgroom, explains why Evan Kinloch, after rising from a Highland farm to be Sir Evan, and Home Secretary, advises a little Highland boy, fifty years later, "not to go south and make speeches and have a carriage and horses." It is a fine story, and may be described as a study in the difficulty of attaining to happiness. (William Heinemann. 386 pp. 6s.)

THE KLOOF BRIDE; OR, THE LOVER'S QUEST.

By ERNEST GLANVILLE.

A novel of love and adventure. The hero, Miles Venning, is partner in a gun-making firm, and takes a consignment of Martini-Henry rifles and 500,000 rounds of ammunition to Zanzibar. His own journey thither is unnecessary; but the order is signed "R. Mark Sterndale," and Miles had once met, and lost sight of, a girl whose father bore that name. To deliver the rifles was his business, to find Laura his hope. And what with rascally slave-traders (who flourish scimitars), and boat adventures on the Zambesi, and the "Valley of the Dead," and Laura, the reader need fear no dull page. (Methuen. 394 pp. 3s. 6d.)

GLORIA VICTIS.

By J. A. MITCHELL.

An American novel of crime and regeneration, by the editor of the New York Life. The criminals are fascinating: Jim Wadsworth, Foss Graham, and particularly Steve Wadsworth, with whose career the book is concerned. Steve, who is not consciously a rogue but merely lacks the moral sense, passes from thief to highwayman, highwayman to murderer, and murderer to acrobat, yet keeps sweet the while, and his progress is related with much dry humour. Dr. Thorne, the preacher, is a lovable figure. An engrossing little story. (D. Nutt. 269 pp. 3s. 6d.)

BLANCHE CONINGHAM'S SURRENDER.

By JEAN MIDDLEMASS.

A typical novel, by the author of Hush Money and half a score of other popular tales. The new book centres in a revengeful money-lender, ennobled by the influence of his wealth to be Lord Sandover; and round him Miss Middlemass's aristocrats—she will have no others—circle. Here is a passage chosen at random: "On the table in the little boudoir . . . were some letters. One of them bore a foreign postmark. The colour mounted to Lady Vere's brow when she saw it. It was from the Count de Florian." (F. V. White. 312 pp. 6s.)

THE FATAL PHIAL.

By G. BERESFORD FITZGERALD.

The bottle in question contained chloral and made an end of the first Lady Dawe, and Nurse Ursula was, of course, suspected of the crime. Nurse Ursula, who in private life was Mrs. Richmond, widow, "was tall, well-developed, with a handsome bust and limbs. . . . From this muscular, handsome frame rose a long, slender, and very white neck, surmounted by a head of exquisite shape, with bronze-coloured hair." Is it to be wondered, then, that she became in due time the second Lady Dawe? As for the chloral, it was the mistake of the regulation blundering chemist, without whom where would novelists of this class be? (Digby, Long & Co. 252 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE INFATUATION OF AMANDA.

By MINA SANDEMAN.

Amanda's infatuation was the curate. "The curate was as deep as a well, and as quiet as a dark, dangerous pool, which smiles in the sunlight"—and so on. But he did not love Amanda: he had only a "tepid toleration" for her, as she discovered after the marriage. And he was not really good; on the contrary, he went to music halls and had even joined a stage crowd. And once he had "an acme of rage." So Amanda killed him. Such a silly book! (Digby, Long & Co. 231 pp. 3s. 6d.)

IN THE SAME REGIMENT.

By JOHN STRANOE WINTER.

Nine stories of regimental and other life by the author of Bootles' Baby. (F. V. White. 110 pp. 1s.)

REVIEWS.

Simon Dale. By Anthony Hope.
(Methuen.)

Of the younger writers who have made Romance lucrative since the late R. L. Stevenson brought it back into vogue we have had most regard for Mr. Anthony Hope: his faculty has seemed the finest and his style the best considered. Hitherto his writing has been of two kinds, which—borrowing from the language of the Dreyfus graphologists—we may call dextrogyre and sinistrogyre, and the most notable examples of which have been The Prisoner of Zenda and The God in the Car. In the one kind Mr. Hope is simple, sentimental, fantastic, and purely romantic; in the other he is subtle, subacid (his humour is scarcely strong or earnest enough to be called "cynical"), actual, and only as romantic as smart society manners will permit him to be. In Simon Dale (which his publishers advertise as his "first historical novel") he combines the two kinds; and the historical period he has chosen—the Restoration—lends itself agreeably to the combination. How has he succeeded? Well, not to put too fine a point on it, he neither delights nor convinces, neither moves nor holds us. Simon Dale, a youth of twenty-two, and of no great rank or wealth, comes to London, and is instantly plunged into a Court intrigue of love and politics. It is the fashion of the latter-day historical romance to be egoistic, and, according to fashion, Simon Dale tells his own story; and, frankly, we do not believe it. Through Nell Gwynne—how he first was acquainted with the lady it would be unfair to disclose—he is introduced to intimate speech with the king and such great personages of the Court as the Duke of York and the Duke of Monmouth, who compete to retain his valuable services. Simon Dale may well have been a young man of great natural parts and of remarkable promise and attraction, and yet, at twenty-two and fresh from the country, it is impossible to believe that he would be witty enough, astute enough, and self-possessed enough to bandy speech with Charles II. and the notables of his Court, and to cross and baffle them in more than one scheme; to put M. De Cominges, the French Ambassador, to the blush; and by sheer force of character to compel from the king himself such a confession as this:

“The King struck his right hand on the arm of his chair suddenly and forcibly. ‘I sit here,’ said he; ‘it is my work to sit here. My brother has a conscience: how long would he sit here?’ James [meaning Monmouth] is a fool: how long would he sit here?’ They laugh at me or snarl at me, but here I sit and here I will sit till my life’s end, by God’s grace or the Devil’s help. My gospel is to sit here.’

I had never before seen him so moved, and never had so plain a glimpse of his heart, nor of the resolve which lay beneath his lightness and frivolity.”

Kings do not utter themselves thus to casual young men of twenty-two; least of all is the second Charles Stuart likely to have done so. But most incredible of all is the episode of M. de Perrencourt, which even the great art of the great Dumas would scarcely have availed to make appear feasible. We cannot speak more fully of the episode, for to do so would be to give away the cherished secret of the story.

Yet, though the intrigue of the story is incredible, it has some admirable qualities. Though Barbara Quinton is an absurdly and impossibly prudish and modern young person for the Restoration period, Nell Gwynne is well rendered—better rendered than at the moment we can recall she has ever been, short of the absolute truth—in her changefulness, her vivacity, and her lack of moral sense as “this so-called nineteenth century” understands it. And, though Mr. Hope, on a consistent plan of archaic moralising, tires us with well-balanced sentences and paragraphs of reflection which are not illumined by the faintest flicker of humour or of wisdom—the whole matter being a game—he shows an agreeable faculty of sparkling dialogue, which may, in these days, pass for wit, and which may be taken as sufficiently illustrative of the Restoration. Here is a passage towards the end:

“Having procured a gentleman to advise the King of my presence, I was rewarded by being beckoned to approach immediately. . . . Motioning me to stand by him [the King] continued his conversation with my lord Rochester.

‘In defining it as the device by which the weak intimidate the strong,’ observed Rochester, ‘the philosopher declared the purpose of virtue rather than its effect. For the strong are not intimidated; while the weak, falling slaves to their own puppet, grow more helpless still.’

‘It’s a just retribution on them,’ said the King, ‘for having invented anything so tiresome.’

‘In truth, sir, all these things that make virtue are given a man for his profit, and that he may not go empty-handed into the mart of the world. He has stuff for barter: he can give honour for pleasure, morality for money, religion for power.’

The King raised his brows and smiled again, but made no remark. Rochester bowed courteously to me, as he added: ‘Is it not as I say, sir?’ and awaited my reply.

‘It’s better still, my lord,’ I answered, ‘for he can make these bargains you speak of, and, by not keeping them, have his basket still full for another deal.’

Again the King smiled as he patted his dog.

‘Very just, sir, very just,’ nodded Rochester. ‘Thus by breaking a villainous bargain he is twice a villain, and preserves his reputation to aid him in the more effectual cheating of his neighbour.’

‘And the damning of his own soul,’ said the King softly.”

Sometimes the wit crackles a little more than that; but the wisdom of it—well, is it not altogether somewhat mechanical and insincere?—somewhat more so than it need be for the mere purpose of illustration, if that be its purpose? In sum, we are disappointed with Simon Dale; and Mr. Anthony Hope must reconsider himself if he is not to be deposed from his promising place in the front rank of the younger novelists.

The Vintage. By E. F. Benson.
(Methuen.)

MR. BENSON is at a very interesting stage in his career. He has had to struggle with an early success which depended largely upon considerations somewhat irrelevant to the actual qualities of his work. And in more recent books the vein of boyish humour and exuberant high spirits, from which those qualities, such as they were, came, has shown unmistakable signs of having panned out. This Mr. Benson has seen for himself, and he has had the literary instinct and the good sense to start afresh on entirely new lines. In The Vintage this experiment has thoroughly justified itself. It is at once more ambitious and more satisfying than any of its predecessors, and it makes it quite clear that beneath the superficial cleverness there is solid good stuff in the author. The Vintage is a romance of the Greek War of Independence. Of romances we have, of course, enough and to spare at present, and most of them are not worth the paper they are written on; but you will not easily confuse Mr. Benson’s work with these. The mere workmanship of the book is admirable. Mr. Benson knows the topography and the social life of his Greece well, and he has used his knowledge with excellent effect. His background is painted with real sensitiveness to the characteristic and beautiful features of that wonderful country, and yet it remains a background, and is not allowed to encroach upon the interest of the story. Here is a charming bit of vignettted landscape, by way of example:

“The grapes were not yet so far advanced as at Nauplia and still hung hard, and tinged with colour only on the sunward side; but the fruit harvest was going on, and under the fig-trees were spread coarse strips of matting on which the fragrant piles were laid to dry. A few late pomegranate trees were still covered with their red, wax-like blossoms, but on most the petals had fallen, and the fruit, like little green-glazed pitchers, was beginning to swell and darken towards maturity. The men were at work in the vineyards cutting channels for the water, and through the green of the fig-trees you could catch sight every now and then of the brightly coloured petticoat of some woman picking the fruit, or else her presence was only indicated, where the leaves were thicker, by the dumping of the ripe figs on to the canvas strips below.”

The vintage, which Mr. Benson uses as a symbol of the overthrow of the rotten-ripe Turkish domination, is, of course, a familiar feature of Greek village life, and an episode of vintage idyll at the beginning serves to enforce and bring home the symbolism.

The story itself centres around the adventures of one Mitsos, a Nauplian fisher-boy, of giant stature and fiery soul, who happens to be the nephew of one of the chief organisers of the outbreak, and is thus drawn into the thick of it. The flare of patriotism in the lad, and the heroic deeds which he does in the strength of this, are finely realised. The fighting and the toilsome journeys which he endures are capitably told; and in the midst of it all he has a love-story which breathes the very spirit of romance, and is at one moment complicated by a situation of inner and vital tragedy. In some of the scenes which immediately precede the revolt the sentiment of the book reaches a very exalted point, and Mr. Benson’s style, good throughout, rises notably to the occasion. It falls to Mitsos to light the beacon which shall be the fateful signal:

“In ten minutes more the rain had stopped, but Mitsos still laboured on until the heat of the beacon was so great that he could scarcely approach to throw on the fresh fuel. The flames leaped higher and higher, and the wind dropping, a shower of red-hot pieces of half-burned leaves and bark was continually carried upwards, peopling the night with fiery sparks, and falling round him in blackened particles, or floating away a feathery white ash, like motes in a sunbeam. And as he stood there, grimy and panting, scorched and chilled, throwing new bundles of fuel on to the furnace, and seeing them smoke and fizz and then break out flaring, the glory and the splendour of the deeds he was helping in burst in upon him with one blinding flash that banished other memories, and for the moment even Suleima was but the shadow of a shadow. The beacon he had kindled seemed to illuminate the depths of his soul, and he saw by its light the cruelty and accursed lusts of that hated race, and the greatness of the freedom that was coming. Then, blackened and burned and sodden and drenched, he sat down for a few moments to the north of the beacon to get his breath, and scoured the night. Was that a star burning so low on the horizon? Surely it was too red for a star, and on such a night what stars could pierce the clouds? Besides, was not that a mountain which stood up dimly behind it? Then presently after it grew and glowed; it was no star, but the fiery mouth of message shouting north and south. Bassae had answered.”

We have but few faults to find with The Vintage. We should, however, like to suggest to Mr. Benson that the use of asterisks, so dear to conteurs of the Maupassant school, is hardly in keeping with the manner of a romance. In fact, the significance of them escaped us at the time, and the necessity of turning back to verify caused irritation. Mr. Benson should be a little franker. Occasionally, but only occasionally, the old Adam revives, and Mitsos and his henchman, Yanni, talk precisely like Dodo or the Babe. This, for instance, comes quaintly:

"A pot of little anchovies, Yanni," he remarked; "they will come first to give us an appetite. Thus I shall have two appetites, for I have one already. By the Virgin, there is tobacco too, all ready in the pipes. We shall pass a very pleasant evening, I hope. Oh, there's the horse still waiting at the gate. I will go and fetch him; and be quick with the supper, pig."

Yanni laughed.

"Really the Turk is a very convenient man," he said. "I like wars. We can take provisions from here which will last to Nauplia. There will be no skulking about villages after dark to buy bread and wine without being noticed."

A more serious defect is, that the interest of the story flags considerably in the last third. Mitsos is absorbed in the general history, and the campaigns and jealousies of the insurgent Greeks prove less absorbing than the individual career. What remains with us of the book, beyond the atmosphere of the whole, is certainly not the politics, but Mitsos himself, his brave heart and his idyllic love.

A PLEA FOR THE SEMICOLON.

"THE semicolon test may prove the final one to determine an author's fitness to rank with august society." Thus Mr. E. H. Mullin in The Chap Book, who, having premised that the sign of a bad writer is bad punctuation, especially in regard to the semicolon, proceeds to quote from certain of the august to show how the semicolon should be used:

"Matthew <sup>13</sup> who loved to be didactic, but disliked to be thought disputatious, everywhere in his writings uses elegant punctuation to bring out or to emphasise his meaning. In the following example, taken from his essay on 'Democracy,' we see him first using the semicolon to produce a reflective pause in the mind of the reader, and then, in the latter part of his sentence, using a comma in place of 'but' following the 'not only,' because he wished to reinforce his point without resorting to antithesis:

"It is true that the advance of all classes in culture and refinement may make the culture of one class, which, isolated, appeared remarkable, appear so no longer; but exquisite culture and great dignity are always something rare and striking, and it is the distinction of the English aristocracy, in the eighteenth century, that not only was their culture something rare by comparison with the rawness of the masses, it was something rare and admirable in itself."

Ruskin affords numberless instances of good punctuation; his artistic sense of the fitness of things and his poetic gift of condensation enabling him to make effective use of the despised parenthesis succeeded by a disjunctive semicolon in the following sentence, taken from The Crown of Wild Olives:

"It does not follow, because you are general of an army, that you are to take all the treasure, or land, it wins (if it fight for treasure or land); either, because you are king of a nation, that you are to consume all the profits of a nation's work."

Walter Pater, an artist in things great and small, studied so to balance his sentences by punctuation that the train of thought, while still continued in its natural mental order, was slowed down by semicolons at natural resting-places before a new phase of the same idea was presented to the reader's consideration. Who but Pater would have used the dash, without upsetting his material, in the following long sentence, taken from Marius the Epicurean:

"To keep the eye clear by a sort of exquisite personal alacrity and eagerness, extending even to his dwelling-place; to discriminate, ever more and more fastidiously, select form and colour in things from what is less select; to meditate much on beautiful visible objects, on objects, more especially, connected with the period of youth—on children at play in the morning, the trees in early spring, on young animals, on the fashions and amusements of young men; to keep ever by him if it were but a single choice flower, a graceful animal, or sea-shell, as a token and representative of the whole kingdom of such things; to avoid jealously, in his way through the world, everything repugnant to sight; and, should any circumstance tempt him to a general converse in the range of such objects, to disentangle himself from that circumstance at any cost of place, money, or opportunity; such were, in brief outline, the duties recognised, the rights demanded, in this new formula of life."

Robert Louis Stevenson's literary acuteness in getting the most out of his semicolons up to a certain point, after which he abandons them to pile up his culmination with the shorter commas, is well seen in the following sentence, taken from An Inland Voyage:

"I take it, in short, that I was as near Nirvana as would be convenient in practical life; and, if this be so, I make the Buddhists my sincere compliments; 't is an agreeable state, not very profitable in a money point of view, but very calm, golden, and incurious, and one that sets a man superior to alarms."

Here are five writers, all selected without much deliberation, and the passages from their works taken from the place where the book chanced to open. In none of them is there any effort apparent to the eye of the casual reader to make punctuation an end in itself; the sense, the rhythm and the appearance of the sentence in print, commend themselves unhesitatingly to the taste and to the understanding. Yet, let the semicolons and commas which buoy the channel of thought be removed, and the difficulty of replacing them will readily be discovered. It is safe to say that no ordinary proof reader, and, perhaps, few editors, would be able to mark the channel again as it was originally laid out. There has been a great deal too much levelling-down of late years in matters of typography."

MR. MARION CRAWFORD AT HOME.

A WRITER in the New York Critic thus describes Mr. Marion Crawford's home and home life at Sorrento, in Italy.

"Villa Crawford" is carved over the doorway in plain block letters. The heavy dark-green doors of the gate stand hospitably open, and show the straight narrow drive, bordered with roses, geraniums, and jasmine, and leading down to a square garden-court, not large, but full of flowers and crooked old olive-trees, over which wistaria has been trained from one to the other, so that in spring they are a mass of delicate bloom and fragrance. The house is very simple, built of rough stone partly stuccoed, as usual in that part of Italy, and irregular in shape because it has been added to from time to time. When Mr. Crawford first took it for a season, soon after his marriage to a daughter of General Berdan, it was in such a very tumbledown condition that when the fierce winter gales swept over snow-clad Vesuvius from the north-east, the teeth of every lock chattered, and the carpets rose in billows along the tiled floors. But the site is one of the most beautiful on the whole bay, for the house stands on the edge of a cliff which falls abruptly nearly two hundred feet to the water, and since Mr. Crawford bought it he has strengthened it with a solid tower, which can be seen for some distance out at sea.

The front door opens directly upon a simple hall where there are plants in tubs, and a tall old monastery clock stands near the door leading to the stone staircase. The long drawing-room opens upon a tiled terrace, and is almost always full of sunshine, the scent of flowers, and the voices of children. It cannot be said to be furnished in the modern style, but it contains many objects which could only have been collected by people having both taste and opportunity. . . . A door leads from one end of the drawing-room into the library, a high square room completely lined with old carved bookcases of black walnut, built more than two hundred years ago for Cardinal Altieri before he became Pope Clement the Tenth, and of which the wanderings, down to their final sale, would be an interesting bit of Roman social history. The library is not a workroom, but the place where the author's books are kept in careful order, those he needs at any time being carried up to his study, and brought down again when no longer wanted. There are about five thousand volumes, very largely books of reference and classics, partly collected by the author himself, and in part inherited from his uncle, the late Samuel Ward, and his father-in-law, General Berdan. The room is so full that one large bookcase has been placed in the middle, so that both sides of it are used. Besides the books the library contains only a writing table, three or four chairs, and a bronze bust of Mr. Ward.

In describing Mr. Crawford's four "strikingly handsome children," the Critic writer says that the youngest is bent on being a sailor-man, a disposition, he continues, which he inherits fairly, for Mr. Crawford's friends know that if he might have consulted only the natural bent of his mind he would have followed the sea as a profession. From early boyhood he has passed the happiest hours of his leisure on board a boat, and he is as proficient in the management of the picturesque but dangerous Italian felucca as any native skipper along the coast.

When he bought an old New York pilot boat in 1896 he was admitted to the examination of the Association of American Shipmasters in consideration of his long experience, and he holds a proper shipmaster's certificate authorising him to navigate sailing vessels on the high seas. He proved his ability by navigating his little schooner across the Atlantic with entire success, and without the slightest assistance from the mate he took with him. This episode in a life which has had more variety than falls to the lot of most men, shows clearly the predominant trait of Marion Crawford's character, which is determination to follow out anything he undertakes to learn until he knows how it should be done, even if he has not the time to work at it much afterwards. Readers of Casa Braccio may have noticed that the old cobbler, who is Paul Grigg's friend, is described with touches which show acquaintance with his trade, the fact being that while the author was preparing for college in the English village which he described later in A Tale of a Lonely Parish, he made a pair of shoes "to see how it was done," as he also joined the local bell-ringers to become familiar with the somewhat complicated system of peals and chimes. Mere curiosity is like the clutch of a child's hand, which usually means nothing, and may break what it seizes, but the insatiable thirst for knowledge of all kinds is entirely different, and has always formed part of the true artistic temperament.

The description of silver chiselling in Marzio's Crucifix is the result of actual experience, for Mr. Crawford once studied this branch of art, and produced several objects of considerable promise. In rebuilding and adding to his house he has never employed an architect, for he is a good practical builder and stonemason, as well as a creditable mathematician, and his foreman in all such work is a clever labourer who can neither read nor write. Like many left-handed men, he is skilful in the use of tools, and his mechanical capacity was tested recently when, having taken out a complete system of American plumbing, including a kitchen boiler, he could find no workmen who understood such appliances, and so put them all in himself, with the help of two or three plumbers whose knowledge did not extend beyond soldering a joint. When the job was done, everything worked perfectly, to his justifiable satisfaction. As he is a very fair classical scholar and an excellent linguist he could easily support himself as a tutor if it were necessary, or he might even attain to the awful dignity of a high-class courier. . . . Mr. Crawford is an early riser, being usually at his writing-table between six and seven o'clock. If it is winter he lights his own fire, and in any season begins the day, like most people who have lived much in southern countries, with a small cup of black coffee and a pipe. About nine o'clock he goes downstairs to spend an hour with his wife and children, and then returns to his study and works uninterruptedly until luncheon, which in summer is an early dinner. In warm weather the household goes to sleep immediately after this meal, to re-assemble towards five o'clock; but the author often works straight through this time, always, however, giving the late afternoon and evening to his family.

SOME APHORISMS.

V.—GOETHE.

Our Paris correspondent's views on Goethe and his genius were very frankly expressed in our issue of February 5. Whether Goethe's fame is about to decline or not, it is probable that few will venture to question his worldly wisdom, his profound experience of the good and evil of life. It is in his collected Maxims that these qualities may be most easily discovered by English readers. They have been translated with great care by Mr. Bailey Saunders, and it is from his collection that we take the following examples of Goethe's counsels and opinions:

How can a man come to know himself? Never by thinking, but by doing. Try to do your duty, and you will know at once what you are worth.

The most insignificant man can be complete if he works within the limits of his capacities, innate or acquired; but even fine talents can be obscured, neutralised, and destroyed by lack of this indispensable requirement of symmetry. This is a mischief which will often occur in modern times; for who will be able to come up to the claims of an age so full and intense as this, and one, too, that moves so rapidly?

It is a great error to take oneself for more than one is, or for less than one is worth.

Character calls forth character.

I keep silence about many things; for I do not want to put people out of countenance; and I am well content if they are pleased with things that annoy me.

Piety is not an end, but a means: a means of attaining the highest culture by the purest tranquillity of soul.

Whoso is content with pure experience and acts upon it he is enough of truth. The growing child is wise in this sense.

Certain minds must be allowed their peculiarities.

Everyone has his peculiarities and cannot get rid of them; and yet many a one is destroyed by his peculiarities, and those, too, of the most innocent kind.

A state of things in which every day brings some new trouble is not the right one.

The really foolish thing in men who are otherwise intelligent is that they fail to understand what another person says, when he does not exactly hit upon the right way of saying it.

No one should desire to live in irregular circumstances; but if by chance a man falls into them, they test his character and show how much determination he is capable of.

No one is the master of any truly productive energy; and all must let it work on by itself.

A man cannot live for every one; least of all for those with whom he would not care to live.

The errors of a man are what make him really lovable.

There is no use in reproving vulgarity, for it never changes.

Women's society is the element of good manners.

When we live with people who have a delicate sense of what is fitting, we get quite anxious about them if anything happens to disturb this sense.

There is no outward sign of politeness that will be found to lack some deep moral foundation. The right kind of education would be that which conveyed the sign and the foundation at the same time.

There is a politeness of the heart, and it is allied to love. It produces the most agreeable politeness of outward demeanour.

We generally take men to be more dangerous than they are.

If anyone meets us who owes us a debt of gratitude, it immediately crosses our mind. How often can we meet some one to whom we owe gratitude, without thinking of it!

By nothing do men show their character more than by the things they laugh at.

A man well on in years was reproved for still troubling himself about young women. "It is the only means," he replied, "of regaining one's youth; and that is something every one wishes to do."

To praise a man is to put oneself on his level.

Nothing is more highly to be prized than the value of each day.

The mind endowed with active powers and keeping within the practical object to the task that lies nearest, is the worthiest that is on earth.

Let every man ask himself with which of his faculties he can best will somehow influence his age.

Character in matters great and small consists in a man steadily pursuing the things of which he feels himself capable.

The public must be treated like women: they must be told absolutely nothing but what they like to hear.

How many years must a man do nothing before he can at all know what is to be done and how to do it!

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1898.

No. 1347, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .               | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . . . .               | 0 15 3  | 0 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

CAMBRIDGE should be proud of Mr. J. G. Frazer. In his edition of Pausanias's Description of Greece, which Messrs. Macmillan have just published, he has performed single-handed a feat of research and scholarship which compares with Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. At a time when so much is said of the diversion of all literary activity into fictional channels, it is well that such a reminder should be forthcoming that there are patient scholars at work, and that another public than that of Mudie's eagerly awaits their work.

THE pains that went to Mr. Frazer's previous work, The Golden Bough, that extraordinary study of primitive customs and religions, though excessive, must have been surpassed by the Pausanias, which, in addition to the translation, contains four huge volumes of notes, fairly to be described as exhaustive, and another volume of index. To learn one's way about the volumes is in itself a considerable achievement.

At the close of Mr. Frazer's preface is the following quiet and beautiful passage:

"The windows of my study look on the tranquil court of an ancient college, where the sundial marks the silent passage of the hours, and in the long summer days the fountain splashes drowsily amid flowers and grass; where, as the evening shadows deepen, the lights come out in the blazoned windows of the Elizabethan hall, and from the chapel the sweet voices of the choir, blent with the pealing music of the organ, float on the peaceful air, telling of man's eternal aspirations after truth and goodness and immortality. Here, if anywhere, remote from the tumult and bustle of the world, with its pomps and vanities and ambitions, the student may hope to hear the still voice of truth, to penetrate through the little transitory questions of the hour to the realities which abide, or rather which we fondly think must abide, while the generations come and go. I cannot be too thankful that I have been allowed to spend so many quiet and happy years in such a scene, and when I quit my old college rooms, as I soon shall do, for another home in Cambridge, I shall hope to carry forward to new work in a new scene the love of study and labour which has been, not indeed implanted, but fostered and cherished in this ancient home of learning and peace."

Cambridge may put this passage against Matthew Arnold's eulogy of Oxford in the preface to his Essays in Criticism.

Nor the least interesting feature of the trial of M. Zola is the opportunity it has given Mr. David Christie Murray to prove himself still a special correspondent of unusual vividness and vigour. Mr. Murray is, of course, heart and soul with the novelist, and letters inspired by such zeal, and so coloured with enthusiasm, are, of course, more moving than letters written from a dispassionate standpoint. For sheer interest Mr. Murray's descriptions in the Daily News have excelled those in any of the papers.

THIS passage from Mr. Murray's description of Maitre Labori's speech will explain his method:

"Time and again he awoke the anger of the crowd, and time and again he jungled it down. Whenever they raised a disdainful laugh at a fact or an argument, he turned with a repetition of it more uncompromising than the original, and the many interruptions seemed a spur to him. The words, 'A patriot like Zola,' evoked a storm of groans and hisses. He turned like a lion. 'I say it. A patriot like Zola—a patriot with a braver heart, a clearer vision, a loftier love of his own land than is owned by any of the shallow-minded swallows of phrases who rage at him. One of these days you will recognise your own folly and his greatness.' He stood a second or two, as if challenging a new outburst. There was complete silence. 'Ah, well, then,' he said, with a touch of fighting laughter in his voice, 'I continue.' And he went back to his argument."

THE partisan and cynical but exceedingly able onlooker who has been writing on the Dreyfus case for the Pall Mall Gazette was allowed to print the following "explanation" of Zola's intervention: "What Zola sees in this astounding Dreyfus case is the material for another romance, centring round the picturesque and eminently mediæval figure of Major Esterhazy. And to be sure of the dénouement the author has accorded to himself the beau rôle. The exigencies of a gigantic sale, following upon a "grand succès de feuilleton," are known to no one better than to M. Zola. His last two works, in which the pornographic note is strikingly absent, did not sell in such a way as to satisfy the anticipations of either author or publisher. Seventy thousand copies were printed of Rome (it must be remembered that a French publisher's 'édition de mille' consists of only five hundred copies), and of these only twenty thousand have been disposed of. Paris announced itself from the first as a dismal failure, and its comparative cleanliness is the undoubted explanation of this. When a writer makes a speciality he must stick to it or suffer it to stick to him. M. Zola himself complained that owing to the excitement about the Dreyfus case nobody was reading his novel. So rather than be left out in the cold he plunged into the actuality of the moment."

WE prefer to take the other view of M. Zola's intervention, and with all our heart we sympathise with him in the sentence passed upon him. Whether he has said true or untrue things, he was entitled to a fair trial, and no one can pretend that he has had it.

IT is to the honour of M. Anatole France that he signed the letter of protestation in favour of a revision of the Dreyfus trial, and expressed in court his belief in M. Zola's sincerity, inasmuch as he has already expressed in print his views of Zola's character and work. The passage appears in the first volume of La Vie Littéraire:

"That M. Emile Zola formerly had, I will not say a great talent, but a large talent, is possible. That he still retains some shreds of it is credible, but I avow that I have all the difficulty in the world to admit it. His work is bad, and he is one of those unhappy beings of whom it may be said that it would have been better had they never been born. Truly I do not deny to him his detestable glory. Nobody before him has raised up so high a heap of filth. That is his monument, the greatness of which cannot be contested. Never did man make an equivalent effort to render humanity vile, to hurl insults at all the images of beauty and of love, to deny all that is good and all that is well. Never did man to such a point misunderstand the ideal of man. There is in all of us, in the little as in the great, among the humble and the proud, an instinct of beauty, a desire for that which adorns and for that which decorates, which, spread over the world, constitute the charm of life. M. Zola does not know it. There is in man an infinite need of loving which renders him divine. M. Zola does not know it. Desire and modesty mingle in certain souls in delicious gradations. M. Zola does not know it. There are upon earth magnificent forms and noble thoughts; there are pure souls and heroic hearts. M. Zola does not know it. Many weaknesses even, many errors and faults, have their touching beauty. Their grief is sacred. The holiness of tears is at the bottom of all religions. Misfortune would suffice to render man august to man. M. Zola does not know it. He does not know that the Græces are decent, that philosophic irony is indulgent and good-tempered, and that human things inspire only two sentiments to well-constructed minds—admiration or pity. M. Zola is worthy of profound pity."

THE fact, says the New York Critic, that the MS. of Waverley came near destruction before it was discovered by Sir Walter among his fishing-tackle so profoundly affected one of the (central Pennsylvania) hearers of a University Extension lecture, that his paper, presented to the lecturer, contained this clause: "Happy it was for English literature that this beacon-light was not extinguished by the scissors of the maid near the morass, and under the leaves had been buried the root of Scotch literature."

MR. DOUGLAS SLADEN has improved Who's Who. To the new issue more than a thousand new biographical notices have been added. One is surprised to find how many omissions there were in the 1897 volume. Among those who join the ranks of the Whos for the first time are: Mr. William Blackwood, Mr. Blowitz, Mr. Stanhope Forbes, Mr. David Hannay, Prof. W. P. Ker, Mr. Alphonse Legros, Miss Olga Nethersole, Mr. Joseph Pennell, Miss Ada Rehan, Mr. J. St. Loe Strachey, and Mr. Louis Zangwill. A useful and proper addition is an obituary list of persons whose biographies appeared last year, and who since, but not necessarily in consequence, have died. These number nearly two hundred.

A CAREFUL comparison of the biographies would doubtless yield an interesting crop of variations. We observe that one or two men of note are no longer reticent about their favourite amusements. Mr. John Davidson, who last year did not, to all appearance, recreate, now confesses that "walking" is his solace. Mr. Bernard Shaw no longer gives "cycling and showing-off" as his amusements: his recreations for the current year are "change of work, Nature, Art, human intercourse—anything except sport." But it would be premature to say that Mr. Shaw is growing serious. Sir Walter Besant still finds happiness in "looking on." Last year we felt concerned when we discovered that Dr. Garnett confessed to no recreation. But now we are relieved: "change of occupation and dolce far niente" are his relaxations.

AMONG Who's Who's errors, which on a casual survey are fewer than they were last year, we note that Mr. Pett Ridge is stated to have been appointed Secretary to Bayne, M.P., in 1897. "Secretary to Bayne, M.P.," we believe, is not Mr. Ridge's employment, but the title of one of his books. Mr. Allen Upward, we observe, is credited with having taken part in the "invasion of Turkey" in 1897. Surely it was Greece. And Mr. Le Gallienne is said to have composed a "prose" translation of Omar Khayyam; which is a hard saying.

THE list of pseudonyms in Who's Who, which last year was the same as that given in Hazell's Cyclopadia, has at length received revision. No longer are we confronted with the information that Mr. Gilbert once styled himself "Tomline Latour," and that "O. P. Q. Philander Smiff" was Mr. A. A. Dowty. We are still told, however, that "Ally Sloper" is Mr. C. H. Ross, and that both Mark Rutherford and Reuben Shapcott are W. Hale White, which, strictly speaking, is not the fact. Because a novelist professes to edit the writings of certain mythical persons he does not necessarily employ their names as pseudonyms.

WE trust that the indisposition which prevents Mr. James Payn from writing

"Our Note-Book" in the Illustrated London News this week, will not be of long duration. His cheery pen can ill be missed.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT's adaptation of Moore in his speech at Bury leads to a very terrible suspicion. The speaker said:

"You may break, you may shatter the vase if you will,
But the scent of the Liberal will hang round him still."

Can Sir William Harcourt really pronounce Liberal as a dissyllable?

MR. JOHN D. BARRY, the New York correspondent of the Literary World (Boston, Mass.), is always readable, but, like ourselves, he is sometimes a little wrong in his facts. Mr. Barry's dearest friend could not say that the following piece of news he gives his readers is quite accurate:

"This is the volume [Mr. Phillips's Poems] that was 'crowned' a few weeks ago by the recently formed English Academy as the best book of the year, the author receiving, in addition to the honour, the very substantial sum of five hundred guineas."

IN his Pall Mall Magazine gossip Mr. Quiller Couch comes with spirit to the defence of William Barnes, the Dorsetshire poet, against his latest—and, so far as we know, only—detractor, Mr. Lang. In a recent criticism Mr. Lang referred to the author of Rural Poems in the Dorset Dialect as "a weariful writer of misspelled English, called 'dialect.'"

"Well," says Q., "Mr. Lang may call Barnes weariful, an he list. This is a free country, at least to the extent that any man who chooses may yawn over 'Zummer Winds' or 'The Wife a-Lost.' But I confess that 'misspelled English, called 'dialect,'" sticks in my throat. May I even say that it gars me fash mysel' extraordinar'?" Hech, mon, an' havena the braw Scots a'ready stown the cuddie, but ye maun geck an' tak' the gee gif a puir Southron gangrel cock an' e'e attowre the dyke. Excuse me: I have not the knack of it. But I believe that 'stown the cuddie' is good, or gude, or guid, Scots for 'stolen the donkey' (though, oddly enough, 'tak' the gee' does not mean 'steal the horse'), and I was attempting to say that it seems hard that a Scotsman should be allowed to walk off with the animal while an Englishman may not so much as look over the hedge."

Our sympathies are both with Mr. Couch and with Mr. Lang: with Mr. Couch in his eulogy of Barnes, and with Mr. Lang in his misfortune of finding Barnes "weariful."

IN connexion with "misspelled English called 'dialect'" we may mention for the information of those interested in the subject, that Mr. E. W. Prevost's Glossary of Cumberland Words and Phrases is now sufficiently near publication to be ordered. It may be obtained of Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, London.

AN idea of the method of the authors of the most facile variety of serial fiction and penny dreadfuls may be gained from the account of the latest strike. In a street off Brunswick-square, Bloomsbury, dwells an imaginative man whose business is the production of lurid romances of the cheapest kind. To assist him, he has a staff of "ghosts," to whom he dictates plots, leaving it to them to fill in dialogue and deaths. Their salary ranges from thirty shillings a week to two pounds, and as a rule the relation between themselves and the master mind is amicable enough. A few days ago, however, one of these assistants was so unwise as to kill off a hero before the time was ripe, and he was in consequence dismissed. The result was that the rest of the staff decided as a protest to "come out," and the author is now alone, striving to collect his memories of each story, and again ply his unaccustomed pen.

THE most exquisite living delineator of children, M. Boutet de Monvel, is now visiting America in connexion with an exhibition of his works in New York and other cities. He also expects to paint a number of portraits. Among the exhibits are the water-colour drawings made for the work on Joan of Arc which the artist himself wrote.

IN the "Paris Letter" of a literary journal is the following passage: "Mr. W. E. Norris has been here [in Paris] to I sat next to him at a dinner party not long ago, and so modest was he, and so tactful the hostess, that I discovered only the following day who my neighbour had been. Whether to felicitate or to condole with the novelist is the problem."

AMONG other manifestations of welcome which greeted Mr. Kipling on his arrival at the Cape was a set of verses somewhat in his own manner, contributed by Mr. Edg Wallace, a private soldier, to the Cape Times. Three of the stanzas ran thus:

"You 'ave met us in the tropics, you 'ave met us in the snows;
But mostly in the Punjab an' the 'Ills.
You 'ave seen us in Mauritius, where the naughty cyclone blows,
You 'ave met us underneath a sun that kills,
An' we grills!
An' I ask you, do we fill the bloomin' bill

But you're our particular author, you're our patron an' our friend,
You're the poet of the cuss-word an' the swear,
You're the poet of the people, where the mapped lands extend,
You're the poet of the jungle an' the lair
An' compare,
To the ever-speaking voice of everywhere

There are poets what can please you with their primrose violet lays,
There are poets wot can drive a man to drink;
But it takes a 'pukka' poet, in a Patrick Craze,
To make a chortlin' nation squirm and shrink,

Gasp an' blink:
An' 'eedless, thoughtless people stop and think!"

The body of literature that has Mr. Kipling's influence as its direct inspiration must be growing very bulky.

THE second instalment of the reminiscences of the late George du Maurier in Harper's is notable for the writer's eulogy of Charles Keene. This is good: "I heard a celebrated French painter say: 'He is a great man, your Charles Keene; he takes a pen and ink and a bit of paper, and with a half-dozen strokes he knows how to frame a gust of wind!'"

AN appeal has been made in the Times for funds to place a memorial to Jane Austen in Winchester Cathedral. The signatories are Lord Northbrook, Lord Selborne, Mr. W. W. B. Beach and Mr. Montagu G. Knight. They say: "The only memorial of her (beyond the stone slab which marks the site of her grave) is a brass tablet let into the wall, which was placed there by her nephew and biographer, the late Rev. J. E. Austen Leigh, in 1870. We feel that we should be appealing to a large circle of warm admirers, who have been charmed and cheered by her works, if we ask for subscriptions to enable us to fill one of the windows in the cathedral with painted glass in her memory. The selection of the window will depend upon the amount of support that we may receive. The cost of a window in the Lady Chapel is estimated at £600, of one in the nave £300. We may add that our proposal has the cordial approval of the Dean of Winchester. Contributions not exceeding five guineas may be paid to Messrs. Hoare, 7, Fleet-street, London, who have kindly consented to act as treasurers of the fund."

MEANWHILE, we understand that a memorial to Jane Austen of another kind is being prepared by a London publisher, in the shape of a new and distinguished edition of her works.

ANOTHER memorial is foreshadowed in a speech of the Dean of Lichfield on Wednesday. He is not, he says, satisfied that his scheme, made two years ago, to purchase Dr. Johnson's birthplace at Lichfield and convert it into a permanent Johnson Museum, has been sufficiently explained and encouraged, and he intends to persevere with it.

ALREADY several inventive authors, who know what opportunism is, have produced imaginative stories of Klondike. In course of time we may expect genuine Klondike literature to follow. The diggings are certain to produce their own historian. Meanwhile, the Yukon Herald offers a forecast of the local quality in the following "Klondike Epitaph":

"A cuss named Watney lies below—
Leastwise he said that was his name,
He struck the town a month ago—
The sort of chap that thaws the same.
He started out to make it hot—
Which might be welcome later on,
When mercury, as like as not,
Won't have no elevator on.
He was a little premature—
That's all; for in the heat of it
He claimed the earth—likewise, dead sure,
He's got about six feet of it."

The inspiration, we should imagine, was Mark Twain's lyric, "He done his level best."

A LITTLE while ago Mr. W. S. Gilbert, writing on the subject of Fiji's meridian, presented librettists with the groundwork of a plot. In return, we offer Mr. Gilbert subject matter for a new Bab ballad. Tina di Lorenzo, the Italian actress, recently played at Budapest. An advocate and ex-deputy, named Pazmandy, criticised her acting with some severity, and went on to affirm that the actress had formerly been a member of the Sultan's harem. This statement, says the Morning Post's correspondent, from whom we quote, aroused great indignation on the part of the actress, an action for libel against Pazmandy on the part of her father, another action for damages against Pazmandy by the manager of the theatre, a public protest, signed by five Italians on behalf of the Italian colony of Budapest, and, finally, a telegraphic offer of marriage to the actress from an anonymous Hungarian magnate residing abroad. The beautiful Tina di Lorenzo asked for twenty-four hours in which to reflect. The rest—we leave to Mr. Gilbert.

APROPOS our notice last week of twenty-one minor poets, Mr. G. F. Leatherdale sends us the following simple and touching verses, entitled "A Minor Poet's Testament":

"I take with me what soul remains
Outside the casket of my verse.
I leave my monetary gains
To hire a hearse.

Such as lies open in the breeze,
And wears no blackness to appal
One little curious child who sees
My funeral.

Before my short procession trets
Demurely through suburban ways,
Bring me a few forget-me-nots
Instead of bays.

Those little buds were born to hold,
Each, one small glimpse of summer sky,
Not published to be largely sold—
And such was I.

So, while the children linger near,
I, being dead, shall speak to them
And set with many a glittering tear
My diadem."

THE newest firm of publishers is that of Messrs. Duckworth & Co., who will shortly begin to issue books from premises in Henrietta-street. Mr. Gerald Duckworth is associated with Mr. A. R. Waller, the editor of Montaigne in the "Temple Classics." One of the first publications of the firm will be a series of studies in biography by Mr. Leslie Stephen. Another enterprise will be a new series of Lives of the Saints in separate volumes. These Lives will be issued by arrangement with the editor and publisher of the French collection. The English authorised translations are being revised by the Rev. Father Tyrrell, S.J., who will contribute a preface to each volume.

It has been found necessary to delay the publication in this country of the new novel American Wives and English Husbands, by Gertrude Atherton, the authoress of Patience Sparhawk, in order to secure simultaneous publication in America. Messrs. Service & Paton hope to issue the volume about the middle of March.

MR. FREDERIC BRETON has just completed a romance of the sixteenth century which he will publish through Mr. Grant Richards. His aim has been to give a living picture of the times rather than to write a mere adventure story. The plot is laid mainly in Basle, the Athens of the Swiss Confederation, a free city of the Holy Roman Empire at the beginning of the period, and foremost in that struggle for political reform which preceded the Reformation. Incidentally the story introduces various well-known characters—Paracelsus, Erasmus of Rotterdam, Frobenius the printer, and others. The title is Dear Heart.

MR. GEORGE SAINTSBURY has written a paper, called "Novels of University Life," for the March number of Macmillan's Magazine.

HERR JONAS STADLING, the Swedish journalist who described in the November Century "Andrée's Flight into the Unknown," has written for the March number of that magazine an account of "Andrée's Messenger." The only word that has been received from Andrée since his departure was brought by carrier pigeon. The bird was killed by a whaler and fell into the sea. Afterwards the whaler learned that the bird might possibly bear a message from the explorer, and the ship sailed back, and by chance the body of the bird was recovered.

SOME time ago the letters and journals of William Cory, the author of Ionica, were printed at the Oxford University Press for private circulation. Mr. Frowde is now about to publish some of the results of Cory's experience as a schoolmaster recorded in an MS. journal dated 1862, and described as "Hints for Eton Masters," although the little book has a much wider scope than this title would imply.

THE author of Murray Murgatroyd, Journalist, is Mr. Charles Morice, not Morier, as stated in our last issue.

THE English translation of Huysmans' romance, La Cathédrale, will be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. in the course of the next few days. The translation has been prepared by Mrs. Clara Bell, and edited by Mr. C. Kegan Paul, who was responsible for the English version of En Route. Mr. Paul also writes a brief introductory note dealing with certain aspects of Huysmans' work from a Catholic standpoint.

THE March number of the Genealogical Magazine will contain an article by "X" on "The Right to bear Arms."

A BALLAD OF READING GAOL.*

Its subject matter is simple. A soldier is in gaol under sentence of death for murder. One of his fellow prisoners records the effect upon himself on learning the soldier's fate, his growing horror as the morning of execution draws near, the terrors of the night immediately preceding it, and the emotions that follow. The document is authentic: hence its worth. The poem is not great, is not entirely trustworthy; but in so far as it is the faithful record of experiences through which the writer—C.3.3.—has passed, it is good literature. According to its sincerity so is it valuable: where the author goes afield and becomes philosophic and self-conscious and inventive he forfeits our interests; but so long as he honestly reproduces emotion he holds it. To feel and chronicle sensations is his peculiar gift: in the present work, at any rate, he is not a thinker. Nor should he have attempted humour. Such a stanza as this is not the way in which to depict the horrors of hanging:

"It is sweet to dance to violins
When Love and Life are fair:
To dance to flutes, to dance to lutes,
Is delicate and rare:
But it is not sweet with nimble feet
To dance upon the air!"

From the 109 stanzas we would indeed like to remove some fifty; yet take it for all in all the ballad as it stands is a remarkable addition to contemporary poetry.

On the night preceding the execution the narrator of the story and many of his companions slept not at all, although the doomed man

"Jay as one who lies and dreams
In a pleasant meadow-land,
The watchers watched him as he slept
And could not understand
How one could sleep so sweet a sleep
With a hangman close at hand."

The hours dragged wearily on. And then, after an agony of waiting—

"At last I saw the shadowed bars,
Like a lattice wrought in lead,
Move right across the whitewashed wall
That faced my three-plank bed,
And I knew that somewhere in the world
God's dreadful dawn was red."

That stanza gives very vividly the prisoner's isolation, his remoteness from the busy hum of men. The executed man uttered one groan:

"And all the woe that moved him so
That he gave that bitter cry,
And the wild regrets, and the bloody sweats,
None knew so well as I:
For he who lives more lives than one
More deaths than one must die."

The last two lines sum up as simply and forcibly as may be the penalty of an excess of imaginative sympathy.

Here, again, is a stanza wherein the baldest directness and brevity do the poet's work better than a regiment of words:

"There is no chapel on the day
On which they hang a man:
The chaplain's heart is far too sick,
Or his face is far too wan,
Or there is that written in his eyes
Which none should look upon."

* The Ballad of Reading Gaol. By C.3.3. (Leonard Smithers.)

The prisoners, therefore, were kept indoors until noon. Then they were permitted to exercise:

"I never saw sad men who looked
With such a wistful eye
Upon that little tent of blue
We prisoners called the sky,
And at every happy cloud that passed
In such strange freedom by."

That is a good stanza; but its excellence has been a snare to its author. Previously in the ballad he uses it twice with slight alterations, in both cases in describing the condemned man. Surely it is a mistake to apply the same words both to a prisoner on the bottom step of the scaffold and to his comrades just losing the terror caused by his death. This is one of the historian's occasional lapses into invention. He is not as whole-souled a battler for truth as he should be, and when he falls back on his imagination he is not well enough served. Truth (if they only knew it) is the best friend that non-creative writers have.

To continue, the description of the exercise in the yard is the occasion for these biting lines:

"The warders strutted up and down,
And watched their herd of brutes,
Their uniforms were spick and span,
And they wore their Sunday suits;
But we knew the work they had been at
By the quicklime on their boots."

Finally, let us quote this picture of what life in prison means to a sensitive nature—one of the passages which make the poem notable:

"With midnight always in one's heart,
And twilight in one's cell,
We turn the crank, or tear the rope,
Each in his separate Hell,
And the silence is more awful far
Than the sound of a brazen bell."

And never a human voice comes near
To speak a gentle word:
And the eye that watches through the door
Is pitiless and hard:
And by all forgot, we rot and rot,
With soul and body marred."

And thus we rust Life's iron chain
Degraded and alone:
And some men curse, and some men weep,
And some men make no moan:
But God's eternal Laws are kind
And break the heart of stone."

These extracts should be sufficient to assist any reader to a decision whether to buy the book and read more or to rest content. They have also probably recalled the author's poetical model; but if not, we might point out that it is, of course, Hood's "Dream of Eugene Aram." The intensity to which both poets—both Hood and C.3.3.—occasionally attain proves the fitness of this metre for such a subject. Curiously enough, the new ballad is, to some extent, supplemental of the older one: "The Dream of Eugene Aram" is the record of a murderer's own emotions and impulses; The Ballad of Reading Gaol shows us the emotions and impulses excited in his companions by a murderer doomed to die and dying. Hood's work is, we think, the finer of the two: it has more concentration, its author had more nervous strength, was a more dexterous master of words, was superior to morbidity and hysteria; yepuned of its extraneous stanzas the new ballad is a worthy companion to its exemplar.

EDUCATION FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

BY A FORMER MEMBER OF THE BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE.

II.—THE TRAINING OF SELECTED CANDIDATES

WHEN the Civil Service of India was first thrown open to competition the successful candidates proceeded to India without further training in this country. They passed their period of probation at the headquarters of the presidencies to which they were appointed, being already in the service; but, after a few years, when the pressing need of men that had followed the great Mutiny was no longer felt, the system was introduced of keeping the selected candidates, officially styled probationers, under special training for two years before they went out to India. During that time they studied the Laws, Language and History of India, General Jurisprudence, Roman Law, Political Economy; their progress was tested by periodical examinations, which varied in number at different periods; and seniority in the service was determined, sometimes by the combined mark of the Entrance and Final Examination and sometimes by those of the latter alone. The former method of determining seniority is that now again adopted, and it certainly is the fairer of the two; but the practice of having only one examination of selected candidates seems a mistake, as I said in my former paper, and one year of special study in this country, not followed by any in India, is too short. The question of the age of entry into the service is that which every thing turns, and if that be again lowered (as I hope it may), it is not practicable either to extend the period of probation or to enlarge the field of study.

Under the system which was abandoned five years ago, General Jurisprudence, Evidence, Indian Civil Law, Political Economy and History and Geography of India were compulsory subjects of examination, in addition to those which are so still—vernacular languages, the Criminal Code, and the Indian Evidence and Contract Acts. It is to be regretted that so many subjects of the highest importance are now neglected, and I cannot but think that the training is thus less suited to its purpose than that which it has superseded. The standard of attainment in the vernaculars, too, is necessarily lower than it used to be, and thus one great element of efficiency is weakened. The young civilian who is well grounded in the language in which most of his work must be done is not only a valuable officer, but will secure the respect and liking of the natives, and the duties of his service will not, as a rule, leave much time for study; it is, therefore, of

THE WEEK.

THE most hardened reviewer, the most blasé watcher of the literary skies, must receive with astonishment and admiration the six volumes of Mr. J. G. Frazer's translation of Pausanias' Description of Greece, and commentaries thereon. It is not often that a work of such magnitude comes from one hand, or that six volumes of one such work are published together. We shall give a swift idea of the magnitude of Mr. Frazer's undertaking when we say that his volumes contain, together, considerably more than three thousand pages. Mr. Frazer introduces the work as follows:

"My aim has been to give a faithful and idiomatic rendering of Pausanias, and to illustrate and supplement his description of Greece by the remains of antiquity and the aspect of the country at the present day. The translation has been made, on the whole, from the last complete recension of the text, that of J. H. C. Schubart (Leipsic, 1853-1854). All departures from that recension are recorded in the Critical Notes, in which I have also essayed to put together the more important suggestions that have been made for the improvement of the text since Schubart's edition was published. The materials for an illustrative commentary have been accumulated in great abundance by travellers, scholars, and antiquaries, and my task has been chiefly the humble one of condensing and digesting these copious, but scattered, materials into a moderate compass and a convenient form. But I have also embodied the notes of several journeys which I made in Greece for the sake of this work in 1890 and 1895."

We are told that the book is specially designed for students at the universities, but

"in order to render it intelligible to all who interest themselves in ancient Greece, whether they are scholars or not, I have given quotations from foreign languages in English, and have been at some pains to write as simply and clearly as I could."

MR. JULIAN S. CORBETT's work, Drake and the Tudor Navy, belongs to a class of books which have of late years become very popular. Drake's name and fame have recently been revived by Mr. Henry Newbolt's stirring ballad. In an enumeration of Drake relics which he gives in his Introduction, Mr. Corbett thus refers to the now famous "drum":

"At Buckland Abbey is a State drum decorated with Drake's arms, on which it is probable his last salute was beaten as he was committed to the sea, and upon which the legend says he may still be summoned when England is in danger."

In treating of Drake's achievements Mr. Corbett attempts "to give a general view of the circumstances under which England first became a controlling force in the European system by virtue of her power upon the sea." The dangers of identifying a national movement too much with one man—in this instance Drake—is recognised by Mr. Corbett, who, however, writes:

"For the adoption of the method in the present case history affords ample justification.

Not only was Drake intimately connected, in all the various phases of his life, with every aspect of the Elizabethan maritime upheaval, but throughout Europe he was recognised and applauded, even in his lifetime, as the personification of the new political forces. Nor has recent research disclosed any reason for reversing the verdict of his contemporaries. The romantic fascination of his career as a corsair and explorer began, it is true, very shortly after his death to overshadow his work as an admiral and a statesman, but in his own time it was not so; and a principal object of the present work is to restore him to the position he once held as one of the great military figures of the Reformation."

In happy conjunction with the above biography of an Elizabethan naval hero comes Sir John C. Dalrymple Hay's Lines from my Log-books. The author went aboard his first ship, the Thalia, in 1834; and since then he has served on no less than twenty-two British warships. This book is pleasantly anecdotal and inevitably interesting; and there are several lengthy appendices interesting to naval readers.

MR. LAURENCE IRVING, whose Peter the Great has just enjoyed the splendid distinction of being "acted" at the Lyceum, appears this week as a literary dramatist. A one-act mediæval play, entitled Godefroi and Yolande. The scene of the play is "A Spacious Hall in the Castle of Yolande"; and the principal characters are Philippe le Bel, King of France; the Archbishop and his brother, Sir Sagramour, a young Paladin; Godefroi, and Yolande.

THE Rev. A. G. B. Atkinson, Curate of St. Botolph, Aldgate, has written a careful and complete history of his church and parish in one convenient volume. History connects this parish with early Saxon times; and the present church is the third in descent from the original church raised at about the time of the Norman conquest. The records of the church begin in 1547, and it is mainly on these that Mr. Atkinson has based his work. Mr. Atkinson does not neglect the literary associations of Aldgate. It will be remembered that Chaucer had the dwelling-house above the Gate of Aldgate. The lease is one of the few authentic documents relating to Chaucer's life that we possess, and Mr. Atkinson quotes it in full. It is curiously modern; and its matter-of-factness and strictness seem incongruous to the father of English poetry, here referred to throughout as "the same Geoffrey" or "the aforesaid Geoffrey."

THE "Collector's Series" now includes The Stamp Collector. This book has been written by Mr. W. J. Hardy and Mr. E. D. Bacon, in collaboration. In their introduction the authors make the following claim for the study of postage stamps:

"Philately has been elevated, step by step, into a quasi-archæological science, with its own societies, bibliography, and critical literature. It would be useless to pretend that in weight and consequence it is entitled to take a very high place; yet we may claim for it that it has manifold appeals to human sympathy, and highest importance that considerable progress should be made before he enters on his administrative duties. Again, his functions will, speaking generally, be either judicial or connected with the revenue, as Magistrate and Collector or Judge, in ascending grades.

For either of these lines one would say that a thorough training in the principles of Jurisprudence, Evidence, Political Economy, History of India, Hindu and Mohammedan Law, and Indian Civil Procedure was essential. Yet not one of these subjects is now compulsory, and a scrutiny of the optional subjects chosen for the Final Examination—which subjects include the last four of those just named—shows that only the two last, which may be called the Common Law of India, are much studied. Nor is the necessary training supplied by previous study for entrance into the service.

A mere handful of the successful candidates take Roman or English Law, not much over one-third take Political Economy, Indian History is not a subject of examination, and that very favourite subject "Political Science" does not seem at all adequately to supply the sound knowledge that is wanted for an Indian administrator, but rather suggests a sixth-form debating society. Another subject that used to form part of the special training was attendance in the Courts of Law, civil and criminal, and reporting cases. This training was invaluable, and should certainly be revived. Nothing is more instructive than to see how a London Police Magistrate, a County Court judge, or a judge of the High Court grasps the facts of a case, controls the procedure, and sums up the evidence—and nothing is more required by the young civilian. The number of cases to be reported might be less than it used to be, but some reports should be required.

As to the place where a probationer will pass his year of study, his choice will lie practically between Oxford, Cambridge, and London. What I said in my former article of the utter abandonment of the field by the Scotch and Irish Universities need not be repeated; but until they provide adequate instruction in all the principal subjects, the Secretary of State's very wise rule against "migration" will prevent any candidates from residing at them.

Edinburgh, therefore, to take one instance, is making a useless pretence of zeal in offering fifty lectures on the optional subject of Indian History! I earnestly hope the Secretary of State and his Council may restore the abandoned courses of Law, History, and Political Economy; lower the age for entrance into the service; and lengthen the period of probation. All those measures are, as I hope I have shown, required in the interests of India.

A LATE MEMBER OF THE BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE.

stands to some extent on the same ground as coin-collecting in uniting amusement with instruction. Its past, we know, is not a long one; what its future is to be we forbear to prophesy."

The work is well provided with illustrations, these being in photographic monochrome.

ONE detects the work of a quiet but enthusiastic student in The Great French Triumvirate. This title covers metrical translations by Mr. Thomas Constable of the "Athalie" of Racine, the "Polyceute" of Corneille, and the "Misanthrope" and "Tartuffe" of Molière. In a pithy introduction, Mr. Constable pleads for a more general study of the French dramatists. To the objection, "No one reads translations," he makes pleasant answer:

"I believe that if a translation be readable it will have readers. There is most pleasure in doing what we do easily. My boy read Butcher and Lang's translation of the Odyssey without discovering that it was anything but an enchanting fairy tale. If Mr. Merry and Æolic aorists are now making it plain to him that there is another side to it—grim, prosaic, pieced out, flogged in—is he thereby wholly a gainer?"

NEW novels are noticed, as usual, in our Supplement.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE BOOKLESS EAST-END.

MANY things cease at Aldgate Pump, and nothing more decisively than the bookshop. Yet the million and a half Londoners who live east of that point must read. One surmises that they read a great deal of fiction; where do they buy their books? True, Free Libraries are dotted along the great routes, a mile or so apart; but Free Libraries are not shops, and borrowing is still less fashionable than buying. From St. Botolph's, Aldgate, eastward to the end of Commercial-street, there is no bookshop. This busy stretch of thoroughfare is choked with trams; its roadway is a hay market, and its most distinctive feature its row of butchers' shops and slaughter-houses. It is here that the East meets the City; and they meet in a welter of material things which forms the strongest possible hint to booksellers not to set up shop. Yet books are more plentiful here than at any other point between Aldgate and Stratford. They lie on barrows. Alongside are other barrows laden with old iron, or with cloth caps, or with brushes and mirrors and trinkets. You may hardly wedge yourself in front of a barrow, itself wedged dangerously between drays and the kerb; and while you turn the leaves of some curious, but not valuable, book your ears are outraged by vociferous butchers or distracted by yells of warning in the roadway. Again, a barrow is not a shop. To find an East End bookshop which offered some faint chance of seeing and buying a new book: that was the quest. Eastward, past St. Mary's Church, that with its tall slender spire always seems to say, "Here beginneth the East End," one walks on with vigilant eye. There are bootmakers, and milliners, and cheap restaurants, and music shops where 'Arry's concertina is displayed, innocuously new. There are mean little tobacco and newspaper shops, and small shop-factories, and public-houses. And everywhere, what is written on these in English is repeated in Hebrew. The road is not depressing. It is wide and busy, and the multitude of small separate businesses gives cheerfulness.

Ha! over there is a second-hand bookshop. We are just in sight of the London Hospital; and the Mile End-road becomes, suddenly, the finest thoroughfare in London. Nowhere else can its width, straightness, and activity be matched. Only a second-hand bookshop. It is indulging in a clearance sale, and scores of novels are lying on outside trays marked 2d. a volume. Here is Robert Elsmere in the three-volume edition for 6d., complete. Not one copy, but several. Here are Mr. Henry James's A London Life, and Mr. Marion Crawford's Pietro Ghisleri—once six shillings, now twopence. Even this dreary display is unusual; and the bookseller evidently prefers a "wholesale and export" business. Indeed, his presence here seems to require this explanation. He is prosperous, but he is not racy of the soil.

Fifty yards across the street, diagonally, is a small book and paper shop. Penny tales of "blood and thunder," penny editions of The Pilot and Two Years before the Mast, are all it offers, if we except a penny Letter Writer, a copy of which, lying open in the window, displays a model letter to be written by a lady who desires to refuse the hand of an African missionary! As the Hospital looms higher and nearer, one sees the doubtful gleam of a bookshop on the north side of the road, just opposite the Hospital itself. Yes, it is a bookshop; that is to say, in a window filled with photograph frames, draught boards, stamp albums, cards of penholders and inkstands, there are fitful concessions to literature. Nuttall's Standard Dictionary is here in force; and then there is nothing to be mentioned save the usual cheap, gaudy editions of The Lamplighter, The Swiss Family Robinson, Longfellow's Poems, and Valentine Vox.

The Cambridge-road is reached, leading up to Bethnal Green. Again the width of the street and its tremendous sky give one pause. Why look for books in one of the few London thoroughfares in which one can watch the clouds? Here is the Assembly Hall, plastered with evangelical announcements. The window of its Book Saloon is filled with Bibles and Prayer-Books and Pilgrim's Progresses and the novels of Mr. Joseph Hocking. The scarlet binding of Nuttall's Dictionary gives what it can of colour, and a copy of The Child, the Wise Man, and the Devil gives what it can of modernity. A little further on is a shop calling itself the Mile End Bazaar. It appropriates a long, narrow glass case to books, principally to Mrs. Henry Wood's books and Queechy. If you want a copy of Queechy in a hurry go to the Mile End-road. Almost wherever paper flutters at a shop door you may buy Queechy. We have now passed Stepney Green and are in the immediate dominions of the People's Palace. Another semi-bookshop heralds it. Shelves of old books are laid outside a window which is filled in its lower parts with bronzes, clocks, second-hand cutlery, and faded electro-plate goods. Above these, books—but the inevitable books—assert themselves again. Then the Palace, with its undoubted library (not a lending library)! One crosses the Regent's Canal and enters Bow. Here are stately houses. Broken-headed eagles and grimy terra-cotta lions grace the doors, and india-rubber plants and ferns and little lace-covered tables with fern pots and ribbons bespeak internal comfort. But there is not a single bookshop between the People's Palace and Bow Church. One wonders whether Miss Corelli is a myth. From Bow Church onward to the beginning of Stratford Causeway there is no bookshop. But none is to be looked for in this dreary artery of a dreary manufacturing district. Books might be written here, but not sold. The wasted fields, with their rubbish heaps and foul flashing pools, the array of chimneys and uncouth technical buildings, would be unendurable but for the network of canals and the red sails of barges. As the tram runs up to Stratford Church the street widens and grows pleasant; and one fancies oneself in a pleasant market town. But there are no bookshops. Only the statue of Mr. Gladstone looks wistfully along the great route by which we have come. Perhaps he, too, is wondering where the compulsorily educated buy their books, if they buy at all. The mystery remains.

DRAMA.

THE interest of Mr. Alexander's revival of "Much Ado About Nothing" at the St. James's Theatre lies in two side issues, which do not, perhaps, receive the attention they deserve. One is the extent to which the actor's personality governs his impersonations, apart altogether from his conception of the part he is called upon to play; the other, of minor and purely episodical importance, concerns the new-fangled scheme of municipal theatres, championed by no less a personage than Sir Henry Irving. Admittedly, the performance has failed to secure the support of critical opinion—indeed, it is long since a first-class Shakespearean revival at a West End theatre has been so coldly received by the press, and the reason is undoubtedly that Mr. Alexander has not only cast himself for a part to which he is unsuited, but has rendered the same disservice to one or two of the leading members of his company. It is a pardonable fault in his own case, though it incidentally illustrates the weak side of the system of actor-managership. In his early days Sir Henry Irving fell into the same error by playing Romeo and Claude Melnotte, neither of which characters, needless to say, has remained in his repertory.

THE truth is, that the actor is very apt to be blinded, and the unreflecting critic is led away, by current theories with regard to "conception." Whenever one actor does another in a given part—we have an example of this within the past week at the Criterion, where Mr. Henry Irving has been temporarily replacing Mr. Wyndham in "The Liars"—we are told that he "conceives" or that he "reads" the part differently from his predecessor. This is a fallacy. The actor plays the part, not that he would, but as he must—that is to say, his personality dictates. That it is his business to disguise his personality as far as possible, or rather to sink it in the character he is assuming, is very true; but this he can do only within very narrow limits, as we can see at a glance if we try to picture Sir Henry Irving playing the volatile lovers characterised by Mr. Wyndham, or Mr. Wyndham assuming the heavy tragic character of Macbeth. This principle, which the onlooker appears so plain and inevitable, actors are, nevertheless, curiously prone to misapprehend. It is on record that Liston, the famous low comedian, shaved himself out for tragedy, and that he did on one occasion actually play Hamlet. Many other examples of a less striking kind could be cited. At all such times the student of the theatrical annals is reminded of the student of the theatrical annals. And yet here is Mr. Alexander playing Benedick!

It could not for a moment be contended that Mr. Alexander's conception of Benedick is not as sound as that of his critics. Very true it is. Conception of character probably varies little as between one actor and another; it is the means of execution which differ, the actor's voice, manner, and physique all contributing to the effect produced. Benedick is the staid soldier and the hero of the world, of a merry but somewhat morose humour, the professed enemy of love, and prone to rail at love and its attendant. This type one readily pictures in the mind; and all the more so if the imagination is assisted by recollections of Sir Henry Irving's Benedick, which was the most perfect realisation of the part that the present generation has seen. Many years have elapsed since "Much Ado About Nothing" was performed at the Lyceum, but we still see the jocosely dubiety and droll perplexities of Benedick musing upon his adventures with Beatrice as if they were yesterday. To Sir Henry Irving the part is in every sense congenial, and for this reason he has stamped it with his own personality—a circumstance which naturally works against any different rendering of it, however meritorious. As for Mr. Alexander, he is the beau ideal of the ardent wooer, the dashing cavalier, ever ready to indite a sonnet to his mistress's eyebrow, or to carry her off under the nose of an unpardonable parent or a tetchy guardian; he is the born jeune premier. To hear such a young man railing against love, in the vibrant accents of passion, is absurd. Moreover, Mr. Alexander, with his many gifts, lacks humour; it is not a quality that belongs to the jeune premier. But humour, sly humour, is the very essence of Benedick's character.

The famous soliloquy in which he recognises that he is in truth falling in love with Beatrice Mr. Alexander delivers with the utmost seriousness; so that the impression conveyed is that of a love-sick school-boy instead of the shrewd genial man of the world falling a prey to feminine wiles.

ALL this, we feel, is the fault neither of Mr. Alexander's head nor of his heart; it is that of his personality, that important factor which both the actor and the critic are so apt to ignore. Vivacity does not fail him. In his duel of wits with Beatrice, this latest Benedick is lively enough; but it is the liveliness of the emancipated collegian, not that of the dignified soldier and gentleman who humours his charming companion. Of course Mr. Alexander is not invariably out of the picture; he is too versatile an actor for that. The tragic crisis in poor Hero's affairs brings Benedick down to the serious plane, and there Mr. Alexander is himself; he comes into touch with the character. In fact, at this point, and until he breaks into his romps again, his impersonation is all that could be desired. He is a brave soldier and a gentleman.

THE same natural disability that hampers Mr. Alexander in the character of Benedick tells with equal force against the Beatrice of Julia Neilson, who likewise has to battle against our recollections of Miss Ellen Terry. This is unfortunate. But for the Lyceum performance both Mr. Alexander and Miss Julia Neilson might have passed muster. Impressions, however, are not to be reasoned with, and unquestionably Beatrice is stamped with Miss Ellen Terry's personality as effectually as Benedick is with Sir Henry Irving's. Miss Julia Neilson is essentially a serious actress who is at her best in domestic drama. Frivolity sits heavily upon her; she is not a romp or a tease. As the old Scotch editor joked "wi' deeficulty," so Miss Julia Neilson coquets with difficulty. It is not her fault, but that of a management which, ignoring the prime importance of personality, condemns her to an uncongenial rôle. It is in her serious moments that this Beatrice is most satisfactory. The same mistake, curiously enough, has been made with Miss Fay Davis, who is cast for the part of Hero. With her demure look, her roguish eye, and her sedate manner, this young actress, in her own walk, plays havoc with hearts. As Hero, the embodiment of outraged virtue, she is condemned to a statuesque coldness which nullifies all her special gifts. Most of the minor parts are adequately sustained. The Don Pedro of Mr. F. Terry is indeed excellent, and the Claudio of Mr. Robert Loraine—a part which Mr. Alexander could have played to the life—if somewhat youthful, not to say boyish, is full of ardour; while such veterans as Mr. W. H. Vernon and Mr. J. D. Beveridge are naturally at home in the parts of Leonato and Antonio. Another feature of the performance that one may unreservedly admire is the mounting, which is sumptuous and lavish in the extreme. The Lyceum itself furnished no more beautiful or more ornate a setting to the play than the St. James's has to show. In particular, the church scene, with its tapers, its acolytes, its procession of chanting priests, its altar, its artistic grouping of cavaliers and noble ladies, its incense-laden atmosphere, dwells in the memory.

To the question of the municipal theatre—which has recently been agitated, among other places, in Manchester—such a performance as that we have been discussing is not as foreign as it might at first sight appear. Supposing the rate-supported play to be above reproach—an old masterpiece of some kind, or, say, this very comedy of "Much Ado About Nothing—who is to guarantee the fitness of the actor? This question of the rate-supported theatre is always discussed by actors with a complacency that excludes their own merits or demerits from consideration. Undeniably such a revival as that of the St. James's would be accounted excellent business for a municipal theatre; an actor of Mr. Alexander's calibre who proposed to undertake it could hardly be denied. Nevertheless, the monetary check being removed, what restraint would be placed upon a poor or inadequate performance? The analogy of the subventioned Comedie Française does not apply. This famous body is a close corporation of actors whose proceedings are subject to an autocratic ministerial veto; and its like could not possibly be established in these days of free institutions. Only two types of the municipal theatre are conceivable. The one would be run by faddists but paid for by the public, and would open the door to abuses of different kinds; the other would be subject to popular control, the very principle against which the supporters of unpopular art inveigh.

J. F. N.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN APOLOGY FOR "JULIUS CÆSAR."

SIR,—Mr. Bernard Shaw is reported to have recently declared that it is not the function of the critic to do justice to a work of art, but rather, by giving pain to the individual, to amuse the many. He appears to have found an apt disciple in Mr. St. John Hankin, whose letter was printed in your issue of the 5th inst. There is a certain class of person whose mission in life it is to write rude words on statues; but while Mr. Bernard Shaw is impelled to this pastime from sheer ebullience of humour, Mr. St. John Hankin would seem to be inspired to it by fanaticism.

The letter in question bears on the face of it the semblance of being written in considerable excitement, which I prefer to think was provoked by righteous wrath rather than by a personal animus, for Mr. St. John Hankin's name is unknown to me. Mr. Hankin prescribes the production of "Julius Cæsar" at Her Majesty's Theatre as "a grievous insult to Shakespeare." Among other iniquities he charges the manager with having for selfish purposes perverted the meaning of Shakespeare's play; furthermore, he asserts that the representative of Mark Antony wears a distinctive costume, and that he always stands in the middle of the stage! Mr. St. John Hankin further claims that Shakespeare should only be played by amateurs; that Antony is a relatively minor character in the play; that in writing the tragedy of "Julius Cæsar" Shakespeare did not intend the audience to be interested in the fate of Cæsar, but in that of Brutus alone; that every attempt in this production is made to spoil the poetry of the play, and to distract the attention of the audience from the verse to the actor.

The production of "Julius Cæsar" at Her Majesty's Theatre has met with such generous treatment at the hands of the Press, and of your critic individually, that I feel it would be ungracious to offer more than an apology to Mr. Hankin in extenuation of my motives in presenting the play. As to Mr. St. John Hankin's charges, notably that of ungenerosity towards my brother actors, and of my contemptuous treatment of Shakespeare, I can only say that if I have failed to worthily present this great play, it was my modest endeavour to pay a tribute to Shakespeare reverently and with as great appreciation of his poetry as an actor-manager may be permitted to conjure up; that my arrangement of the text has been approved by the Press, and by Shakespearian students. I will admit in all humility that in the revival of "Julius Cæsar" I have been animated by the possibly base desire to produce it in such a way as to command the support of the public at large.

There remain always learned amateur societies who will present Shakespeare in such a way as to commend him to the few, while boring the many. It is, I take it, the business of the manager to present Shakespeare in such a way as to commend him to the many, even at the risk of agitating the few.—I remain, sir, your obedient servant,
HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.

Her Majesty's Theatre: Feb. 24.

WAS SHAKESPEARE AN IRISHMAN?

SIR,—In your issue of December 25 Mr. George Newcomen, from "internal evidence" in "Hamlet," suggests that Shakespeare was really Patrick O'Toole, of Ennis. He has not realised apparently the important corroboration of his theory generously provided by the dramatist in act iii., scene 3—"Now might I do it PAT." This is usually regarded as a soliloquy. But it is now evident that at the supreme moment Hamlet's thoughts have addressed themselves to his father (a beautiful touch this in its fidelity to human nature!), acted, as we know, by Shakespeare—i.e., Patrick O'Toole himself. Will Sir H. Irving kindly note?—Yours faithfully,
H. L. ALLEN.

Madras, S. India: Feb. 2.

A CORRECTION.

SIR,—I thank you very much for your kind and appreciative notice of my edition of the "Religio Medici" and other essays of Sir Thomas Browne in to-day's ACADEMY.

In it you credit me as Dr. Morley Roberts instead of Dr. Lloyd Roberts. I should be very pleased if you would kindly make mention of this in your next issue.—Believe me, very truly yours, LLOYD ROBERTS.

Manchester: Feb. 19.

PATHOS.

SIR,—In "A Blot in the 'Scutcheon'" Browning puts into the mouth of Mildred Tresham the pathetic lines I sent to the Pall Mall Gazette in three forms. In act i. she says:

"I was so young, I loved him so, I had No mother, God forgot me, and I fell."

In act ii. she says:

"I—I was so young!
Beside, I loved him, Thorold—and I had
No mother; God forgot me; so I fell."

Again in the same act she repeats:

"I was so young—
I had no mother, and I loved him so!"

As Mr. Speight writes of "certain lines misquoted," it is as well that such of your readers as are not Browning students should be aware of these various renderings of the same pathetic thought.—Faithfully yours, London: Feb. 21. EDWARD BERDOE.

A PASSAGE BY R. L. S.

SIR,—Is not your French correspondent mistaken in her reading of the passage which she quotes, or rather paraphrases, from Stevenson's essay on Fontainebleau in her letter in your last number? "The Anglo-Saxon is essentially dishonest; the French have no understanding of fair play." Your correspondent takes this as an expression of Stevenson's own opinion of the characteristics of the two nations. But in the preceding sentence Stevenson has been lamenting that when the two nations look upon each other they have an eye to nothing but defects; and in the passage in question he goes on, as I take it, to put in indirect form what the nations may be supposed to think of each other. "In the eyes of the Frenchman," he seems to say, "the Anglo-Saxon is essentially dishonest; in the eyes of the Englishman the Frenchman is devoid by nature of the principle that we call 'fair play.'"

I cannot think that Stevenson meant to say that he himself looked upon the Anglo-Saxon as essentially dishonest, or upon the French as by nature devoid of fair play. If I am right it is curious that in support of his assertions as to the French character your correspondent should, by a misreading, cite a portion of a passage which, correctly read, deprecates the making of any such assertions.—I am, &c.,

R. J. CUNLIFF.

Kelvinside, Glasgow:
Feb. 21.

A WORD ABOUT GOETHE.

SIR,—Your Paris correspondent, in the letter which appeared in your issue of February 5, is rather severe upon Goethe, "the Olympian of Weimar," as your correspondent disdainfully calls him. He is sick of that epithet, not unlike in this to the Athenian citizen who got tired of the surname "Just" by which Aristides was known. There is no doubt that such high-flown appendages to people's names are not always justified, as, for instance, in Aretino's case, miscalled "Il Divino"; but who would grudge this title to the incomparable Ariosto? That of "Olympian" admirably becomes Goethe, who was as fickle as Jove in his amours until caught in the meshes of Christina Vulpius, whom he married, and at whose death-bed he was sobbing like a child, imploring her not to leave him in dreary loneliness. He had a heart, after all, the man who broke Frederica's; but that heart only spoke thus loudly when its owner was already in the fifties. As a young man, Goethe shunned all durable attachments, and felt ill at ease with himself and the world until his foot had touched the soil of Italy. It is there that his genius revealed itself to him, and when he returned home from that journey he was a different being altogether. Who that has read can ever forget his delightful "Römische Elegien"? That Goethe stands in the first rank as a poet is a fact universally admitted, but he himself was never carried away by self-conceit. He had the true modesty of one who is conscious of vast powers. One day Ludwig Tieck, the joint translator with A. W. Schlegel, of Shakespeare's plays, gave him to understand that he considered himself his equal in verse-making. "You!" exclaimed Goethe, in astonishment; "why, the distance which separates you from me is as great as the distance which separates me from Shakespeare." The English dramatist and Molière were his two favourite authors. At the age of eighty, with that serenity of spirit and clearness of mind which were his to the last, Goethe had certainly something of the Olympian in him, and he was revered by all as the living embodiment of the Fatherland. French literature owes him much, but this seems to be forgotten. Sainte-Beuve wrote exhaustively about him, and with his usual tact he combated the unjust criticisms by which his memory had been assailed in certain quarters. Here is a passage out of his Essay: "On dit que Goethe aimait peu sa mère; on l'a taxé à ce sujet d'égoïsme et de sécheresse. Je crois qu'ici on a exagéré. Avant de refuser une qualité à Goethe, il faut y regarder à deux fois, car le premier aspect chez lui est d'une certaine froideur, mais cette froideur recouvre souvent la qualité première subsistante. Une mère ne continue pas d'aimer et de révéler à ce point un fils jusqu'à la dernière heure, quand il a enver elle un tort grave. La mère de Goethe n'en trouvait aucun à son fils, et il ne nous appartient pas d'être plus sévère qu'elle." The italics are mine. Perhaps your Paris correspondent will think less badly of Goethe after reading the whole essay. It is to be found in the second volume of the Causeries du Lundi.

Feb. 8.

THOMAS DELTA.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"The Tragedy of the Korosko."
By A. Conan Doyle.

THIS story of the adventure of a tourist party on the Nile is taken very seriously by the Speaker's critic. We read:

"It is dangerous to describe any work of fiction in these days of a prolific press as masterpiece, yet there cannot be any doubt that the word is strictly applicable to Mr. Conan Doyle's Tragedy of the Korosko. The story is one of action and adventure, while the reader breathless as he follows the names of the little band of tourists on the whom an unkind fate has placed in the hands of the fierce Dervishes of the Soudan. It is not the thrilling excitement of the incidents told that gives the book its special charm. That which raises it to the height of a masterpiece is the extraordinary self-control and sustained dignity of the narrator. From the last to the first the story is as simple and impressive a narrative by Defoe. There is not a superfluous word in it, but each word tells. . . . When we lay the book aside we know them. Mr. Stuart (the Nonconformist minister of Birmingham), Colonel Cochrane, the young Frenchman Fardet, and, above all, Stevens the solicitor, and Sadie the fair American who wins his heart. We feel as though we had shared with them the dangers of those terrible days of suffering and suspense when they were at the mercy of the soldiers of the life; and, just as association in times of peril brings real men and women most closely together, so we feel as though this serious narrative had made us the intimate friends of the men and women to whom it introduces us."

Literature examines carefully, and with approval, the local and historical justifications for the story. This critic says:

The republication of the . . . narrative in this place when the nation is looking forward to the renewal of an onward march which, we hope and believe, will not be stayed until our countrymen of Gordon are once more masters of Khartoum. No more raids upon British and American travellers peacefully springing the tombs and temples of Upper Egypt will ever again be possible; and it may be deemed that, if we do our work thoroughly, future readers of the Tragedy of the Korosko will be unable ere many years are past to see the strong foundation of verisimilitude which Mr. Doyle's story is built. Strong though, however, that foundation was at the time when this story was in all probability conceived. Mr. Doyle has evidently made good use of his own experiences as a Nile tourist, and his dramatis personæ have been selected from models which might have been met with on every 'stern-wheeler' that has crossed its way up the river from Shellal for many years past. The little sun-dried, merry Anglo-Indian colonel, Cochrane by name; the amiable, serious, culture-hunting young American graduate, Headingley, with his two countrywomen, young and elderly—the frank, frivolous, unconventional Sadie Fardet, and her quaint, dry, Puritanical, but good-hearted aunt from New England; the mild young British diplomat, Mr. Cecil Stevens; the stout and slightly unctuous, but eminently devout Nonconformist minister, the Rev. John Stuart; the iron-grey, sturdy Irishman Belmont, famous as a long-distance rifleman; the prim, formal, untravelled solicitor, Mr. James Stephens; and the Voltairian and snobphobe, but not unchivalrous, Frenchman, Fardet—one and all belong to types sufficiently familiar and more than sufficiently well known to make the reader feel that any of them might have been fellow-travellers of his own."

In a long and appreciative review of Mr. Doyle's story, the Daily Telegraph praises the local colour, and the discussions it introduces on our Egyptian policy and the topics of interest. The Manchester Guardian says:

"The story, though it is, perhaps, a slight advance in Mr. Doyle's powers. The plot is better constructed than in some of his previous works, and the characterisation is admirable. And, owing to reasons that have been already indicated, the adventures of the party, though they are of an unusual and really tragic description, never lose the air of probability, which is so essential to a well-constructed tale."

"The Vintage." By E. F. Benson. THE Saturday Review justly remarks that "the case of Mr. E. F. Benson is a curious one." Space does not permit us to follow this critic through his racy sketch of the author of Dodo, The Rubicon, The Judgment Books, The Babe, B.A., and—now—The Vintage. What interests the critic is the fact that

"the author of Dodo, whom indolent reviewers rise up early to jeer at, has written a perfectly serious study in fiction; and we think it no more than justice to say that the success of it is beyond question."

Concluding a favourable review, this reviewer says:

"We are struck, in laying down The Vintage, with the close observation of pastoral life in Greece to which Mr. Benson has evidently devoted himself. The incidents in the various country-side occupations are described with great charm and by a firm hand. Especially beautiful are the many nocturnal scenes in the Bay of Nauplia, which delight us whenever they recur. We would warmly encourage Mr. Benson to pursue a kind of writing for which he shows an aptitude of an unusual kind, for this new romance is much more in the manner of Björnson or of Verga than like any English specimens that we happen to recollect."

The Standard is far more critical. He thinks Mr. Benson's Greeks are capital fellows, and he finds the story exciting. But "the picture in The Vintage seems to lack balance. Party per pale, argent, and sable makes good heraldry, but lopsided ethics. When half through the book, Mr. Benson seems to have become aware of this; thenceforward the reader may 'sup full horrors' which are mostly of Greek making. So much blood—and so much innocent blood—is shed, that by the end of it all he is in this very odd position, that his sympathies already estranged by over-stated virtues, are clean withdrawn before vices too candidly set down. It may, of course, be necessary to write history in this fashion, but not novels. Novelists are not called on to catalogue but to entertain, a fact which our author too frequently forgets. Much of the war business is detailed in a manner that would do well enough for a history book, but in a story-book merely suggests skipping to the ordinary reader."

The Manchester Guardian takes the same line:

"The personal romance that underlies the history suffers from its historical setting and from the extraordinary minuteness with which the author has set himself to describe various aspects of Greek life and various types of Greek character. The story in consequence drags, and the persons possess too little humanity and are too distinctively Greek to lay hold on our affections. An exception should, perhaps, be made in the case of 'little Mitsos,' but even he has been trained into a machine-like obedience and impossible devotion that is either above or below humanity. What lover would consent to set fire to a ship in which his lady was believed to be sailing?"

The Daily Telegraph is content to describe the story in an approving vein:

"The book stands in striking contrast to Mr. Benson's earlier studies in metropolitan life, for here we have in almost too conscientious detail such scenes as an artist paints when he wanders through the modern aspects of Attica and the Peloponnese. The boy Mitsos is the incarnation of the Hellenic spirit, and his career serves to typify the battle in which his country is engaged. Under the advice and influence of his uncle, Nicholas Vidalis, he leaves his home at Nauplia, journeys to Tripoli and Sparta, and through most of the Morea, delivering everywhere the message to the Faithful to 'grind black corn for the Turks,' and to be ready for the lighting of the beacon fires, the given signal for the uprising. A long and picturesque history of the insurrection follows, full of vivid details, and everywhere adorned with bright patches of local colour and incidents."

"The Tree of Life." By Netta Syrett. THIS story has provoked and pleased critics in about equal degrees. The Athenæum says the story, unfortunately,

"falls, or seems to us to fall, into the genre ennuyeux. Why it should do so is one of those things that cannot be exactly explained even by experts or specialists. The story is not frankly and straightforwardly tiresome; on the contrary, and at first especially, it appears inclined to develop, humanly and artistically, on interesting lines. The author has acquired a lightness of touch and a knack of presentation that promise and do occasionally serve well. But the whole thing wears a deeply premeditated air. The general aspect and trend is at once superficial yet studied. If such a thing can be as a touch that seems light and is in reality laboured, we have it here. No real originality or strength of conception leavens the carefully chosen material."

Literature says: "So far as the handling of the characters and the plot is concerned, Miss Netta Syrett has written an interesting and well-written story; but we would ask her two questions: If, as one of her characters says, we are 'sickened of the eternal sex question,' why does she show so little sympathy with us as to devote herself in a novel of 387 pages to a discussion of it; and, if it has to be discussed, why does she assume that the solution of it which she favours is 'in advance of the age'? We do not exaggerate when we say that the sex question is discussed throughout, for it is clearly in the writer's mind from first to last."

But the first critic allows that the author, in the earlier scenes, shows

"a real divination or recollection of childhood. . . . The forlorn groping after beauty and happiness, the hills of difficulty that on the path of educational endeavour loom mountain high, the half-comprehended sense of spiritual isolation, the lack of sympathy and fellowship, are all there."

And the second critic concludes:

"It is a pleasanter task to congratulate the writer on the undoubted power of graphic and humorous description she shows. . . . on the many touches of close observation, such as 'the sunshine filtering through a lacework of leaves flecked the bracken with burnished silver'—most novelists would have said, incorrectly, 'burnished gold'; and on the skill and pathos with which she develops the character of Christine."

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, February 24.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- MEDITATIONS ON THE SACRED PASSION OF OUR LORD. By Cardinal Wiseman. Burns & Oates. 4s.
- THE VITALITY OF CHRISTIAN DOGMAS, AND THEIR POWER OF EVOLUTION. By A. Sabatier, D.D. Translated by Mrs. E. Christen. A. & C. Black.
- REASON IN REVELATION; OR, THE INTELLECTUAL ASPECTS OF CHRISTIANITY. By Emma Marie Caillard. James Nisbet & Co. 2s.
- A BOOK OF PSALMS. Rendered into English by the late Arthur Trevor Jebb, M.A. George Allen. 3s. 6d. net.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- LINES FROM MY LOG-BOOKS. By Admiral the Rt. Hon. Sir John C. Dalrymple Hay, Bt. David Douglas.
- DRAKE AND THE TUDOR NAVY. By Julian S. Corbett. 2 vols. Longmans, Green & Co. 36s.
- RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS. By Robert Ganthony. Henry J. Drane. 6s.
- THE STORY OF SOUTH AFRICA. By W. Basil Worsfold. Horace Marshall & Son.
- A STUDENT'S MANUAL OF ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY. By Dudley Julius Medley, M.A. Second edition. B. H. Blackwell (Oxford).
- THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION, 1846-1896: THE HISTORY OF ITS FIRST HALF CENTURY. Edited by George Brown Goode. City of Washington.
- POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES. MILLAIS AND HIS WORKS. By M. H. Spielmann. Wm. Blackwood & Sons.
- THE LATER RENAISSANCE. By David Hannay. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 5s.
- ADVENTURES IN LEGEND: BEING THE LAST HISTORIC LEGENDS OF THE WESTERN HIGHLANDS. By the Marquis of Lorne, K.T. A. Constable & Co. 6s.
- THE SPECTATOR. Vol. V. Edited by G. Gregory Smith. J. M. Dent & Co.

THE GREAT FRENCH TRIUMVIRATE: THE ATHALIE OF RACINE, THE POLYCEUTE OF CORNEILLE, THE MISANTHROPE AND TARTUFFE OF MOLIÈRE. Rendered into English Verse by Thomas Constable. Downey & Co. 5s.

GODEFROI AND YOLANDE: A MÆDIEVAL PLAY IN ONE ACT. By Laurence Irving. John Lane. 3s. 6d.

CHAPTERS ON THE WAVERLEY NOVELS. Anonymous. W. H. Allen & Co.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

- EARLY FORTIFICATIONS IN SCOTLAND: NOTES, CAMPS, AND FORTS. By David Christison, M.D. Wm. Blackwood & Sons.
- HIND HEAD; OR, THE ENGLISH SWITZERLAND AND ITS LITERARY AND HISTORICAL ASSOCIATIONS. By Thomas Wright. Simpkin, Marshall. 6s.
- ST. BOTOLPH, ALDGATE: THE STORY OF A CITY PARISH. By A. G. B. Atkinson, M.A. Grant Richards.

NEW EDITIONS OF FICTION.

DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS. By George Meredith. Archibald Constable & Co. 6s.

EDUCATIONAL.

- UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES:—OVID: METAMORPHOSES. Book XIV. Edited by A. H. Allcroft, M.A., and B. J. Hayes, M.A. W. B. Clive. 1s. 6d.
- THE STUDY OF CHILDREN AND THEIR SCHOOL TRAINING. By Francis Warner, M.D. Macmillan & Co. 4s. 6d.
- SCHILLER'S WILHELM TELL. With Notes by W. H. Carruth, Ph.D. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.
- UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES: GENERAL ELEMENTARY SCIENCE. Edited by William Briggs, M.A. W. B. Clive. 3s. 6d.
- A GEOGRAPHY OF NORTH AMERICA, INCLUDING THE WEST INDIES. By Lionel W. Lyde. A. & C. Black.
- HISTORICAL LATIN READERS: THE CONQUEST OF ITALY AND THE STRUGGLE WITH CARTHAGE, 753 to 200 B.C. By E. G. Wilkinson, M.A. A. & C. Black.
- NORWEGIAN GRAMMAR AND READER. By Julius E. Olson. Scott, Foresman & Co.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- HOW TO PUBLISH A BOOK OR ARTICLE, AND HOW TO PRODUCE A PLAY: ADVICE TO YOUNG AUTHORS. By Leopold Wagner. George Redway.
- NEO-MALTHUSIANISM: AN ENQUIRY INTO THAT SYSTEM WITH REGARD TO ITS ECONOMY AND MORALITY. By R. Usher. Gibbings & Co. 6s.
- A BOOK OF COUNTRY CLOUDS AND SUNSHINE. By Clifton Johnson. Kegan Paul. 5s.
- THE NEW ENGLAND COUNTRY. By Clifton Johnson. Kegan Paul. 7s. 6d.
- THE MINER'S ARITHMETIC AND MENSURATION; WITH ANSWERS. By Henry Davies. Chapman & Hall.
- THE RENAISSANCE IN ITALIAN ART: A HANDBOOK FOR STUDENTS AND TRAVELLERS. By Selwyn Brinton, B.A. Simpkin, Marshall.
- THE STAMP-COLLECTOR. By W. J. Hardy and E. D. Bacon. George Redway. 7s. 6d.

The following were crowded out of our last week's issue:

- PIKE AND PERCH. By Alfred Jardine. Lawrence & Bullen, Ltd.
- THE HANDBOOK TO BRITISH MILITARY STATIONS ABROAD. Compiled by L. C. R. Duncombe-Jewell. Sampson Low.
- LESSONS WITH PLANTS. By L. H. Bailey. The Macmillan Co. 7s. 6d.
- STUDIES AND NOTES OF PHILOLOGY AND LITERATURE. Vol. V. Ginn & Co. 6s. 6d.
- THE EVERY-DAY BOOK OF NATURAL HISTORY: ANIMALS AND PLANTS. By James Cundall. Revised by Edward Step. New edition. Jarrold & Sons.
- PRINCIPLES OF ENGLISH GRAMMAR FOR THE USE OF SCHOOLS. By G. R. Carpenter. Macmillan & Co.
- THE PLAINSONG OF THE MASS, ADAPTED FROM THE SARUM GRADUAL. Part. I.: THE ORDINARY. Third edition. HYMN MELODIES FROM THE SARUM SERVICE-BOOKS. Printed for the Plain-song and Mediæval Music Society.
- THE CRIMINOLOGY SERIES: POLITICAL CRIME. By Louis Pracl. T. Fisher Unwin. 16s.

MODERN PROBLEMS AND CHRISTIAN ETHICS. By W. J. Hocking. Wells, Garton, Darton & Co. 3s. 6d.

DEBATABLE CLAIMS: ESSAYS ON SECONDARY EDUCATION. By John Charles Tarver. Archibald Constable & Co. 6s.

THE RIGHTLY PRODUCED VOICE. By E. Davison Palmer. Joseph Williams.

THE RECORDS OF THE BURGERS OF SHEFFIELD COMMONLY CALLED THE TOWN TRUST. John Daniel Leader. Elliot Stock.

THE YEAR'S MUSIC, 1898. Edited by A. C. Carter. J. S. Virtue & Co. 2s. 6d.

THE SAVING OF IRELAND: INDUSTRIAL FINANCIAL, POLITICAL. By Sir George Baden Powell. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 7s.

ON LABORATORY ARTS. By Richard Threlkeld M.A. Macmillan & Co. 6s.

PRISONERS ON OATH: PRESENT AND FUTURE. By Sir Herbert Stephen, Bart. W. Heinemann. 1s.

THE MUNICIPAL YEAR-BOOK: 1898. Edited by Robert Donald. Edward Lloyd. 1s.

MODERN PROBLEMS AND CHRISTIAN ETHICS. By W. J. Hocking. Wells, Garton, Darton & Co.

NOTES ON NEW EDITIONS.

We have received the second edition of I. Dudley Julius Medley's Students' Manual of English Constitutional History. It appears four years after the first edition. The author has not changed the general plan of his book; but he has freely used in the new edition works which have been published since the first edition appeared. Mr. Medley says, for instance, that his indebtedness to Prof. Maitland will be apparent on almost every page:

"Prof. Maitland's previous work had laid all future historians of our early Constitution under a deep obligation; but even our students were scarcely prepared for the large suggestiveness of The History of English Law and of Domesday Book and Beyond. One of the chief aims of my compilation was to place within the reach of the young student the results of the most recent work. Consequently, where sections have been re-written, and the views expressed on many points have been largely modified."

The book has not been greatly extended in length; but it now runs to over 644 pages.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S series of Historical Novels is continued by Westward Ho! which has been fitly chosen to represent the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The last novel, it will be remembered, was Macfarlane's Camp Refuge, representing the Conqueror's reign. Mr. Laurence Gomme, the editor, says that he chose Westward Ho! in preference to Kenilworth, because Kenilworth "tells us of court life and not national life. And the superiority of Kingsley's subject is held to outweigh the superiority of Scott's art."

To the Temple edition of the Waverley Novels is added Old Mortality, in 10 volumes. The frontispiece is a reproduction of a drawing, by Mr. Herbert Raiton of the College Wynd, Edinburgh, in one of which Scott was born. Tradition holds that Goldsmith, Boswell, and Burns lodged in the same wynd.

JOHN LANE'S LIST.

NOW READY.

OUR LETTERS to FRANCE. By Emile Zola. With an Introduction by L. F. AUSTIN. CONTENTS:—I. To the Youth of France—II. To France—III. To M. Felix Faure, the President—IV. To the Minister of War. Fcap. 8vo, with Portrait, 1s. net.

THE CHILD WHO WILL NEVER GROW OLD. By K. DOUGLAS KING, Author of "Father Hilarion," "The Scripture Reader of St. Mark's," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE SPANISH WINE: a Novel. By Frank Mathew, Author of "The Wood of the Brambles," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE MAN from the NORTH: a Novel. By E. A. Bennett. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

DEFBOI and YOLANDE: a Play. By Laurence Irving. Small 4to, 3s. 6d. net.

THE WINTER MOTHS: a Play in Four Acts. By William HEINEMANN. Small 4to, 3s. 6d. net.

READY MARCH 2nd.

JOURNALISM for WOMEN: a Practical Guide. By E. A. BENNETT, Editor of Woman. Square 16mo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE PET COURTSHIP: a Novel. By Thomas Cobb. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FOURTH EDITION NOW READY.

THE GEMS. With which is incorporated "CHRIST in HADES." By STEPHEN PHILLIPS. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

THE BOOK OF THE YEAR 1897.

Mr. Stephen Phillips has been awarded by the Proprietor of "The Academy" a premium of One Hundred Guineas, in accordance with his previously proclaimed intention of making that gift to the writer of the book which should be adjudged worthy to be "crowned" as the most important contribution to the literature of 1897.

No such remarkable book of verse as this has appeared for several years. Mr. Phillips challenges comparison, in style and subject, with the work of great masters; the poems whom he makes you think of range up to Milton and do not fall below Landor. He writes nothing small, and his poetry brings with it that sensation of novelty and that feeling of a strongly marked personality which stamps a genuine poet. His blank verse is entirely his own, everywhere dignified, sonorous, and musical. No man in our generation and few in any generation, have written better than this. —Literature. "His style in verse is admirable, and worthy of a dignified and lofty theme." —Standard. "The man who, with a few graphic touches, can call up for us images like these, in concise and masterly fashion, is not one to be rated with the common herd, but rather a man from whom we have the right to expect hereafter some of the great things which literature." —Mr. W. L. COURTNEY in Daily Telegraph. "You may say Mr. Phillips the distinguished compliment of saying that his blank verse is finer than his work in rhyme. . . . Almost the whole of this book is concerned with life and is largely and liberally contemplated; it is precisely that kind of contemplation which the best poetry lacks. . . . We praise Mr. Phillips for many excellences, but chiefly for the clearness and ardour of his poetry, its persistent loftiness." —Daily Chronicle. "Marpessa has an almost Shakespearian tenderness and beauty." —Globe.

THE BABY LAND: Songs of Childhood. By Eugene Field. Edited, with Introduction, by KENNETH GRAHAME. With 200 Illustrations by Charles Robinson. Uncut, or gilt edges, crown 8vo, 6s.

"A book of exceeding sweetness and beauty. No more original and no sweeter singer of childhood ever breathed. Mr. Robinson's drawings are more exquisite, if possible, in conception, and as abounding as ever in humour and phantasy. Any child who gets this book will love it as long as he lives." —Daily Chronicle.

THE MAKING of a PRIG: a Novel. By Evelyn Sharpe. 6s.

"The splendid portrait of the potential prig raises the book above the commonplace. The author's style has great merit, it is always neat, crisp, and unaffected, and shows the author's keen sense of humour. 'The Making of a Prig' is undoubtedly a strong book, conventional and fresh without being either overdrawn or fantastic." —Pall Mall Gazette.

THE TREE of LIFE: a Novel. By Netta Syrett. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The best novel of its kind that has appeared for a long time." —Academy.

SECOND EDITION.

THE REVELATIONS: a Novel. By W. J. Locke. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Locke tells us his story in a very true, a very moving, and a very noble book. If you can read the last chapter with dry eyes we shall be surprised. 'Revelations' is an impressive, an important book. . . . Yvonne is a creation that any artist might be proud of." —Daily Chronicle.

JOHN LANE, The Bodley Head, Vigo Street, London, W.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS

NOTES FROM A DIARY.—1873-1881.

By the Rt. Hon. Sir MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I., Sometime Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, Governor of Madras, 1881-86. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s. [Just out.]

This work is a continuation and completion of the diaries from 1851 to 1872, published by Sir M. E. Grant Duff last year.

LATER GLEANINGS: Theological and Ecclesiastical.
A New Series of Gleanings of Past Years.

By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.

Second Edition. Royal 16mo, 3s. 6d. [Just out.]

KOREA AND HER NEIGHBOURS.

By Mrs. BISHOP.

With Maps and Illustrations from the Author's Photographs.

Second Impression. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

"Mrs. Bishop now comes to give the public exactly what was wanted—a book on Korea and its affairs. Two excellent maps and a great number of illustrations add greatly to the interest of a profoundly interesting book." —Times.

CANON GORE'S NEW WORK.

AN EXPOSITION of the EPISTLE to the EPHESIANS.

By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, Canon of Westminster.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BIMETALLISM.

A Summary and Examination of the Arguments For and Against a Bimetallic System of Currency.

By Major LEONARD DARWIN.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"The book is the best contribution to the currency controversy of recent years. It may be read with advantage by the disputants on both sides." —Seotsmen.

LAW AND POLITICS IN THE MIDDLE AGES.

By EDWARD JENKS, M.A., Reader in English Law in the University of Oxford.

Demy 8vo, 12s. [Just out.]

"It would be scant praise to say that it is readable and interesting; to the reader who cares at all for the development of ideas as distinguished from the bare calendar of events, it is brilliant." —Literature.

THIRD IMPRESSION.

The LIFE of JOHN NICHOLSON, Soldier and Administrator

Based on Private and Hitherto Unpublished Documents.

By Capt. L. J. TROTTER.

With Portrait and Maps. 8vo, 16s.

"The reader who cares to know more of a man truly cast in a hero's mould should read this book for himself." —Yorkshire Daily Post.

"'The Life of John Nicholson' is a book which should be in every soldier's hands." —Pall Mall Gazette.

A FLOWER HUNTER IN QUEENSLAND.

Illustrations of Wanderings in Queensland and also in New Zealand.

By Mrs. ROWAN.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 14s. [Just out.]

MEMOIRS OF A HIGHLAND LADY

(Miss Grant of Rothiemurchus, afterwards Mrs. Smith of Baltiboys, 1797-1885).

Edited by Lady STRACHEY.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Just out.]

NEW EDITION (NINTH) OF HANDBOOK TO SPAIN.

By RICHARD FORD.

Thoroughly Revised and Corrected and brought up to date. [Just out.]

Index and Directory of Hotels, 4 Maps and 65 carefully drawn Plans of Towns and Buildings:

2 vols., 20s.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

Blaisdell

have a .
pull . .
over other

Pencils.

BEST LEAD . . . .
. . . ALWAYS READY . . . .
. . . . NO WASTE.

USED BY

- THE WAR OFFICE.
- BANK OF ENGLAND.
- NEW ZEALAND GOVERNMENT OFFICE.
- BANKERS' CLEARING HOUSE.
- UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OFFICES.
- OXFORD UNIVERSITY.
- CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.
- ETON COLLEGE.
- UNITED STATES ARSENAL.
- UNITED STATES NAVY.
- PENNSYLVANIA AND OTHER AMERICAN RAILWAY COMPANIES.
- THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.
- NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE AND OTHER INSURANCE OFFICES.

HOW TO USE:

Start the paper with a pin or any pointed instrument—a slight pull—off it comes, and the lead pencil is sharpened. Thirty Fresh Points to every Pencil. The only wear is from use, not from whittling away or breaking the lead.

No wood chips are left on the floor, nor any dirty marking-staff on your fingers.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:

The Queen.

"What an improvement this is upon the old laborious process of pencil sharpening, and how much less extravagant with regard to the consumption of the lead, which cannot snap off when thus treated"

Westminster Gazette.

"It is decidedly an ingenious idea."

Black and White.

"The 'Blaisdell' self-sharpening paper pencil is a remarkably smart contrivance. The lead is encased in paper, which can easily be unrolled when a fresh point is required."

If your stationer does not sell them, send 1s. for a set of sample Pencils to—

BLAISDELL PENCILS CO., LIMITED,

46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

Self=Sharpening.

FOUNTAIN PENS AND STYLOS

The objections to them,
and how they have been met.

Ceteris paribus everyone would rather use a fountain pen that carries its own ink, and can, therefore, be used anywhere and at any moment, in preference to an ordinary pen, which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

But fountain pens have acquired a bad name from two or three general objections to them. "A fountain pen is all very well," people say, "but it has to be carried upright, otherwise the ink comes out in your pocket; in fact, the ink spills and makes a hideous mess on the smallest provocation. By way of compensation, when you want to write, the ink retires to the barrel (if it isn't all spilled into your pocket) and refuses to emerge until the pen has been shaken and thumped until it squirts out a blot on the carpet."

This used to be true; but the CAW PEN has met the difficulty. It does not have to be carried upright; it can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. On the other hand, until the CAW PEN is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

The CAW PEN is not merely the only fountain pen which anyone cares to use who has once seen it as a pocket pen, but it is so convenient for desk use that it supersedes all other pens whatever.

It is easily filled, and having a wide mouth does not clog with air bubbles during that operation. Prices from 12s. 6d.

"Caw pens have a repute beyond their neighbours."—Westminster Budget.

The objection to Stylographic Pens is that the point rarely suits the writer's hand, and cannot be adjusted.

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN can be adjusted in an instant. It has not all the advantages of the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Prices from 5s.

British Depot—

46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1348.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The MARCH CATALOGUES of Valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINDERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, are Now Ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 188, Strand, London, W.C.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, LILL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publisher, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have special built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated and other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

FOR THE AUTOGRAPH COLLECTOR—A NEW MANUAL by Dr. Scott, 1s. post free, 17, Cranford Road, Fulham. Autographs purchased; a large variety for sale; Lists free.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, 10d per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Mieses E. & J. Putz, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

ARTIST of experience, old Beaux Arts student, Portrait, Figure and Landscape Painter, successful Teacher, would accept APPOINTMENT as INSTRUCTOR. Highest references.—Address S. F., 3, Studios, Campden Hill Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, FURNIVAL STREET, LONDON, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich. The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes at the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS, for the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and Price List on application. ET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.
SIR JOHN MILLAIS' WORKS.
LAST WEEK.
WILL CLOSE on SATURDAY NEXT, MARCH 12th.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.
NOTICE TO ARTISTS.
The DAYS for RECEIVING PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, &c., are FRIDAY, SATURDAY, and MONDAY, March 25th, 26th, and 28th, and for SCULPTURE, TUESDAY, March 29th. Forms and Labels can be obtained from the Academy during the month of March on receipt of a stamped and directed envelope.

PRIFYSGOL CYMRU.—UNIVERSITY of WALES.
The University Court is about to proceed to the APPOINTMENT of EXTERNAL EXAMINERS for DEGREES in the following Departments for the Year 1898:—

GEOLOGY (One Examiner).
ENGINEERING (One Examiner).
MINING (One Examiner).
MINE SURVEYING (One Examiner).
POLITICAL ECONOMY (One Examiner).
Candidates for Examinerships must send in their names to the Registrar, with any attestations of their qualifications as they may think desirable, on or before Monday, March 14th, 1898. Information in regard to the work and stipends of Examiners may be obtained on application to IVOR JAMES, Registrar. Town Hall Chambers, Newport, Mon.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS in SEPTEMBER, 1898.—SIX OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS, Three (£150, £80, and £50) in Science and Three (£100, £50, and £30) in Arts.—Particulars, and copies of Examination Papers, on application to the DEAN, Guy's Hospital, London Bridge, S.E.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC (M.B. Lond.) CLASSES are held throughout the year. Special instruction is given for the July Examination. Fee, 18 Guineas.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

A LAMO, AND OTHER VERSES.
By EDWARD McQUEEN GRAY.
Author of "Elsa," &c.
A. & F. DENNY, 304, Strand, London, W.C.

BOOKS FOR SALE.
Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.

FOR SALE.—BARGAINS, previous to Retiring.—Exquisite genuine Marquetrie Chess, £22 (cost £70)—French complete set, £20; another set, £40; half set, £10, also £20—Hall's Royal Gallery, 4 vols, folio, India proofs, £20 (cost £10)—CHARLES LOWE, New Street and Baskerville Hall, Birmingham.

FOR SALE.—BARGAINS, previous to Retiring.—Sèvres China Tea Service, exquisite Watteau designs, grand set, in specially made case, £65, cost former owner £150.—100 useful Tales, Travels, and Biographies, all sound, complete Works, £1 (cost £20)—25 vols. of useful Magazines, strongly bound, 20s. (cost £10).—Ruskin's Modern Painters, large-paper set, in case, £4. CHARLES LOWE, New Street and Baskerville Hall, Birmingham.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCOIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

BICKERS & SON'S
LIST OF NEW REMAINDERS
AND LATEST PURCHASES, OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.
All New and Perfect.

- | Published at |   | Offered at |
|--------------|---|------------|
| £ s. d.      |   | £ s. d.    |
| 0 16 0       | Burton (Dean).—Lives of Twelve Good MEN. With Portraits. 8vo .. .. .  | 0 7 6      |
| 1 10 0       | The Flora of the Alps. By A. W. BENNETT, with 120 fine coloured plates of Alpine Flowers. 2 vols., crown 8vo .. .. .  | 0 14 0     |
| 1 11 6       | Greece, Pictorial, Descriptive, and Historical. By BISHOP WORDSWORTH. Last Edition, revised and enlarged by Tozer, with 400 very beautiful Illustrations. Large 8vo .. .. . | 0 14 0     |
| 2 2 0        | Dr. Challin (Paul).—Land of the MIDDNIGHT SUN: Summer and Winter Journeys through Sweden, Norway, Lapland, &c. With 235 Illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo .. .. .                 | 0 14 0     |
| 2 2 0        | The Viking Age. The Early History, Manners and Customs of the Ancestors of the English-Speaking Nation. With 1,300 Illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo .. .. .                      | 0 16 6     |
| 0 6 0        | Field Paths and Green Lanes; or, Walks in Surrey and Sussex. By L. J. JENNINGS. Prettily illustrated. Crown 8vo .. .. .   | 0 2 6      |
| 0 12 6       | Fern-Growing; Fifty Years' Experience in Crossing and Cultivation; with a list of the most important Varieties. By G. J. LOWE. 62 Illustrations. Royal 8vo .. .. .          | 0 7 6      |
| 0 10 6       | Benl (J. T.).—The Sacred City of the ETHIOPIANS: being a Record of Travel and Research in Abyssinia. With 74 Illustrations. 8vo .. .. .                                     | 0 5 0      |
| 0 7 6        | Rambles in Search of Wild Flowers. By MARGARET PLUES. With 95 Coloured Figures and many Woodcuts. Crown 8vo .. .. .   | 0 4 0      |
| 3 13 6       | Pablo de Segovia, the Spanish Sharper. With 110 remarkable Drawings by Viege, and Notes by Joseph Pennell. 4to, full bound in old vellum .. .. .                            | 0 17 6     |
| 1 12 0       | Pen and Pencil Sketches. By H. STACY MARKS. With Portrait and a large number of Illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo. .. .. .  | 0 8 6      |
| 1 1 0        | Travels Amongst the Great Andes of the EQUATOR. By EDWARD WHYMPER. With Maps and Illustrations .. .. .  | 0 10 6     |
| 0 10 6       | Recollections of Old Country Life: Sporting, Agricultural, &c. By J. K. FOWLER. Illustrated. 8vo .. .. .  | 0 3 6      |
| 1 16 0       | Memorials of St. James's Palace. By Rev. EDWARD SHEPPARD. With a large number of Portraits and beautiful Illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo .. .. .                                | 0 10 6     |
| 1 8 0        | Foster (John).—Life of Charles Dickens. Library Edition. With Portraits and Facsimiles. 2 vols., 8vo .. .. .  | 0 6 0      |
| 1 12 0       | Villari (P.).—Life and Times of Machiavelli. With Portraits and Illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo .. .. .   | 0 14 0     |
| 1 1 0        | Poe's Complete Works in Prose and VERSE. 6 vols., crown 8vo, with Etchings .. .. .  | 0 10 0     |
| 1 1 0        | Shakespeare's Complete Works. Good Library Edition. With all Dyce's valuable Notes, Glossaries, &c. Large type, neatly bound in smooth green cloth .. .. .                  | 1 10 0     |
| 1 1 0        | Short Stalks; or, Hunting Camps North, South, East, and West. By E. N. BUCKTON. With many Illustrations by Whyper, &c. Large 8vo .. .. .                                    | 0 10 6     |
| 0 12 0       | The Great Silver River: Notes of a Residence in the Argentine Republic. By SIR HORACE RUMBOLD. Crown 8vo .. .. .  | 0 6 0      |
| 0 6 0        | Little Britain, the Spectra Bridge, and LEGEND of SLEEPY HOLLOW. By WASHINGTON IRVING. With 120 very pretty Illustrations by C. O. Murray. Square crown 8vo .. .. .         | 0 2 6      |
| 4 14 6       | A System of Surgery, Theoretical and PRACTICAL, in Treatises by Various Authors. Edited by HOLMES and HULKE. Last Edition 3 large vols., full of Illustrations .. .. .      | 1 1 0      |

All Books in General Literature supplied at 3d. in the Shilling Discount. Orders by post receive prompt attention.

I, Leicester Square, London, W.C.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

Chief Office—HOLBORN BARS, LONDON.

Summary of the Report presented at the Forty-ninth Annual Meeting, held on 3rd March, 1898.

ORDINARY BRANCH.

The number of Policies issued during the year was 65,893, assuring the sum of £6,698,755, and producing a New Annual Premium Income of £365,996.

The Premiums received during the year were £2,774,264, being an increase of £231,002 over the year 1896.

The Claims of the year amounted to £707,643. The number of deaths was 5,038, and 656 Endowment Assurances matured.

The number of Policies in force at the end of the year was 497,327.

INDUSTRIAL BRANCH.

The Premiums received during the year were £4,793,591, being an increase of £214,798.

The claims of the year amounted to £1,823,338. The number of deaths was 192,359, and 1,876 Endowment Assurances matured.

The number of Free Policies granted during the year to those Policyholders of five years' standing who desired to discontinue their payments was 60,848, the number in force being 549,889. The number of Free Policies which became Claims during the year was 10,716.

The total number of Policies in force at the end of the year was 12,546,132: their average duration exceeds eight and a quarter years.

The Assets of the Company, in both branches, as shown in the Balance Sheet, are £30,438,337, being an increase of £3,379,226 over those of 1896. A supplement showing in detail the various investments is published with this report.

Having regard to the growth of the Company, and also with a view to afford relief to the Managers and Secretary, the Directors have made certain re-arrangements and alterations in the Chief Office Staff. Messrs. DEWEY, HUGHES, and FISHER will in future be Joint General Managers, and certain duties of administration have been entrusted to a number of senior officials whose long and intimate acquaintance with the management has qualified them for promotion. The Directors believe that the traditions of management which have produced such successful results in the past will thus be continued in the future.

Messrs. Deloitte, Dever, Griffiths, & Co. have examined the Securities, and their certificate is appended to the Balance Sheets.

THOS. C. DEWEY, } Joint
WILLIAM HUGHES, } General
FREDERICK FISHER, } Managers.
W. J. LANCASTER, Secretary.

The full Report and Balance Sheet can be obtained upon application to the Secretary.

HARPER & BROTHERS' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE STUDENT'S MOTLEY.

THE RISE of the DUTCH REPUBLIC.

By JOHN LOTAROP

MOTLEY, Condensed, with Introduction and Notes, and an Historical Sketch of the Dutch People, from 1584 to 1897, by WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS, Profusely Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

In all the field of historical literature there is no more notable work than the late John Lotrop Motley's "Dutch Republic." Valuable and important as the book is in its original form, however, it should be even more so from the student's point of view. In this edition, the result of Dr. Griffis's painstaking and judicious condensation of the book for the use of those who desire to have it in somewhat less cumbersome form. Dr. Griffis has done his work well and has greatly increased the value of the history by his scholarly and able "sketch" of the Dutch people from 1584 to the present day, as well as by his introduction and his exhaustive notes.

NOTICE.—Large Reprints are NOW READY of the following NEW NOVELS:—

THE GREAT STONE of SARDIS.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Illustrated by Peter Newell. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Far more entertaining than the average novel."—Morning Post.

JEROME, a Poor Man.

By MARY E. WILKINS, Author of "A New England Nun," "Madelon," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Jerome" is a book to read; more, it is a book to buy, to read again and again."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MAIME o' the CORNER.

By M. E. FRANCIS (Miss Francis

Blundell), Author of "In a North Country Village," "A Daughter of the Soil." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"It could hardly be prettier, more charming, or more touching than it is."—Saturday Review.

THE KENTUCKIANS.

By JOHN FOX, Junior, Author of "A

Cumberland Vendetta." Illustrated by W. T. Smedley. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"It is interesting to note that fine novel, 'The Kentuckians,' is in high favour in the States."—Academy.

"A story so strong and finely told that it gives a startling kind of pleasure by its vigour and its novelty."—The World.

RIBSTONE PIPPINS.

By MAXWELL GRAY, Author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland." Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

"The book has a charm that will secure its instant and eager reading by every reader who takes it up."—The Scotsman.

A VILLAIN of PARTS, or, the HOME for ANCIENT CHRISTIAN

TRADERS.

By B. PAUL NEWMAN. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"We would joyfully read a story like 'A Villain of Parts' once a week for the term of our natural lives."—Chronicle.

"A more intensely exciting adventure book I have not read for years."—Truth.

"An excellent sensational story on entirely original lines."—The Spectator.

HARPER & BROTHERS, London and New York.

NOTICE.

A SECOND EDITION of "THE TWO DUCHESSSES," Edited by VERE FOSTER, with Seventeen Photogravure Illustrations, demy 8vo, cloth, price 16s., will be ready Early Next Week.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS
from ONE GUINEA
per annum.

COUNTRY
SUBSCRIPTIONS from
TWO GUINEAS per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO
GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of
GUINEAS per annum.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS IN TRAVEL,
SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and
FICTION. ALSO NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH
GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED, 30—34, OXFORD STREET,

241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

LONDON LIBRARY,

ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

Patron—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

President—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

Vice-Presidents—The Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE; the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP of LONDON; HERBERT SPENCER, Esq.; Sir HENRY BARKLY, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., F.R.S.

Trustees—Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., F.R.S.; Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.; Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

Committee—

Rev. Canon AINGER,
Dr. J. H. BRIDGES,
Sir F. W. BURTON,
Professor LEWIS CAMPBELL,
R. COPLEY CHRISTIE, Esq.,
J. W. COURTHOPE, Esq., C.B.
EARL of CREWE, K.P.

AUSTIN DOBSON, Esq.,
SIDNEY GEDWEE, Esq., M.P.,
EDMUND GOSSE, Esq.,
MRS. J. R. GREEN,
FREDERIC HARRISON, Esq.
Sir C. P. ILBERT, K.C.S.I.

Sir C. M. KENNEDY, C.B.,
K.C.M.G.,
W. E. H. LECKY, Esq.,
D.C.L., M.P.,
Rev. STANLEY LEATHERS, D.D.,
SIDNEY LEE, Esq.,
W. S. LILLY, Esq.

SIDNEY J. LOW, Esq.,
FRANK T. MARZIALS, Esq.,
ST. GEORGE MIVART, Esq.,
F.R.S.,
Sir F. POLLOCK, Bart.,
Rev. Dr. RIGG,
H. R. TEDDER, Esq.

The Library contains about 175,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in various Languages. Subscription £3 a year; Life Membership according to age. Fifteen volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. CATALOGUE, FIFTH EDITION, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; 1 Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

POPULAR NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

At all Libraries, Booksellers', and Bookstalls.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE BEETLE."

Ready this day, in 1 vol., 6s.

THE HOUSE of MYSTERY. By RICHARD MARSH.

JEAN MIDDLEMASS'S NEW NOVEL.

BLANCHE CONINGHAM'S SUR-RENDER. By the AUTHOR of "DANDY."

ANNIE THOMAS'S NEW NOVEL.

DICK RIVERS. By the Author of "DENNIS DONNE."

MRS. LOVETT-CAMERON'S NEW NOVEL.

DEVIL'S APPLES. By the Author of "IN a GRASS COUNTRY."

GIRLS WILL BE GIRLS. By FLORENCE WARDEN.

".....A rascally told story."—Scotsman.

T the TAIL of the HOUNDS. By Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD.

"... A lively and well-managed sporting story." Literary World.

In Illustrated paper cover, price 1s.

THE BLUE DIAMONDS: a Tale of Ceylon. By LEILA BOUSTEAD.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 14, Bedford Street, Strand.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S LIST.

THE WAR of the WENUSES. By C. L. GRAVES and E. V. LUCAS. Belgol Vol. LXXXVII. of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. Feap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

ORD DULLBOROUGH. By Hon. STUART ERSKINE. Belgol Vol. XXX. of Arrowsmith's Belgol Series. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 4d. An exceedingly clever skit, smartly written."—Manchester Courier.

DAUGHTER of ASTREA. By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM. Belgol Vol. LXXXVII. of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. Feap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

DEPITA of the PAGODA. By TIGHE HOPKINS. Belgol Vol. LXXV. of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. Feap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. Mr. Hopkins's delicious story."—The Sketch.

JUST O'GLAMOUR. By H. S. WARWICK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. Is a fascinating work, and proves that Mr. Warwick possesses remarkable talent."—Westminster Review.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., Ltd.

REDAY, MARCH 11th.—Price 3s. 6d.

GUY BOOTHBY'S

NEW BOOK,

BILLY BINKS—HERO.

J. & R. CHAMBERS, LTD., LONDON and EDINBURGH.

J. M. DENT & CO.

PICTURES and STUDIES of CLASSIC GREEK LANDSCAPE and ARCHITECTURE. Being a Series of Photogravures of Paintings by JOHN FULLEYLOVE, R.I., of Classical Remains in Greece. With accompanying Descriptions by H. W. NEVINSON. Oblong 4to. £1 1s. 6d. net.
STANDARD.—"Mr. Fulleylove is the most spirited, flexible, unmannered draughtsman of classical architecture which we now have amongst us."

RICHARD WAGNER. By HOUSTON STEWART CHAMBERLAIN. Translated from the German by G. AINSLIE HIGHT, and Revised by the Author. With numerous Photogravures, Collotypes, Facsimiles, Full-Page, and Text Illustrations. Medium 4to, £1 5s. net.
TIMES.—"The four parts of the book contain elaborate and exhaustive essays on Wagner's life, writings, and teachings, his art-works and Bayreuth. The illustrations are beautiful as well as plentiful, and the book is one of deep interest and great weight."

THE EARLY LIFE of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH, 1770-1798. A Study of the Prelude. By EMILE LEGOUIS. Translated by W. J. MATTHEWS. With a Prefatory Note by LESLIE STEPHEN, and a Photogravure Portrait of Wordsworth. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

ACADEMY.—"M. Legouis has written a book which must interest the English reader, and may even make a few more French readers learn English."

AMERICAN LANDS and LETTERS. The Mayflower to Rip Van Winkle. By DONALD G. MITCHELL. With numerous Full-Page and Text Illustrations, Portraits, Facsimiles, &c. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

SCOTSMAN.—"It is richly endowed with portraits, with views, and with facsimiles of old title-pages that bring the authors and their works peculiarly near to us."

ATLAS of CLASSICAL PORTRAITS. With Brief Descriptive Commentary by W. H. D. ROUSE, M.A., Rugby School, sometime Fellow of Christ's Church, Cambridge. Two Volumes—Greek Section, Roman Section. Demy 8vo, 1s. 6d. net per volume.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE.—"The object of these companion albums is to afford assistance to those engaged in struggling through school histories and classical or Scripture reading. They will be found a valuable aid to memory, as by the use of pictures the mind is impressed with what it is intended to impart."

POEMS from HORACE, CATULLUS, and SAPPHO, and other Pieces. By E. G. HARMAN. Feap. 8vo, 3s. net.

SPECTATOR.—"Scholars and lovers of belles lettres will welcome this pleasant little volume."

THROUGH a GLASS LIGHTLY. By T. T. GREG. Bound in silk, 3s. 6d. net.

SCOTSMAN.—"The writing is what good wine ought to be—light and sparkling."

ANIMAL LAND WHERE THERE ARE NO PEOPLE. By SYBIL and KATHARINE CORBET. With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. Third Edition. Small oblong crown 4to, 2s. 6d. net.

SPECTATOR.—"A delightful series of drawings of nonsense-animals. Without knowing it, Sybil belongs to the school of Edward Lear. The creatures presented to us by her and her mother have all the humour and imagination, and no little of the graphic skill, of that great artist."

Of this Book upwards of 100,000 Copies have so far been sold.

QUO VADIS: a Narrative of Rome in the Time of Nero. By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ. Translated from the Polish by JEREMIAH CURTIN. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"This is emphatically a great book. We do not merely read, we live through the scenes which are conjured up before us."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.—Just published.

HANIA, and other Stories. Translated by JEREMIAH CURTIN. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

NEW BALZAC VOLUME.

A MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT, and other Stories. Translated by Mrs. CLARA BELL, with a Preface by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 3s. 6d. net.

THE SPECTATOR. A New Edition, in Eight Volumes, with an Introductory Essay by AUSTIN DOBSON. The Text Annotated and Edited by G. GREGORY SMITH, of Edinburgh University. With a Photogravure Portrait in each Volume. Feap. 8vo, dull gilt top, quarter canvas, cloth sides, 3s. net per Volume. [Vols. I. to V. now ready.]

TIMES.—"In short, we have for the first time a reprint of the scarce first edition, or rather a reprint that is formally as well as textually satisfactory."

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT.

A NEW EDITION, in 48 vols., pott 8vo, printed on thin paper suitable for the pocket. Introductions by Mr. CLEMENT K. SHORTER. With Portraits and Photogravure Frontispieces by Herbert Railton. Decorated Title-Page by W. B. Macdougall. Cloth, fs. 6d. net; limp leather, 2s. net.

[See Special Prospectus.]

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE NOW READY:—

- |                                |                               |
|--------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| WAVERLEY. 2 vols.       | THE ANTIQUARY. 2 vols. |
| GUY MANNERING. 2 vols.  | ROB ROY. 2 vols.       |
| THE BLACK DWARF. 1 vol. | OLD MORTALITY. 2 vols. |

GUARDIAN.—"A better pocket edition, or a prettier, for actual use it is not easy to imagine."
WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"None is more charming or attractive in every way than that of Messrs. Dent."

Copies of the General Catalogue and of any Prospectus above mentioned will be forwarded post free on application.

J. M. DENT & CO., 29 and 30, Bedford Street, W.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

VOL. I. OF "THE LIBRARY OF LITERARY HISTORY."

A LITERARY HISTORY OF INDIA.

By R. W. FRAZER, LL.B., Author of "Silent Gods and Sun-steeped Lands" and "British India." Photogravure Frontispiece. Cloth, 16s.

"He has gathered up in a single volume the broad results of a century of learned research and profound and ingenious thinking.....A delightfully readable book."—Scotsman.

VOL. IV. OF "THE CRIMINOLOGY SERIES."

POLITICAL CRIME. By Louis Proal.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A brilliant survey."—Glasgow Herald.

SIXTH EDITION IN PREPARATION.

The COURTSHIPS OF QUEEN ELIZABETH.

By MARTIN A. S. HUME, F.R.H.S. Many Portraits. Cloth, 6s.

"A fascinating picture."—Standard.

THE GLADSTONE COLONY: an Un-

written Chapter of Australian History. By JAMES FRANCIS HOGAN, M.P., Author of "The Irish in Australia," &c. With a Prefatory Note by the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Exceedingly interesting."—Echo.

"Conscientiously and carefully written."—Scotsman.

MY LIFE in TWO HEMISPHERES.

By Sir CHARLES GAVAN DUFFY. In 2 vols., Photogravure Portrait to each, 32s.

"Two fine volumes that have not a dull page from first to last. . . . Are cram full of good stories about many people; but they are never mere gossip, for the narrator has insight and a sense of humour, and has gone through life with an observing eye as well as a note-book."

Saturday Review.

NEARLY 50,000 COPIES OF THIS BOOK HAVE BEEN SOLD.

HUGH WYNNE: Free Quaker, sometime B.-Lieut.-Col. on the Staff of General Washington. By Dr. S. WEIR MITCHELL. Illustrated. Cloth, 6s.

"This is one of the finest romances founded on a grand national theme which it has been our privilege to notice for many years. In depth of feeling, in dramatic power, in its thorough naturalness, its purity of thought, and not least in its refined and vigorous style, calling very much to mind the famous story of 'Esmond,' it is, to use a somewhat hackneyed phrase, quite 'beyond criticism.' Dr. Mitchell may be congratulated on having enriched our literature with a masterpiece which those who read it once will, in after years have pleasure in reading again and again."

Birmingham Daily Post.

THE FIRST EDITION OF 10,000 COPIES HAVING BEEN SOLD, A LARGE SECOND EDITION IS NOW READY.

THE SCHOOL for SAINTS. By John

OLIVER HOBBS. Cloth, 6s.

"Altogether it is one of the most fascinating olla-podridas we have met for some time. If the second part is half as good as this it will be decidedly welcome."—Athenæum.

CAMPAIGNING with GRANT. By

General HORACE PORTER, LL.D. With over 30 Full-Page Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, cloth, extra gilt top, 53s pp., 21s.

JAVA: the Garden of the East. By

ELIZA RUHAMAH SCIDMORE. With nearly 40 Full-Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE INNER LIFE OF THE HOUSE OF

COMMONS. Selected from the Writings of WILLIAM WHITE, with a Prefatory Note by his SON, and an Introduction by JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. 2 vols., cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

"This lively and veracious record."—World.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

TWELVE BAD WOMEN. A Companion Volume to "Twelve Bad Men." Edited by ARTHUR VINCENT. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Vincent and his helpers have trussed and hoisted again to their bad eminence these wicked dames with considerable skill, and one cannot but suspect considerable zest for their task."—Scotsman.

Prospectuses, Catalogues, and Lists sent post free to any address.

London:

T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E. C.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOTICE.—The entirely New and Original Work. CASSELL'S FAMILY LAWYER, being a Popular Exposition of the Civil Law of England and Scotland, by a BARRISTER - AT - LAW, will be ready shortly, complete in One Volume, 10s. 6d.

COMPLETION OF "SOCIAL ENGLAND" IN SIX VOLUMES.

SOCIAL ENGLAND.

EDITED BY

H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L.

Vol. I.—FROM the EARLIEST TIMES to the ACCESSION OF EDWARD I. 15s.

„ II.—FROM the ACCESSION OF EDWARD I. to the DEATH OF HENRY VII. 15s.

„ III.—FROM the ACCESSION OF HENRY VIII. to the DEATH OF ELIZABETH. 15s.

„ IV.—FROM the ACCESSION OF JAMES I. to the DEATH OF QUEEN ANNE. 17s.

„ V.—FROM the ACCESSION OF GEORGE I. to the BATTLE OF WATERLOO. 17s.

„ VI.—FROM the BATTLE OF WATERLOO to the GENERAL ELECTION OF 1835. 18s.

* * * A Prospectus, giving full particulars, will be sent post free on application.

YOUNG BLOOD: a New Novel.

By E. W. HORNUNG, Author of "The Rogue's March," "My Lord Duke," &c. 6s.

[Ready shortly.]

KIDNAPPED.

By R. L. STEVENSON. Illustrated. Cheap Edition. 3s. 6d. [Now ready.]

NEW VOLUME OF "THE CENTURY SCIENCE" SERIES.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

PASTEUR.

By PERCY FRANKLAND, F.R.S., and Mrs. FRANKLAND. Edited by Sir HENRY ROS COE, D.C.L., F.R.S. 3s. 6d.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

Now ready, price 7s. 6d.

THE DICTIONARY OF ENGLISH HISTORY.

A Record of the Doings of the English Nation at Home and Abroad. Edited by SIDNEY J. LOW, B.A., and Prof. F. S. PULLING, M.A., with Contributions by Eminent Writers.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LTD., London, Paris, and Melbourne.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS

At all Libraries and Booksellers'.

M. ZOLA'S New Book, PARIS, Translated by E. A. VIZETELLY. is now ready. Crown 8vo cloth, 3s. 6d.

G. A. HENTY'S New Novel, COLONEL THORNDYKE'S SECRET, will be read on March 10. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s

FRANK BARRETT'S New Novel, WAS SHE JUSTIFIED? is now ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

BRET HARTE'S New Book, TALES of TRAIL and TOWN, with a Frontispiece by JACOB HOOB, is now ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.

THROUGH the GOLD-FIELDS of ALASKA to BERING STRAITS. By HARRY DE WINDT. With 40 and 33 Full-Page Illustrations.

"Our extracts give but a slight idea of the wonderfully fresh and vivid character of an interesting book of travels as has been written these many years. It is done in a manly, unaffected style, and the illustrations are of the greatest interest."—Academy.
"He has better reason to congratulate himself than many another man on his success; for the opening stages of his journey led him straight across the gold-fields of the Yukon. . . . The story of his race at half-past the eleventh hour by a belated whaler is one of the most dramatic and thrilling bits of romance in real life I have read for some time."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLÉON III. By Archd.

BALD FORBES. With 37 Full-Page Illustrations.
"The admirable volume in which Mr. Forbes has told the tale Napoleon's life will perhaps help to explain to this generation's superstition of the last. It would be poor and insufficient praise say that the book is more interesting than any romance. . . . Mr. Forbes is a master of dramatic effect and of a flowing style; in addition, so with his own eyes many of the greatest scenes in the career of subject; and his book is, accordingly, full of breathless interest from its first pages to its last."—T. P. O'Connor in the Graphic.

THE DISASTER. By Paul and Victor MARQUERITE. Translated by FREDERIC LEES. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"This powerful picture of the fate of the Army of the Rhine, by the sons of one of the generals who did their duty, is among the finest descriptions of war that have been penned."—Athenæum.

A WOMAN TEMPTED HIM. By William WESTALL, Author of "With the Red Eagle," &c. Crown 8 cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"As a story of domestic intrigue and financial vicissitude it is fully planned and alluringly unrolled."—Daily Mail.

TRUE BLUE; or, "The Lass that Loved Sailor." By HERBERT RUSSELL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BY the RISE of the RIVER: Tales and Sketches in South Tyndale. By AUSTIN CLARE, Author of "For the Love of a Lass," &c. Crown 8vo, uncrum, gilt top, 6s.
"The best test of the value and beauty of these stories, which deep into the pain and pathos, the strife and stress of human life, is found in the fact that the dialect does not materially interfere with the pleasure which the book affords."—World.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST. By B. I. CROKER, Author of "Beyond the Pale," &c. Crown 8vo, do gilt top, 6s.

"A very engaging story. . . . Written with vivacity, all the characters developed most clearly, and with never a dull page in the book."—Vanity Fair.

TALES in PROSE and VERSE. By CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat." Crown 8 cloth, 3s. 6d.

"We doubt whether so finely wrought a picture of the human is to be found in all fact-built fiction as that of Moses Lowenstein."—World.

THIS LITTLE WORLD. By D. Christie

MURRAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.
"After the publication of 'My Contemporaries in Fiction,' looks, with some show of reason, for especially good work from Christie Murray. . . . The novel in hand is not a disappointment. Hope's rustic grandfather and his friends are delightful. . . . Altogether Mr. Murray may be congratulated upon a thoroughly readable well-written novel, full of all his old pleasantness and spirit, and of nicety of style and subtleties of thought superadded."—St. James's Gazette.

RECORDS of OLD TIMES: Historic

Social, Political, Sporting, and Agricultural. By J. K. FOWL ("RUSTICUS"). Demy 8vo, cloth, with 9 Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

WALFORD'S COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM (1896). Containing Notices of the Descendants, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Houses, and Families, their Heirs Apparent or Presumptive, Offices they hold or have held, their Town and Country Address Clubs, &c. Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt, 50s.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE

One Shilling Monthly. Contents for MARCH.

AN IMPOSTOR. By KATHARINE WILDE.
OLD-WORLD BALLADS and MUSIC. By F. S. LEPTWICH.
THE SUNS OF SPACE. By J. ELLARD GORE, F.R.A.S.
THE ENGLISH TOWNSHIP. By T. H. B. GRAHAM, M.A.
THE MINISTER'S MAN. By ALEX. W. STEWART.
KNIGHTLY ORDERS of FRANCE. By J. F. MORRIS FAWC.
INSPIRED BY the SUNBEAMS. By JAMES STOKES.
FLETCHER of SALTOUN. By D. C. BARRIS.
FROM the KONO to the NIGER. By F. A. EDWARDS.
THE AUTHORESS of the "ODYSSEY." By SYLVANUS URBAN.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS:                            | PAGE    |
|-------------------------------------|---------|
| Mr. Henley's Poems                  | 249     |
| Tailor and Chartist                 | 250     |
| Egyptology and Conscience-Money     | 251     |
| A Book of Gossip                    | 251     |
| Devout Lyrics                       | 252     |
| The Round Towers of Ireland         | 253     |
| A Maker of Empire                   | 253     |
| REFER MENTION                       | 253     |
| DITION SUPPLEMENT                   | 255-258 |
| TES AND NEWS                        | 259     |
| PUTATIONS RECONSIDERED: JANE AUSTEN | 262     |
| AKESPEARE FOR AMATEURS...           | 264     |
| RIS LETTER                          | 265     |
| E WEEK                              | 266     |
| E BOOK MARKET                       | 266     |
| AMA                                 | 267     |
| RESPONDENCE                         | 268     |
| OK REVIEWS REVIEWED                 | 269     |
| OKS RECEIVED...                     | 270     |

REVIEWS.

MR. HENLEY'S POEMS.

ms. By William Ernest Henley. (David Nutt.)

GREENABLE to hand and eye, without prettiness or pettiness, this book presents Mr. Henley's poems in entirely appropriate garb. Its page is clear and attractive, proportioned—a point too often neglected in latter-day books of verse—so as to show at once the contour of a stanza. It has for its frontispiece a good photogravure of Rodin's "The Thinker" and forceful bust of the author. Altogether, it is a book we can accept with unmixed satisfaction, as the Library of the "Pocket Henleys" of old. The new numbers, with the exception of "Arabian Nights Entertainments" and a notably beautiful "Epilogue," are not of the first importance; and the excisions, mainly from the "Bric-à-brac" of the 1888 edition, are judicious enough. It gives one a little shock of surprise to hear that a favourite poet has been meddling with his text; but Mr. Henley's alterations, so far as I have noted them, are in no way vital. Here and there one mildly upbraids them; nowhere do they seem to call for protest. After all, as Mr. Henley says in his preface, "his verses are his own, and this is how he would have them read." It is almost incredible, though believe it or not, that since Mr. Henley says so, that for over fifteen years he found himself, as a poet, "utterly unmarketable," and that his "Hospital" sequence was "rejected by the editor of standing in London." Who were these editors? It were wiser not to inquire; for the law does not permit us, without good and sufficient reason, to drag to light of day the stains upon a man's name. Some of the editors, no doubt, have by this time gone to be edited themselves; and, if literary sins count for anything in the reckoning, they shall hardly escape the Waste-Paper Basket. For these "Hospital Rhymes and Rhythms," though they do not mark the summit of Mr. Henley's achievement, should have revealed to anyone with half an eye for literary art the presence of a new force in poetry. Probably it was the stark realism of the work that took the editors aback. Accustomed to think of poetry as a golden haze—not to say a golden syrup—in which all harsh outlines must be steeped and softened, they were repelled by the uncompromising significance of every touch in Mr. Henley's masterful etchings. Perhaps "chloroform" was as yet a word unlicensed for poetic uses, as crude as "telephone" or "bicycle" would seem to-day. But it needed no superhuman insight to see that there was not only originality, but knowledge and style, in the man who could write such lines as these:

"Behold me waiting—waiting for the knife.
A little while, and at a leap I storm
The thick, sweet mystery of chloroform,
The drunken dark, the little death-in-life"— or who could tell how

"the anæsthetic reaches
Hot and subtle through your being.

And you gasp and reel and shudder
In a rushing, swaying rapture,
While the voices at your elbow
Fade—receding—fainter—farther.

Lights about you shower and tumble,
And your blood seems crystallising—
Edged and vibrant, yet within you,
Racked and hurried back and forward."

Even if such "edged and vibrant" writing jarred on foregone conceptions of poetry, it was surely remarkable enough, simply as writing, to command interest and attention. Condemnable it might be; but what sane editor would hesitate a moment to invite the world to decide the question? And even if the masterly portraiture, the tersely-touched episodes of hospital comedy and tragedy, failed to make their due impression, the pure poetry of such pieces as "Pastoral" and "Nocturn" ought to have been manifest to the meanest intelligence. In "Pastoral" the poet, cabined in the dreary ward, sees a vision of the Spring which is gladdening the world outside:

"Vistas of change and adventure,
Thro' the green land
The grey roads go beckoning and winding.
                    Green flame the hedgerows.
Blackbirds are bugling, and white in wet winds
Sway the tall poplars.
O, the brilliance of blossoming orchards,
O, the savour and thrill of the woods,
When their leafage is stirred
By the flight of the Angel of Rain!
Loud lows the steer; in the fallows
Rooks are alert; and the brooks Gurgle and tinkle and trill. Thro' the gloaming,
Under the rare, shy stars,
Boy and girl wander,
Dreaming in darkness and dew."

What unimbleness, what multiplicity of sensation there is in this poem! How fresh, how cool and dewy it is! And, though the lines are not minted to pattern, like rouleaux of five-shilling pieces, or alternate crowns and dollars, what a perfect sense of rhythmic beauty informs them! The poem lacks imagery, some may say; but imagery is the ornament, not the essential substance, of poetry. To attain beauty without ornament is perhaps a greater, certainly a harder, task than to pile trope on trope, and figure on figure. And if it comes to that, I should be glad to hear of a lovelier image than the one I have italicised.

The impermeable density of the Able Editors had the effect of practically putting Mr. Henley to silence during ten of the best years of his life, and thus notably impoverishing English poetry. It was by a sort of chance that in 1888 the Hospital Rhythms, with the "Echoes" and "Bric-à-brac" at last saw the light. Among the "Echoes" were "Out of the night that covers me," the "King in Babylon," "On the way to Kew," "To R. L. S.," "Margarita Sorori," and other noble numbers; among the "Bric-à-brac" were the "Ballade of Midsummer Days and Nights" and the "Ballade made in Hot Weather"; but still criticism, except in one or two quarters, was half-hearted if not supercilious. Then came his second booklet (1892). In "The Song of the Sword," "London Voluntaries," and the "Rhymes and Rhythms" which eked out the little volume Mr. Henley had shaken off the influence of Heine, occasionally traceable in his earlier work, and soared into the sphere of Milton. Squarely based on the magnificent success of the four "London Voluntaries," his reputation was now secure. Yet it has taken six years for the mass of the reading public to realise how indisputable is his place in the foremost rank of our poets. To praise him now is to beat at an open door; but truly the hinges have been long a-turning.

Why has it taken Mr. Henley all these years to come into his kingdom? Because of the small bulk of his writings, say some, no doubt with partial truth. But there is more than this in the matter. The essential truth is, I believe, that Mr. Henley does not deal in the kinds of poetry which most readily catch the public ear. He does not write ballads, he does not confect idylls, he does not psychologise, he does not philosophise on current topics—agnosticism, or heredity, or trade-unionism, or what not. There is no story in his poems, no drama, no allegory. They are never versified leading-articles. They do not make for edification, or, to use the more popular catchword, for "culture"; and, their meaning being as clear as daylight, they offer no scope for co-operative conjecture. Mr. Henley, in his verse, is two things: a painter-etcher and a pure lyricist. In the former capacity his touch is too stern, too precise, and of too condensed significance to allure the popular eye, which prefers a smoother surface, a more luscious tone. As a lyricist, again, Mr. Henley, though a master-rhymer when he pleases, is apt to renounce the aid of rhyme and strict melodic form. Now the triangle, though we may not realise it, is one of the most popular instruments in the band, and not to be lightly dispensed with. Moreover, though Mr. Henley does not, if I may put it so, deliberately intellectualise, a somewhat aggressive personal philosophy runs through his lyrics—a grim stoicism, with an inclination to envisage life in its grotesquer aspects. This is not pleasing to many worthy people. Ladies especially, I fancy, resent Mr. Henley's outlook on the world, in which they are apt to figure as "women." Yet again, his sedulous realism of diction, his disuse of the conventional poetic dialect, has tended to retard Mr. Henley's acceptance. He has been handicapped, in a word, by his very strength, and the marked individuality of his temperament. He has been to many people (and not always to the mere Philistine) something of an acquired taste. But the appetite, once awakened, will never be cloyed. It is the saccharine quality in verso that palls, whereas Mr. Henley's is always tonic and astringent. Here, for instance, is a lyric which, once felt, will abide with you for ever:

"To M. E. H.

When you wake in your crib,
You, an inch of experience—
Vaulted about
With the wonder of darkness;
Wailing and striving
To reach from your feebleness
Something you feel
Will be good to aud cherish you,
Something you know
And can rest upon blindly:
O, then a hand
(Your mother's, your mother's!)
By the fall of its fingers
All knowledge, all power to you,
Out of the dreary,
Discouraging strangenesses
Comes to and masters you,
Takes you, and lovingly
Woes you and soothes you
Back, as you cling to it,
Back to some comforting
Corner of sleep.

So you wake in your bed,
Having lived, having loved:
But the shadows are there,
And the world and its kingdoms
Incredibly faded;
And you grope through the Terror
Above you and under
For the light, for the warmth,
The assurance of life;
But the blasts are ice-born,
And your heart is nigh burst
With the weight of the gloom
And the stress of your strangled
And desperate endeavour:
Sudden a hand—
Mother, O Mother!—
God at His best to you,
Out of the roaring,
Impossible silences,
Falls on and urges you,
Mightily, tenderly.
Forth, as you clutch at it,
Forth to the infinite
Peace of the Grave."

Mr. Henley has not, I think, done anything better than this. Elsewhere, in the poem inscribed "Matri Dilectissimæ," he has written:

"Dearest, live on
In such an immortality
As we thy sons,
Born of thy body and nursed
At those wild faithful breasts,
Live of generous thoughts
And honourable words, and deeds
That make men half in love with fate!"

"To M. E. H.," and many others of Mr. Henley's poems, may well be reckoned among such "deeds."

WILLIAM ARCHER.

TAILOR AND CHARTIST.

The Life of Francis Place, 1771-1854. By Graham Wallas, M.A. (Longmans.)

MR. GRAHAM WALLAS has already won himself two reputations—as a municipal administrator and as a thoughtful student of social and economic problems. From the top of these he would assail literature. He does so by no means without success. His biography of Francis Place is too long and detailed—it is the chronic complaint of the modern biography; but it is written with great skill, with wide knowledge of the thorny political ways of the first half of the century, and above all with an occasional touch of shrewd epigram. Moreover, it is a work of amazing industry. Place left an autobiography so voluminous as to be rather a History of his Life and Times, together with innumerable letters, books, and newspapers, amounting in all to more than seventy volumes. Through these Mr. Wallas has burrowed his way, and we have hardly the heart to blame him for not rejecting more of the superfluous material that he must have gathered together during his task.

The earlier life of Francis Place was, as Mr. Wallas hints, a subject worthy of the pen of Mr. Smiles. His father, a man of ferocious temper, kept a "sponging house" in Vinegar-yard. The son was apprenticed to a maker of leather breeches, and grew up in the rowdy purlieus of Drury-lane. Nor did he find his environment particularly uncongenial. "He was skilled in street games, a hunter of bullocks in the Strand, an obstinate faction fighter, and a daily witness of every form of open crime and debauchery." He belonged to the crew of an eight-oared cutter, of which the cox was transported for robbery and the stroke hanged for murder. Then he married and became steady, frugal, and industrious. The young couple were locally known as "the Lady and Gentleman." After various vicissitudes of journeyman employment and strikes, which somewhat tried his domestic relations, he managed to set up a small tailoring business of his own, and found this the first step to a fortune. Presently he moved to Charing Cross, and had the largest plate-glass windows in London. Of his professional struggles he would speak with considerable cynicism:

"How often have I taken away a garment for a fault which did not exist, and which I, of course, never intended to rectify. How often have I taken back the same garment without it ever having been unfolded, and been commended for the alteration which had not been made, and then been reprehended for not having done what was right at first. . . . A man, to be a good tailor should be either a philosopher or a mean cringing slave, whose feelings had never been excited to the pitch of manhood."

Philosophy, you will infer, was the alternative chosen by Place. Tailoring, indeed, was never his life. That was really passed in the little parlour behind his shop, which welcomed his intimates and discreetly excluded his customers. Place had always been a voracious reader, and, as soon as his means permitted, he got together a considerable collection of books, mainly upon political and economic subjects. Gradually the tailor's "library" became the rendezvous for all the rebellious spirits of Westminster, Place himself their mentor and political guide. He was not only a reader and thinker, but an admirable organiser, and such men as Sir Francis Burdett turned instinctively to him for advice. About 1808 he became acquainted with James Mill, and was drawn into the circle that revolved around the speculative Jeremy Bentham. Place has left some letters written during a visit to Ford Abbey, where Bentham and Mill were then living together, which throw an interesting light on the philosophic ménage. He fully confirms the account of Mill's educational methods given in his more famous son's autobiography:

"His method is by far the best I ever witnessed, and is infinitely precise; but he is excessively severe. No fault, however trivial, escapes his notice; none goes without reprehension or punishment of some sort. Lessons have not been well said this morning by Willie and Clara; there they are now, three o'clock plodding over their books, their dinner, which they knew went up at one, brought down again and John, who dines with them, has his book also, for having permitted them to pass when they could not say, and no dinner will any of them get till six o'clock. This has happened once before since I came. The fault to-day is a mistake in one word. Now I could not be so severe; but the learning and reasoning these children have acquired is not equalled by any children in the whole world. John is truly a prodigy, a most wonderful fellow; and, when his Logic, his Languages, his Mathematics, his Philosophy, shall be combined with a general knowledge of mankind and the affairs of the world, he will be a truly astonishing man, but he will probably be morose and selfish. Mill sees this: and I am operating upon him when the little time I can spare can be applied, to counteract these propensities, so far as to give him a bias towards the management of his temper, and to produce an extensive consideration of the reasonings and habit of others, when the time shall come for him to observe and practise these things."

Under the inspiration of Bentham, Place attempted to take part in the literary propaganda of Utilitarianism, but without much success. Of one of his articles Mr. Wallas says that it "simply cannot be read. . . . It consists of a pointless series of facts from original sources, put together in a style compared with which that of Stubbs' 'Constitutional History' is airy and journalistic." But his activities as adviser and inspirer-general of London Liberalism continued unabated. He took a leading part in the establishment of British School, carried on a vigorous neo-Malthusian crusade, and was the moving spirit in the abolition of the Combination Law. Throughout the campaigns which preceded the Reform Bill of 1832, his library served as the headquarters of the agitation; was he who finally discomfited the Duke of Wellington by the issue of the placard containing the famous advice to "go for gold." He, too, it was who drew up the famous "People's Charter" which led to the abortive movement known as Chartism. He never sought to appear much in public, but the leading Radicals of the day were glad to resort to him for counsel and instruction, and Mr. Wallas quotes an amusing description, from the hand of an enemy, of his relations to that intrepid reformer, Joseph Hume :

"Look over the notices of motion, and see when Joseph is to storm sixpence laid out in the decoration of a public work, or sack the salary of a clerk in a public office, and when you find that in a day or two it is to astonish St. Stephen's and delight the land, then go, if you can gain admission, to the library of this indefatigable statesman, and you will discover him schooling the Nabob like a baby. There upon that three-footed stool, gowned in wholesome grey, with an absolute avalanche of schemes, scraps and calculations around him, sits the philosophic sage, delivering his golden rules with the slowness and the certainty of the choicest alembic; and yonder, squatted upon a pile of unread pamphlets, sits the substantial upil, with his whole countenance perked into the gigantic ear of astonishment and delight. The wild ass quaffing the spring in the desert," says the Arabian proverb, 'is not so lovely as he countenance of him who drinketh understanding.'"

We could wish that Mr. Wallas had not confined himself so entirely to narrative, but had attempted to define for us a little more precisely the exact position held by Francis Place in the history of early nineteenth-century Liberalism. A great thinker he was not, or a great orator, and yet he seems to have impressed the imagination of his contemporaries more than a mere wirepuller could quite do. Robert Owen called him the real leader of the Whig party," and, indeed, he seems to have been in his way a genuine leader of men, with the powers of initiative, stimulus, and control with which a leader can afford to dispense.

EGYPTOLOGY AND CONSCIENCE-MONEY.

Religion and Conscience in Ancient Egypt: Being Lectures Delivered at University College, London. By W. M. Flinders Petrie, D.C.L., &c. (Methuen & Co.)

PROF. FLINDERS PETRIE is certainly a most versatile man. When not engaged in discovering important documents of antiquity in the last place one would have thought of looking for them—as, for instance, the remains of cannibalism in Egypt or theiform tablets in (with apologies for the neologism) hieroglyphiferous strata—he rushes back to Gower-street and, as Edwards Professor of Egyptology, delivers lectures which, at any rate, delight his audience by telling them something they did not know before. No one but he would have thought of applying the statistics of conscience-money to the illustration of Egyptian character; yet with the help of an imaginary opponent the task presents to him no difficulty. "The Egyptians had a much better idea of the degrees of right and wrong than their neighbours," says the Professor. "Are there, then, degrees of wrong?" replies nastily the Devil's Advocate. "Certainly there are," rejoins the Professor. "Take lying as an example" —and he jots down on his blackboard a scale of lies having at one end the lie "to save many innocent lives," and at the other the lie told "from hatred of anything going aright." How many people will tell each of these lies?" says the adversary, shifting his ground a bit. "They will tell them in accordance with the law of distribution of errors, or probability curve," says the Professor, promptly drawing a picture of the said curve. "How do you know that the law of distribution applies to morals?" says the adversary, conscious that he is getting rather the worst of it. "By the conscience-money anonymously paid into the Exchequer," triumphantly replies the Professor, and he bombards his opponent with figures showing that the usual payment takes the shape of "a convenient £5 note," rather than the £5 16s. which it appears the conscience-stricken one ought to pay. It is all very pretty, and the Devil's Advocate is very quickly routed, but we confess it seems to us a long way from this to Ancient Egypt.

This, however, is a flippant way of looking at the subject. Let us hasten to say that Prof. Petrie has collected two hundred ethical maxims from different Egyptian monuments, and classified and analysed them with much skill. In the result he pronounces the standard of character among the Ancient Egyptians to be much more like that of the eighteenth century among ourselves than that of the nineteenth:

"Their virtues are quiet and discreet; their vices are calculating. They belong far more to the tone of Chesterfield and Gibbon than to that of Kingsley or Carlyle; they accord with Pope or Thomson rather than with Swinburne or Tennyson. There is hardly a single splendid feeling; there is not one burst of magnanimous sacrifice; there is not one heartfelt self-depreciation, in any point of all this worldly wisdom. They are as canny as a Scot, without his sentiment; as prudent as a Frenchman, without his ideals; as self-conceited as an Englishman, without his family."

The lecturer can hardly have studied Egyptian monuments as thoroughly as he has without coming to a probably just conclusion as to the character of the people who made them. But we had rather take his word for it than follow him through his proofs. For the Egyptians left behind them no pictures of contemporary manners like our novels, journals, and police reports; and the maxims Prof. Petrie quotes are exclusively collections of precepts of the 5th, 11th, 12th, and 19th Dynasties collated with the Book of the Dead, which may be of any age, and a Louvre papyrus which is known to be Ptolemaic. If Macaulay's New Zealander were to form his opinion of English character only from the Ten Commandments, the Church Catechism, the Babees' Book of the Early English Text Society, and a modern work on etiquette, he would get at a very queer jumble indeed.

The case is different with the religion of Ancient Egypt, as to which there is a fair amount of evidence collected from the numerous hymns and scraps of ritual found in the inscriptions. We are glad to see, also, that Prof. Petrie here depends chiefly upon the generalisations of M. Maspero, than whom no better or more cautious guide in Egyptological matters can be found. Yet even here he makes some unexpected statements, as when he speaks of magic as "probably the very earliest form of belief." His assertion, too, that "doses of poison and also of serpent's blood taken internally confer on the eater immunity from the effects of injected poison, such as that infused by bites," is not one which should have been made without full reference to his authority. Nor do we think that he would be able to produce conclusive proof that the Labarum (or monogram of XR) is "essentially the sign of Horus, and only became Christian by adoption." But these are obiter dicta of the Professor, and do not affect his conclusions as to the general nature of the Egyptian religion, which are here stated. These are, to put them briefly, that Egypt worshipped the four classes of "animal gods, essentially human gods (Osirian group), the cosmogonic gods (Ra group), and the gods of human principles." Each of these four classes are, according to him, connected with one of the four races of Negroes, Libyans, Mesopotamians, and Punites, who, he thinks, succeeded each other in Egypt in the order named. This is a new theory, which would go some way towards introducing order into the present chaos of the Egyptian Pantheon, and we shall be anxious to see if it is supported or adopted by any other Egyptologist. At present, however, Prof. Petrie admits that it is only an hypothesis, and that these lectures are chiefly intended "to suggest a mode of looking at the subject." Meanwhile, we hope that Prof. Petrie will devote a little more time to the history of other religions, and the road by which they have arrived at their higher stages of development. If he does so, he may find an explanation of many things which now puzzle him, as when he fails to reconcile the practice of mummification with the theory of the existence of the ka or material soul independently of the body. The fact that many ministers of religion, while asking the advice of the Meteorological Department when choosing a day for a school feast, still continue to pray for rain at the request of their congregations, seems to be a case directly in point.

A BOOK OF GOSSIP.

Social Hours with Celebrities. By Mrs. W. Pitt Byrne. (Ward & Downey.)

WE have already had a couple of volumes of reminiscences from the late Mrs. W. Pitt Byrne, the author of Flemish Interiors, under the title of Gossip of the Century. But after her death her sister and literary executrix, Miss R. H. Busk, found among her papers sufficient notes to make up two more volumes. In piquancy and interest Social Hours with Celebrities falls behind the preceding work. But it also is the record of a clever woman who lived long, saw much, observed well, and—most important in such a case—prattled freely; dip where you will, you will find something to amuse and not infrequently something to instruct. In the first few pages, for instance, we find

Mrs. Pitt Byrne in Paris, where she knew Emile de Girardin and his co-proprietor of La France, the Vicomte de la Gueronniere. The Vicomte's "matrimonial interieur was not a united or happy one," and "it was pretty notorious in Paris that the Vicomte preferred the society of another lady to that of his own wife."

"He died very suddenly, and the grief of the 'other lady' was violent in the extreme; she had sought to see him in his dying moments as he lay upon a mattress on the floor, and, regardless of convenances, remained in the concierge's loge that she might be kept informed of all that went on. One of the most characteristic scenes I ever remember (and one that could scarcely have happened unless in France) occurred when, a few days after the Vicomte's death, I went to pay this lady a visit of condolence—for the liaison was so well known that she quite expected this courtesy—I found her reclining on a couch in a paroxysm of grief, while her good-natured little old husband, seated affectionately beside her, was doing his best to dry her tears and console her grief!"

At the present moment the following note has a certain significance. It refers to the year 1890:

"At the house of Marius Roux, the Provençal novelist, I have met Emile Zola and his wife among the guests. As for Mme. Zola she is of imposing dimensions, but lacks the cultivation which would make those dimensions an advantage; in a certain class she would be considered a handsome woman.

Zola himself, then a man of about fifty, had a prematurely 'high forehead,' which imparted a certain staidness to his aspect. His conversation was most impartial as regarded subjects, and he spoke on all as a man of the world and a man of wide experience; but his language was remarkable rather for refinement than otherwise; his expressions were all well chosen and yet seemed to come to him naturally and without effort or hesitation. If there was any call for remark on his manner it would be on the score of a well-bred reticence, which, however, may be practised as a matter of calculation and diplomacy, though it appeared natural; still I should say there was a good deal of the poseur about him, and he cannot be said to be without affectation. I was told that Zola pointedly shuns any matter of conversation that would lead to a mention of any of his works, and has therefore a way of introducing and keeping to certain sets of subjects which help him to avoid them."

Of Cardinal Manning, Mrs. Pitt Byrne has much to say that is interesting, more particularly, perhaps, to her fellow Catholics. It was a curious phase of his character that made him in his later years dislike any allusion to his marriage, and wish that no mention of it should occur in his biography. But his popularity is shown by the following incident which occurred when his dead body was lying in state:

"An unsympathetic passer-by ventured the remark, 'I don't know why they're making all this fuss about him. What did he ever do to deserve it?' 'An' is it what did he iver do, ye mane?' said a pugnacious Hibernian near him. 'You jist come outside an' take off yer coat, an' I'll show yer what he did.'"

Some excellent stories are told of Cardinal Wiseman; but one cannot help suspecting—and hoping—that this picture of Spurgeon is coloured by religious prejudice:

"Spurgeon was spending the winter at the Grand Hotel at Mentone, where I was an inmate for a few days. He gave himself no little importance, occupied with his suite, the best suite of rooms in the house, those of the first floor in the centre pavillon—spacious, lofty, and well-furnished—and as he rarely came into the public salon in the evening, there was a lot of fun—supported with a good deal of champagne—indulged in in his private apartments. Many of the gentlemen were occasionally invited to go in, and have told me that, even when he gave them a set discourse, as he occasionally did, it was delivered in so humorous a tone, and so freely interspersed with picturesque metaphors and allusions, that it really was 'as good as a play.' . . . At the table d'hôte he had stipulated to sit at the head of the table with his four 'deacons,' two on each side of him; and as (together with himself) they were (like George Cruickshank's omnibus passengers) 'all fat,' they made a portly show. The further to distinguish his party, they dined when the rest of us took our déjeuner or lunch, and they were served with tea (high tea) when we dined."

Space forbids us to quote from the second volume, which contains, among other things, the record of a visit to Squire Waterton of Walton Hall, that curious country gentleman who turned his estate into a refuge for wild fowl, stuffed animals as an amusement, and while himself living a life of rigid asceticism, and sleeping on a rough-hewn block of oak, kept open house and a generous table for his friends. But did Longfellow, as Mrs. Pitt Byrne alleges, steal the well-known lines beginning,

"As ships that pass in the night, and speak each other in passing," from the prose of J. T. Beecher, the friend of Byron?

DEVOUT LYRICS.

Spikenard: a Book of Devotional Love Poems.
By Laurence Housman. (Grant Richards.)

MR. HOUSMAN, like Mr. Thompson, throws back for the manner of his religious verse to the seventeenth century. He does not, however, quite catch the accent of individuality which is so notable in each one of his great models. He has nothing to put against the sweet sunniness of Herbert, the sombre intensity of Donne, the spiritual insight of Vaughan, the spiritual ecstasy of Crashaw. Had we to judge him in an epithet, we think that it would have to be "tame." Mr. Housman has the poetic feeling, and something of the poetic aptitude; nevertheless he fails at any one moment quite to sting us or to carry us away. It may be that he has only mistaken his style. Devotional poetry is probably the rarest kind of poetry. It may even be maintained that to one writer only since the seventeenth century closed has the gift been given. The emotion concerned is so subtle, so undefined, that often enough in the effort to give it form it must needs evanesce; the aspiration will not endure the fetters of speech. And if you cannot, as most certainly you cannot, detain it in the simplicity of the common hymn tune, neither will you be more successful with the lure of elaborate stanza-forms or the conceits that border upon extravagance.

The following is about the best that Mr. Housman can do, and it leaves us unmoved; his theme is the theological doctrine of Kenosis, the deliberate submission by the Absolute to the limitations of mortality.

"Now, this first time, Thine Eyes must look on walls;

Where Thy Hands cannot reach,
Hands stretch and do beseech;

Where Thine Ear cannot hear, Thine earth for succour calls!

Oh, little Heart,
Beat fast, and grow!

The whole world's smart
Through Thee, one day, must flow,

Oh, childish Ears, attend,
Being friend to all men's fears!

Oh, childish Eyes,
Would ye of man be wise,

Ye must the channel be to all men's tears!"

Later on, Mr. Housman goes far to spoil the poem by talking of "the starried night," which does not seem to mean anything, and is, in fact, an affectation.

We have sought with some pains for another specimen which would not do Mr. Housman an injustice. The following seems to have a touch of humanity which comes as a relief.

"TO ST. FRANCIS.

(For his licence of a wineshop kept by one of his Tertiaries.)

O Francis, servant of the Living Vine,
Since all that are His branches bear good fruit,
So in my spirit let His Life find root,
And let me serve Him, sending forth good wine!

For wine God gave, to make man's heart be glad;
Till came the foe who sowed the bitter tares,
And gluttony to vaunt her evil wares:
Wherefore to-day so many homes are sad.

O thou, His servant, with his patient signs
Of suffering in thy feet, and side, and hands,
Pray Him with power to purge His pleasant lands,
And catch the foxes that have spoiled the vines."

To this immediately succeeds a terrible poem, for "The Feast of the Invention of the Cross," in which Mr. Housman descends to the puerile trick of printing nearly every "t" as a capital letter. The effect is exceedingly ludicrous. This is the kind of thing:

"Made iT Thy FocTsTool and Thy Throue," or again:

"A symbol of Thine ouTsTreTched Hands."

If Mr. Housman will take the trouble to read Donne's fine poem on "Good Friday," he will perhaps be on the way to realise the mechanical nature of his own conception of symbolism.

THE ROUND TOWERS OF IRELAND.

The Round Towers of Ireland. By Henry O'Brien. Edited by "W. H. C." (Thacker & Co.)

O'BRIEN'S celebrated work on the Round Towers has long been a scarce book, and the issue of a mere reprint would have been a distinct boon to those interested in the much agitated subject of which it treats. But "W. H. C." has done a great deal more than this. In the first place, he has given us a really masterly Introduction, clear, scholarly, and sane, on a topic in the discussion of which sanity at least has not always been conspicuously prominent. Equally welcome is his excellent Synopsis. Those who are familiar with O'Brien's incoherent pages, and have experienced the irritation induced by the effort of following his rambling arguments, further distracted as they are by frequent digressions into vituperation of his opponents, will be grateful for this act of consideration on the part of the editor. As everybody knows, O'Brien claimed for the Towers a Phallic origin, and when his book first appeared it was greeted with a mingled storm of horror, indignation, and, worst of all, ridicule. But during the sixty years or so that have elapsed since then the growth of wider methods and a less conventional spirit of inquiry has resulted in showing that his contention is probably founded on a substratum of truth. A vast amount of nonsense has no doubt been written about Phallicism, and pretty well every object under the sun, natural or artificial, has been pressed into the service of the theory. Moreover, the doctrine has perhaps been somewhat unduly discredited by the fact that many of its advocates, and those not the least vociferous among them, have been persons inadequately equipped in respect of training and knowledge, and, with less excuse than O'Brien, fantastic and intemperate of expression. Yet sound and sober research has abundantly proved how universally the traces of this bygone worship appear, more or less plainly, in the religious systems of the present day, from the crudest material beliefs of savagery to the most refined and idealised developments of the higher faiths. So with the Irish Round Towers. Even if we are unable to bring ourselves to admit the likelihood that these mysterious edifices were avowedly built for the purpose asserted by those who think with O'Brien, it is difficult to resist the conclusion that in form at any rate they are a survival of the ancient Phallic cult, though the survival may have been unconscious, the form but traditional, the cult forgotten. In that case, whether within the limits of the ken of history, this fashion of temple lived on as a fire-shrine or a coronation-fane, a penitential column or a sacred observatory, a belfry or what not, it lived on as many other tokens of dead eras do—that is, in externals which have ceased to convey any definite meaning or whose meaning has insensibly changed. But this is not the place for a dissertation on the Round Towers or on religious evolution. All that remains to be said here is that the editor has prefixed a life and a portrait of the author, that he has consulted modern tastes by adding an index, and that, except for the superiority of the illustrations, no one need wish to possess a copy of the original edition.

A MAKER OF EMPIRE.

Life of Sir John Hawley Glover, R.N., G.C.M.G. By Lady Glover. Edited by the Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Temple, Bart. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THE kernel of this book was a narrative, written at the desire of the Colonial Office, of the share taken by Sir John Glover in the Ashanti War of 1874. During this campaign Sir John was detailed to cover the main advance of Sir Garnet Wolseley upon Coomassie with a native column, composed chiefly of those Haussa troops which excited so much interest in London last June. It has been expanded into a full account of a career spent in the indefatigable service—naval, military, and administrative—of the country. Sir John Glover entered the Navy in 1841, saw fighting in Burmah, and on the outbreak of the Crimean War went on the Rosamond to the Baltic. Here an interesting incident occurred.

"The Rosamond was steaming on her course when a smart-looking vessel was observed proceeding leisurely close in shore. Mr. Glover said they 'might cut her off and capture her,' but the captain thought it would not be prudent to attempt it, as the enemy was in force in the neighbourhood. Lieutenant Glover rejoined, 'You don't know. You might be losing the chance of a lifetime by neglecting it.' They watched the strange vessel, which presently passed out of gun-shot distance, when the Russian standard was run up, and a royal salute was fired. It turned out that the emperor was on board!"

Shortly afterwards Glover was sent out to conduct a survey of the Niger, and this led to his resignation of his naval career and his appointment as Governor of Lagos. In this position he showed great tact and discretion, and 'Golobar' became a household word among the West African tribes. He was a man of commanding personality and of a great variety of interests. Sir Richard Temple describes him as 'a man of dash and daring, strong in frame, so fond of riding and driving that he might almost be called a tamer of horses, a superb marksman, a competent draughtsman, a graphic word painter, and a negotiator gifted with the power of ingratiating himself with strangers.' He was of the stuff of which our greater colonists are made, and shared to the full that blend of religious, commercial, and patriotic enthusiasm so characteristic of the latter-day Imperialist. In this connexion we cannot forbear quoting an amusing passage preserved by Lady Glover:

"A chief once said to him, 'I know what happens to our poor country. First comes missionary—well, he very good man, he write book. Then come consul; he write home. Then comes merchant, he very good man, he buy nuts. Then comes governor; he—well, he writes to Queeny. She send him back. She send man-o'-war. Our country done spoil—no more of our poor place left.'"

After the Ashanti War Sir John Glover was appointed Governor of Newfoundland, and held this post, with a short interval as Governor of the Leeward Islands, until a few months before his death, in 1885.

From the point of view of literature the biography has no particular merit: there is a lavish waste of words put together with somewhat primitive art. An exception must, however, be made for the Introduction and the narrative of the Ashanti War, which we owe to the vigorous and practised hand of Sir Richard Temple. If he had undertaken the whole book, and made it about one-third of its present length, we should really have had a more salient record of an interesting man.

BRIEFER MENTION.

The War of the Wenuses. By C. L. Graves and E. V. Lucas. (Arrowsmith.)

AS a general rule a parody is sorry reading, for the writer takes some pin's-head of peculiarity in his original and hammers at it with a sledge-hammer until we are weary. You might count the really amusing parodies on the fingers of one hand—two or three of Mr. Bret Harte's Condensed Novels, Mr. Burnand's Strapmore (his New Sandford and Merton was really an original work), and possibly Mr. Traill's Barbarous Britishers, the inversion of Mr. Grant Allen's British Barbarians.

Mr. C. L. Graves and Mr. E. V. Lucas have now perpetrated an outrage—this word is theirs—on Mr. H. G. Wells's War of the Worlds, and they call it The War of the Wenuses. It has many merits. It is short; it is funny; and the authors, having a keen sense of style, have stuck their pens into all the little idiosyncrasies of their victim. The idea is that the pale pink planet Venus is gradually in its orbit advancing sunward.

"That is to say, it is rapidly becoming too hot for clothes to be worn at all; and this, to the Wenuses, was so alarming a prospect that the immediate problem of life became the discovery of new quarters notable for a gentler climate and more copious fashions."

So the Wenuses invade the earth, descending, not as the Martians descended, in cylinders, but in crinolines, and armed not with heat-rays but with tea-trays. Compare this passage with the original, one of many which the authors have gently tweaked into absurdity:

"Men like Quellen of Dresden watched the pale pink planet—it is odd, by the way, that for countless centuries Venus has been the star of Eve—evening by evening growing alternately paler and pinker than a literary agent, but failed to interpret the extraordinary phenomena, resembling a series of powder-puffs, which he observed issuing from the cardiac penumbra on this night of April 1st, 1902."

We will not give the joke away by describing what happened to the Wenuses when they reached the earth. And probably no one will enjoy it more than Mr. Wells himself, to whom the "outrage" is gracefully dedicated.

The Kingdom of the Yellow Robe. By Ernest Young. (Constable & Co.)

THIS is a very entertaining book. Mr. Young was attached for some years to the Education Department at Bangkok, and he describes the daily habits of the Siamese in minute detail. To write a dull book about Siam would tax even a dull man. The Siamese are at once so barbarous and so civilised that life in Bangkok is a series of contradictions in terms. It is a patchwork of native and borrowed customs; and the borrowing, be it noted, has been done from both more enlightened and less enlightened nations. The Siamese have taken serfdom from Cambodia, and blue-clothed policemen from London. They go to bed by the electric light and welcome the dawn with pagan gongs. They consume the ices of Italy and the opium of China. The Japanese rickshaw, the Indian gharry, and the English omnibus ply together in the streets, and, more rarely, the native buffalo cart mingles with the traffic. Stately edifices of brick rise near to wooden houses that can be demolished with a hatchet; and the presence of a railway station does not exclude the absence of a fire-brigade. The wealthy divide their houses into two parts: into the front part they put tables, chairs, pianos, and pictures, and serve European foods; in the less accessible part they live as natives. In brief, the Siamese, having plenty of time on their hands, take what they please and leave what they please in the banquet of life. The bliss of ignorance and the benefits of knowledge—both are theirs. And they are so happy in their selection, so satisfied with a policy which looks like organised caprice! With railway whistles screeching in their ears, and the arc light flashing in their eyes, this incorrigible people believes that the tides are caused by a great crab emerging from his hole and then retreating to it, and that the winds are the voices of the babies who have departed this life. Superstition regulates every notable act of life; marriage, justice, education, and civil functions are accompanied by tissues of flummery. And all this supernatural element is the mere overflow from the temple where the yellow-robed priest flouts his own rules and neglects even his white elephants.

St. Botolph, Aldgate: The Story of a City Parish. By A. G. B. Atkinson, M.A. (Grant Richards.)

MR. ATKINSON is attached, as curate, to the church of St. Botolph, Aldgate, and he is to be thanked for this careful compilation of the history of his parish. His book has not much colour or vivacity; and illustrations, which would have been a compensation, are lacking. But Mr. Atkinson has spared no labour to amass and arrange his facts; and much of his information is based on the record books and other original documents of the parish. Nevertheless the most interesting of Mr. Atkinson's chapters is the least recondite. In it we are told the precise terms on which Chaucer held the house above Aldgate gate. We have glimpses of old Houndsditch, which is said to owe its name to the fact that the hounds belonging to the City hunt were kept here in the fifteenth century. The old clothes element which still lingers in Petticoat-lane was a feature of the street in the seventeenth century. "Where got'st thou this coat?" says one of Ben Jonson's characters; and the answer is, "Of a Houndsditch man, sir, one of the devil's near kinsmen." The original gate was pulled down in 1606, and many coins of Trajan and Diocletian were found under it. The new gate was decorated with figures of Love and Charity; and again Ben Jonson supplies a curiously vivid touch. In "The Silent Woman," Mr. Atkinson points out, we have this speech:

"Many things that seem foul in the doing do please, done. You see gilders will not work but enclosed. How long did the canvas hang before Aldgate? Were the people suffered to see the City's Love and Charity while they were rude stone, before they were painted and burnished?"

It will be understood that most of Mr. Atkinson's pages are occupied with the history of the Church, its chantries, monuments, and plate, and with extracts from the vestry books. Space permits us only to vouch for Mr. Atkinson's industry. We note that he defends Defoe as being a more accurate chronicler of the Plague than it is the fashion to describe him. Defoe's account of the ravages of the Plague in Aldgate is supported by the registers of burial and other records. St. Botolph's, Aldgate, escaped the Fire narrowly. Six shillings were "paid for carrying away the pish books when ye fyre was in ye citty."

The New England Country, and

A Book of Country, Clouds, and Sunshine.
By Clifton Johnson. (Kegan Paul.)

ALL who wish to know the character of New England rural life may consult these prettily printed and well-illustrated volumes. Mr. Johnson loves New England, and has photographed most of it. He is steeped in its history, and solicitous for its agricultural future. Even at this distance we can deplore, with Mr. Johnston, the desertion of the villages, which he says has gone on steadily for fifty years. Old homesteads that might have vied with the one which inspired Whittier's Snow-bound are left to desultory tenants or actual decay. It is the old story of the magnetism of great cities.

Two Thousand Miles of Wandering in the Border Country, Lakeland, and Ribblesdale.
By Edmund Bogg. (York: Sampson.)

MR. BOGG, who is a member of the Yorkshire Archaeological Society and an enthusiastic pedestrian, has produced a gossipy guide-book to the districts named above. The book is much too large to be carried about; and, unfortunately, it is not very beautiful on the table. Many of the sketches are too poor for words; and the ornamental headings to the chapters are cheap and inappropriate. But Mr. Bogg knows his subject, and his book can be used with profit.

The Angler's Library: Pike and Perch. By Alfred Jardine. (Laurence & Bullen.)

A THOROUGHLY practical handbook by an expert in pike and perch fishing. Mr. Jardine is pleasantly cynical about weights, and seems to endorse Frank Buckland's dictum that from the days of Gesner downwards more lies have been told about the pike than any other fish in the world.

The Every-Day Book of Natural History: Animals and Plants. By James Cundall. Revised and part re-written by Edward Step. (Jarrold & Sons.)

THIS book is not much to our taste. It pleased people when it came from the late Mr. Cundall's hands, many years ago. But it is too old-fashioned, too indefinite. Under the date May 17 we are invited to consider the May Fly; and we read: "It would be well for those whose occupations during the day are of a sedentary character to snatch more frequent, even though brief, respites from the cares," &c., &c. There is too much of this kind of thing, and too many merely pretty quotations from the poets.

The Year's Music, 1898. Edited by A. C. R. Carter. (J. S. Virtue & Co.)

THIS publication has reached its third annual issue, and has made good its claim to be a useful book of reference. The arrangement of the book is now put upon a permanent and orderly basis. A survey of the music of last year is followed by a list of London musical institutions and examining bodies with particulars as to admission, scholarships, &c.; this, by a detailed review of the music of 1897, classified as orchestral, chamber, choral, ballad, &c., including Sunday concerts. Grand and light opera receive separate sections. An obituary and a directory of vocalists are included.

THE "CENTURY SCIENCE" SERIES.—Pasteur.
By Percy Frankland and Mrs. Percy Frankland. (Cassell & Co.)

THIS is a well-written life of the great bacteriologist. It is not generally known that Louis Pasteur had a natural gift of drawing, and that his real career began with a deliberate abandonment of the brush. At the little town of Arbois they still show clever portraits which young Pasteur painted in his youth. The stories of Pasteur's first enthusiasm for chemistry, his early researches into the phenomena of fermentation, his brilliant pronouncements on the subject of spontaneous generation, which he showed to be "une chimère," his suggestions for the improvement of beer, and his studies of infectious diseases preparatory to the great triumph of his life, are told clearly, and even entertainingly, in this volume. No will the reader who seeks information of the inner working of the Pasteur Institut be disappointed. Here Pasteur becomes majestic and touching figure, sleepless in his search for truth. In the corridor where his quick, slightly shuffling step was heard, the footfalls of his disciple now echo round his marble tomb, bearing the inscription: "Ici repose Pasteur."

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

PARIS.

By EMILE ZOLA.

This work, translated by Mr. E. A. Vizetelly, completes the "Trilogy of the Three Cities." Here the adventures and experiences of Abbé Pierre Froment are brought to a conclusion. Not a guide-book to Paris, we are told: it paints the city's social life, its rich and poor, its scandals and crimes, its work and its pleasures. "And journalism," adds the translator, "Parisian journalism, is flagellated, shown as it really is—if just a few well-conducted organs be excepted—that is, venal and impudent, mendacious, and even filthy." (Chatto & Windus. 488 pp.)

SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW.

By FRANCIS GRIBBLE.

Mr. Gribble calls this a story of the stage life and the real life. The heroine is Angela Clifton, who begins as a strolling player and rises to fame, and one of the heroes is Hector Burgoyne, who does likewise. There are other men prominent enough to be called heroes too, but it is with Hector and Angela that the novel is mainly concerned: their game of love at the outset, their separate careers, and their reunion over the fact of love at the end. Stage life and the acting temperament are examined, and now and then one has hints of a portrait. (A. D. Innes. 341 pp. 6s.)

WOMAN AND THE SHADOW.

By ARABELLA KENEALY.

Lady Kershaw takes, as a society pupil, Millicent, the wealthy daughter of a dealer in furniture polish. Millicent at once falls in love with Major Kershaw, the son, while Major Kershaw, the son, is in love with the Lady Alicia, who is a bad but beautiful lot. Seeing that unless money is forthcoming Alicia will make trouble for her husband, Millicent arranges that her own income shall be theirs, while she herself takes a situation as governess. Alicia subsequently elopes with another, the major gets a divorce, and after a decent interval Millicent becomes his wife. (Hutchinson & Co. 395 pp. 6s.)

A VOYAGE OF CONSOLATION.

By SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN.

The voyage of consolation is a voyage to England undertaken by Miss Mamie Wicks after the collapse of her engagement with Mr. Arthur Greenleaf Page. She telephones to "Poppa": "My engagement to Mr. Page is broken. Do you get me? What do you suggest?" And Poppa coughs from New York to Chicago, and says: "Go abroad. Always done. Paris, Venice, Florence, Rome, and the other places. I'll stand in." And Poppa, Momma, and Mamie sail by the Germanic. We travel amusedly with them through Europe, and are well prepared for the happy ending when it comes. (Methuen. 318 pp. 6s.)

THE SCOURGE-STICK.

By MRS. CAMPBELL PRAED.

This story is cast in the form of a woman's autobiography. She exclaims: "Why should not I, Esther Zamiel, scribbler, write yet another book: my last book: my reallest book: which shall be my own story?" In the course of the first two pages the narrator calls herself Esther Zamiel, Esther Vassal, and Esther Vrintz—but promises to explain this "triple personality." The story is that of a woman passionately devoted to art in various forms. It is highly emotional, and quite unlike Mrs. Praed's former books. (William Heinemann. 367 pp. 6s.)

THE HOUSE OF MYSTERY.

By RICHARD MARSH.

Mr. Marsh may be depended on for red-hot melodrama. The outspiece of this story shows us two faultlessly dressed men in mid-air, falling in deadly grip of each other from a balcony. Being added to "see page 300," we referred to it in the hope that one of the falling men would prove to be the cad who turns up in Mrs.

Griffiths's type-writing office in the first chapter; but no. The book roars with incident and flames with adjectives. (F. V. White & Co. 312 pp. 6s.)

THE CHILD WHO WILL NEVER GROW OLD.

By KATE DOUGLAS KING.

Eight stories of child-life, by the author of Father Hilarion. Miss King has a power of pathos, and those that cry easily will cry much over this book. Among Miss King's heroes is a naughty little boy who writes: "I am glad I shall go to Hell when I die. I won't go to Heaven because Aunt Adelaide is going there. Damm Damm Damm Aunt Adelaide." Some of the stories appeared in Merrie England. (John Lane. 215 pp. 5s.)

WYNDHAM'S DAUGHTER.

By ANNIE S. SWAN.

A novel with a purpose. Let us quote the dedication and say no more: "Dedicated to those among my young sisters who are discontented with their lot, in the hope that the true record of Joyce Wyndham's experience may help them to take up with cheerfulness the duty which lies nearest." (Hutchinson & Co. 371 pp. 6s.)

THE PRINCE'S DIAMOND.

By EMERIC HULME-BEAMAN.

This story is told in the first person, and the narrator—"I, George Travers"—is a very perfect specimen of the "bounder." Picking up a diamond ring in Hyde Park, Travers appropriates it after three days' languid search through the Lost and Found columns of the papers. His possession of this ring produces a tissue of incidents of a wildly improbable character; and the vulgar city clerk finds himself whirled into society and taking a leading part in an intrigue relating to the fugitive King of Borastria. (Hutchinson & Co. 366 pp. 6s.)

HEARTS THAT ARE LIGHTEST.

By MONTI DE GOMARA.

When, in the course of these ineffably silly sketches of the men and women at the Hotel Belvedere, Mr. Gomara comes to the word "hope" he breaks off: "Oh, hope, sweet hope, what a blessing thou art to mankind!" When "sympathy" is mentioned: "Oh, sympathy, thou blessed angel spirit," and so on for a couple of pages. "Toil," says the author, "built the coral reefs and the Pyramids of Egypt"; unfortunately it also produced this volume. (Digby, Long & Co. 215 pp. 3s. 6d.)

ONE CROWDED HOUR.

By A. BERESFORD RYLEY.

This is the story of a foolish boy-and-girl marriage kept secret for some years. Meanwhile Chaddesley Corbet, having awakened to his folly, meets a woman worthy of his intelligent love, while Iona likewise meets a man worthy of her shallowness. The final arrangement between Chaddesley and Maude Ingleton mocks accepted morality and pleads its own. A strong story, undoubtedly. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 297 pp. 6s.)

JULIA'S CAPRICE.

By LEWIS SERGEANT.

Julia is unhappily—and doubtfully, as to legality—married to the Earl of Walcheren. Meeting with a raw, generous boy, Arthur Daubeny, she makes him fall madly in love with her, and the boy is horsewhipped by the Earl. This is the beginning of a story as episodic as Gil Blas. Julia and Daubeny meet later as theatrical débutante and manager; and again the Earl turns up, this time not with a horsewhip, but with proof of the legality of his marriage. A closely knit, not very elevating story. (Hurst & Blackett. 331 pp. 6s.)

THE SECRET OF A HOLLOW TREE.

By NAUNTON COVERTSIDE.

The author of this story says that its characters are portrayed from life, including the eccentric and violent Squire Matthews, on whose murder the "mystery" hangs. The desolate Welsh back-grounds, and the introduction of Matskalla, "the wisest woman of the Romani," as the leading agent in the discovery of the criminal, give colour to the story, and the element of love is, of course, not lacking. (Digby, Long & Co. 317 pp. 6s.)

THE DISASTER.

BY PAUL AND VICTOR MARGUERITE.

This story is a daily narrative of the first part of the Franco-German War, and it is also largely a character-study of Marshal Bazaine. But the translator, Mr. Frederic Lees, writes: "The Marguerites have not given us a book wholly devoted to military matters. . . . The hero's love for Anine, besides many other incidents and characters too numerous to mention, serve (!) to add brightness to a picture which might otherwise have been gloomy and monotonous." (Chatto & Windus. 415 pp. 6s.)

TRUE BLUE; OR, THE LASS THAT LOVED A SAILOR.

BY HERBERT RUSSELL.

A sailor lad falls in love, goes to sea, and returns to claim his "true blue" sweetheart: that is the story. "Tell me, Violet—I may call you Violet, mayn't I?—whether I may believe that you cherish any feelings of affection towards me": that is the style. (Chatto & Windus. 269 pp. 3s. 6d.)

AT THE SIGN OF THE GOLDEN HORN.

BY JOHN K. LEYS.

An exciting story, of the popular serial type, of virtue and villainy. The chapter headings are sufficient testimony: "Black Treachery," "Rogues in Council," "Do you Know a Man with a Scar on his Cheek?" "A Terrible Suspicion," "Trapped!" "The Hunchback," "Captain Winter Receives a Blow," "Three Telegrams." (George Newnes, Ltd. 287 pp. 3s. 6d.)

REVIEWS.

For the Religion. By Hamilton Drummond.
(Smith, Elder & Co.)

WE have three small bones (as people say) to pick with Mr. Drummond. Firstly, the title. Why, in the name of all that is brisk and ardent and romantic, should he call a story of courage and adventure, rapier thrusts and hard riding, love and battle, by so forbidding a name? True that Coligny's attempt to save his fellow Huguenots by shipping them to Florida is the theme; but there are a hundred more alluring ways of entitling such a history than For the Religion. If the book were not a good one, we should care nothing whether it had a repellent name or not; but it is most readable. Secondly, we object to the author's method of beginning his story. His first chapter is bravely headed: "Why Marcel rode post from Paris"; and we read it to discover why, and behold it is sheer prologue, and the romance proper is dated fifty and more years earlier. Thirdly, the person—Blaise de Bernauld—whom Mr. Drummond has chosen for his monthpiece is eighty years of age, and we are prejudiced against narrators so advanced in life. As it turns out, this octogenarian can tell a story as well as the youngest; but at the outset the reader is doubtful and afraid. Such is the press of romantic fiction now in circulation that an author who offers three such stumbling-blocks as Mr. Drummond does—the title, the false start, and the antiquity of the hero—is in danger of not being read at all. Hence our protests.

But the persevering reader will be rewarded. We have no hesitation in awarding For the Religion a place in the first rank of the historical novels of the day. It has blood, it has movement; the men are real; and the style has clarity, gravity. This scene, coming early in the book, gives the note:

"'See you,' said Jean Carsault, 'the Admiral has the iniquities of Rouen to avenge and every Huguenot in France to save. What think ye? Will not he and his fight? Guise has the King to win, the Queen to conquer, Coligny to humble, and power to gain. Will not he and his fight? Truly, yes.'

Up from the table he lifted Marcel's goblet of Burgundy, and flung its liquor in a huge red splash on the floor, so that rivulets and veins ran hither and thither until the sand swallowed them up.

'Blood will flow like that,' he said. 'Would to the Lord I might be there to draw the spigot wider!'

'Ay,' cried Marcel. 'But, man, that was good wine!'

'Ay,' answered back Jean Carsault sourly. 'But, man, it will be good blood!'

The story follows the fortunes of Coligny and the Protestants. The hero was at the battle of Dreux, and subsequently became one of the gallant company of gentlemen who crossed to Florida. The voyage and its adventures are described with spirit. Among the colonists was one Boisgrillet, a blusterer. Blaise de Bernauld was of Navarre, the only Navarrese on board; and one night in the cabin hot words arose, and Boisgrillet spake thus:

"Then the more need to look to ourselves. Who says Navarrese says Catholic; and who says Catholic says traitor—"

D'Armand swung round on his heel, and, with his palms on the edge of the table, leaned across to the other, his handsome face white and set in a mask of contempt.

'Who speaks?' he said: 'Burgundy or Boisgrillet? The wine or the man? Be that as it may, the man must answer for it. Now, hear me. Who says vapourer, blusterer, and bully says Boisgrillet; and who says Boisgrillet says liar. Is that plain enough, Monsieur Boisgrillet, or do you need this to clear your brain?' and before those by could catch his arm he had flung a splash of wine full into the other's face.

To do Boisgrillet justice he was no coward, and was ever ready enough with his steel. A faint heart could have no place in a band of Coligny's choosing.

Before the wine had dripped from his beard to the table he was on his feet with his hand gripping for his sword-hilt. But Dessaix and Myault, on either side of them, were as quick as he, and had their blades crossed between the disputants."

The massacre of Coligny's gentlemen by Spaniards is the crowning feature of the story. It is very grim, very absorbing, with fine heroic touches. Mr. Drummond certainly understands the composition of the lion-hearted. Altogether a very excellent book.

* * * *

The Fight for the Crown. By W. E. Norris.
(Seeley & Co.)

THE case of Mr. Norris is a sad one of degeneration complicated by success. Several years ago he used to turn out sound and amusing novels. We recollect that an enthusiastic critic called him "a second Thackeray," and we ourselves read My Friend Jim twice with pleasure. And now we close with a sigh The Fight for the Crown, in which plot and matter are thin to transparency and padding is liberal to prodigality, and we fail to find any excuse for the triviality of it all. Mr. Norris's danger always lay on the side of verbiage and the elaboration of petty detail: he has become almost laughable in his solemn mistaking of molehills for mountains. The plot, such as it is, is coldly furnished forth by the realities which long ago crowded the daily newspapers. There is no humour, little character-drawing, and less action. For these we are offered the drawing-room politics of the eighties, the empty babble of titled folk, and an intolerable deal of explanation. An undeniable gift for social satire has sunk to this:

"Lady Virginia Lethbridge was wont to speak in somewhat opprobrious terms of hunting and shooting men. Not, she would explain, that there was anything to be said against them during close time; on the contrary, they were then, taking them all round, perhaps the best class of man in existence. But while engaged in their favourite pursuits they ceased, according to her, to be of the slightest use for social purposes. Their conversation resolved itself into endless recitals of their own performances, which were frequently mendacious and always uninteresting; they were apt to drop asleep immediately after dinner, and became, generally, such unconscionable bores that there was no living in the house with them."

The story begins upon the steps of a club "at"—should it not be "in"—Dublin, shifts to the house of an oppressed landlord in Co. Kerry, jumps to Lady Virginia Lethbridge's house in London, and there, in more senses than one, it sticks. The Irish landlord has a beautiful daughter, who goes on the stage, and is run after by a fast nobleman, and a virtuous but lukewarm Home Ruler. The young lady accepts indifferent morals and the politics dear to Mr. Norris, and the Home Ruler swallows his annoyance and marries someone else. The whole proceeding is spun out to nearly four hundred pages.

Entombed in Flesh. By Michael Henry Dziewicki.
(Blackwood.)

THE notion of this book seems to us an original one. Lucifer proposes a wager to Phantasto, a free Intelligence, servant neither to God nor to Lucifer himself. Lucifer intends to tempt a pure maiden soul to sin: he suggests that Phantasto should incarnate himself in a mortal body, and do his best to save her. A fortnight the struggle shall endure. If Phantasto fails, he is to remain enslaved on earth so long as Lucifer chooses. Phantasto agrees, and enters the body of an exposed medium, just dead from humiliation. He fails in saving the maiden, who, indeed, falls in love with him, and offers to become his mistress. Then follows a campaign to force Lucifer to surrender his bargain. This is finally accomplished by the eloquent preaching of that Christianity which Phantasto has by his own will excluded himself from, and the released Intelligence escapes to his own sphere, leaving the hideous corpse of the medium behind.

It is a good idea, but Mr. Dziewicki does not carry it out. At the psychology of the thing, the curious blend of human and supernatural in the mental workings of the incarnate Phantasto, he has worked thoughtfully and ingeniously: he almost makes it appear plausible; but he has not the power of clothing his conceptions in, what are after all necessary to a novel, appropriate words. He writes English as if he had learnt to do so, and perhaps we are justified in inferring from his patronymic that this is actually the case. Phantasto's great lecture on Christianity is thus described:

"It was a grand lecture—such a lecture as no one had expected, as no one had ever heard before, or was likely to hear again but from the same lips. Could it even be called a lecture?—in very truth it was an oration. Its eloquence and pathos melted the hardest hearts and brought tears to the driest eyes. No one could resist it. There were passages of high poetry; there were coruscations of magnificent anger; there were even at times, to relieve the tension, sparkles of humour and beams of wit. And then once more the torrent would pour forth, sweeping all before it, until the hearers bowed their heads, ashamed to think how little they had hitherto understood what Christ was, what their Christianity ought to be."

Description as well as lecture is presumably meant to be eloquent, but the fervour fails to translate itself; it leaves us unmoved.

ANTHOLOGIES IN LITTLE.

II.—ROBERT HERRICK.

THE life of Robert Herrick is a budget of paradoxes. The most bogan of English singers, he was yet a parson, and not in name merely: for, though he put off his cassock during the Commonwealth, in verse at least he has frequently enough his devout hood. He will sing not alone of "May-poles, hock-carts, wassails, wakes," and of "bridegrooms, brides," and "cleanly wantonness," but also "of heaven, and hope to have it after all." Nor is Herrick's religious Muse to be looked at askance even in a century that knew new Donne and Crashaw, Herbert and Vaughan. Again, he whom we think of most readily as a pastoral poet in reality hated the country. His home was always "loathed Devonshire" to him, and at any moment he gladly turned from curds and junkets to re-visit his beloved London and to toy with the "silken bodice" or "tempestuous petticoat" of some courtly and perfumed Julia. The fact is, that the pastoral note inserted itself into the song of Herrick almost by accident. Essentially, as becomed a scholar and a wit, he modelled himself on the classics. Some of his pigrams came from Martial, and flowers were for him less things of delight than subjects for neat myths of metamorphosis, after the manner of Ovid. But he was overflowing with song, had he "importunate lyric opulence" more than any Englishman of his day, perhaps more than any Englishman before or since; and when more pleasing themes fell short, his sunny, genial temper drummed into music the life around him. But not with an eye very persistently on the object. Reminiscences of Roman country life mingle irresistibly with his English revels; and, like Mr. Wipling, the vicar of Dean Prior talks of "cowslips in your Devon combes," forgetting that cowslips have never been a Devonshire flower.

London was in his heart and in his blood. His father was a goldsmith in Cheapside. Robert seems to have been at Westminster School, and to have passed thence to St. John's College at Cambridge. Afterwards he lived on his wits in London and sought the patronage of the great. Charles the First gave him a little living at Dean Prior in Devonshire, and Herrick wrote a "Farewell unto Poetrie" and also a "Farewell unto Sack." Both poetry and sack, however, remained dear to him through life. He passed, you may be sure, pretty idle clerical days with his elderly servant, Prudence Baldwin, preaching perhaps when the fit took him, more often writing epigrams on his parishioners, or composing dainty verses upon the charms of his many, and probably imaginary, mistresses. His ejection under the Commonwealth was doubtless inevitable, and he took it with a light heart; seeking in the garb of a layman whatever fun the godly had left in London. He remained unmarried, printed the "Hesperides," and returned to Dean Prior at the Restoration, to die in the odour of sanctity a dozen years later:

"TO THE VIRGINS, TO MAKE MUCH OF TIME.

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may:
Old Time is still a-flying,
And this same flower that smiles to-day
To-morrow will be dying.
The glorious lamp of heaven, the sun,
The higher he's a-getting,
The sooner will his race be run,
And nearer he's to setting.
That age is best which is the first,
When youth and blood are warmer;
But, being spent, the worse, and worst
Times will succeed the former.
Then be not coy, but use your time,
And while ye may, go marry:
For, having lost but once your prime,
You may for ever tarry."

"TO MEADOWS.

Ye have been fresh and green,
Ye have been fill'd with flowers,
And ye the walks have been
Where maids have spent their hours.
You have beheld how they
With wicker arks did come
To kiss and bear away
The richer cowslips home.
You've heard them sweetly sing,
And seen them in a round:
Each virgin like a spring,
With honeysuckles crown'd.
But now we see none here
Whose silvery feet did tread,
And with dishevell'd hair
Adorn'd this smoother mead.
Like unthrifths, having spent
Your stock and needy grown,
Y'are left here to lament
Your poor estates, alone."

"TO DAFFODILS.

Fair daffodils, we weep to see
You haste away so soon:
As yet the early-rising sun
Has not attain'd his noon.
Stay, stay,
Until the hastening day
Has run
But to the evensong,
And, having prayed together, we
Will go with you along.
We have short time to stay as you,
We have as short a spring,
As quick a growth to meet decay,
As you, or anything.
We die,
As your hours do, and dry
Away,
Like to the summer's rain,
Or as the pearls of morning's dew,
Ne'er to be found again."

"THE MAD MAID'S SONG.

Good-morrow to the day so fair,
 Good-morning, sir, to you;
 Good-morrow to mine own torn hair,
 Bedabbled with the dew.

Good-morning to this primrose too,
 Good-morrow to each maid
 That will with flowers the tomb bestrew
 Wherein my love is laid.

Ah! woe is me, woe, woe is me!
 Alack and well-a-day!
 For pity, sir, find out that bee
 Which bore my love away.

I'll seek him in your bonnet brave,
 I'll seek him in your eyes;
 Nay, now I think they've made his grave
 I th' bed of strawberries.

I'll seek him there: I know ere this
 The cold, cold earth doth shake him,
 But I will go, or send a kiss
 By you, sir, to awake him.

Pray, hurt him not, though he be dead!
 He knows well who do love him,
 And who with green turfs rear his head,
 And who do rudely move him.

He's soft and tender (pray take heed).
 With bands of cowslips bind him,
 And bring him home! But 'tis decreed
 That I shall never find him."

"THE NIGHT PIECE: TO JULIA.

Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee,
 The shooting stars attend thee,
 And the elves also,
 Whose little eyes glow
 Like the sparks of fire, befriend thee!

No Will-o'-th'-Wisp mislight thee,
 Nor snake nor slow-worm bite thee;
 But on, on thy way
 Not making a stay,
 Since ghost there's none to affright thee!

Let not the dark thee cumber:
 What though the moon does slumber?
 The stars of the night
 Will lend thee their light,
 Like tapers clear without number.

Then, Julia, let me woo thee,
 Thus, thus to come unto me!
 And when I shall meet
 Thy silv'ry feet,
 My soul I'll pour into thee."

"TO ELECTRA.

I dare not ask a kiss,
 I dare not beg a smile,
 Lest, having that or this,
 I might grow proud the while.

No, no, the utmost share
 Of my desire shall be
 Only to kiss that air
 That lately kissed thee."

MR. GEORGE GISSING AT HOME.

A WRITER in the American Book-Buyer furnishes some very interesting, if not altogether unfamiliar facts, respecting the career of Mr. George Gissing, a novelist who is now rapidly "coming to his own."

Gissing's life story (says the Book-Buyer) is as dreary and merciless as some of the incidents in his stories. He is a York-shireman, having been born in Wakefield thirty-nine years ago. His father was a man of learning and sound business sense, and held many important county offices: He died in 1870, leaving young Gissing, but thirteen years old, alone in the world. He received the ordinary education of the middle-class English boy, stopping short of the university. He early evinced an aptitude for languages, mastering Greek, Latin, Spanish, German, and Italian; the last three he speaks and writes fluently. He spent a year among the peasants of Italy, and he smiles at the suggestion of Continental travelling being expensive.

He commenced life as a teacher in a private school; but, being endowed with a plethora of nerves and a paucity of patience, he made but little success. He kept at it, however, for two years, when, in desperation, he gave up the struggle and "packed his grip" for London, with a few guineas in pocket. It was the old instance of the frying-pan and the fire over again. He aimed at some more hopeful career than teaching, and resolved to take up literature.

His life in London was a long, heart-grinding fight against poverty. For more than two years he did not know from what quarter the next meal was coming. He could not support himself by literature alone, and was compelled at times to act as a private tutor. He destroyed quantities of MS. in the strenuous struggle for style. Disappointments were many; but he felt that he had the proper material in him, could he but give expression to it. Living in the cheapest quarter of London, his outlook on life was one of gloom. His own life and that about him furnished endless themes for stories.

After enumerating Mr. Gissing's novels, and indicating their inspiration, the writer continues: "London furnishes Mr. Gissing with material, but the novelist himself lives at Epsom, twelve miles from the metropolis whose heart he has probed so relentlessly. He lives in a small house, and his workshop is the tiniest room imaginable, plainly furnished, with a few books. 'It amuses me,' he has said, 'whenever I see illustrated in a magazine the studies of well-known authors—many of them my friends. Unto that I shall never attain. I shall die as I have lived—a Bohemian.'

His life is one of seclusion. He has no part in ordinary social affairs. He does not desire it. In precarious health, he is a hard worker, and turns out a tremendous amount of 'copy' each year. Once a week he goes to London, where he rambles about the lower districts in search of characters and incidents. His sole amusement is an occasional visit to the British Museum. At present he is hard at work on a new novel of London life, of life among the middle classes, the life he knows so well, which he portrays so graphically, but without the faintest touch of the poetic imagination, without which no book can live. He is also working on some sketches for the magazines, and has tried his hand at biography. Mr. Gissing ought to succeed in this form of literary work; for he has positive genius for marshalling facts and seizing the vital and essential. But he looks upon such work as mere recreation. His heart is in his novels, and he strives seriously and with a purpose. He believes implicitly that his bitter, unpalatable message will bear sweet fruit in the regeneration of the lower classes of society. He does not preach reform, he suggests no remedy; but he paints in raw pigments a picture of pain and patience, and a selfish, sordid, coward world that complains and cries and shirks its burdens. To his credit be it said that he never complained of his own task, self-imposed, nor questioned the reward, more concerned with his work than it be honest than with another man's estimate of it."

"I have only one rule to work by," he said one day, after a conversation on the methods of literary production: "it is simply to write of what I know best. This principle is vital, the life of literature. If my stories are pessimistic, it is only because my life is such. My environments were sordid, the people were sordid, and my work is but a reflection of it all. Sadness? My books are full of it. The world is full of it. Show me the masterpieces of art, literature, or music, and I shall show you creations palpitating with sadness. Ah, the toil for the 'weib und kind,' how it fashions men's lives! Mine has been but the common lot. No use saying much about it. I find my little happiness in the fields in summer, and am content when I think of the toiling millions, twelve miles away, who never see a blue sky, or feel the earth yield beneath their feet."

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1898.

No. 1348, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| If obtained of a News-vendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .              | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . . . .                | 0 15 3  | 6 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

IN a little shilling volume bound in hedge-sparrow blue are to be found those of Mr. Alfred Austin's Songs of England which he considers most expressive of the best variety of patriotism. The collection is dedicated to Lord Wolseley. By "England," says the Laureate, in his brief preface, "for which no other appellation equally comprehensive and convenient has yet been discovered, it is intended to indicate not only Great Britain and Ireland, but Canada, Australia, South Africa, India, and every pot of earth where men feel an instantaneous thrill of imperial kinship at the very sound of the Name that lends its title to the penning poem in the present volume."

To the reader who wishes to be glowingly stimulated, Mr. Austin's lyrics and sonnets are not, perhaps, to be recommended; but for those who like quiet and gentlemanly patriotism, not dissimilar from that of a village rector on Trafalgar Day, allied to a pleasant felicity of rhyme, the little book would be adequate and refreshing. But we think it amusing that the collection should have been prepared by its author at Florence.

MR. J. Y. W. MACALISTER has made the following interesting statement: "I venture to think that many of your readers will be glad to learn that Mr. Clemens (Mark Twain) has already achieved the task he set himself and discharged the load of debt which the unfortunate collapse of the firm of Messrs. Charles L. Webster & Co. placed upon his shoulders, or rather I should say which he took upon his shoulders. His legal representative has recently addressed the following letter to the Publishers' Weekly, New York: 'February 7, 1898. Dear Sirs,—Mr. Clemens has placed in my hands the necessary funds and has instructed me to pay you the balance of your claim against the late firm of C. L. Webster & Company at the time of its failure. . . .—Yours truly, K. I. HARRISON.' " Mr. MacAlister adds that, with the exception of the historical case of Sir Walter Scott, he does not think there is to be found in the records of literature anything quite equal to Mark Twain's conduct in insisting upon taking on himself the debts of the company when he might under limited liability provisions have left the creditors to satisfy themselves with a mere dividend.

MARK TWAIN'S success in carrying out the great project to which he dedicated himself on the failure of his business will be matter for satisfaction to all his very numerous friends. He has worked hard to amass the necessary funds, and has done so single-handed, and we are proud to congratulate him on a noble achievement. It will be remembered that early last year, when sick at heart and in poor health, Mark Twain accepted the offer of a public subscription which was made by a New York paper. But in the course of a few days that acceptance was revoked, and he determined that not from without but from within should the debt be paid. Honour be to him for such a decision.

AT this point it is interesting again to read the letter which Mark Twain wrote concerning his intentions towards the firm's creditors soon after he had begun his lecture tour:

"It has been reported that I sacrificed, for the benefit of the creditors, the property of the publishing firm whose financial backer I was, and that I am now lecturing for my own benefit. This is an error. I intend the lectures, as well as the property, for the creditors. The law recognises no mortgage on a man's brain; and a merchant, who has given up all he has, may take advantage of the laws of insolvency and start free again for himself. But I am not a business man, and honour is a harder master than the law. It cannot compromise for less than a hundred cents on the dollar, and its debts never outlaw. I had a two-thirds interest in the publishing firm, whose capital I furnished. If the firm had prospered I should have expected to collect two-thirds of the profits. As it is, I expect to pay all the debts. My partner has no resources, and I do not look for assistance from him. By far the largest single creditor of this firm is my wife, whose contributions in cash, from her private means, have nearly equalled the claims of all the others combined. She has taken nothing. On the contrary, she has helped, and intends to help, me to satisfy the obligations due to the rest. It is my intention to ask my creditors to accept that as a legal discharge, and trust to my honour to pay the other 50 per cent. as fast as I can earn it. From my reception thus far on my lecturing tour, I am confident that if I live I can pay off the last debt within four years, after which, at the age of sixty-four, I can make a fresh and unencumbered start in life. I am going to Australia, India, and South Africa, and next year I hope to make a tour of the great cities of the United States. I meant, when I began, to give my creditors all the benefit of this, but I begin to feel that I am gaining something from it too, and that my dividends, if not available for banking purposes, may be even more satisfactory than theirs."

Mark Twain has told us that his favourite motto is—"Be good, and you will be lonesome." He must be very lonesome now.

THE two books of Mr. Watts-Dunton which are placed to his credit in Who's Who both bear the date 1897. Considering that Mr. Watts-Dunton was born in 1836, and that these are times when every one rushes into print, this is a considerable achievement. But once having joined the vulgar publishing throng, Mr. Watts-Dunton seems to be steadily on the downward path. Two more books of his are now foreshadowed: a collection of his reviews and the romance Aylwin, which has been in type for more than twenty years. Whispers of the story have been echoing in literary circles for longer than most of us can remember. Now we are to have the book itself. If good wine improves by keeping, why not Aylwin?

IN the current number of Cosmopolis will be found a poem on the French Revolution, by Mr. Meredith, which we can recommend to any one in need of hard reading.

AN American gentleman who is dissatisfied with Mr. Kipling's "Recessional" has re-written it: which is, we suppose, a logical enough proceeding. The poem is printed in a Boston paper with an introduction recommending it, but stating that it is not yet quite perfect: "For example, the ear is still shocked by the rhyming of 'dies' and 'sacrifice,' of 'loose' and 'use.' Then, too, the absurd contradiction is permitted to stand in the lines:

'Judge of the nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget.'

On the other hand, the poem gains strength by the avoidance of the double 'lest we forget' at the end of each verse and by the splendid terseness of the last line, as well as by the slight verbal corrections and by the omission of the pretentious 'Amen' at the close."

HERE are the two first stanzas of the revised "Recessional":

"God of our fathers, known of old,
Lord of our far-flung battle-line,
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget!

The echo of the tumult dies;
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands Thine ancient Sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget!"

Impudence could no further go.

AN action was recently brought by the University of Cambridge against Messrs. Blackie & Sons for infringement of copyright in respect of editions of Pope's Essay on Criticism and Milton's L'Allegro and Il Penseroso and Lycidas, edited by the Rev. Dr. Evans and published by Messrs. Blackie & Sons, which were considered by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press to infringe their copyright in editions of the same poems published in the Pitt Press Series and edited by Mr. A. S. West and Mr. A. W. Verity. The action has been settled by the withdrawal of the books objected to and the payment by Messrs. Blackie & Sons of the plaintiffs' costs; the plaintiffs waiving any claim to damages.

MESSRS. PATRICK GEDDES & COLLEAGUES will publish immediately a summary of the Dreyfus affair from the trial of Dreyfus to that of Zola. The brochure has been prepared by a French writer who is intimately acquainted with the whole subject, and whose impartiality and good faith are vouched for in a preface by Prof. Geddes.

MEANWHILE Mr. John Lane has been even more enterprising; and before us lies a little crimson shilling volume, entitled Zola's Letters to France. It is the merest brochure—but forty-five pages—yet most persons who have followed the trial will be glad to possess it; for herein is the germ of the whole indictment of the novelist. Mr. Lane gives us the four letters—to the Youth of France, to France, to M. Felix Faure, and the Minister of War. Two of the translations are those which were made for the Jewish Chronicle, two are new, and Mr. L. F. Austin provides a preface.

HERE is a fine passage from the "Letter to the Youth of France":

"Oh, young men, young men! remember, I entreat, the great work which awaits you. You are the workmen of the future; it is you who will determine the character of the twentieth century; it is you who, we earnestly hope, will solve the problems of truth and equity that the dying century propounds. We, the old, the elder men, hand on to you the formidable results of our investigations, many contradictions, much, perhaps, which is obscure, but certainly the most strenuous effort which ever century made to reach the light, the most faithful and solidly based documents, and the very foundations of the vast edifice of Science, which you must continue to build up for your own honour and happiness. All we ask of you is to be more generous, more emancipated of mind than were we; to leave us behind in your love of a wholesome life, in your ardour for work, in the fecundity through which man and the earth will produce at length an overflowing harvest of joy beneath the glorious sunshine. And we should make way for you, fraternally, glad to go and take our rest after the day's toil in the sound sleep of death, if we knew that you would carry on our work and realise our dreams."

THE late Lord Tennyson's elder brother, Mr. Frederick Tennyson, whose death this week we regret to have to record, was a poet in a true but limited sense, and a poet for whose work Lord Tennyson seems to have had a more than merely brotherly admiration. In the present Lord Tennyson's memoir of his father we read:

"My father said of Frederick's poems that 'they were organ-tones echoing among the mountains,' and quoted a fine sonnet of his:

POETIC HAPPINESS.

There is a fountain, to whose flowery side
By diverse ways the children of the earth

Run day and night, athirst to measure forth Its pure sweet waters, health and wealth and pride,
Power clad in arms, and wisdom argus-eyed;
But One apart from all is seen to stand,
And take up in the hollow of his hand
What to their golden vessels is denied, Baffling their utmost reach. He, born and nursed
In the glad sound and freshness of the place,
Drinks momentarily its dew, and feels no thirst;
And sorrows for that troop as it returns
Thro' the waste wilderness with empty arms."

AN erroneous impression is abroad that Mr. W. E. Henley is the editor of The Outlook. Mr. Henley, whose health has not been good lately, retired from the New Review on account chiefly of the pressure of other literary work. The editor of The Outlook is Mr. Percy A. Hurd.

THE representations of the "Antigone" of Sophocles, in the open-air Greek Theatre at Bradford College, Berks, will take place this year, the usual interval of three years having elapsed since the production of the "Alcestis" of Euripides. The two plays named, with the "Agamemnon" of Æschylus, are played as a series—e.g., the "Agamemnon" in 1892; the "Alcestis" in 1895; the "Antigone" in 1898. The auditorium has been much enlarged, and will now hold more than 2,000 people. All the conditions of the Attic drama will be reproduced, including the ancient Greek music and the ancient instruments (masks alone being excluded). The dates fixed are: Monday, June 20; Thursday, June 23; Saturday, June 25.

MR. F. R. BENSON'S special revival at Stratford-on-Avon during the Shakespearian Memorial Performances this year will be "Antony and Cleopatra," five performances of which will be given, three on the evenings of April 14, 15, and 18; and two on Shakespeare's birthday, April 23.

DR. MARTINEAU, who was a schoolfellow of George Borrow in Norwich, has been sending some recollections of the author of Lavengro to a contributor of the Eastern Daily Press. He writes: "Borrow used to gather about him three or four favourite schoolfellows, and with a sheet of paper and book on his knee invent and tell a story, making rapid little pictures of each dramatis persona that came upon the stage. The plot was woven and spread out with much ingenuity, and the characters were various and well discriminated. But two of them were sure to turn up in every tale—the Devil and the Pope—and the working of the drama invariably had the same issue, the utter ruin and disgrace of these two potentates. I have often thought that there was a presage here of the mission which produced The Bible in Spain." It is to be hoped that Prof. Knapp, Borrow's biographer, has had access to Dr. Martineau's memory.

THE fashion of writing ballades and rondeaux, although it is in disfavour in London, still persists at the Universities. From the "Ballade of the Mutability of Human Affairs," in the Granta, we take the first stanza:

"Wild briar's a blossom that fades,
(Like litmus with strong alkalis);
And the love of terrestrial maids
Is tender—too tender—to prize,
In a minute it droops and it dies,
And happiness apills at the brink;
Love opens the window and flies—
But Smith's is a permanent Ink."

There is no reason why these old French forms should have become unpopular. For the light, occasional poet the ballade is as suitable as to the serious one is the sonnet. Yet the sonnet perseveres while the ballade, the rondeau, the roundel, the triolet, and the villanelle are discredited. As a matter of fact, the ballade should be encouraged, since by sheer necessity of rhyme the poet is compelled to say something, which otherwise he might not do.

MRS. CRAIGIE has been engaged for some time on an historical romance, the subject of which is the story of Loerine and Gwendolene. It will probably appear first as a serial in Harper's Magazine.

LAST year was published for private circulation a collection of extracts from the journals of the late William Cory, the author of Ionica. It was a wise book, better worth the attention of the reading public than hundreds of volumes that have wide popularity. Now comes from Mr. Frowde, of the Clarendon Press, a pamphlet consisting of Hints to Eton Masters, also printed from one of Mr. Cory's journals, dated 1862. The little book might well find its way into the hands of schoolmasters generally, for it is rich in good sense most admirably expressed. Here are a few passages:

"If you wish your pupils to become acquainted with the existence of old books, like Cowper's poems, Boswell, Faerie Queene, or the like, take the book out of your shelves, and leave it on the table carelessly when the boys come to 'private business.' Some of them are sure to look at it, turn over the pages, and get a notion of its character; and you can very easily reclaim their attention. Remember what ennui you suffered yourself in those years, and take pity on the scholarlike lad, who, having learnt his Thucydides, has to sit still for an hour, to be bored by the fumbling and croaking of a weak brother."

"In reading Horace I take care that boys hear how Pope and Byron imitated him.

I like to quote passages written by disinterested people, not living, on the classics, which attest their admiration of Sophocles, Virgil, or Tacitus.

I like to say of a passage in Virgil: 'This was quoted by Chatham, Pitt, or Peel,' as the case may be. Then I come down to the 'moist earth,' by asking some one for the date of Chatham, Pitt, or Peel.

Much of this is meant in pure benevolence, to deliver the poor lads from the weariness of their dead language lessons. I am quite aware that, if they came into school to read Othello, or Tom Jones, or Southey's Life of Nelson, they would be equally bored when the novelty was over. I do not wish to throw over the immortals of Greece and Rome, but to deck their images with fresh wreaths made in other gardens."

IN these days of wide-awake bookseller and "Prices Current" it is not often that book bought for a shilling can be sold for eighteen sovereigns. This occurred, however, in the case of a copy of Shelley's privately printed edition of Queen Mab, which was bought the other day from a poor widow for a shilling, and has realised 18 in London.

A COPY of the second issue of The Literary Year Book reaches us from Mr. George Allen. The editor for 1898 is Mr. Joseph Jacobs. Mr. Afalo having too much to do in connexion with the Encyclopædia of Sport—which seems a sufficient reason. The best we can say of the book is that it is a shade better than last year; but it is still a very weak production. And such a work, to justify its existence, must be decisive, authoritative.

THIS, for example, is not the kind of sentence required in the editorial summary of the year's literature: "Lochinvar must make the publishers who signed contracts with Mr. Crockett up to 1904 feel inclined to whistle for their money." And, again, "One cannot say that either [The Spoils of Lynnton and What Maisie Knew] reach the height of Princess Casamassima." Again, "Neither Mr. G. S. Street nor Mr. Barry can be called altogether new men." The driver of fat oxen need not be himself fat, but we expect the editor of a Literary Year Book to write grammar.

WHEN it is wrong, for instance, to say of Mr. Coulson Kernahan: "He has acted as a sort of arbiter elegantiarum, a kind of M.C. to the lighter muse, collaborating with the late Mr. Locker Thompson in producing an Anthology of Les Vers de Société." As a matter of fact, the real work of "production" was accomplished more than a score of years before the arrival of Mr. Kernahan at Rowfant. Again, Mr. Morrison wrote The Child of the Jago; but we credit him with The Child of the Jago, which suggests a sequel to "Othello"; and Mr. Benjamin Swift appears as Mr. Benjamin Smith. These are, perhaps, trivial mistakes, but they go to prove that the book wants thorough overhauling and re-binding. As it stands it is neither one thing nor the other.

Now and then we receive a book which we can only label eccentric. Such a book is The Leading Aisles. It bears no author's name, but is full of its author's personality. The preface takes the form of a letter from the author to the publisher, by which it appears that the former is a disciple of Thomas Carlyle. "Nothing," he says, "has appeared since that one immense deliverance of the spirit, nothing but the usual negative recurrence of journalistic periodicity." To proclaim anew Carlyle's clothes philosophy seems to be the author's object. As for his manner of doing it:

The method employed is that of organic growth, the form used is that of metaphor, for metaphor seemed the best of the three ways, metaphor, parable, allegory, to make the things which are unseen, through the seen, seen." We have tried very hard to see the unseen through the seen pages of this book, but in vain.

THE most we can discover is that the author goes to Florence, Rome, Greece, and St. Andrews, and rhapsodises or declaims in a Carlylean patois. St. Andrews, its university, and its golf links are sketched in several chaotic pages. At a Wednesday "at home" we read:

"The professors, one by one, come in; first him, high-shouldered son of mountainous Argyll, and sniffing, wonders how much Greek among these clods is spread; then 'Jovial Jim' appears, shakes hands, proceeds to intersect a pink sponge sandwich, and hand round the tea. 'Andy' is not here; the unknown still has way with him, the known too well. Here comes at last the literateur, no mere professor he, and sits him centre in a couch admiring dames close murmuring around. A buzz of chatter and then songs; soon hunters of the Fifeshire hounds arrive; their meet is done. The shining-faced and easy-mannered throng dispels the student swarm, who seek their hats and sticks, and home. Tea-pots await them in their street-side bunks, and scones and ginger-bread, the horsehair-covered fireside chair, a pot of good tobacco, and the pipe, ready for use, among the books upon the chiffonier or whatnot wonder of veneer, varnish, and glue."

If this is metaphor we fail to understand it; if it is description we cannot admire it. But in neither case do we blush for our "negative recurrence of journalistic periodicity."

THE humorous paper with which New York was to have been tickled—L'Enfant Terrible—is not, it seems, to be, after all.

LEWIS CARROLL is prominent in the new Cornhill. One reference, made by the gentleman who supplies "Pages from a Private Diary," bears upon Lewis Carroll's objection to be addressed by his proper name, and runs as follows: "I once committed the indiscretion of confounding the humorist with the don, and was properly snubbed. An Oxford bookseller had told me that Mr. D. was extremely nice about the printing of his 'Alices,' and that every copy not up to his ideal was withheld from sale and given to the poor. I, coveting some of these for our village children, and being in Oxford, sent a note to Christ Church asking if I had been accurately informed, and received in reply the following printed circular, which is now among my most cherished possessions:

"Mr. C. L. Dodgson is so frequently addressed by strangers on the quite unauthorised assumption that he claims, or at any rate acknowledges, the authorship of books not published under his name, that he has found it necessary to print this, once for all, as an answer to all such applications.

He neither claims nor acknowledges any connexion with any 'pseudonym,' or with any book not published under his own name. Christ Church, Oxford."

Cornhill also has a Lewis Carroll article by the Rev. T. B. Strong, of Christ Church, in which incidentally we find these quotations from an 1865 pamphlet on "The Dynamics of a Parti-cle," which gives an account of the election that ended in Mr. Gladstone's retirement from the representation of the University of Oxford. Here are some definitions:

I. Plain superficiality is the character of a speech, in which any two points being taken, the speaker is found to lie wholly with regard to those two points.

III. When a Proctor, meeting another Proctor, makes the votes on one side equal to those on the other, the feeling entertained by each side is called Right Anger.

IV. When two parties, coming together, feel a Right Anger, each is said to be complementary to the other (though, strictly speaking, this is very seldom the case).

V. Obtuse Anger is that which is greater than Right Anger.

In the same article the fact is noted that "Chortle" is included in Dr. Murray's New English Dictionary.

FINALLY, let us quote a passage from the letter concerning her friendship with Lewis Carroll, which Mrs. Hargreaves, the original "Alice," has sent to the St. James's Gazette:

"Most of Mr. Dodgson's stories were told to us on river expeditions to Nuneham, or Godstow, near Oxford. My eldest sister, now Mrs. Skene, was 'Prima,' mentioned in the poem at the beginning of Alice's Adventures in Wonderland. I was 'Secunda,' and 'Tertia' was my sister Edith. I believe the beginning of 'Alice' was told one summer afternoon when the sun was so burning that we had landed in the meadows down the river, deserting the boat to take refuge in the only bit of shade to be found, which was under a new-made hayrick. Here from all three came the old petition of 'Tell us a story'—and so began the ever-delightful tale. Sometimes to tease us—and perhaps being really tired—Mr. Dodgson would stop suddenly and say, 'And that's all till next time.' 'Ah, but it is next time,' would be the exclamation from all three; and after some persuasion the story would start afresh. Another day, perhaps, the story would begin in the boat, and Mr. Dodgson, in the middle of telling a thrilling adventure, would pretend to go fast asleep, to our great dismay. I have often thought, with gratitude and wonder, of the unvarying kindness and good nature shown to us. Alice's adventures were first written down in answer to my teasing wish to possess the story in book form."

THE second number of The Home University substantiates the claim of the promoters to originality. Their idea is evidently to be purely suggestive and stimulative. They regard with horror anything like a course of teaching. The result is a budget of educational matter which provokes a smile by its variety. The schoolmaster is turned Ariel: he "divides and burns in many places." Thus we have a story of Keats as a "Medical-student Poet," a page of facts about Anne Boleyn, a polyglot conversation on "Treachery for Burns," articles on "The Jordan and its Lakes," and "Cato the Elder," a "Lecture on Shells," a slab of Coleridge's "Table Talk," "Botanical Notes for February," some loose "Memoranda as to Milton's Life," and "The Present Condition of Greece." After these items there seems to be something a little superfluous about "Extracts Relating to Education" and "A General Conversation." The editor would probably meet objectors by adapting a speech of Dr. Johnson's: "Sir, I have found you a large number of facts, I am not obliged to find you a digestion."

ONE article, not named above, deserves notice, because it reveals a new type of bookbuyer. The writer bid sixteen shillings for a bundle of books at a book sale because it contained Count Segur's Memoirs: "These I wanted, and I thought that the other sixty-four books could not be dear." We should think not, but they might be troublesome. The buyer found in this bundle an odd volume of Sterne's Sentimental Journey, the Satires of Juvenal and Persius in a beautiful volume, but in type too small for his sight, an ecclesiastical history from "Moses to Luther," a Hindoo and Mohammedan almanac for 1784, a Life of Cromwell, a volume of Lardner, two of Plutarch's "Lives," a book of French proverbs, a manual of Domestic Medicine, and two books—Falconer's Shipwreck and Somerville's Chace—of which the purchaser says naively "there is nothing to show that they are not first editions." One would enjoy inspecting a library formed on these Gargantuan principles.

For the benefit of Frenchmen visiting this country a little Dictionnaire de Slang has been prepared by M. Legras (Garnier Frères), who, when he was living in London, he tells us, noted down in alphabetical order all the colloquial expressions he heard. The results of his industry should assist his countrymen to some strikingly idiomatic English. Some of the translations are amusing: "All there—Actif et bien portant"; "I'll upset your apple-cart—Je vas te flanquer ta carcasse à l'envers"; "Gush—Enthousiasme sentimental pour un objet sans importance"; "Plank down (money, &c.)—Même sens que fork out"; "Swig—Boire à grands coups."

A SERIES of articles on Famous Houses of Bath, from the pen of Mr. J. F. Meehan, is appearing in The Beacon, a new journal of "political and general information" circulating in the Frome division of Somersetshire. The articles are accompanied by illustrations, and we hope that the series will ultimately be put into book form. Bath's historical and literary associations will bear such a revival.

FULHAM has had its historians and topographers, notably Faulkner. Faulkner's Fulham is a familiar term in the second-hand book lists; and it has received the cachet of the accessible bookshelves round the walls of the British Museum Reading Room. But it is evident that Faulkner only tickled the soil which Mr. Charles James Feret has been excavating deeply for some years. Mr. Feret's Fulham Old and New will occupy three quarto volumes, and will be fully illustrated. The Court Rolls of the Manor of Fulham, untouched by Faulkner, have been searched by Mr. Feret. The parish books, which extend back to 1625, and the church registers, which go back to 1675, have been explored. The history will take its shape from a tour, starting from Old Fulham Bridge, built in 1729, and the Ferry, which is as old as Magna Carta. Then High-street, Burlington-road, and Church-row will be reviewed; and the church will be entered. The King's-road, Parson's-green, Fulham-road, Walham-green, Gibbs-green, and other neighbourhoods are fully dealt with. The work will be issued by the Leadenhall Press.

THE sudden death of Prof. H. C. Banister having left his widow in straitened circumstances, some friends of the late Professor have determined to endeavour to raise funds for the purchase of an annuity for her. Dr. Vincent, 9, Berners-street, London, W., has kindly consented to act as hon. secretary, and Principal Cummings as hon. treasurer.

A LITTLE pamphlet describing a translation of Von Vondel's Lucifer by an American writer reaches us. We find in it a passage which we cannot refrain from quoting simply by way of contrast to, and relief from, the ordinary literary gossip paragraph studded with familiar names:

"Last year in Holland I met Pol de Mont, whose best verses are collected under the title Iris. I fancy he is not well known yet out of his own land, but I may assure you that he is in the true succession of the great Dutch poets of our century—of Bilderdijk, Helmers, Tollens, Da Costa, Bogaers, Beets, Ten Kate.

It was in Rotterdam; we drank coffee; I asked him:

'For what do you thank God most?'

'That I have escaped from the influence of Vader Cats.'

'Bravo!' said I. 'You are the first Dutch writer (prose or verse) who has escaped it in 300 long Dutch years.'

He thanked me by reciting his 'Ryzende Sterren.'

A COMEDIETTA from the pen of Mr. Barrie will form one of the features of the performance for the benefit of Miss Nellie Farren at Drury Lane. The title is "Platonic Friendship."

THE Queen has just accepted specially bound copies of Volumes I., II., and III. of the New English Dictionary, published and dedicated to Her Majesty by the University of Oxford, and has sent to the Delegates of the Press, through Sir Arthur Bigge, her "best thanks for these first volumes of their magnificent work."

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. have arranged to publish a cheap edition, in monthly volumes at 3s. 6d., of some of R. L. Stevenson's books, which are not now accessible in popular form. The following is the sequence of publication: March, Kidnapped; April, Catriona; May, The Wrecker; June, Island Nights' Entertainments.

IN his new story, The Incidental Bishop, Mr. Grant Allen makes a fresh departure. The scene is laid in the South Seas, and depicts the struggles of an innocent man tossed into a position which he has no right to occupy.

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON will publish at once Mr. Pett Ridge's new novel, Three Women and Mr. Frank Cardwell. The hero coming to London meets three women, with whom his after career is intimately associated.

REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED.

JANE AUSTEN.

INSTEAD of apologising, as I feel inclined to, for mixing two things so diverse as shooting and criticism, I perhaps ought rather to plume myself on falling in with a popular fashion. However, my part on this occasion is only that of one who reports a conversation. It is sometimes my fortune at a week-end to be one of four men who have discovered a cosy old inn on the Norfolk coast where there are no golf-links, some flight shooting, abundance of rabbits to pop at, a plain good dinner to be had, and a comfortable oak room in which to spend the evening. For the sake of convenience I will call my friends Smith, Brown, and Robinson.

Smith is from the city, but his hale figure and ruddy complexion, a frank eye, and a bearing dignified to the verge of swagger, give him the look of an ideal county squire. He is getting to be elderly, and is Conservative in his Radicalism—i.e., for I detest quibbling verbal paradoxes, he carries with him that enthusiasm and zeal for "the species" which belonged to the great Liberal movement when Bright was in his prime and Gladstone "going great guns." But he is out of touch with the new ideas, and will be the old-fashioned Radical until the end of the chapter. Now the discerning reader, for whom alone I write, will need no further account of his literary tastes. He knows at once that Smith accepts George Eliot as an oracle, is learned in Browning, believes in John Stuart Mill and Macaulay, Carlyle and Ruskin, loves George Macdonald, has a kindly eye to Mrs. Humphry Ward, and hopes for much from Mr. William Watson.

Brown is a flourishing journalist, and, therefore, entirely destitute alike of definite opinion and principle. Mark you, however, this is to be understood in a Pickwickian sense. We all love Brown and would not for worlds speak ill of him, only he would never dream of applying any test beyond his immediate liking to literature. Not being a critic, he actually does recreate himself with books and derive pleasure from reading them. But he draws a Jesuitical distinction between his public and his private conscience. In private he would toss aside the most popular novel of the day and vow it to be utter trash if it did not amuse him, but in the journal he would judge of the attention due to the same book purely by the vogue of the author. It is his business to keep a finger on the public pulse and allot space accordingly.

Robinson is an ardent young student busily employed in devouring literature wholesale, and would be very outspoken and enthusiastic but for the fashion now prevalent of curbing and restraining the stronger emotions. It was he that started the talk about Jane Austen. He has brought with him the pretty edition of Pride and Prejudice, with Professor Saintsbury's introduction and Hugh Thomson's illustra-ions. No sooner was dinner past than he sank into an easy chair, forgot both the room and the company, and scarcely looked up till a sigh of pleasure announced that Elizabeth was safely married to Mr. Darcy. Meanwhile we others had been content to sit and do nothing except smoke and play with a few literary and other journals carried with us from town. After being out in a keen air from before dawn till dusk without eating anything, and then coming in to an early and heartily enjoyed dinner, we were in a reposeful rather than an energetic mood. But it was pleasant to watch how the youngster enjoyed his novel. When it was finished he laid the book down and tried to look as though it had not carried him off his feet.

"If Jane Austen had been a minor poet they could not have dressed her up more prettily," said the journalist, taking up the volume. "Good print, good paper, a book pleasant to handle, Thomson's racy pictures, an introduction by Saintsbury; what could be better?"

"I wish," said the student, "that Saintsbury had not invented so horrible a word as 'Janites,' and 'Austenians' is nearly as bad; 'Swiftian' and 'eminently quinterential'—what expressions for a Professor of Literature to apply to a writer of so pure and simple a style as hers!"

"Now," remarked Smith, "I have always liked Saintsbury just because he doesn't pick and choose his words. The fault of the superfine critics is that they get into the way of dandling and fondling little bits of language (verba antiqua et sonantia) and forgetting that after all it is the large expression that tells. I do not read many novels, but I confess to liking best those that give dramatic situations and strong passions that carry me quite out of myself. Jane Austen has not had this effect. Here is a bread-and-butter world full of bits of fables and masters that never seem to be fully grown up."

"I would not go so far as that," said the journalist, "but I'd never think of putting a book of Jane Austen's in my carpet bag when going a journey. She is a highly respectable classic, of course, but Jane Eyre is more to my taste. It has amused me to see you so intent on her, Rob."

"Oh, you could not like her, of course not," replied the student; "I've seen you get through two books of an evening—you skip from the first quarrel to the duel, skim the love scenes, fasten on the murder and the force, and just bestow a glance on the end. It is scarcely fair even to your favourite, Stanley Weyman, and it will never do with Pride and Prejudice, where the work is all so fine and delicate. For remember her own description: 'The little bit (two inches wide) of ivory on which I work with so fine a brush as produces little effect after much labour.'"

The journalist laughed, "It's a superstition of you superior chaps to believe in Jane Austen and be down on the journalist; but you will find us pressmen manage to get very near the bull's-eye after all."

"Oh, yes, awfully near!" retorted the student. "The journalists showed uncommon discernment when they praised up to the skies Evelina, and The Castle of Otranto and The Mysteries of Udolpho, The Scottish Chiefs and The Wild Irish Girl, and quite neglected a real genius."

"It was her own blame," said the journalist. "Like a certain critic, 'she courted obscurity as others seek fame, lived in seclusion at Clevedon and Bath, had no literary friends, and read such books as Military Police and Institutions of the British Empire. Did she expect to be both outside and inside at once? Besides, the rule is romance before domesticity, and Mrs. Radcliffe held the platform."

"The fact is," retorted the student, "that writers for the press have no independent judgment. They only endorse the opinions of others, and never 'go nap' on genius till it is substantially recognised. Jane Austen, up to the time of her death, had cleared about seven hundred pounds from her novels. Had the sum been ten or twenty times as much, and her work several degrees worse, the papers would have been full of her."

While the conversation was proceeding Smith had kept turning over the leaves of Pride and Prejudice, evidently engaged on the illustrations. "How do you like Hugh Thomson's pictures?" asked the journalist.

"Pretty well," he replied; "not extravagantly though. The horses are the best; he has the eye of a humorist for a horse, each has a separate character. I rather like the dresses, too, they help one to realise what genteel society was like at the turn of the century. Yes; they are much better than the wretched pictures usually thought good enough for novels. I like the apothecary, the postman, and most of those that express whimsicality; but how silly and weak are the broader caricatures—that, for instance," pointing to a group of officers. "For my own part," he added, "if I admired Jane Austen as much as Robinson does I would have an edition without any introductory essays (I admire Mr. Saintsbury's writing, but prefer it in a book by itself), with no pictures, and certainly without that," and he put his finger on the artist's dedication of the illustrations to Mr. Comyns Carr.

"The question is one of taste," replied the student, "and I in measure agree with you. Some novelists are easy to illustrate. Dickens, for instance, describes only strongly marked types with unmistakable physical characteristics—you can realise them. But Jane Austen, with her delicate lights and shades, cannot be treated so. Who could draw a satisfactory picture of Elizabeth Bennet, the most charming heroine in fiction?"

"Rather a strong expression that, Rob," said the journalist. "I thought you would have left superlatives to us rough, plain-spoken pressmen. Why don't you put a 'perhaps' or 'in my poor opinion,' or 'by some considered' before your adjective?"

"I used the word deliberately," replied the student; "if you consider the grace, elasticity, spirit, and vitality with which Jane Austen presents Elizabeth, you must admit her equal is not to be found out of Shakespeare."

"What about Diana Vernon?" asked the journalist, and then, "Gad, what an idea for a symposium: Who is the finest woman in modern fiction?"

"I like Di," said the student, "but Scott did not take her through her paces as well as Lizzie is taken. She is not shown in as many different moods and tempers. She is too perfect. It was the way of Scott. All his heroines—Catherine and Rowena, Miss Wardour and Jeanie Deans—are all fine but spotless. Elizabeth has a thousand faults just peering up, acts the part of wise-acre at first to the point of folly, is often blind, pert, audacious, imprudent; and yet how splendidly she comes out of it all! Alive to the very tips of her fingers, difficult to win, but as impetuous and tender as Juliet when she is won."

"It does my heart good to see that youth is still capable of enthusiasm," said the journalist; "but, my dear chap, after another twenty years, when I hope to see you a portly husband and father who has ceased to think much of heroines either in fact or fiction, your ideals will be completely changed. You will like much better to read about Mrs. Norris saving three-quarters of a yard of baize out of the stage-curtain, and Fanny Price will be more interesting to you than Elizabeth."

"Not a bit of it," stoutly rejoined the student. "Mrs. Norris is quite interesting to me now, but I hope I shall always retain vigour and health enough to prefer Pride and Prejudice to Mansfield Park, the work of a young, ardent, fresh imagination, to that of a mind even more keen and clever, but stricken by disease. If ever Jane Austen approaches the morbid it is in that long-drawn-out story of the repressed love of Fanny Price for her cousin Edmund—it has all round it an aroma of the sick-room. Better by far is the world of dances and parties, of coaching and walking and riding in the earlier book."

"It's a very narrow world," objected the journalist, who loved to tease his companion and make him talk. "It is bounded on one side by the six hundred a year, or whatever the income was, of Mr. Collins, and on the other by the ten thousand a year of Mr. Darcy. The poor are only supernumeraries. A bit of genteel eighteenth century, my boy, overlapping into the nineteenth, a mere chronicle of small beer, misses 'going out' and intriguing to 'get settled,' bread-and-butter passions, laboured nothings: all that after Burns, too, and in the time of Crabb! the old convention not a touch of the new. That was exactly what you were saying, Smith, was it not?"

Smith is a very exact man, with a clear and deliberate style of thinking. "You never thrash a point out thoroughly," he complained on being appealed to. "I have been asking myself why I care so little for Jane Austen, though my opinion counts for nothing, since both of you know much more about fiction and derive more pleasure from it than I do. Still, it seems to me that in the best novels the blazonry, as one may call it, is as important as the story. The actual adventures of Don Quixote are less to me than the author's picture of Spain and satire of knight-errantry; the scrapes and love affairs of Tom Jones are not so interesting as their setting in a vivid representation of the manners of the time. Scott understood this well. He was never content with a mere love story, but put in all he knew—historic scenes, familiar characters, antiquarianism, atmosphere of the time, its religions, controversy, literature. He omitted nothing that would tell, nothing that could widen his appeal. George Eliot had her purpose. Thackeray in Esmond, his greatest success, relied upon the historical representation. Well, now Jane Austen is most curious and detailed in her minute incidents and showing of character, but has she got the blazonry, the secondary interest?"

"You might apply the criticism to Shakespeare," exclaimed the student; "it is not for environment, but for human nature pure and simple that we read him. And, at any rate, Jane Austen, though too much of an artist to emphasise the fact, gives a very vivid picture of English manners as they were just on the eve of steam and electricity. If it is confined to one grade of society, that was the grade she knew. But what I claim for her most is that she was really the ultimate flower and consummate perfection of feminine art. You compare her, Mr. Collins, for instance, with Sir John Falstaff. Shakespeare has drawn his man in bold, forcible, striking lines, such as a woman would be mad to imitate; Jane Austen, on her bit of ivory, works you out with a hundred delicate touches, and in fine, faint colours a figure quite as perfect in its way, though the work of a miniature painter is not to be classed with that of a Rubens. Take other female novelists, however, living or dead, from George Eliot downwards, and you will find they fail precisely because they do not appreciate the limitations of sex. There are things they can do better than men, there are things they cannot do—or have never done—at all. Jane Austen knew and worked within the limits of her sex, and, as far as she goes, is perfect; that is, if you judge by her best, which, in my opinion, at least, is Pride and Prejudice, a beautifully proportioned, sunshiny, and well contrived story, written with the finest ease and simplicity, yet full of wit, satire, and go. It is the feminine counterpart of Tom Jones, for Jane had no little of the tranquil aloofness, the mental detachment, the exquisite humour of Fielding. Mr. Goldwin Smith, indeed, says her master is Richardson, but probably he had Mansfield Park in his mind, where she is a deal too French and morbid."

"You are judging her from one book," said the journalist, "and even it, if I may trust my recollection, is not perfect. There is an old woman—Lady de Bourgh—in it who is caricatured too broadly for amusement, and Sir William Lucas gets close to the borders of extravaganza, while the young men are all creatures for melodrama, villain and hero alike. One could pick out the same faults in Emma, which I rather prefer."

Here Smith broke in again. "I raised one point, now I will put another. Jane Austen in her lifetime made, you say, seven hundred pounds out of her novels; how much has been earned since? How much that her heirs and assignees never got a penny of? I have just bought ground and built a flour-mill. That will be handed from father to son as long as the law endures; if they let it they will get rent, but Jane Austen embarked her capital—her time and energy—in a novel. Her greatest vogue came when her copyright was expiring. Any publisher who likes can make money out of it. Speaking as a business man, I say it is an unfair arrangement. A publisher gave ten pounds for the MS. of Northanger Abbey, and kept it five years locked up in a drawer, afraid to incur the expense of printing it. Why should his successors enjoy the monetary return for Jane Austen's brains? If they did anything for the less fortunate authors it would be different. As it is they might very justly be asked to pay a small royalty on all reprinted books, the copyright of which has run out, and the funds might go to the establishment of a writer's pension fund, such as banks and large houses of business have. What do you say to that?" and he turned to me.

I had been listening and smoking my pipe in a silence so usual that my companions are used to it. Now, however, I roused myself and prepared to give a masterly summing up of the argument, but "Hush," said the journalist, and even as he spoke the clock chimed ten. We have made it a rule in these excursions to forbid the discussion of any serious subject in the merry hour that comes before eleven, which is our bedtime, and at that moment the landlord himself punctually brought in a certain tray. He drinks our health in an old-fashioned way, and as soon as he goes we lapse back into sport and laughter and boyhood, so that before you know where you are the chimes break forth again and to bed we go. P.

SHAKESPEARE FOR AMATEURS.

A FEW weeks ago, in some remarks on "Julius Cæsar" as at present rendered at Her Majesty's, I ventured to suggest that the modern professional actor was unequal to the task of playing Shakespeare, and that he should leave interpretation to amateurs. This view was suggested, in part at least, by a comparison of "Julius Cæsar" as given by the O.U.D.S. at Oxford in 1889, and the same play as given by Mr. Tree in the present year of grace. Therefore, when I heard that the same Oxford University Dramatic Society had decided this year to present "Romeo and Juliet," I determined to go up and see how that play, too often mangled by the professional actor, fared at the hands of the amateur.

There are probably some among my readers whose good or bad fortune it was to see Sir Henry Irving's Romeo many years ago. I cannot speak of that performance, for, alas! I was not present at it. Let me turn to a more recent Romeo which I saw more than once—Mr. Forbes Robertson's. It was careful and dignified and impressive, and half a dozen other things. Mr. Robertson spoke his verse, as he always does, with taste and ability. The mounting of the piece was sumptuous, and Mrs. Campbell wore the most delightful frocks. But was it Shakespeare's Romeo? Obviously it was not. Here was a middle-aged gentleman, haggard with the cares of actor-management, trying to play a boy's part to a Juliet who, magnificent actress as she sometimes is, is certainly not hard on fourteen years of age despite the nurse's very precise assertions to that effect. I will admit that Mrs. Campbell looked charming. I will admit that in the South a girl of fourteen looks as old as a girl of eighteen with us. I will admit that the actress contrived at moments to infuse quite a remarkable youthfulness and sprightliness into her acting. But that Mr. Forbes Robertson should essay the hero's part in Shakespeare's wonderful tragedy of calf love was, as it seems to me, preposterous. Romeo is a sentimental lad. Mr. Robertson played him with the austere countenance of an elderly burgess weighted with many responsibilities and always wondering whether he could pay his gas bill. "Oh, Romeo, Romeo, wherefore art thou Romeo!" cried Mrs. Campbell in anguish, and I cried too. It is of course true that in the past accomplished veterans of the stage have constantly essayed the part, and that Romeo's blond wig has concealed many a grey hair, but that is no reason why they should continue to do so. Nowadays, when we ask for realism on the stage, the thing has become absurd. I still shudder as I recall the wan and wintry smile of disallusionment which Mr. Robertson forced himself to summon up when that funny dog Mercutio rallied him. It was a heroic effort to be boyish on his part, but it was not convincing.

It is interesting to turn from this to Mr. Frank Stevens's Romeo at Oxford. Mr. Stevens is not a heaven-sent genius. He is by no means the best actor that the O.U.D.S. has turned out. But he tackled Romeo as Romeo ought to be tackled, with the ardour of a school boy and the courage of a novice. His Romeo in parts was frankly bad, notably in the fifth act and, to a less extent, in the fourth. But it was a real attempt to play Shakespeare's hero as he is, the wayward, sentimental, petulant lad, who was many fathoms deep in love with Rosaline till he saw Juliet, and straightway fell in love with her; who had shed rivers of tears because Rosaline scorned him, and was quite ready by Act V. to kill himself for love of Juliet. This Romeo is all emotion and no knowledge. He falls in and out of love with the readiness of fanciful youth, and he believes terribly in the reality of his passion. Mr. Stevens played him in this spirit with admirable effect; he had the air of the handsome boy just coming to manhood, in itself no slight advantage to him over the average actor of forty. Again, he had the fresh voice of youth, not the worn, strained voice of the veteran player of twenty seasons. In the Balcony scene he was quite admirable; while in the great Bauishment scene in the friar's cell he was so courageous in his conception of how the part should be played that one could only regret that want of experience arred some of its effectiveness. Here was the real Romeo who at the thought of being banished from his newly married bride falls to a real schoolboy fit of "temper," the kind of "temper" which the grown man, as he feels compelled to deny himself. He rails on the Prince's mercy as cruelty, weeps tears of sheer rage, and grovels on the floor at the good friar's cell in the abandonment of childish grief. The conception of all this is as admirable, and if the execution was not quite equal to it, allowance must be made for the extreme difficulty of the rôle. A youthful actor who flings himself on to the floor on his face with a resounding thud is apt to provoke a smile in the hardened playgoer, but much may be forgiven him for tackling this scene with so courageous a disregard of difficulties which the professional actor would find it wiser to shirk.

Juliet is, of course, one of the most difficult parts in Shakespeare, and Miss Lillian Collen has achieved something very like a triumph in it. She was free from that detestable restlessness which is the bane of modern acting. She never fidgeted. She contrived to suggest, in her performance, the serious solemnity of childhood, with its moments of selfishness, its tenderness, its passionate anger at its wrongs. In the Balcony scene, and, indeed, in all her scenes with Romeo, she played with great skill, never obtruding herself upon the attention of the audience when it was not in her part to do so, a virtue rare in "leading ladies." There was a suggestion of Burne-Jones about her costumes and the arrangement of her hair, and her whole appearance was that of a girl Juliet, not a middle-aged lady dressed up for the part. The performance, in my opinion, was as a whole more interesting and much more intelligent than the same play as we are accustomed to see given in London.

ST. JOHN HANKIN.

PARIS LETTER.

WHEN I open a book and find men given to much sitting in the twilight and talking of their souls, with a certain imprecise and unintelligent eloquence, I know the writer to be young, and suspect him of a strain of Celtic blood. I wonder why Celtic genius undiluted generally spells the magnificent void? All these lovely words, whether in French or English, are captivating to the eye; and when Commonsense puts itself the question, What, in Heaven's name, does it all mean? we are answered by the inscrutable, fathomless, picturesque Celtic vague. Les Pierres qui Pleurent, by Henry Bourgerel, has all the defects, without in any considerable degree the qualities, of Celtic literature. There is too much talk of the soul; too much abuse of a woman, whom he qualifies as an animal without soul, a statue coarse, heavy, without physical grace. Mr. Meredith has said that a woman may be judged by her estimate of her sex. I judge the moral and intellectual fibre of a male writer by his estimate of women. When he abuses the I know him to be an hysterical "intellectual." M. Bourgerel, who defines Bourget as the Zola of the Faubourg, and Zola the Bourget of Batignolles, would do well to follow some mental treatment, and let his immortal soul alone.

But the Mercure de France gives us something else besides the Breton rhapsodies of Henry Bourgerel. It has republished from its magazine an excellent translation of Mr. Meredith's famous essay on Comedy by Henri d'Avray. This little masterpiece is quite at home in its lucid French dress, and consistently Meredithian, in spite of transposition.

Gyp's latest, Sportmanomanie, is dismal reading. Not even Gyp can hope to be witty and entertaining through ten volumes a year. All this cheerless twitter about horses, amazons and cavaliers, and the eternal Bois is so dull and stale! Gyp is hard on the vulgarity of the snob, the parvenu, on the social blunders of the Republican official; but there is something far more vulgar than their blunders of toilet, of table and drawing-room etiquette, and that is her insistence upon such trivialities. The Haute Finance as she contemptuously designates the Rothschilds, &c., could teach her many a needed lesson in real—not factitious—breeding, in delicacy, in taste and quiet culture. With a Christian aristocracy such as Gyp paints that of latter-day France—idle, frivolous, unconsciously ill-bred in its bitter criticism of the breeding of outsiders (always on matters that have no real significance whatever, such as the cut of garments and boots, exterior toune, peeling fruit), while condoning the vilest tone and morals in its own set, more injury is done to the country than the fancied evil of Semitic popularity. Gyp is known to be a fierce anti-Semitic; but one would like to see her justify her abuse of the Haute Juiverie in Paris by pictures of the Noble Faubourg a little less atrociously smart, flippant, and depressingly trivial. At least, cannot the Faubourg be a shade more moral?

From Gyp to Marcel Prévost is a leap. Gyp remains faithful to the old tradition that a Frenchwoman, whatever her morals, can charm. Her object may be to shock us, but she wishes us all the same to cry out disapproval in the same breath "What a delicious little sinner!" And, to do us justice, this was our criticism of the earlier bright books. But M. Prévost has unhappily no such object. To charm us is his very last pre-occupation. In one of his new volumes of tales, Le Mariage de Julienne, he makes his heroine exclaim that men are worth much more than women because they embark upon the waters of matrimony with far nobler sentiments. Certainly, if the heroines of M. Prévost could for a single instant be taken as average specimens of the half of France which furnishes us with such admirable examples of wife and mother, it is not Julienne, but the whole world that might fitly cry out in exasperated contempt that the lowest form of blackguard civilisation has yet invented was still better than the Frenchwoman, whether maid or wife. The mystery to the foreigner, who has lived long in France, and who has intimate relations with scores and scores of Frenchwomen of all ages, and has opportunity enough to esteem them, with all their charming qualities, at their full value, is where writers like Marcel Prévost obtain their atrocious models. But the mystery I perceive to be equally great for Frenchmen and Frenchwomen themselves. I have never met a single one who could explain it to me. Perhaps M. Prévost is not aware of the profound pain he causes so large a portion of his compatriots. French girls are not inevitably common, obscene, vulgarly cynical and smart, without delicacy of mind, of instinct, of sentiment, all pre-occupied with a single thought, which they express in their diaries with an indecency that leaves the least credulous of their bloom of innocence abashed and awed. Among modern girls, in France perhaps more even than elsewhere, are pure and lovely souls to be found, opening flowers of every radiant gift, sensibilities as exquisite as one could wish. M. Prévost is no recluse. Surely in society he sometimes meets a French woman who is a lady, who is well-bred and charming, who is pure and simple, and who possesses such an old-fashioned organ as a heart.

Henri Rabusson, in his Petit Cahier Bleu, seems to be more fortunate. He has actually discovered that a French girl can fall in love in spite of her modern cynicism and fast manner, though it must be admitted her choice does not commend itself to fastidious readers.

Mlle. Blaze de Bury has published a book of studies of "Ladies of yesterday and today." The book reads as a bad translation from a tongue never meant to please. It is mercilessly pedantic, flourishing in the reader's face, like a shower of stones, all sorts of inappropriate pseudo-philosophic terms: émotif, affectif, &c. Was it with the intention of pleasing the female sovereigns of Europe that Mlle. de Bury wrote three insignificant essays on the Queens of England, of Italy, and the ex-Empress of Germany? One would expect to read such articles in a woman's fashion paper, but not in a French volume. It is well to praise queens, but one would wish for matter less stale, told, above all, in better French. Here is a specimen of perfectly untranslatable French, for the reason that it is neither French nor English, nor any other language we have the habit of associating with syntax and polish:

"Et méchant le duc, ici, se le prouve à nouveau. Il laisse à celle-ci une irradiation passagère puis brusquement, comme toujours, c'est de la cour de France que vient le rappel, et sans transition l'isolement de Renée se fait plus sombre, par le souvenir de l'éphémère enchantement."

The first line is a positive miracle in monotony, which we read in sheer bewilderment. The volume may aptly be described as a gathering of platitudes, the result of second-rate learning, told without a notion of style, in foreign, rough, and scarcely intelligible French. One wonders for what public Mlle. Blaze de Bury caters, and with what intention such mediocre books are manufactured, since their object is neither to please nor to instruct.

H. L.

THE WEEK.

THE last of the late Mr. William Morris's series of romances is now given to the world. The story of The Sundering Flood is supposed to be told by a monk of the Black Canons at Abingdon, where he writes it down. For frontispiece we have a map of the city and of the river flowing from the "Great Mountains" far away. This map does more than explain the story; it creates an appetite for it, with its wastes, and its "Wood Masterless," and its suggestive names like "Longshaw" and "Grey Sisters" and "Bull Meads"; to say nothing of sites bearing such legends as "Here they fought the black Skimmers," or "Here Osberne first met with Steel-head," or "Where Osberne shot the Hart." We quote the following description of the Sundering Flood from the first of the sixty-six chapters:

"The biggest of dromonds and round-ships might fare along it, and oft they lay amid pleasant up-country places, with their yards all but touching the windows of the husbandman's stead, and their bowsprit thrusting forth amongst the middens, and the routing swine and querulous hens; and the uneasy lads and lasses sitting at high-mass of the Sunday in the grey village church would see the tall masts dimly amidst the painted saints of the aisle windows, and their minds would wander from the mass-hackled priest and the words and gestures of him, and see visions of far countries and outlandish folk, and some would be heart-smitten with that desire of wandering and looking on new things which so oft the sea-beat board and the wind-strained pine bear with them to the dwellings of the stay-at-homes: and to some it seemed as if, when they went from out the church, they should fall in with St. Thomas of India stepping over the gangway, and come to visit their uplandish Christmas and the Yule-feast of the field-abiders of mid-winter frost. And moreover, when the tide failed, and there was no longer a flood to bear the sea-going keels up-stream, and that was hard on an hundred miles from the sea, yet was this great river a noble and wide-spreading water, and the downlong stream thereof not so heavy nor so fierce but that the barges and lesser keels might well spread their sails when the south-west wind blew, and fare on without beating; or if the wind were fouled for them, they that were loth to reach from shore to shore might be tracked up by draught of horses and bullocks, and bear the wares of the merchants to many a cheaping."

THE Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff has just put forth another instalment of his Notes from a Diary. These Notes are a continuation of those published by the author a year ago. In the period covered by the present volumes the author was "a Member of Parliament, sometimes in and sometimes out of office, but always in close attendance on the service of the House of Commons, except during the spring of 1875, when I was travelling in India." These Notes, however, have little to do with the author's daily work; they are memoranda of meetings and greetings, of dinners and pleasant functions, of talks with men of note, and hearsay piquancies. They form a budget of anecdote and social portraiture, while scattered through the pages are many good stories and elegant trifles of wit. One of the first entries is this:

"April 11.—I never before heard the excellent riddle which was told me to-day: 'Quelle est la différence entre la panthère, le journaliste, et le Gouvernement? La panthère est tachetée par la nature. Le journaliste est acheté par le Gouvernement; et le Gouvernement est à jeter par la fenêtre.'"

THE new edition of Aubrey's Lives, issued by the Clarendon Press, is important. It is the most complete edition yet issued, and has been compiled directly from Aubrey's MSS. Only "absolute minutiae" are excluded. Aubrey's hobby was sketchy biography. Mr. Andrew Clark, who edits these two handsome volumes, sketches Aubrey in a few words:

"Aubrey was one of those eminently good-natured men who are very slothful in their own affairs, but spare no pains to work for a friend. He offered his help to Wood; and, when it was decided to include in Wood's book short notices of writers connected with Oxford, that help proved most valuable. Aubrey, through his family and family connexions, and by reason of his restless goings to and fro, had a wide circle of acquaintance among squires and parsons, lawyers and doctors, merchants and politicians, men of letters and persons of quality, both in town and country. He had been, until his estate was squandered, an extensive and curious buyer of books and MSS. And above all, being a gossip, he had used to the utmost those opportunities of inquiry about men and things which had been afforded him by societies—grave, like the Royal Society, and frivolous, as coffee-house gatherings and tavern clubs."

Mr. Clark has arranged the "Lives" in alphabetical order, and his excisions on the score of good taste have been only such as seemed urgently needful to be made.

WE have received the first volume of a publication which will be of great interest to Biblical students, although its size and cost make it a work for the library and the college rather than for the individual owner. This is the huge Dictionary of the Bible projected by Messrs. T. & T. Clark, of Edinburgh. The volume before us embraces A—Feasts, and extends to nearly nine hundred quarto pages printed in double column. The work is a Dictionary of the Old and New Testaments, and of the Old Testament Apocrypha, according to the Authorised and Revised English Versions. The work is rather a Biblical encyclopædia than a dictionary. It contains articles on the names of all Biblical persons and places, on the antiquities and archaeology of the Bible, on its ethnology, geology, and natural history, and on Biblical theology and ethics. The names of the authors are appended to all but very minor articles, and, in addition to the work of the editor, the Rev. James Hastings, the sheets have been revised by three scholars, whose names appear on the title-page.

THE "Modern Reader's Bible" now begins to embrace the New Testament; and we have the Gospels of St. Matthew, St. Mark, and The General Epistles included in one volume. The Gospel of St. Luke and The Acts of the Apostles will be published together; and the Pauline Epistles will be inserted in the Acts, each Epistle at the point of the narrative with which it is connected.

AN important political biography is the long promised Memoir of Major-General Sir Henry Creswicke Rawlinson by his brother, Mr. George Rawlinson. Sir Henry Rawlinson died in 1894, and the author thinks some apology is due for the late appearance of the book, but we cannot wish that such a work had been produced more hastily. Sir Henry Rawlinson was a soldier, a political agent, and an authority on Cuneiform inscriptions—in a word, a great Englishman, to whose hands national interests of immense importance were frequently committed. It is fitting that this Memoir should be introduced, as it is, by an appreciation of Sir Henry Rawlinson from the pen of Lord Roberts.

THE series of short histories of the Literatures of the World which is proceeding under Mr. Gosse's editorship is continued this week by the addition of a History of Italian Literature by Dr. Richard Garnett. The work contains many illustrative metrical translations by Miss Ellen Clerke, and by the author.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE BOOKLESS EAST-END.

VIEWS OF THE EAST LONDON CLERGY.

LAST week we showed that the East-End of London, as judged by the great artery which connects Aldgate with Stratford is without a single good bookseller's shop. The best provision of books on this route which is four miles long, is made by the second-hand book barrows in the High street, Whitechapel, close to the City. Beyond these barrows our representative found few second-hand books, and no new books other than poor non-copyright work mixed up with toys and second-hand clock or competing at a disadvantage with the halfpenny comic press. This did not seem a rational state of things, and it was decided to ask a few East-End clergymen for the views on the subject. These have been kindly supplied; and the communication which we print below will, we think, be read with interest.

THE Rev. Marmaduke Hare writes from the Rectory, Bow:

"Books are too expensive a luxury for East-End residents. Life is, besides, too much of a drive with all classes to allow much time for reading. Clergy of the East-End spend much less than their brethren in other neighbourhoods, for both the above reasons; but public libraries are well patronised, and a large proportion of useful books is taken out than in the West-End. Yet I believe a discount bookseller would find a good trade."

THE Rev. G. Barnes, of St Barnabas Church, Grove-road, E., writes:

"I think the absence of bookshops in the East End is due mainly to the fact that so many of the people work in the City, and purchase their books there of the discount book-sellers."

MR. BARNES is in agreement with the Rev. J. Mahomed, chaplain of London Hospital, who sends us the following succinct reply to our inquiry:

"I am afraid your remarks are true, but I would point out: (1) That many schools and guilds have lending libraries, and that not only the children read the books; (2) the nurses of this hospital have an excellent library or about 2,500 volumes; (3) the patients' library has 2,000 volumes, and is constantly renewed; (4) that we are very near the City, with its great number of bookshops; (5) that a very large proportion of the East End goes to work in the City daily."

THE Rev. F. H. Dinnis, Vicar of St. Peter's Church, Mile End, writes:

"East Enders are not great readers of good literature, nor can they afford to buy new books. For usefulness I uphold our own plan, which is to keep up a lending library of 300 volumes of good modern fiction, &c., charging our parishioners who use it one penny a month. Large public libraries will have to be decentralised before they can be really useful. The Whitechapel barrows hardly receive sufficient notice in your article. Their contents are wonderful—chiefly classics, mathematics, and theology. No immoral books."

THE Rev. J. H. Draper writes from Whitechapel:

"The local papers are a fairly good guide to the style of literature most acceptable in this part of the world. Reading with a view to improvement of mind and life requires a certain amount of training and time which is rarely enjoyed by the toilers in the East End."

THE Rev. Alfred Webb, of Christ Church Mission, Old Ford, E., writes:

"Your article is quite true. In this district we cannot buy books. A good shop in Roman-road, or near it, ought to do well. When I want a decent book I am obliged to send to the City, or go without it. May your words cause books—good books—to be found in the East-End."

ROTHERHITHE did not fall within our representative's survey, but we have received the following interesting note from the Rev. Edward Josselyn Beck, rector of that river-side parish:

"I once tried the costly experiment of opening a bookshop at my own expense, and failed miserably. I am now chairman of a public library which is always full of readers of the humble class; and supplies hundreds of browsers with books to read at home. The new bookshop in Rotherhithe displays a large and dingy collection of odd second-hand volumes, chiefly patronised by foreign sailors from the Docks, who buy old French novels and German books."

In addition to the above replies to a written inquiry we sent out, we have received the following interesting communication from a Stratford correspondent:

"I have, with great interest, followed your contributor step by step in his peregrination; for as 'man and boy' I may claim to know every foot of the thoroughfare he describes, from Aldgate to Stratford—and even beyond.

His indictment as to the absence of new bookshops is, of course, true; but are we therein very different from our kinsmen in the other main roadways from City to suburb? If we buy 'new' books at all, are they not got either at the two or three booksellers in the City (those happy oases in the desert), or from the 'Stores'—setting aside the occasional gaudy-covered minor novel, &c., specially prepared as a 'leading article,' that our wives or daughters buy at the suburban linendraper's?

Whitechapel possesses, however, one glory of which we East-Enders may fairly be proud. I refer to the second-hand bookshop itself, alluded to in your article; but intentionally only alluded to by your contributor. That shop contains far and away the largest collection of second-hand books in London. I have heard Mr. George say that he must have at least a hundred thousand odd volumes alone, while I suppose there is scarcely a series of magazines, reviews, publications of learned societies, long sets of reference books—to say nothing of first editions of Dickens, Thackeray, and others—that you could inquire for and fail to be supplied with on the spot. Bookbuyers, in search of some 'missing-link,' or of an hour or two's pastime (and where does time pass so rapidly as in a bookshop?), should stroll thus far East. They would not, I venture to say, be disappointed. The vast accumulation at No. 76 is, too, a striking instance of what may be done by hard work and intelligence; for Mr. George tells proudly of the modest way in which he first started in his business.

The premises he now occupies were, I may add, built and used for many years by the late Mr. Robert Gladding, a well-known East-End man, highly honoured in his public capacity and for his integrity in business. He had removed from another (long since demolished) shop, with its curious down-a-step entrance, a little farther East, that had long been the literary centre of the neighbourhood. Mr. Gladding's mainstay was old theology, which in the ante-reprint times he used to hunt up in the 'Low Countries,' bringing his purchases home literally by the shipload.

My own recollections herein go no longer back than some thirty-five years or so.

Since that time, Whitechapel, Mile End, and Bow have all suffered change: the well-to-do people have gradually moved outwards, most still farther East, till scarcely anybody ('as is anybody') will condescend to live nearer to 'Aldgate Pump' than, say, Ilford; while many are not content until they reach remote Southend—now fast becoming the Brighton of this side of London. Some of us, though, are still bound, either from old associations or from the stern necessity of bread-winning, to live 'down East.' Let not the reader of these rambling lines think that we are all utterly outcast, though we possess no (new) bookshops.

I, this morning, asked the wholesale agent who supplies most of the newsvendors in this district how many copies of the Academy, Athenæum, Literature, and Spectator passed through his hands weekly. It is true the total did not come to more than a couple of dozen—but that, I think, 'says something' for us—and, of course, many copies besides of such strictly literary papers are bought by the East-Enders at his railway-stall or in the City.

Culture is, therefore, not quite extinguished by the smoke and smells (oh! Cologne, we could give you odds, and beat you easily in your own proverbial line); we have our Shakespeare and other literary societies (if not in Stratford, in Forest Gate—practically a part of it); and we are, above all, perhaps as musical and music-loving a population as any around London.

We are not, however—I acknowledge it with a parting pang—book-buyers, either new or second-hand, except here and there one.

A. G. S.

Stratford, E.: March 1."

DRAMA.

WHEN an author is strongly impelled to write for the stage, without that pecuniary incentive which lies at the bottom of so much literary and artistic effort, one expects to find in his work a high degree of natural aptitude for play-writing if not a touch of genius itself. But apparently the call may exist without any remarkable degree of executive faculty, or with just so much of it as the weary hack himself might display. Within the past few years there has been no more industrious playwright than Mr. G. Stuart Ogilvie, a gentleman of financial standing who may be supposed to fall within Mr. Brookfield's category of "the litterati of the Stock Exchange." He has given us "Hypatia" at the Haymarket, "The Sin of St. Hulda" at the Shaftesbury, and now "The White Knight" at Terry's, while other plays from his pen are announced for production by Mr. John Hare and Miss Olga Nethersole. But, so far, the vital spark is curiously absent from Mr. Ogilvie's plays. They are carefully written; they show evidence of culture and literary taste. Somehow, nevertheless, the dramatic fooling which must possess the soul of their author fails to find adequate expression. It does not carry beyond the footlights, in which respect it resembles the passion of the amateur actor who, surcharged with sentiment, fails to impress his audience for lack of the special histrionic gift. The same defect which was noticeable in Mr. Ogilvie's poetic plays reappears in "The White Knight"—a comedy which he has written round the personality of Mr. Edward Terry; and there it is all the more remarkable, seeing that the story is laid in those financial and commercial spheres with which the author may be supposed to be specially acquainted.

In this instance, perhaps, Mr. Ogilvie has unduly handicapped himself. He has chosen for his play the business motive which hitherto, and in more expert hands than his, has failed to find acceptance with the public. This business motive is a perplexing problem in modern drama. In the city it can be trusted to excite the keenest passions, but when transferred to the stage it loses grip, and becomes feeble and ineffective in comparison with the primary passions of love and jealousy. Money is still as weak an element in drama as it is in poetry. Why this should be, considering how important a part it plays in social life, it is hard to say. But the experience is not new. In old-fashioned melodrama it was no uncommon incident that the hero should take a bundle of rustling banknotes out of his escritoire in order to succour the suffering heroine. But nobody believed in this financial coup; a sceptical smile might always have been observed playing about the faces of the auditors. The love making, the hatred, the envy, the uncharitableness were accepted as real, but not the banknotes. A few years ago Mr. Bronson Howard, the popular American dramatist, brought to the Avenue Theatre a play called "The Henrietta," dealing with the dramatic aspects of mining speculation—surely a sufficiently modern theme. In his culminating scene, a clicking tape-machine indicated the rise and fall of the fortunes of the dramatis personæ. But the public remained unmoved, and the play, cleverly written though it was, proved a failure. A still more striking example of the hollowness of the business motive was presented not long afterwards at the Haymarket in a play entitled "Agatha Tylden, Merchant and Shipowner," by Mr. Edward Rose. Agatha Tylden was a woman of business, and from first to last business was the theme of the play. Shipping, rates of exchange, promissory notes, balance sheets and bankruptcies were the burden of the dialogue. At the end of the third act a long-awaited-for love-scene was found to be interwoven with the question of a misleading statement of accounts; while in the fourth and last there was less stress laid upon the heroine's acceptance of marriage than upon her escape from the necessity of offering her creditors so much in the pound. Needless to say, "Agatha Tylden" failed to impress the public favourably. To the City man it must have savoured much more of "shop" than of drama in the ordinary sense of the term, while the uncommercial spectator probably felt that the issues involved in the story properly belonged to the domain of the chartered accountant. Both Mr. Pinero and Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, in touching upon "business" as they did in "The Squire" and "The Middleman," took care to vitalise it with a love motive of the accepted pattern.

This important precaution Mr. Ogilvie has neglected in "The White Knight," where we are invited to interest ourselves solely in the fortunes of the Electric White Lead Company, Limited, and of the inventor, one Edward Pennyquick, whose patents are exploited by a company-promoter, rejoicing in the name of Rook. Mr. Terry plays the inventor, a flighty enthusiast who readily falls into the toils of the financial villain. At first all goes swimmingly with the Electric White Lead Company, Limited, and familiar types of the incompetent director are presented by Mr. Stuart Champion and Mr. A. E. George, as the titled nincompoop and the irascible Major-General. Rook himself is a realistic study by Mr. Abingdon. Loves proves a negligible quantity in the drama. To be sure, room is found in the cast for Miss Kate Rorke, as a young widow devoted to the crack-brained inventor of the new white lead process, and for Miss Esmé Berenger as a quasi-Italian adventuress, with whom Rook has had intimate relations. But business is the backbone of the piece, and as in "Agatha Tylden," the great scene is an angry meeting of shareholders resolved upon liquidation. At first the shares of the Electric White Lead Company promise to go to a figure at which Rook will be able to "unload" with advantage; but the invention is abortive, or, at least, too costly to be workable, and liquidation supervenes. This the inventor would stave off if he could, because he has discovered the detail in his process required to render it practicable; but Rook is a wrecker, and has his eye upon fresh rights and royalties. What should the ending to such a story be? Mr. Ogilvie has bethought him of the happy ending which is de rigueur in ordinary drama. Rook is foiled in his nefarious schemes, and the inventor, after a prolonged period of misfortune, makes £50,000, with which he generously recoups the shareholders of the liquidated company who had believed in him.

HERE, surely, the note of "modernity" is struck (the last-mentioned circumstance possibly excepted), that quality so highly prized in the society novel and the fashionable sermon. And yet it wholly fails to impress the theatrical public. People seem to be lacking in the power of make-believe on the stage where financial interests are concerned. A meeting of angry shareholders denouncing a patentee who has failed them ought to be as powerful a factor, dramatically, as the stage crowd which at Her Majesty's Theatre shouts with Mark Antony, and vows vengeance upon the "honourable men" who have assassinated Cæsar. Is it a question of drilling or stage management? The consistent failure of the business motive in drama points to deeper causes, the existence of which a born dramatist like Mr. Henry Arthur Jones instinctively feels, though he may not be able to diagnose them. For in some respects "The White Knight" bears a remarkable affinity to "The Middleman." Both are concerned with an enthusiastic and single-minded inventor, struggling, in the one case, with a rascally company promoter, and, in the other, with a blood-sucking commercial agent. But whereas Mr. Ogilvie adheres to business, Mr. Henry Arthur Jones skilfully shunts this into a siding, and plays a variation upon the old, old story which agitated the minds of men before syndicates and Stock Exchange quotations were heard of. Is it the lack of "female interest" that tells against the business motive? So excellent a judge of dramatic effect as the late John Oxenford was wont to declare that no play could achieve success which did not appeal to women. But then in "Agatha Tylden" it was a woman who was involved in the tangle of commercial and financial interests. I am afraid it must be owned that by "female interest" is meant the love interest and nothing else. To that, no class of the community is indifferent. Perhaps "The White Knight" would obtain the desired effect with an audience of stockbrokers and City men, who would find it as "shoppy" in tone as a financial newspaper. Upon one feature of his work Mr. Ogilvie is to be congratulated. He has furnished Mr. Terry with a character after his own heart, that of the inventor Pennyquick—impulsive, extravagant, boisterous, with faults of head in plenty, but none of heart. J. F. N.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ZUMMERZET ZONG.

SIR,—I had not seen Mr. Quiller Couch's destructive criticism of my native language (or dialect) and literature till I was blighted by it in a note in the ACADEMY. The verses in oddly spelled English, by Mr. Barnes, have ever seemed to me deplorably tedious; that, however, is my own affair. I need not read them, and nobody can make me do so. The question of dialect is another question. As far as I have studied Mr. Barnes, he spells "summer" "zummer," and that is the essence of dialect as written by him. Let us keep our tempers, and ask whether Mr. Barnes's dialect is anything but ordinary English queerly spelled, and, no doubt, queerly pronounced? Phonetically, Zummerzetese may be interesting, but I confess to being much more interested in dialects that preserve words and phrases which modern English has lost. The dialect of Scotland does preserve such words and phrases in large numbers. If Zummerzetese does so, too, do manus, it is more interesting than I had gathered from a study, by no means prolonged or elaborate, of the works of Mr. Barnes. I own that I do not see how all this is affected by Mr. Quiller Couch's exercises in Scots, which is very good Scots for a beginner. I make him my compliment. You see, we Scots called our language "English" at least as late as 1460, though, in 1560, we called it "Scots," and distinguished it from "English." Our language, or dialect, possesses a considerable literature—between Barbour and Burns, a space of four hundred years. We are not unreasonably proud of that literature, and we do not rate it on a level with the literature of Zummerzet. Our dialect, or language, as you will, is rich, I repeat, in words which the British journalist believes to be "the language of Ossian." These words are old English, which our dialect has preserved; or French, derived from the Ancient League; or Gaelic, borrowed from our Celtic neighbours. These latter words are few. But the three kinds of words—old English, French, Gaelic—and the circumstance that we have a literature five or six hundred years old, do, I fancy, make a distinction between Scots and the Zummerzetese of Mr. Barnes, which is ordinary English misspelled. Of course, if Zummerzetese is rich in old English words, lost by modern English, and in Celtic words derived from Wales, and if Zummerzet has poets like Dunbar and Barbour and Lyndsay and King James, I withdraw my remarks. Scots and Zummerzetese, in that case, are on a level of excellence, and I shall please myself by perusing the Zummerzet Barbour, King James, and Dunbar. But not Barnes!—I am, &c., St. Andrews: Feb. 26. A. LANG.

MORE REMARKS ON "JULIUS CÆSAR."

SIR,—I am filled with respectful admiration at the skill with which Mr. Tree, in his "Apology for 'Julius Cæsar'" in the ACADEMY of last week, begs the whole question at issue between us. Mr. Tree, I understand, justifies his method of acting Antony and presenting the play as a successful attempt to "command the support of the public at large," while he refers contemptuously to those learned amateur societies who present Shakespeare "in such a way as to commend him to the few while boring the many." In fact, says Mr. Tree, "it is the business of the manager to present Shakespeare in such a way as to commend him to the many," and he implies that I dissent entirely from this view.

This is a misconception. Mr. Tree and I agree that Shakespeare must be presented in such a way as to attract the playgoing public. We do not agree as to how this should be done. Mr. Tree apparently considers that it should be done—in "Julius Cæsar"—by cutting out a certain number of by no means unimportant scenes, in order that other scenes may be unduly protracted, and tiresome by-play such as poor Cæsar's blood-red roses, by an over-emphasised and too slow delivery of blank verse, and by the pauses and postures and other time-wasting expedients which delay the end of the Her Majesty's Act I. and the famous oration in Act II. I consider not merely that these things are bad art, but that the Public does not want them. It is, of course, a matter of opinion, and in such matters no proof is possible, but my belief is that the popularity of the present production at Her Majesty's is in spite of these faults, not because of them, as Mr. Tree seems to think. I believe that the public—the "many" for whom Mr. Tree has to cater—would rather have "Julius Cæsar" played in its entirety, than they would both like and understand it better so played, and that it could be given in three hours practically without cuts if the acting were less mannered, the delivery of the verse simpler and more rapid, and the superfluous ingenuities of by-play omitted. Presented in this way the play would gain in coherence and intelligibility, and, as I think, in popularity also.

Further, I believe that the Public, in a Shakespearian performance, likes to see the actor-manager subordinate himself to the play, not the play subordinated to the actor-manager. In presenting "Trilby," Mr. Tree very wisely concentrated the whole attention of his audiences upon himself. The play was nothing, and the only thing worth seeing was Mr. Tree's Svengali. But "Julius Cæsar" is not "Trilby," and what was legitimate actor management in the one is absurd in the other.

Lastly, I believe that the Public, in a Shakespearian performance, wants to hear Shakespeare's blank verse spoken simply and straightforwardly, with some perception of rhythm. Mr. Tree, on the contrary, judging from his Antony, seems convinced that the public wants nothing of the kind. In fact, he disguises his blank verse so cunningly that it sounds like nothing so much as very halting prose. This, like so much in the performance, strikes me as somewhat wasted cleverness.

ST. JOHN HANKIN.

A PASSAGE BY R. L. S.

SIR,—I shall be obliged if you will kindly print the full quotation from Stevenson's essay for the benefit of Mr. R. L. Cunliff, who objects to my interpretation:

"Honesty was the rule; the innkeepers gave, as I have said, almost unlimited credit; they suffered the seediest painter to depart, to take all his belongings, and to leave his bill unpaid; and if they sometimes lost, it was by English and Americans alone (the italics are mine)."

In the second paragraph, describing the interference of an Anglo-Saxon on behalf of fair play, Stevenson adds: "The Frenchman marvelled at the scruples of his guest, and when that defender of universes retired over-seas, and left his bills unpaid, he marvelled once again." It is clear from the entire page that Stevenson himself concurs both in the reputation of dishonesty and in the reputation of a lack of fair play.—I am, &c.,

YOUR PARIS CORRESPONDENT.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"The Making of a Prig." By Evelyn Sharp.

THE critics have found this novel rather a hard nut to crack. They recognise Miss Sharp's cleverness, her brightness of dialogue, and her "facile, unpretentious" style. But exactly what Miss Sharp would be at in The Making of a Prig they are not sure. The Saturday Review's critic wrestles throughout a column and a half with the problem, and in trying to search its obscurity is himself obscure. But the purport of his criticism may be gathered from the following paragraph, in which he complains of the manner in which Kitty (the "prig") is presented to the reader:

"All the time we are endeavouring to understand why it is that she [Kitty] should prove, one way or another, impossible. Miss Sharp gives us Kitty when she is alone, and so we came to know her and her fine qualities; the intention of the book is to show how, with her good looks, her sincerity, her gaiety, her intelligence, she yet proves a failure all round, unacceptable, not only to the two men, but also to the majority of the girls with whom she lives. It is, therefore, their feelings, not hers, that need to be forced upon the reader—especially as she is the most outspoken of creatures, and her own lips will for the most part save us and the author the trouble of probing into her mind. Time enough to get back to her and see her from the inside when she comes to realise with surprise that she is unacceptable, convicted by a very various jury on the one charge of priggishness. The author, we imagine, had a complete understanding of the girl; but if she also saw the man against whom Kitty was to display herself—saw him vividly, and knew him thoroughly from the inside—she made the mistake of being too brief. She might safely have gone on for another half-dozen chapters, painting the relations between the two, piling up the varied mass of enlightening and convincing details; for it is not likely that an author with so commendable a dislike to abstract explanations would prove too lengthy in the display of so difficult a trouble."

The Spectator's reviewer seems to think that Miss Sharp intended the "Prig" to be, not Kitty, but the barrister Paul Wilton, and that Kitty's priggishness is his [the reviewer's] own discovery:

"It is not Paul Wilton who is the prig, but Katharine, apparently because, out of sheer guilelessness and ignorance of the code of society, she suffered herself to be led into a compromising situation and thought none the worse of herself for so doing. But perhaps we do Miss Sharp an injustice, and her story is intended as a delicate satire on the selfishness of men. In that case, we fear that the subtlety of her method will have defeated her aim. As the story stands, the average reader will certainly regard it as glorifying rather than depreciating priggishness of a very acute type."

Literature says:

"The chief fault we have to find with the book is in its title. Katharine is not a prig in the ordinary sense, nor does her story describe the manufacture of a prig, even in the sense which Miss Sharp appears to give to the word. She is a clever girl, natural and frankly affectionate, who, partly from her training, partly from her temperament, fails to realise the requirements of Mrs. Grundy. This deficiency seems to arise from the natural naïveté of her character rather than from any social theory or intellectual conceit. There is, indeed, a certain self-content, an unconscious assumption that she could do nothing wrong which partakes of what might perhaps be termed moral priggishness. But we become so fond of her that we fully sympathise with her protest against being branded with so opprobrious a term; and as she reveals her character in the first page of the book, it is difficult to see where the 'making' comes in. Miss Sharp has written a good story, but she has not described the making of a prig."

The Standard's critic emphasises what the other critics concede—the brightness and cleverness of the story; and he quotes with enjoyment the following "up-to-date love-letter" which Kitty receives from her unsuccessful boy lover.

"By the time you get this I shall have cleared out. I may be an infernally rotten ass, but I won't let the best girl in the world marry me out of kindness, and that is all you were going to do. I tried to think you were a little keen on me a few weeks ago; but, of course, I was wrong. Don't mind me. I shall come up smiling again after a bit. It was just like my poorness to think I could ever marry any one so clever and spry as yourself. Of course you will buck up and marry some played-out literary chap, who will gas about books and things all day and make you happy. Good old Kit, it has been a mistake all along, hasn't it? When I come back we will be chums again, won't we? I am off to Melbourne in the morning, and shall travel about for a year, I think. You might write to me—the jolly sort of letters you used to write. Monty knows all my movements."

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, March 3.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

A BOOK OF PSALMS. Rendered into English Verse by the late Arthur Trevor Jebb, M.A. George Allen.

THE MODERN READER'S BIBLE: ST. MATTHEW AND ST. MARK, AND THE GENERAL EPISTLES. Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d.

AN EXAMINATION OF THE CHARGE OF APOSTASY AGAINST WORDSWORTH. By William Hale White. Longmans, Green & Co. 3s. 6d.

A DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE: DEALING WITH ITS LANGUAGE, LITERATURE, AND CONTENTS, INCLUDING THE BIBLICAL THEOLOGY. Edited by James Hastings, M.A., D.D. T. & T. Clark. Vol. I. 28s.

DISCIPLINE AND LAW: SOME LENTEN ADDRESSES. By H. Hensley Henson, D.D. Methuen & Co. 2s.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

A MEMOIR OF MAJOR-GENERAL SIR HENRY CRESWICKE RAWLINSON. By George Rawlinson, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co.

TWELVE NAVAL CAPTAINS: BEING A RECORD OF CERTAIN AMERICANS WHO MADE THEMSELVES IMMORTAL. By Molloy Elliot Seawell. Kegan Paul.

RECORDS OF OLD TIMES: HISTORICAL, SOCIAL, POLITICAL, SPORTING, AND AGRICULTURAL. By J. Kersley Fowler ("Rusticus"). Chatto & Windus.

A HISTORY OF FRANCE FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE FALL OF THE SECOND EMPIRE IN 1870. By W. H. Jervis, M.A. A new edition revised and in great part re-written by Arthur Hassall, M.A. John Murray.

BRIEF LIVES, CHIEFLY OF CONTEMPORARIES, SET DOWN BY JOHN AUBREY, BETWEEN THE YEARS 1669 AND 1696. Edited from the Authors' MSS. by Andrew Clark. 2 vols. Clarendon Press.

THE ANTIQUITIES AND CURIOSITIES OF THE EXCHEQUER. By Hubert Hall, F.S.A. Elliot Stock.

SEMITIC INFLUENCE IN HELLENIC MYTHOLOGY: WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE RECENT MYTHOLOGICAL WORKS OF THE RT. HON. PROF. F. MAX MÜLLER AND MR. ANDREW LANG. By Robert Brown, Jun., F.S.A. Williams & Norgate. 7s. 6d.

NOTES FROM A DIARY, 1873—1881. By the Right Hon. Sir Mount-Stuart E. Grant Duff. 2 vols. John Murray. 13s.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS SERIES: THE FRANKS. By Lewis Sergeant. T. Fisher Unwin. 5s.

THE LIFE OF THE REV. JAMES MORISON, D.D. By William Adamson, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

SHORT HISTORIES OF THE LITERATURES OF THE WORLD: A HISTORY OF ITALIAN LITERATURE. By Richard Garnett, C.B. Wm. Heinemann. 6s.

THE BASES OF DESIGN. By Walter Crane. George Bell & Sons. 18s.

ESSAIS DE CRITIQUE DRAMATIQUE: GEORGE SAND, MUSSET, FEUILLET, AVOIER, DUMAS FILS. By Antoine Benoist. Librairie, Hachette et Cie. (Paris).

SONGS OF ENGLAND. By Alfred Austin. Macmillan & Co. 1s.

THE ILIADS OF HOMER. Translated according to the Greek. By George Chapman. 2 vols. 1s. 6d. each.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

THE RECORDS OF THE BOROUGH OF NORTHAMPTON. Edited by Christopher A. Markham, F.S.A., and Rev. J. Charles Cox, LL.D. Published by order of the Corporation of the County Borough of Northampton, 1898.

SIDE-LIGHTS ON SIBERIA. By James Young Simpson. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 16s.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY: ENGLISH TOPOGRAPHY (SHROPSHIRE—SOMERSETSHIRE). Edited by F. A. Milne, M.A. Elliot Stock.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FOR SETTLERS: ITS MINES, TRADE, AND AGRICULTURE. By Frances Macnab. Chapman & Hall.

JAVA, THE GARDEN OF THE EAST. By Eliza Ruhamah Scidmore. T. Fisher Unwin. 7s. 6d.

TRAVELS IN THE COASTLANDS OF BRITISH EAST AFRICA AND THE ISLANDS OF ZANZIBAR AND PEMBA: THEIR AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES AND GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS. By William Walter Augustine Fitzgerald. Chapman & Hall. 28s.

THROUGH SOUTH AFRICA. By Henry M. Stanley, M.P. Sampson Low. 2s. 6d.

EDUCATIONAL.

BRACEBRIDGE HALL. Edited, with Notes, by John D. Colclough. Browne & Nolan (Dublin).

UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES:—OVID: METAMORPHOSES, Book XIV. Edited by A. H. Allcroft, M.A., and B. J. Hayes, M.A. 1s. 6d. GENERAL ELEMENTARY SCIENCE. Edited by William Briggs, M.A. W. B. Clive.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DICTIONNAIRE DE SLANG ET D'EXPRESSIONS FAMILIÈRES ANGLAISES. Par C. Legras. Garnier Frères (Paris).

BOHEMIAN PAPERS. By George Eyre-Todd. Morison Brothers (Glasgow). 1s.

THE MINER'S ARITHMETIC AND MENSURATION. By Henry Davies. Chapman & Hall.

A SKETCH OF THE NATURAL HISTORY (VERTEBRATES) OF THE BRITISH ISLANDS. By F. G. Aflalo, F.Z.S. With illustrations. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 6s. net.

THE LIBERTY AND FREE SOIL PARTIES IN THE NORTH-WEST. Toppan Prize Essay of 1896. By Theodore Clarke Smith, Ph.D. Longmans, Green & Co. 7s. 6d.

THE LITERARY YEAR-BOOK, 1898. Edited by Joseph Jacobs. George Allen. 3s. 6d.

In reply to a Manchester correspondent, who does not give us a proper postal address, the Norwegian Grammar and Reader, by Julius G. Olson, which we recently catalogued, is published by Scott, Foresman & Co., of Chicago.

NOTES ON NEW EDITIONS.

A NEW edition of Jervis's The Students' France (John Murray) is now available. The book has been thoroughly revised and re-written by Mr. Arthur Hassall and Mr. F. Haverfield; and at a time when France is the "cynosure of neighbouring eyes," this text-book may well find readers outside of schools and colleges.

WASHINGTON IRVING'S Bracebridge Hall is not, we fancy, much read nowadays; but the Dublin firm of Messrs. Browne & Nolan have just issued it as a school reading-book, with the usual equipments of notes, critical introduction, and glossary. The editor, Mr. John D. Colclough, lays stress on the humour of these sketches, and his aim has been to bring it home fully to boys and girls. He writes:

"The notes to this edition are intended to be suggestive, not exhaustive, agreeably to the spirit of Irving's book, which is a series of essays for laughter-loving boys and girls, and not a collection of treatises for solemn-faced pundits."

MR. JOHN C. NIMMO'S edition of The Spectator has reached its fifth volume, to which is prefixed a portrait of Thomas Tickell.

MESSRS. LONGMANS' Annual Charities Register and Digest for 1898 is before us. As far as possible all fraudulent institutions and societies have been excluded from the Register, but the entry of any given charitable institution does not constitute a recommendation of its methods. "Short practical introductions, written by persons thoroughly conversant with particular branches of charitable work, have been inserted before several of the more important sections; and these the reader will find, it is hoped, suggestive when he is trying to deal with a particular case, or endeavouring to find a suitable agency."

THE "Gentleman's Magazine Library" is extended by the addition this week of a volume of topographical extracts from the Gentleman's Magazine relating to Shropshire and Somersetshire. Mr. Laurence Gomme, who edits the series, remarks that these two counties appear to have been of more than usual interest to the reader of the Gentleman's Magazine. Mr. Gomme writes:

"Domestic architecture, which has been so much neglected by archaeologists, is well represented in this volume. . . . Family history is particularly well represented, and the genealogist will find a vast amount of material for which he would have had to search perhaps in vain in the original."

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE, POST FREE, ON APPLICATION.

Medium 8vo, 18s. net.

THE BASES of DESIGN. By WALTER CRANE. Printed at the Chiswick Press. With 200 Illustrations, many drawn by the Author. Bound in buckram, with specially designed Cover and End Papers.

Contents:—I. Of the Architectural Basis—II. Of the Utility Basis and Influence—III. Of the Influence of Material and Method—IV. Of the Influence of Conditions in Design—V. Of the Climatic Influence in Design: chiefly in regard to Colour and Pattern—VI. Of the Racial Influence in Design—VII. Of the Symbolic Influence, or Emblematic Element in Design—VIII. Of the Graphic Influence, or Naturalism in Design—IX. Of the Individual Influence in Design—X. Of the Collective Influence in Design.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY BOTANY. By PERCY GROOM, M.A. (Cantab. et Oxon.), F.L.S., Examiner in Botany to the University of Oxford. With 275 Illustrations.

Large 8vo, 12s. 6d.

DICTIONARY of the FRENCH and ENGLISH LANGUAGES (French-English and English-French). By F. E. A. GASC. A New Edition (the Eighth), Revised, Enlarged, and Reset from beginning to end. 960 pages, in treble columns, bound in half-buckram.

VOL. V., IN TWO PARTS.

GREGOROVIVS' HISTORY of the CITY of ROME in the MIDDLE AGES. Translated from the German by Mrs. HAMILTON. Crown 8vo, 9s. net.

BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES.

Edited by GLEESON WHITE and E. F. STRANGE.

Crown 8vo, in specially designed cloth covers, 1s. 6d. each.

NOW READY.

CANTERBURY. By HARTLEY WITHERS. Second Edition, Revised. 36 Illustrations.

SALISBURY. By GLEESON WHITE. Second Edition, Revised. 50 Illustrations.

CHESTER. By CHARLES HIATT. 24 Illustrations.

ROCHESTER. By G. H. PALMER, B.A. 38 Illustrations.

OXFORD. By Rev. PERCY DEARMER, M.A. 34 Illustrations.

EXETER. By PERCY ADDLESLAW, B.A. 35 Illustrations.

VINCHESTER. By P. W. SERGEANT. 50 Illustrations.

WIMBORNE. By A. B. CLIFTON. 39 Illustrations.

WIMBORNE. By C. H. B. QUENNEL. 38 Illustrations.

WIMBORNE. By Rev. W. D. SWEETING, M.A. 51 Illustrations. [March 7.]

WIMBORNE. By A. HUGH FISHER. 40 Illustrations. [March 21.]

"Visitors to the cathedral cities of England must often have felt the need of some work dealing with the history and antiquities of the city itself and the architecture and associations of the cathedral, more portable than the elaborate monographs which have been devoted to some of them, more scholarly and satisfying than the average local guide-book, and more copious than the section devoted to them in the general guide-book of the county or district. Such a legitimate need the 'Cathedral Series,' now being issued by Messrs. George Bell & Sons, under the editorship of Mr. Gleeson White and Mr. E. F. Strange, seems well calculated to supply. The volumes, two of which, relating to Canterbury and Salisbury, have already been issued, are handy in size, moderate in price, well illustrated, and written in a scholarly spirit. The history of cathedral and city is intelligently set forth, and accompanied by a descriptive survey of the building in all its detail. The illustrations are copious and well selected, and the series bids fair to become an indispensable companion to the cathedral tourist in England."—Times.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

THE LAY of the NIBELUNGS. Metrically Translated from the Old German Text by ALICE HORTON, and Edited by EDWARD BELL, M.A. To which is prefixed the Essay on the "Nibelungen Lied," by THOMAS CARLYLE. 5s.

THE WORKS of GEORGE BERKELEY, Bishop of Cloyne. Edited by GEORGE SAMPSON. With a Biographical Introduction by the Right Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P. 3 vols., 5s. each. [Vols. I. and II. ready.]

THE CAMPAIGN of SEDAN: the Downfall of the Second Empire, August-September, 1870. By GEORGE HOOPER. With General Map and 6 Plans of Battle. New Edition. 3s. 6d.

THE PROSE WORKS of JONATHAN SWIFT. Edited by TEMPLE SCOTT. With an Introduction by the Right Hon. W. E. H. LECKY, M.P. In about 10 vols., 3s. 6d. each. [Vols. I. and II. ready.]

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, York Street, Covent Garden.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

With Portrait, 24 Plates (3 Charts), and 14 Illustrations in the Text (6 Charts), 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

DRAKE and the TUDOR NAVY. With a History of the Rise of England as a Maritime Power. By JULIAN S. CORBETT.

"A valuable output from the mine of history, and a most welcome help to all who would understand the origin and progress of British sea-power."—Daily News.

With 3 Portraits and a Map, and a Preface by Field-Marshal LORD ROBERTS of KANDAHAR. 8vo, 16s.

A MEMOIR of MAJOR-GENERAL SIR HENRY CRESWICK RAWLINSON, Bart., K.C.B., F.R.S., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., &c. By GEORGE RAWLINSON, M.A., F.R.G.S., Canon of Canterbury.

LONGMANS' CIVIL ENGINEERING SERIES.

Edited by the AUTHOR of "NOTES on BUILDING CONSTRUCTION."

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION. By WILLIAM HEMINGWAY MILLS, M.I.C.E., Engineer-in-Chief, Great Northern Railway, Ireland. With 516 Diagrams and Illustrations. 8vo, 18s. net.

AN EXAMINATION of the CHARGE of APOSTASY AGAINST WORDSWORTH. By W. HALE WHITE, Editor of the "Description of the Wordsworth and Coleridge MSS. in the Possession of Mr. T. Norton Longman." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY DR. A. G. MORTIMER.

JESUS and the RESURRECTION.

Thirty Addresses for Good Friday and Easter. By the Rev. ALFRED G. MORTIMER, D.D., Rector of St. Mark's, Philadelphia. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW BOOK BY MR. STANLEY WEYMAN.

SHREWSBURY: a Romance of the Reign of William III. By STANLEY J. WEYMAN, Author of "A Gentleman of France," &c. With 24 Illustrations by Claude A. Shepperson. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A romance that will stand by 'The Gentleman of France' or 'The House of the Wolf.' There is not a dull page in the book."—Star.

"A more stirring narrative, a story fuller of life, or richer in dramatic colour, has not yet come from the same pen."—Daily News.

"It need hardly be said that Mr. Weyman's brilliant pen provides us with a vivid picture of the times of which he treats. 'Shrewsbury' will hold its own beside any of its brilliant predecessors."—Speaker.

"Mr. Weyman styles his new book simply a romance, but it is in reality an historical novel, and an uncommonly able and interesting piece of work into the bargain. The great triumph of the book is really the self-revelation of the narrator. The psychology of cowardice has seldom been more elaborately set forth in a work of fiction."—Spectator.

THE LAST ROMANCE OF THE LATE WILLIAM MORRIS.

THE SUNDERING FLOOD: a Romance By WILLIAM MORRIS, Author of "The Earthly Paradise," &c. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"The charm of the book is upon us still. The joy of life, the youthfulness of it all, the frank belief in the love of women, and the honour of men, the open-eyed wonder of boyhood in presence of the beauty of God's universe, will go with us for days like some haunting strain of the music of a great master. This book will rank with Morris's best work, between 'Sigurd' and 'The Roots of the Mountains.'"—Daily News.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

MARCH, 1898.—PRICE SIXPENCE.

THE DUENNA of a GENIUS. By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. Francis Blundell), Author of "In a North Country Village," "A Daughter of the Soil," &c. Chapters VI.—IX.

"MEMOIRS of a HIGHLAND LADY." By Mrs. ANDREW LANG

LOVE'S LIFE. } By WALTER HERRIES POLLOCK.

THE HEART of MEMORY. }

THE SECRET of the WILLOW-WREN. By W. H. HUDSON.

SUSPENSE. By ADA SMITH.

THE TYPEWRITING CLERK. By E. A. SMITH.

THE SEASON of the YEAR. By GRANT ALLEN.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., London, Bombay, and New York.

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"LATTER-DAY STORIES."

Under this title a New Series of Novels by well-known Authors is in preparation for issue Monthly, with Portraits.

Each Volume will be well printed, on good paper, with clear type, and prettily bound in tasteful cloth covers.

Price 2s. 6d. each.

VOLUME I.

MISS BETTY.

BY

BRAM STOKER,

Author of "Dracula."

The World.—"A very charming story. Miss Betty is a figure in fiction to be remembered."

Sheffield Telegraph.—"One of the tenderest, most beautiful love stories we have read for some time."

Scotsman.—"Many will consider this the strongest story the author has yet written."

VOLUME II., JUST PUBLISHED.

VAN WAGENER'S WAYS.

By W. L. ALDEN, Author of "His Daughter," &c. Crown 8vo, in dainty pink cloth cover. With Portrait.

Professor Van Wagener is an elderly crank with an unsympathetic wife, who objects to his love of impracticable inventions.

Forthcoming Volumes.

AN EGYPTIAN COQUETTE.

By CLIVE HOLLAND, Author of "My Japanese Wife," &c.

IN MALE ATTIRE.

By JOSEPH HATTON, Author of "By Order of the Czar," &c.

AN EPISODE IN ARCADY.

By HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE.

TRINCOLOX.

By DOUGLAS SLADEN, Author of "On and Off the Cars," &c.

WITH PEARY NEAR the POLE. By EIVIND ASTRUP. Illustrated with Sketches and Photographs by the Author. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 10s. 6d. [Shortly]

Mr. Astrup was a great personal friend of Lieut. Peary, and accompanied that intrepid pioneer on two expeditions northward. Taking care to avoid a repetition of the scientific story of their travels, has devoted himself to giving us a vivid picture of the adventures that befell their parties, of the wonderful life they led, the strange animals and the stranger people they encountered.

NEW WORK BY G. F. WRIGHT, D.D.,

Professor of the Harmony of Science and Revelation, Oberlin College.

SCIENTIFIC ASPECTS of CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES.

G. F. WRIGHT, D.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, 7s. 6d. [Ready]

The NEW AGE says: "Dr. Wright is abreast of the latest results in science: he approaches questions of Biblical criticism in the true spirit of a critic; he takes a broad view of the whole ground controversy, and in this volume he has made a substantial contribution towards defining the proper line of the two modes of thought, and setting them in right relation to each other."

NEW NOVEL BY GRANT ALLEN.

THE INCIDENTAL BISHOP.

By GRANT ALLEN, Author of "Wha Bred in the Bone," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready]

Mr. Grant Allen in this story ingeniously depicts the struggles of an innocent man who, by dint of circumstances, is thrust into a position which, although amply qualified for, he has no right to occupy. The story is brimful of adventure, and the latter part of it is distinguished by the painful intensity with which the victim of a moral problem strives to find a way of escape from his crushing environment.

A NEW AND IMPORTANT NOVEL BY ROBERT BUCHANAN.

THE REV. ANNABEL LEE.

By ROBT. BUCHANAN, Author of "God and the Man." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [March 10]

The author's object in writing this novel is to show that, if all religions were destroyed, and per material prosperity arrived at, Humanity would reach not perfection, but stagnation. The story starts with the Twenty-first Century, and deals with the efforts of a charming and beautiful maiden, the Rev. Annabel Lee, to lead back her race to the precepts of a forgotten Christianity.

THE KEEPERS of the PEOPLE.

By EDGAR JEPSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [April]

Mr. Edgar Jepson's new novel tells the story of the ruling of a kingdom in the East by an English family, who make the maxim, 'It is expedient that one man die for the people,' the first principle of the government, and follow it to its extreme logical conclusions.

THE VIRGIN of the SUN. A Tale of the Conquest of Peru.

By GEORGE GRIFFITHS, Author of "The Angel of the Revolution," "Valdar the Off-Born," "Men who have Made the Empire," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Frontispiece by Stanley Wood, price 6s. [March]

MR. PETT RIDGE'S NEW STORY.

THREE WOMEN and MR. FRANK CARDWELL.

By W. PETT RIDGE, Author of "A Clever Life." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Ready]

It must not be inferred from the title of Mr. Pett Ridge's story that three women are in love with hero; but it is true that all his interests in life are bound up in them, and that the most devoted of three does not gain credit for her self-sacrifice until it is almost too late. The story itself is so fresh original, and its humour so genuine, that the reader is alternately moved to laughter and tears.

LUCKY BARGEE.

By HARRY LANDER, Author of "Weighed in the Balance," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"Lucky Bargee" takes to the river, and his life there is depicted with a marvellous realism; later he is educated as a gentleman, and ultimately ceases to be a mere polished savage by the gentle influence of one of the most charming heroines of modern fiction.

SIDE-SLIPS; or, Misadventures on a Bicycle.

By R. ANDOM, Author of "We Three and Toddlers." Numerous Sketches by A. Frederics. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d.

This volume deals in a lively way with the manifold humorous and practical affairs incidental to cycling and cyclists. It contains details of a brief but not uneventful tour in the Eastern counties, with much supplementary matter of a fictitious and factitious nature of interest to all cyclists, would-be cyclists, and have-been cyclists.

Complete Catalogue will be sent on receipt of post-card to "Book Department,"

London: C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, Henrietta Street, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1349.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

VILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities afforded by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favorable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are specially-bullt Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and covering 8, 18, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Publications. Guaranteed sale of small editions.—
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

FOR THE AUTOGRAPH COLLECTOR—A NEW
MANUAL by Dr. Scott, 1s. post free, 17, Cranage Road,
W. Autographs purchased; a large variety for sale; lists free.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.
English, 10d per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and receipts.—Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS OF ART and BELLES
LETTERS.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT
WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent.
Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small editions.—
Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to K., care of Messrs.
Graham & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

LONDON LIBRARY,
ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PARSON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Festschrift—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.
Parsons.—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Right Rev.
the LORD BISHOP OF LONDON, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., HENRY BARKLY, K.C.E.
Parsons.—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN JUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL OF ROSEBURY.
The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life-membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to each, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-room Open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, a vols., royal 8vo,
18s. 6d. to Members, 18s.
C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERMANN HANFSTAENGL of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the Royal Academy, London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY
BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Engravers, Architects, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS.,
Diagrams, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c. at a moderate cost.
Specimens and Price List on application.

Office 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)
Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.
THURSDAY, March 17th, at 5 p.m. at the MUSEUM of PRACTICAL GEOLOGY, Jermyn Street, S.W., a Paper by Miss M.
MORISON on "THE JOURNAL of a VOYAGE of CECILIA, PRINCESS of SWEDEN, to the COURT of QUEEN ELIZABETH," will be read.
HUBERT HALL, Director and Hon. Sec.
115, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTER-ETCHERS and ENGRAVERS.—ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the Society
NOW OPEN at the SOCIETY'S GALLERY, No. 54, Pall Mall East, from 10 to 6. Admission, 1s. A. STEWART, Secretary.

PRIFYSGOL CYMRU.—UNIVERSITY of WALES.

The University Court is about to proceed to the APPOINTMENT of EXTERNAL EXAMINERS for DEGREES in the following Departments for the Year 1898—

GEOLOGY (One Examiner).
ENGINEERING (One Examiner).
MINING (One Examiner).
MINE SURVEYING (One Examiner).
POLITICAL ECONOMY (One Examiner).

Candidates for Examinations must send in their names to the Registrar with any attestations of their qualifications as they may think desirable, on or before Monday, March 14th, 1898. Information in regard to the work and stipends of Examiners may be obtained on application to Town Hall Chambers, Newport, Mon. IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—ENTRANCE SCHOLAR-
SHIPS in SEPTEMBER, 1898.—SIX OPEN SCHOLAR-SHIPS, Three (£150, £80, and £50) in Science and Three (£100, £50, and £30) in Arts.—Particulars, and copies of Examination Papers, on application to the DEAN, Guy's Hospital, London Bridge, S.E.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—PRELIMINARY
SCIENTIFIC (M.B. Lond.) CLASSES are held throughout the year. Special Instruction is given for the July Examination.
Fee, 16 Guineas.

SCIENCE MISTRESS (B.Sc. Lond. or Camb.
Tripos) WANTED for WELSH INTERMEDIATE and TECHNICAL SCHOOL, Salary £100 to £120. Other Vacancies.—
Miss Louisa Bacon, 25, Oratory Street, Charing Cross.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE,
COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.

For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

LADIES' WEEKLY NEWSPAPER for SALE or AMALGAMATION with other Paper. Established 6 years.—
For particulars apply to Newspaper, to Office of Tax Agency, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—
Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCOIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.,
PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTIONS of FAMOUS WORKS of ART.

AUTOTYPES of the OLD MASTERS in the GREAT CONTINENTAL GALLERIES.

AUTOTYPES of MODERN BRITISH ART.

AUTOTYPES of WORKS by ARTISTS of the PRE-RAPHAELITE SCHOOL.

AUTOTYPES of PICTURES in the NATIONAL GALLERY.

AUTOTYPES of DRAWINGS by OLD MASTERS.

AUTOTYPES of SELECTED WORKS from the PARIS SALONS.

Those interested in Art, and in the recent developments of the Photographic Reproduction of Pictures, are invited to inspect the Company's extensive Collection of Autotypes and Autogravures of all Schools, now on view at their Gallery, 74, New Oxford Street, where may also be seen a series of examples framed in mouldings of specially designed patterns, made in oak, walnut, and other hard woods. Framed Autotypes form acceptable artistic gifts, and are eminently suited for the adornment of the Home.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE.
Now ready, New Edition of 160 pages. With upwards of One Hundred Miniature Photographs of Notable Autotypes, and Twenty-three Tint Block Illustrations. For convenience of Reference the Publications are arranged Alphabetically under Artists' Names. Post free, ONE SHILLING.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum. COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from
TWO GUINEAS per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the
houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum. N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION,
and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT
Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL,
SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and
FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH,
GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 49, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

Elliot Stock's New Publications.

In crown 8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.
THOMAS BEST JERVIS,
 Lieut.-Colonel Bombay Engineers, H.E.I.C.'s Services,
 Director of the Topographical and Statistical War Department. A Biography. By his Son, W. P. JERVIS.
 "The biographer has done his work with judgment and discretion, and has produced a work of considerable general utility and interest."—Glasgow Herald.
 "A faithful autobiography. As being a centenary tribute by his son, there is much relating to the condition of India in former times, the better enabling us to judge of the progress manifested in that country of later years."
Western Daily Mercury.

"MAETERLINCK AT HIS BEST."
 In crown 8vo. cloth, 5s.
TRANSATLANTIC TRAITS :
 Essays by the Hon. MARTIN MORRIS.
 "Mr. Morris is an admirer of Emerson and of Thoreau, but it is not impossible that if he lives he may surpass his models, and he already often reminds the reader of Maeterlinck at his best, while he adds to the pathos of the Fleming his own western Irish wit."—Athenaeum.
 "His impressions are vividly and felicitously expressed,
 ....In all his varying moods—intense, eralté, paradoxical, or flippant—Mr. Morris challenges attention."—Spectator.
 "A pithy book, written with brains.....full of swift observation, generous appreciation, and the kind of manly candour which nobody worth a rush can resent.....There is vigour and freshness in these pages, and the social judgments which they contain are according to knowledge..... and knowledge, moreover, interpreted by common sense."
Speaker.

In crown 8vo. cloth, illustrated, 3s.
STORM and SUNSHINE in the
DALES. By P. H. LOCKWOOD.
 "Mr. Lockwood is an enthusiast, and revels in the ghylls and fells around Sadbergh, and he has the accomplishment of imparting his enthusiasm to his readers. If an attraction were necessary to the volume it would be supplied by the really excellent photographs which illustrate the book."
Star.

In crown 8vo. cloth, price 2s.
ENTOMOLOGICAL NOTES for the YOUNG COLLECTOR (Lepidoptera). By WILLIAM A. MORLEY.
 "A very handy, convenient, and useful little book, which should serve as a pleasant introduction to a more advanced study of the subject."—Bookseller.
 "Will be found useful by those beginning the study of this branch of natural history."—Dunoon Advertiser.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

THE BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

Ask for the BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL at any stationer's. The BLACKLEAD PENCILS are made in 5 Grades: H.B; H; B; H.H; B.B; finest Bavarian Lead, equal to the highest quality of Artists' Pencils. COLOURED CRAYON PENCILS in Blue, Red, Yellow, Green, and Black, tough and smooth, rich in colour.

HOW USED.—Start the paper with a pin or any pointed instrument—a slight pull—off it comes, and the lead pencil is sharpened. Thirty Fresh Points to every Pencil. The only wear is from use, not from whittling away or breaking the lead.

No wood chips are left on the floor, nor any dirty marking-stuff on your fingers.

If your stationer does not sell them send 1s. for set of sample pencils to—

BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., LTD.,
 46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON 'FOODS AND THEIR VALUES,'
 BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story."

THE COMING of LOVE, and other Poems.

By THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.
 [Second Edition.
 "In 'The Coming of Love' Mr. Watts-Dunton has struck not a new note only, but a new chord in literature."—Literature.
 "Superb writing. 'The Coming of Love' has its chances for all time. 'Christmas at the Mermaid' brings out the scene some of Shakespeare's greatest contemporaries. It is marked by the poet's strongest characteristics, his rare art of describing by successive images of strength and beauty."—Daily News.
 "Original and interesting, fresh in subject and feeling."—Times.
 "Has the distinctive quality of not resembling the work of any other poet."—Pall Mall Gazette.
 "Gives the author a definite, permanent, and distinguished position among present-day poets."—Globe.
 "The Coming of Love' will be among the enduring poetic work of the century."—Star.
 "'The Coming of Love' is a striking story, powerfully told. Mr. Watts-Dunton's 'Sugred Sonnets' are as well known as Shakespeare's were when Francis Meres first chronicled their existence."—Daily Chronicle.
 "A work which the student and the literary historian must turn with feeling and reverence for many a generation to come. 'Rhona' surely has come to stay in English poetry."—Sun.
 "In a letter published in 1882 Rossetti pronounced Mr. Watts-Dunton's sonnets 'splendid affairs.' It will be remembered by readers of Mr. W. Sharp's monograph that, on account of the haunting magic of 'The Coming of Love, Rossetti intended to use one of the scenes for a picture—that depicted in a sonnet called 'The Stars in the River,' which he pronounced to be the most original of all versions of the 'Doppelgänger' legend."—Athenaeum.
 "In Coleridgean mastery of supernatural glamour, the poems are among the most remarkable published for many years."—Morning Leader.
 "The first characteristic which strikes us in 'The Coming of Love' is its extreme originality. It differs from contemporary poetry, not so much in degree as in kind. The audacity of the whole scheme is amazing. It is full of beautiful, subtle, and at times splendid, writing."—Saturday Review.
 "'Natura Benigna' is an incantation, like that by which Saul summoned to his presence the Witch of Endor. It is a spell, a wizard word, whispered in the poet's ear by the unseen lips, whence Coleridge and Wordsworth learned their lore—a spell that can at any time conjure the very spirit of nature before us."—American Bookman.

JOHN LANE, THE BODLEY HEAD, Vigo Street, London, W.

MR. ZANGWILL'S NEW BOOK.
MR. HEINEMANN begs to announce that he will publish Mr. I. ZANGWILL'S New Book,
DREAMERS OF THE GHETTO,
 on TUESDAY, MARCH 15th, in one volume,
 price Six Shillings.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

IMPORTANT.
 All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, should subscribe to the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR
 AND
BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.
 ESTABLISHED 1837.

Among the many attractions of its columns the following may be mentioned:—
 Literary articles (including leader on some prominent topic of the moment) announcements of forthcoming volumes, notes on current events in connection with the publishing world, reviews (often illustrated) of new books and magazines, correspondence, &c., &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of

NEW BOOKS OF THE WEEK
 (the most complete list issued) giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number upwards of a thousand

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS
 are advertised for, thus affording readers an excellent opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and attention is particularly drawn to the fact that annual subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.
 As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
 THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston &
 Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money-payments should be made.
 For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ... .. 8s. 6d.
 .. Six Months ditto ditto ... .. 4s. 6d.
 .. Three Months ditto ditto ... .. 2s. 6d.
 To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage ... .. 11s. 6d.

London:
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
 St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

NOW READY.
BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.
 SIXTY-FIRST YEAR OF ISSUE OF
 ANNUAL CATALOGUE.
THE
ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS
FOR THE YEAR 1897.
 Royal 8vo, pp. over 224, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

It contains a much longer List of Works than last year's Catalogue, including an addition of some 1,400 more Titles, but the price remains the same, viz., 5s. net, cloth limp; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES
 "The English Catalogue' is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast field of modern publications."—Daily News.
 "Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenaeum.
 "We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.
 "'The English Catalogue of Books' is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.
 "To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
 St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

V.R.I. 1837-1897.

THE ROYAL HOUSEHOLD, 1837-1897.

By W. A. LINDSAY, Q.C., Windsor Herald.

Crown 4to, 25s. net.

This unique work contains a complete list of all those persons who, during the sixty years of the Queen's reign, have had the honour of being in personal attendance upon Her Majesty, giving the dates of their service, together with a series of official notices, and biographies. It is thoroughly authentic and accurate, and Her Majesty has graciously accepted the first copy, expressing her pleasure at the work.

THE CATHEDRAL.

By J. K. HUYSMANS. Translated by CLARA BELL. With an Introduction by C. KEGAN PAUL.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Now ready.]

"This long-expected book is out at last, and bids fair to attract as much attention as its predecessors.....It would be idle to deny that M. Huysmans presents some of the characteristics of a great artist.....His picture of the cathedral stands out with the force and delicacy of a nocturne by Mr. Whistler."—Academy.

AN INDEX TO THE EARLY PRINTED BOOKS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

From the Invention of Printing to the Year MD.

With Notes of those in the Bodleian Library.

By ROBERT PROCTOR.

In FOUR PARTS.—I. Books printed in Germany.—II. Italy.—III. France, Netherlands, England, and Spain.—IV. The Tables.

In stiff wrappers, £2 10s. In single Parts: size, imperial 8vo, 16s. Complete in Roxburghs binding, £3.

Part I., GERMANY, 16s. net.

[Now ready.]

THE ARTISTS and ENGRAVERS of BRITISH and AMERICAN BOOK PLATES. By H. W. Fincham, Vice-

President, Ex-Libris Society. Edition limited to 1,050 Copies for England and America. With Examples by C. W. Sherborn, E. D. French, Aubrey Beardsley, and others. £1 1s. net. Large-Paper Edition, limited to 50 Copies (all sold). An Edition, limited to 15 Copies, with duplicate Plates on Japanese Vellum, and containing, as a Frontispiece, the Book-Plate of H.R.H. the Duchess of York, by C. W. Sherborn, £10 10s. net.

"Mr. Fincham's book will remain the standard work for years to come."—Notes and Queries.

A STUDY OF ETCHING.

ETCHING, ENGRAVING, and other METHODS of PRINTING PICTURES. By William Strang and Dr. Singer.

Crown 4to, illustrated, 15s. net.

A practical, technical, and historical account of the Art of Etching and the allied Processes. With 10 Original Plates by the Author, each illustrating a different process, and 4 Illustrations, also executed by Mr. Strang.

Also a Special Edition, with Plates signed by the Author, 42s. net.

"Those who are alive to the fascination of fine prints will find much to engage their attention in the intelligent discussion of their hobby that is provided in the present work."—Morning Post.

BY MR. AUSTIN DOBSON.

WILLIAM HOGARTH. An entirely New Edition, largely added to and Revised, with a Full Bibliography of Works relating to Hogarth, Catalogues of his Pictures and Engravings, and Reproductions of his Masterpieces. Royal 8vo, 12s.

"It is a model of what such a work should be."—Times.

THE HISTORY of GREECE, and of the GREEK PEOPLE, from the Earliest Times to the Roman Conquest. By

VICTOR DURUY, Author of "The History of Rome," &c. Translated and Edited by M. M. RIPLEY, with an Introduction by J. P. MAHAFFY, Author of "Social Life in Greece," &c., &c. Containing over 2,000 Engravings, including numerous Maps, Plans, and Coloured Plates. Complete in 8 volumes, £8 8s.

THE "WOLSELEY SERIES."—Edited by Captain JAMES, late R.E.

SET BY THE NEW MONOTYPE MACHINE.

INDIAN FRONTIER WARFARE. By Major G. J. Younghusband, Author of "The Relief of Chitral." Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Major Younghusband's book is written throughout in a practical and soldier-like style which makes it distinctly attractive. To the officers of the army its lessons are directly important, and the large class which is keenly interested in our frontier wars will here find an excellent account of the difficult and peculiar conditions in which British troops have so often and so successfully fought."—Times.

LETTERS on STRATEGY. By the late Prince Kraftzu Hohenlohe-Ingelfingen. With Maps. Demy 8vo, 2 vols., 30s.

"A work of indisputable excellence.....May prove of incalculable value to this country."—Broad Arrow.

[Now ready.]

SIDE LIGHTS on NATURE in QUILL and CRAYON: a Book of Descriptive and Picturesque Papers on Rural Life.

By E. T. EDWARDS. With 23 Illustrations by G. C. Haité. Crown 8vo, 6s.

No black-and-white artist excels Mr. Haité in giving life to the simple charms of an English country-side, and the graceful prose of Mr. Edwards is admirably suited by the accompaniment of Mr. Haité's pencil.

[Immediately]

THE PAMPHLET LIBRARY.—Edited by ARTHUR WAUGH.

RELIGIOUS PAMPHLETS: Selected and Arranged, with an Introduction and Notes, by the Rev. Percy Dearmer, late of Christ Church, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"His selection covers the main features of religious controversy in England..... An excellent introduction."—Times.

[Now ready.]

A ROMAN EIRENICON.

STEPS TOWARDS REUNION. By the Rev. J. Duggan, Author of "The Life of Christ." Crown 8vo, 6s.

Mr. GLEADSTONE writes: "I take the liberty of sending you my cordial thanks for a work which I have begun at once, and which appears to be conceived in so large and just a spirit."

"I should be glad..... to see the volume in the possession of every Anglican and Roman priest in England."—Church Review.

"What the Vatican will say to this manifesto we do not know. Nothing it can say or do will, however, destroy its significance."—Christian World.

THE MANUAL of CATHOLIC THEOLOGY. By the Rev. THOMAS B. SCANNELL and the Rev. JOSEPH WILHELM, D.D. Vol. V. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

[Ready shortly.]

A HISTORY of CANADA. By Prof. Charles G. D. Roberts,

Demy 8vo, 493 pp., 10s. 6d. With a Chronological Chart, a Map of the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland, and an Appendix giving the North American and Imperial Acts in full.

PICTURES of RUSSIAN HISTORY. By Prince Serge WOLKOWSKY. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THREE VOLUMES OF VERSE.

WROXALL ABBEY, and other Poems. By David DAVENPORT. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

TERRA TENEBRARUM: Love's Jest Book, and other Verses. By WILLIAM KNOX JOHNSON. Fcap. 8vo.

FROM an INDIAN COLLEGE. By J. G. Jennings. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Weeks in Egypt." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
 "Pleasantly written."—British Review. "Simply written and spirited."—Scotsman.
 "This record of a tour in Greece is pleasant, enjoyable, and instructive reading."—Cook's Excursionist.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LTD., Paternoster House, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

THE VICTORIAN ERA SERIES.

Under the General Editorship of

J. HOLLAND ROSE, M.A.

In Monthly Volumes, price 2s. 6d. each.

ON TUESDAY NEXT.

The GROWTH and ADMINISTRATION

of the BRITISH COLONIES, 1837-1897. By the Rev. W. P. GRESWELL, M.A., Author of "Africa South of the Zambesi," "History of the Dominion of Canada," &c.

VOLUMES PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

CHARLES DICKENS: a Critical Study.

By GEORGE GISSEN.
"A remarkably complete and careful study. In point of thoroughness and fairness it is one of the very best books written by one man of letters on another that we have read."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"An admirable little book. I wish it no worse fortune than that to be read by a twentieth part of Dickens's public."—Mr. W. E. HENLEY in the Outlook.

JOHN BRIGHT. By C. A. Vince, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge.

"An excellent little life of Bright, with a chapter on Bright's oratory which is admirable and most remarkable."—Athenæum.

"A remarkable success.....It is a model of what such a sketch should be."—Academy.

THE ANGLICAN REVIVAL. By J. H. OVERTON, D.D., Rector of Epworth and Canon of Lincoln.

"We can highly recommend this able history of Canon Overton's, and we hope it may clear the minds of many as to the history of the Anglican revival."—Church Review.

THE RISE OF DEMOCRACY. By J. HOLLAND ROSE, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge.

"Many books have been written on different branches or aspects of this subject during the last few years, but we can recall none that treats the period before and after Chartism with a fuller knowledge or with a clearer eye for the points at issue."—Times.

LONDON: BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS
To "THE ACADEMY."

The following have appeared, and the numbers containing them can still be obtained:—

|                                    | 1896.    | 1897. |
|------------------------------------|----------|-------|
| BEN JONSON ... ..                  | November | 14    |
| JOHN KEATS ... ..                  | "        | 21    |
| SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... ..           | "        | 28    |
| TOM HOOD ... ..                    | December | 5     |
| THOMAS GRAY ... ..                 | "        | 12    |
| ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON ... ..      | "        | 19    |
| SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..            | "        | 26    |
| SAMUEL RICHARDSON ... ..           | January  | 2     |
| THOMAS DE QUINCEY ... ..           | "        | 9     |
| LEIGH HUNT ... ..                  | "        | 16    |
| LORD MACAULAY ... ..               | "        | 23    |
| ROBERT SOUTHEY ... ..              | "        | 30    |
| S. T. COLERIDGE... ..              | February | 6     |
| CHARLES LAMB ... ..                | "        | 13    |
| MICHAEL DRAYTON ... ..             | "        | 20    |
| WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR... ..         | "        | 27    |
| SAMUEL PEPYS ... ..                | March    | 6     |
| EDMUND WALLER ... ..               | "        | 13    |
| WILKIE COLLINS ... ..              | "        | 20    |
| JOHN MILTON ... ..                 | "        | 27    |
| WILLIAM COWPER ... ..              | April    | 3     |
| CHARLES DARWIN ... ..              | "        | 10    |
| ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ... ..       | "        | 17    |
| HENRY WADSWORTH LONG-FELLOW ... .. | "        | 24    |
| ANDREW MARVELL ... ..              | May      | 1     |
| ROBERT BROWNING ... ..             | "        | 8     |
| THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..              | "        | 15    |
| PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... ..        | "        | 22    |
| CHARLES DICKENS ... ..             | "        | 29    |
| JONATHAN SWIFT ... ..              | June     | 5     |
| WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY ... .. | "        | 12    |
| WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..               | "        | 19    |
| SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..          | "        | 26    |
| ALEXANDER POPE ... ..              | July     | 3     |
| DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..             | "        | 10    |
| FRANCIS BACON ... ..               | "        | 17    |

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

NOTICE.—Messrs. METHUEN have just published an important work of Travel and Adventure, THREE YEARS in SAVAGE AFRICA, by LIONEL DECLE, with 100 Illustrations and 5 Maps, demy 8vo, 21s. This book contains a long Introduction by H. M. STANLEY, M.P.

A FRONTIER CAMPAIGN. By Viscount FINCASTLE, V.C., and Lieutenant P. C. ELIOTT-LOCKHART. With a Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.
A narrative of the recent operations of the Field Forces on the North-West Frontier.

THE WEST AFRICAN CRISIS. CAMPAIGNING on the UPPER NILE and NIGER. By Lieutenant SEYMOUR VANDELEUR. With an Introduction by Sir G. GOLDIE. With 4 Maps, Illustrations, and Plans. Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.
A Narrative of Service (1) on the Upper Nile in 1895 and 1896; and (2) under Sir George Goldie in the Niger Campaign of January, 1897, describing the Capture of Bida and Ilorin, and the French Occupation of Bousa. The Book thus deals with the Two Districts of Africa where now the French and English stand face to face.

THE NIGER SOURCES. By Colonel J. TROTTER, R.A. With a Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Replete with valuable information. The map is really excellent."—Athenæum.
"A very valuable narrative."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"The subject-matter is so topical at present, and the range of new ground covered is so considerable, that the pages could not be dull."—Daily Telegraph. "A very interesting account."—Standard.

EXPLORATION and HUNTING in CENTRAL AFRICA. By Major A. ST. H. GIBBONS, F.R.G.S. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by O. Whymper, 25 Photographs, and a Map. Demy 8vo, 15s.
"A grand record of quiet, tactful resolution. His adventures were as various as his sporting exploits are exciting."—Times.
"A manly narrative."—Leeds Mercury. "Of great and varied interest."—Glasgow Herald.

A HISTORY of the GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY, 1845-95. By CHARLES H. GRINLINO. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.
"The only adequate history of a great English railway that has as yet appeared."—Times.
"An excellent history, full of valuable information."—Glasgow Herald.
"Admirably written, and crammed with interesting facts."—Daily Mail.
"An extremely brilliant history."—Leeds Mercury. "Told with extraordinary skill and charm."—Yorkshire Post.

ANARCHISM. By E. V. ZENKER. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.
A critical study and history, as well as a trenchant criticism of the Anarchist movement in Europe.
"A most important contribution to the subject."—Scotsman.

THE ODES and EPODES of HORACE. Translated by A. D. GODLEY, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 2s.
[CLASSICAL TRANSLATIONS.]

DISCIPLINE and LAW: some Lenten Addresses. By H. H. HENSON, B.D., Fellow of All Souls' Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE HOLY SACRIFICE. By F. WESTON, M.A., Curate of St. Matthew's, Westminster. Pott 8vo, 1s.
A small volume of devotions at the Holy Communion, especially adapted to the needs of servers and of those who do not communicate.

THE CHURCHMAN'S LIBRARY. SOME NEW TESTAMENT PROBLEMS. By ARTHUR WRIGHT, Fellow and Tutor of Queen's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s.
This book deals with a number of important problems from the standpoint of the "Higher Criticism."

LEADERS OF RELIGION. THOMAS CRANMER. By A. J. MASON, D.D., Canon of Canterbury. With a Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE LIBRARY OF DEVOTION. THE CONFESSIONS of ST. AUGUSTINE. Newly Translated, with an Introduction and Notes by C. BIGG, D.D., late Student of Christ Church. Pott 8vo, 2s.; leather, 3s.

FICTION.

SONS of ADVERSITY. By L. COPE CORNFORD, Author of "Captain Jacobus." Crown 8vo, 6s.
[March 29.]
BETWEEN SUN and SAND. By W. C. SCULLY, Author of "The White Hecatomb." Crown 8vo, 6s.
[March 21.]

THE FIRST LARGE EDITION HAVING BEEN EXHAUSTED, THE SECOND IS IN THE PRESS. SIMON DALE. By ANTHONY HOPE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"A brilliant novel. The hero is a perfect hero of romance."—Athenæum.
"The style is virile and distinguished, and the whole tale most entertaining reading."—St. James's Gazette.
"The dialogue is so alert, the spirit of the actors so indomitable, and all so charmingly told."—World.
"The dialogue is witty and brilliant. The picture of Nell Gwynne is full of life and colour."—Westminster Gazette

A VOYAGE of CONSOLATION. By SARA JEANETTE DUNCAN, Author of "An American Girl in London." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE VINTAGE. By E. F. BENSON, Author of "Dodo." Illustrated by G. P. Jacob-Hood. Crown 8vo, 6s. A Romance of the Greek War of Independence.
[Second Edition.]
"The leading characters stand out and the love story is told with charm and delicacy."—Westminster Gazette.
"An excellent piece of romantic literature; a very graceful and moving story."—Saturday Review.
"The book is full of vivid detail."—Daily Telegraph. "A notable achievement."—Standard.
"Mr. Benson is to be heartily congratulated."—Glasgow Herald.

TRAITS and CONFIDENCES. By the Hon. EMILY LAWLESS, Author of "Hurrish," "Maelcho," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"A book which is not lacking in the characteristic excellences of Miss Lawless's more elaborate works."—Scotsman.
"Full of delicate spirit."—Pall Mall Gazette. "Singularly clever."—Truth.

THE KLOOF BRIDE. By ERNEST GLANVILLE, Author of "The Fossicker." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. A Story of South African Adventure.

JOSIAH'S WIFE. By NORMA LORIMER. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"A witty and interesting book. Josiah is a noble character, and Camela is bewitching."—Queen.
"A well-told story."—Daily Chronicle. "Written in a bright and witty style."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"It has literary finish and deep feeling."—Daily Mail.

Messrs. METHUEN'S CATALOGUE and NEW BOOK GAZETTE sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

DAVID NUTT, 270, 271, STRAND, LONDON.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

MARCH, 1898.—Net 1s. 6d.

E. B. MAYOR.—Ancient Views on the Reasoning Faculty in Dogs.

SOUTER.—Greek Metrical Inscriptions from Phrygia.

ARDY WILLIAMS.—The Notes Mesc and Hypate in Greek Music.

C. ELMER.—Aorist Injunctive in Latin.

ARNON BARTLETT.—Note on De Vita Contemplativa, 483, 46.

L. AGAR.—Homericæ.

NICKLIN.—Note on Hor. Od. ii. 17, 29.

Tray's Greek Literature. A. W. VERRALL.

nell's Greek Cults. W. M. RAMSAY.

Merchant's Thucydides. J. I. BEARE.

Wiley's Alcestis. H. W. HAYLEY.

Sisius's Babrius. R. ELLIS.

Wiley's Encyclopædia. J. E. SANDYS.

Notes on Bacchylides (18 pages). R. C. JEBB,

F. G. KENYON, A. PLATT, H. RICHARDS,

A. E. HOUSMAN, JANE E. HARRISON.

Notes on Menander's Terepþos. T. L. AGAR.

LAVERFIELD.—Note on a Roman Shoe found at Birdoswald.

BURY.—The Polyzalus Bronze.

Palmer's Sculptured Tombs of Hellas. A. H. SMITH.

JUST OUT, AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES.

WELSH BALLADS, and Other Poems. By ERNEST RHYS. Crown 8vo, fancy boards, 3s. 6d.

GOETHE'S CLAVIGO. Translated by MEMBERS of the ENGLISH GOETHE SOCIETY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SIR HUDSON LOWE and NAPOLEON. By R. C. SEATON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

GOSSIP from a MUSEUM ROOM. Being Passages in the Lives of Anne and Mary Fitton. Edited by Lady NEWDIENTATE-NEWDEGATE. Small 4to, printed on hand-made paper, and illustrated by Photogravure Reproductions of Portraits in the Gallery at Arbury, bound in buckram, gilt, net 7s. 6d.

* In this second edition the spelling of the letters, reproduced literatim in the first edition, is modernised. An appendix discusses the authenticity of the Fitton portraits at Arbury.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY.

POEMS. By William Ernest

HENLEY. First Collected Edition. Comprising the Matter of his Previous Volumes, "A Book of Verses" and "London Voluntaries," with Omissions, Additions, and Changes. Small demy 8vo, printed at the Constable Press on special paper, with Photogravure of the Author's Bust by Rodin, cloth, top gilt, 6s.

FIRST PRESS NOTICES.

"The brilliancy of Mr. Henley's versatile work in prose, not only as a journalist, but as the chronicler of Byron and the candid critic of Burns, has perhaps made us a little forgetful of the great excellence of his poetry.....His note, too, is the poignant note of actual experience; and this experience that has learned in suffering what it here teaches in song is not revealed only in those astonishingly vivid records, 'In Hospital'; nor in the lighter personal lyrics of 'Echoes'; but also in the poet's wide and catholic vision of the elemental things of Life and Death."—Morning Post.

"Years of dogged and unflinching struggle—mid illness, neglect, and bereavement—have brought William Ernest Henley late in life his meed of fame and distinction. This most luminous and incisive of contemporary critics, this most plangent and representative of modern poets, is scarcely less a living classic than Algernon Swinburne or George Meredith."—Echo.

"The book, small as it is, is large enough to give its author a high place among the poets of the world. From beginning to end there is no line too much; one only regrets the sentence of exile passed upon some old, familiar numbers."—Daily Telegraph.

"It is somewhat difficult to understand why Mr. Henley's extremely strong and natural poetical qualities should have remained so long the admiration of a comparatively small band of admirers in a period when poetical fame seems won with little waiting. A great deal of Mr. Henley's late work is of the best which the time has given us. It is the voice of a great primitive personality."—Sun.

The First Large Edition of Mr. Henley's "Poems" went out of print in a fortnight.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

VIEWS and REVIEWS.

Essays in Appreciation: Literature. Second Edition. Printed at the Constable Press. 12mo, cloth, top gilt, net 5s.

THE NEW QUEST. By Angus

ROTHERHAM. Demy 8vo, printed at the Merrymount Press on laid paper with deckle edges, bound in parchment and buckram, 6s.

"Couched in language of the same mystical simplicity as the 'Pilgrim's Progress'..... But whereas Bunyan's hero made a journey from this world to the next, Mr. Rotherham's questing pilgrim goes away from the Castle of the Crown of Thorns to wander through a world of philosophies, creeds, doctrines, and what not, until he returns again, at the end of the journey, to the same place as he set out from in the beginning. The work challenges a dangerous comparison..... But it has piety, a cleverness in handling allegory, and even imagination of a tenuous sort that lends poetical grace to the many windings of the fable."—Scotsman.

WORDSWORTH (WILLIAM).

Poems in Two Volumes. 1807. (A verbatim et literatim Reprint of the Original Edition.) Edited, with a Note on the Wordsworthian Sonnet, and Copious Explanatory Notes, by TH. HUTCHINSON. 2 vols., 12mo, half-buckram, net, 7s. 6d.

"One of the most satisfactory of recent books..... The reprint..... appears to be as near perfection, in both accuracy and good looks, as can be expected of finite printers and proof-readers. The editing is simply admirable. Mr. Hutchinson, probably the best Wordsworthian alive, has contributed an elaborate introduction, which is both learned and readable, a brief essay on Wordsworth's sonnets, especially from the technical point of view, and a valuable body of notes. In the introduction and notes Mr. Hutchinson lays particular stress on Wordsworth's constant alterations in his verses, and discusses, with keen discrimination, the significance of these changes, as well as their felicity."—Nation (New York).

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AMOS JUDD."

GLORIA VICTIS: a Modern

Romance. By J. A. MITCHELL. Crown 8vo, 268 pp., 12mo, cloth, top gilt, 3s. 6d.

"A very readable story, with fitting phases of excitement and romance."—Scotsman.

"An engrossing little story."—Academy.

The CONSTITUTION and ADMINISTRATION of the UNITED STATES.

By BENJAMIN F. HARRISON, Ex-President. Cr. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.; or in paper wrapper, 2s. 6d.

"* The only authoritative exposition in small compass of the governing system of the United States of America. The author's position enables him to speak with authority on many points not yet dealt with by constitutional writers, and also to give a vivid and interesting account of the routine of presidential work. "The Constitution of the United States of America," not otherwise accessible in a handy form, is reprinted as an Appendix.

"As a popular account of how the United States is governed nothing can be better than this careful and sometimes humorous work."—Glasgow Herald.

MR. LANG'S TRANSLATION OF "AUCASSIN AND NICOLETTE."

AUCASSIN and NICOLETTE.

Translated by ANDREW LANG. Cheap Edition. 1s.

"* The Publisher has had 100 copies of Mr. Lang's exquisite version of this masterpiece of mediæval literature struck off on the finest Whatman paper for collectors. Price 5s. net. No other special issue of this edition, nearly all the copies of which have been taken up, will be made.

MR. PRESTAGE'S TRANSLATION OF "THE LETTERS OF A PORTUGUESE NUN."

THE LETTERS of a PORTUGUESE NUN.

Translated by EDGAR PRESTAGE. Cheap Edition. 1s.

"* Mr. Prestage's version of these passionate and moving love-letters was warmly praised by competent critics when it first appeared three years ago. The present cheap reprint, which matches Mr. Lang's "Aucassin," places it within reach of all lovers of good literature and all interested in the psychology of love.

"A cheap but shapely re-issue of the famous love-letters, the most vivid and strenuous confessions of passion in literature."—Literary World.

"These letters have excited the pity and admiration of readers of every nation, and the translator is to be thanked for their issue in the present form."—Bath Chronicle.

"The most passionately eloquent love-letters ever penned."—Manchester Chronicle.

For Students of Wagner and Subscribers to the Niebelungen Cycle at Covent Garden.

The LEGENDS of the WAGNER

DRAMA. By JESSIE L. WESTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, top gilt, 6s.

"* The only English work which gives a full, scholarly, and attractive account of the great romantic legends upon which Wagner based his operas—the "Ring des Niebelungen," "Parsifal," "Tristan und Isolde," "Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser—indispensable to the student who wishes to see clearly Wagner's relation to his sources.

THE STORIES of WAGNER'S

"RING des NIEBELUNGEN" and "PARSIFAL." By W. F. SHEPPARD. Crown 8vo, 1s.

"* An admirable brief guide to Wagner's longest and most difficult works.

TRISTAN and ISOLDE. By

RICHARD WAGNER. Translated by ALFRED FORMAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

"* The most faithful and spirited version of the poem. Its merits were cordially acknowledged by Wagner himself.

SKEFFINGTONS' NEW NOVELS, &amp;c.

THIS DAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

ERNEST G. HENHAM'S NEW NOVEL.*TENEBRAE.

N.B.—The Third Edition of Mr. HENHAM'S last Novel, "MENOTAI," now ready, price 6s.

THIS DAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

FERGUS HUME'S NEW NOVEL.*HAGAR OF THE PAWNSHOP.

THIS DAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

With Frontispiece by HAL LUDLOW.

NEW NOVEL BY A. ST. JOHN ADCOCK,
Author of "East End Idylls," &c.

THE CONSECRATION OF HETTY FLEET.

THIS DAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

With Frontispiece by JOHN WILLIAMSON.

UNDER ONE COVER.

An entirely New Collection of really striking Stories (including specially written new story by BARING GOULD; also three long Stories by RICHARD MARSH, Author of "The Beetle"; and two Stories by E. G. HENHAM), many of them specially written for this work by

S. BARING-GOULD,
FERGUS HUME,
RICHARD MARSH,
ERNEST G. HENHAM,
A. ST. JOHN ADCOCK,
ANDREW MERRY.

THIS DAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

CHARLES H. EDEN'S NEW BOOK.*BUNTHORNE: the Story of a Fool*BY ATHOL FORBES.

THIS DAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

CASSOCK AND COMEDY.*The Humorous Side of Clerical Life.

A Series of Most Amusing, Interesting, and Original Anecdotes and Records of the Author's Personal Experiences and of Clerical Life and Work. Among the Chapters are:—

BABIES AND BAPTISM—THE HUMOURS OF MARRIAGE—THE HUMOURS OF FUNERALS—THE HUMOURS OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL—THE HUMOURS OF PREACHERS AND PREACHING—PUTTING IN THE BANNS—THE HUMOURS OF VISITING—CHURCH WORKERS AND THEIR ECCENTRICITIES—CONCERNING CHURCHWARDENS AND VESTRY MEETINGS—OUR ORGANISTS—NEW CURATES AND THEIR FAULTS.

EIGHTH THOUSAND.

With Frontispiece by HAL LUDLOW. Crown 8vo, price 6s.
GUY BOOTHBY'S

SHEILAH McLEOD: a Novel.

The most Weird Story published for many a day.

A NEW NOVEL BY RICHARD MARSH.

FOURTH EDITION. Price 6s.

With Illustrations by JOHN WILLIAMSON.

THE BEETLE: a Mystery.

London: SKEFFINGTON & SON,
163, Piccadilly, W.

Publishers to H.M. the Queen, and to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER'S SPRING LIST.

LEADERS IN LITERATURE.

Emerson—Carlyle and Emerson: a Comparison—Lowell—George Eliot—Mrs. Browning—Robert Browning—Matthew Arnold—Herbert Spencer—John Ruskin. By P. WILSON, M.A. Cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [Nearly Ready.]

NEW SERIES OF SHILLING COPYRIGHT NOVELS.

The First Volume will be
BY REEDS AND RUSHES. By ESME STUART. Cloth extra, 1s. [Nearly Ready.]

BY DR. WHYTE.

FATHER JOHN of the GREEK CHURCH: an Appreciation, with some Characteristic Passages of his Mystical and Spiritual Autobiography. Collected and Arranged by ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 2s.

BY R. S. DUFF, D.D.

THE SONG of the SHEPHERD: Meditations on the Twenty-third Psalm. By R. S. DUFF, D.D., Minister of Free St. George's Church, Glasgow. Post 8vo, art vellum, 2s. 6d.

BY NEWELL D. HILLIS.

THE INVESTMENT of INFLUENCE: a Study of Social Sympathy and Service. By NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS, Author of "A Man's Value to Society." Post 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

BY J. T. FORBES, M.A.

GOD'S MEASURE, and other Sermons. By the Rev. J. T. FORBES, M.A., of Dublin Street Baptist Church, Edinburgh. Post 8vo, art vellum, 2s. 6d.

FOURTH AND CHEAPER EDITION.

PARDON and ASSURANCE. By the late Rev. WILLIAM J. PATTON, Dromara, co. Down. Edited, with a Biographical Sketch, by the Rev. JOHN M'ILVEEN, B.A. With Portrait, 2s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

INEBRIETY: Its Source, Prevention, and Cure. By CHARLES FOLLEN PALMER. Price 1s.

FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES.—NEW VOLS.

Each 1s. 6d., cloth; with gilt top, 2s. 6d.

JAMES THOMSON, the Author of "Rule Britannia," "The Seasons," &c. By WILLIAM BAYNE.

ROBERT FERGUSON. By Dr. A. B. GROSART.

The SCOTSMAN says: "The book will be welcomed as a worthy addition to that wonderfully entertaining and instructive series of biographies, the 'Famous Scots.'"

SIR WALTER SCOTT. By Prof. GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

List of the FAMOUS SCOTS Series post free.

A SECOND EDITION IS NOW READY OF

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS. By Rev. GEORGE JACKSON, B.A., of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission, Edinburgh. Price 2s. 6d., cloth.

THE FAR EAST—BOOKS TO READ.

A CYCLE of CATHAY: China, South and North, with Personal Reminiscences. By W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D., ex-President Emeritus of the Imperial Tanguen College, Peking. With Map and Numerous Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

TIMES.—"It is perhaps the most valuable contribution that has been made to our knowledge of China in recent years."

THE GIST of JAPAN: the Islands, their People, and Missions. By Rev. R. B. PEERY, A.M. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. 5s.

ATHENÆUM.—"Mr. Peery's volume portrays with admirable truth and justice the Japanese people."

OLIPHANT'S NEW UNIFORM EDITIONS OF

ANNIE S. SWAN'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt back and side, price 3s. 6d. each.

SHEILA.*THE GATES of EDEN. With Portrait.THE GUINEA STAMP.*BRIAR and PALM.*MATTLAND of LAURIESTON.*ST. VEDA'S.*A LOST IDEAL.*WHO SHALL SERVE?

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, Paternoster Square, and Edinburgh.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVEL BY ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

PLAIN LIVING: A Bush Idyll.

By ROLF BOLDREWOOD,

Author of "Robbery under Arms," "The Miner's Right," &c.

ACADEMY.—"A hearty story deriving charm from the odours of the bush, and the bleating of incalculable sheep."

DAILY MAIL.—"One of the lightest, brightest, and most social of stories."

NEW BOOK BY THE LATE
LEWIS CARROLL.THREE SUNSETS, and other

Poems. By LEWIS CARROLL. With Twelve

Fairy-Fancies by E. GERTRUDE THOMSON.

Fcap. 4to, cloth extra, gilt edges, 4s. net.

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

REASON and FAITH: a Reverie.

VOLUME VI. NOW READY.

THE EVERSLEY BIBLE.

Arranged in Paragraphs, with an Introduction, by J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. In 8 vols., to be published Monthly. Globe 8vo, 5s. each.

Volume VI. EZEKIEL to MALACHI.

** The Text is that of the Authorised Version.

GUARDIAN.—"In this form the Bible becomes as easy to read as any other book, and if only the experiment is once made they will find it at least as interesting as any other book."

THE MODERN READER'S BIBLE.

NEW VOLUME.

A Series of Works from the Sacred Scriptures presented in Modern Literary Form.

ST. MATTHEW and ST. MARK and the GENERAL EPISTLES. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A. Camb., Ph.D. Penn. Post 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Text of the Revised Version is used by special permission of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

GUARDIAN.—"We believe that Professor Moulton's series will be useful as furnishing the ordinary English reader with a clear view of the sequence of Jewish history. And the sections into which the text is divided seem to be judiciously marked with a view to calling attention to the structure of the books."

THE MARCH NUMBER of

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d.

CONTAINS:

THE RIVER TRIP TO THE KLONDIKE

By JOHN SIDNEY WEBB.

WITH THE DEAD.

By I. ZANGWILL.

THE MAMMOTH CAVE OF KENTUCKY.

By JOHN R. PROCTER.

&amp;c. &amp;c. &amp;c.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LTD., LONDON.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS :                              | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| Zola ... ..                            | 279     |
| Mr. Gissing on Dickens ... ..          | 280     |
| Not to be Read at All... ..            | 281     |
| Facile Emotions ... ..                 | 281     |
| Agreeable Gossip ... ..                | 282     |
| Britons Abroad ... ..                  | 282     |
| REFER MENTION ... ..                   | 283     |
| NOTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..               | 285-288 |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..                  | 280     |
| SMILET AND "WE BERLINERS" ... ..       | 292     |
| E. MEEDEDITH'S ODE ... ..              | 293     |
| WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: XI, A WIFE... .. | 293     |
| THE WEEK ... ..                        | 294     |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..                 | 295     |
| CORRESPONDENCE ... ..                  | 295     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..           | 297     |
| BOOKS RECEIVED... ..                   | 298     |

REVIEWS.

ZOLA.

Paris. By Emile Zola. Translated by Ernest Alfred Vizetelly. (London: Chatto & Windus.)

ZOLA'S trial and sentence on the eve of the publication of Paris is one of those happy accidents, a kind of answering signal or omen, by which Life unexpectedly reveals the true import of a man's life-work, and the exact significance of his figure to his age. When a great writer suddenly leaves his lofty and privileged post of vantage, the guarded window where is conceded to him the right of theorising on the life spreading death him, and when he mixes with the crowd in the streets, we sometimes have this copy unlooked-for flare from Life itself answering the man—as we see in Hugo's Le Coup d'Etat, his exile, and Les Citiments answered by Sedan; and in Tostoi's life the long search for a moral basis in Nature, that his novels exhibit, is answered by his personal struggles among the exploited and famine-stricken peasants with the crowning Petersburg society relief—Tolstoi is mad. And now in Zola's Paris we still have with us the shout of the crowd, "Conspuez Zola," and the buzz of the multitudinous little men—"Monstrous Society, Traitor to France, Suicide as a writer," and we await the turn of the wheel.

Meanwhile, Paris appears before us as a proclamation of the Zola doctrine, a testimony to the man's laborious honesty in the main purpose of his life-work. It comes as a remarkable document to the critic, as summarising the "naturalistic" method, and showing more clearly than ever the power and limitations of that "death-note" method in art.

The central idea of Paris is all the contents of the book. As the essence of Zola's talent is his power of drawing strong abstract conclusions from the concrete examples of his forty note-books, so in Paris he finds all the panorama of the city's life is viewed in relation to the immense struggle going on in France between Capitalism and the Socialistic idea. In Zola's view the anarchist peril is the logical outcome of the corruption of the national life by the excessive power placed in the hands of Capital by the régime of the middle class. Parliament is at the mercy of financiers and professional politicians, who use it for private ends, and thereby corrupt and weaken the people from top to bottom. The Panama scandals and the appearance of Ravachol are as cause and effect; but while the people are growing more and more sick of the vicious circle France is turning in, Society can give birth to no new ideal for the nation to work by. In science, education, love of justice, and hatred of sham lies the only hope of Society towards the fitting reorganisation of its life.

In this development of the central idea of Paris, Zola, however, has sacrificed every instinct of the true artist. The novel is a powerful and clever commentary on life—a piece of special pleading of great interest—but it is not life, and it is false to every principle of art. It is a novel with a purpose, and it carries out its purpose in most remorseless fashion. It is not life, because though Zola has searched for, and found, typical living figures, he has made those figures the puppets of his pre-ordained drama. Thus Guillaume Froment, the hero of the book, the great scientist with Anarchistic leanings, acts in a manner throughout false to the life of the actual scientist (well known to a certain international circle) who has served Zola for a model. Indeed, Guillaume's final appearance as the avenger or regenerator of Society by means of his discovery of a new terrible explosive which can blow up half a city, or work a motor engine, is a piece of sheer romanticism, which, coming in the guise of a minute study of social phenomena, is inartistic to the verge of comedy. So also Pierre Froment, the abbé, who is the horrified spectator of the public and private antics of deputies, Bourse jobbers, Anarchists, prime ministers, journalists and decadents, is merely an animated lay figure, very conveniently fortified with tours to Lourdes and Rome, on his mission to discover whether Christianity is, or is not, played out as a regenerative force in the life of civilisation.

All Zola's characters, in fact, in Paris are so carefully fitted into their limited spaces, thought-out actions, and manipulated  rôles  that the very term art can be applied to the novel only in a limited and secondary sense. Art is subordinated in Paris to the position of a humble servant, who runs to open the door and usher the characters, big and small, into the presence of the General Purpose, the big wirepuller, who in turn frowns at Art and keeps her severely in her place. In fact, just as La Débâcle and Dr. Pascal were mechanical novels, Paris is a mechanical novel, relieved, as was L'Argent, by the presence of a certain animus against corruption, which animus gives to the book its vitality and force. The Anarchists in Paris are figures true only to the typical conditions of their life, they are not true in themselves, and it is the same with the rest of the deputies and fashionable people described; all wear masks very carefully modelled and true to the detailed observation of the clever author who has seen his people go to and fro in the crowd of daily Parisian life; but all is external, the masks cannot change, there is little or no inner life, and so the reader is in reality never deeply stirred by what is shown him by Zola. He is interested, now a little moved or a little shocked, just as he would be if, while looking at a gathering of living people, a clever man of the world approached and whispered in his ear confidential secrets and remarkable facts about everybody's private life. But to go further, to admit us into the thought, the emotions of the people themselves is impossible for Zola. He stops short of being a great artist; he has always his General Plan to substitute for the mysterious living thing which eludes all generalisation and abstraction and theory, which glides away and vanishes under the fingers of the writers who are not content to give up their plan of observation, and simply follow life in its minutest manifestation and ceaseless evolution. Zola is not a great artist: he is a great writer, a very different thing. And his greatness consists in his intensely concentrated point of view, and his courage to execute what he sees.

His courage to execute what he sees! That is the very quality which has brought him at different times into sharp collision with the bourgeoisie of England and France. Admitting that Zola has "an original taint," as a great writer has expressed it, his power on his age has lain in his unflinching determination to exhibit and analyse all in modern life which Society endeavours to veil. Just as his coarse, crude, generalised pictures of life originally laid bare the rotteness of the Third Empire, so his action in the Dreyfus case has lately revealed the amazing power which the official pontiffs and military mandarins wield over an excited and hysterical France. But his courage to see and speak against the conventions and prejudices of French society touching justice, while deservedly applauded in England at the present day, was precisely what led English society only a few years back to imprison his luckless English publisher! The English view, that to exhibit the corruption of sexual morality is corruption itself, is pretty nearly balanced by the French view—that to exhibit the weakness of military justice is to be false to all traditions of patriotism. At bottom the two views are very similar: the English hate to have sexual morality examined at all; the French detest a man who casts a slur on their military glory. In both cases Society accuses the author of "corrupting" it, while he seeks only to show forth the corruption he has seen. And suddenly a significant flare from Life itself reveals the attitude of the man towards Society, and of Society towards the man.

We well remember an amusing little scene, between Zola and the English crowd, which we witnessed at the Guildhall some years ago. Zola was being lionised and fêted by a crowd of three thousand English citizens who cordially detested the great writer's books. The good bourgeoisie, the upholders of all the public and private moralities, were flocking round the Frenchman in pressing, curious crowds, whispering loudly: "That's he! That's the man," all anxious to catch sight of such an immoral writer. Zola turned his back deliberately on those excellent citizens, and gazed steadily with an interested air at the ceiling! He knew them, and he knew what they thought of him! At the present moment we have the rival bourgeoisie pelting the same man's doors with filth, and imprisoning him and his publisher together. Meanwhile, our English press and public solemnly applaud the great writer. But in both cases the imprisonment was meted out for the same offence—it was for the telling of inconvenient truths.

MR. GISSING ON DICKENS.

Charles Dickens. By George Gissing. "Victorian Era Series." (Blackie.)

THE intelligent reader will not be surprised to find Mr. Gissing making his bow, for the first time, as a critic and a critic of fiction. The author of New Grub Street has always shown himself preoccupied with art as well as life. His own creative method has been a conscious one, deliberately pursued, and from time to time he has let us see that the problems which the choice of a method inevitably raises are not without their considerable interest for him. Criticism has peeped out through the novels. The present book, however, is criticism pure and simple. Subject to the general plan of the "Victorian Era Series," which was intended to include in its record of the age "the life-work of its typical and influential men," it was probably open to Mr. Gissing to deal with his subject much as he pleased: and he has chosen to treat it mainly after the fashion of a "critical study," subordinating biography, except in so far as biography was necessary to formulate the conditions under which Dickens worked. We may as well say at once that Mr. Gissing's first essay in criticism seems to us quite unusually successful. He has, of course, something to learn. It would, perhaps, have been wiser, for instance, to have planned the book as a study in development, and to have avoided such an arbitrary arrangement of material and topics as the division under aspects, which he actually adopts, makes necessary. "Characterisation," "Satiric Portraiture," "Women and Children": these are the titles of three successive chapters, and it is a fine object-lesson in tautology and cross-division that they imply. And Mr. Gissing has, unfortunately, to struggle against a somewhat jerky and rough-hewn style, full of imperfectly related clauses and uglinesses of speech, which, if it does something to mar his novels, is to our mind even more offensive in a critical work. It is the lack of these two qualities, the architectural sense and the sense of the beautiful and the appropriate in language, that alone prevent Mr. Gissing's book from belonging to the first rank of critical literature. Nevertheless, Mr. Gissing's is thoroughly good criticism; primarily because it is the criticism of an expert, and an expert who has approached his subject at once with complete sympathy and with a clear perception of the very vital differences of method between his own work and that which he is examining. Mr. Gissing is by no means of Dickens's school; yet one feels that he writes of Dickens out of profound admiration and exhaustive knowledge; he has soaked himself in Dickens, and what he has to say is said at first-hand, without much reference to conventional criticisms.

It is, of course, precisely the difference in methods and ideals between critic and criticised that gives the performance its chief interest. Dickens and Mr. Gissing have just enough in common to make their essential divergence the more remarkable. The younger writer, like the older, finds his material mainly in the crowded life of the modern city, and mainly in those strata of city life which are formed by the so-called lower and middle classes. Yet between them there is a great gulf fixed. Since Dickens, the novelist has discovered that his work, too, is an art; he has become self-conscious; has set an austere ideal before him. In Dickens, as in the average novel-writer of his day, this development had hardly taken place. If he was self-conscious of anything, it was of a mission, rather than an art. In Mr. Gissing, on the other hand, through temperament and through training, the modern spirit finds very characteristic expression. His natural attitude to his material is that of a realism which to Dickens would have seemed uncalled for and undesirable. Mr. Gissing, however, is not so pre-occupied with his own methods as to be unable to enter with the requisite detachment into those of his predecessor; his discussion of Dickens's veracity is a fine as well as a searching piece of analysis.

The common objection of readers brought up in the modern school to Dickens is certainly his "unreality"; and this in face of the fact that he clearly regarded himself as a painter of real life:

"Had the word been in use he must necessarily have called himself a Realist. It is one of the biographical commonplaces concerning Dickens. Everyone knows how he excited himself over his writing, how he laughed and cried over his imaginary people, how he had all but made himself ill with grief over the death of little Nell or of Paul Dombey."

Even his grotesques—Quilp, Mantalini, Sam Weller—are intended for transcripts from real life, transcripts of its eccentrics. They are not acknowledged figments of the poetic imagination, like Don Quixote or the White Knight. Dickens's world is not confessedly a dream-world, or a world of romance. And yet with realism, as we now regard realism, the whole thing has patently nothing to do. In explaining this, Mr. Gissing would distinguish. The true "unreality" of a Dickens is an unreality of incident and plot. He is an incorrigible sentimentalist, who will never refuse to gladden his readers with a happy ending:

"Ah, those final chapters of Dickens! How eagerly they are read by the young, and with what a pleasant smile by elders who prize the good things of literature! No one is forgotten, and many an unsuspected bit of happiness calls aloud for gratitude to the author. Do you remember Mr. Mell, the underpaid and bullied usher in David Copperfield—the poor, broken-spirited fellow whose boots will not bear another mending—who uses an hour of liberty to visit his mother in the almshouse, and gladden her heart by piping sorry music on his flute? We lose sight of him, utterly; knowing only that he has been sent about his business after provoking the displeasure of the insolent lad Steerforth. Then, do you remember how, at the end of the book, David has news from Australia, delicious news about Mr. Micawber, and Mr. Gumidge, and sundry other people, and how in reading the colonial paper he suddenly comes upon the name of Dr. Mell, a distinguished man at the Antipodes? Who so stubborn a theorist that the kindly figment of the imagination does not please him? Who would prefer to learn the cold fact that Mell, the rejected usher, sank from stage to stage of wretchedness and died—uncertain which—in the street or the workhouse?"

Mr. Gissing, one gathers, would find the roots of this tendency in Dickens in the fact that Dickens's public liked happy endings, and that Dickens never conceived it to be his business to do other than gratify them. "In this respect a pure democrat, he believed, probably without ever reflecting upon it, that the approval of the people was necessarily the supreme in art." Nor was he in this doing violence to his own feelings. He shared to the full the preferences and the prejudices of his public. By temperament he was himself a genial optimist. "Nature made him the mouthpiece of his kind, in all that relates to simple emotions and homely thought." Mr. Gissing might have added here, that he had the theatrical instinct, as it is understood at the Adelphi strongly developed. It is surely the same order of ideas to which belongs the melodramatic tragedy of Bill Sikes or Jonas Chuzzlewit that infallibly turns the conclusion of every novel into the semblance of a Christmas-card.

Artificial and sentimental as Dickens's plots may be, Mr. Gissing does not incline to find the same qualities in his characterisation. Exceptions must be made: some of Dickens's characters remain shadowy; others, in particular the villains and other persons of strong passions, fail to convince, but for the great bulk Mr. Gissing would claim veracity in the highest sense. They are idealised, of course; in the lower sense, by the omission of features the contemplation of which would have been painful alike to the novelist and to his readers. To match Dickens's idealism at its best, Mr. Gissing would go to the creator of Falstaff and Dame Quickly and Juliet's Nurse. Take Mrs. Gamp, idealised, in every sense, otherwise she had been intolerable, but with the essential wonderfully retained.

"Vulgarity he leaves, that is of the essence of the matter; vulgarity unsurpassable is the note of Mrs. Gamp. Vileness, on the other hand, becomes grotesquerie, wonderfully converted into a subject of laughter. Her speech the basest ever heard from human tongue, by a process of infinite subtlety, which leaves it the same, yet not the same, is made an endless amusement, a source of quotation for laughing lips incapable of unclean utterance. . . . Do you ask for the Platonic idea of London's monthly nurse early in Queen Victoria's reign?

Dickens shows it you embodied. At such a thing as this, crawling between earth and heaven, what can one do but laugh? Its existence is a puzzle, a wonder. The class it represents shall be got rid of as speedily as possible; well and good, we cannot tolerate such a public nuisance. But the individual—so perfect a specimen—shall be preserved for all time by the magic of a great writer's deep-seated humour, and shall be known as Mrs. Samp."

Humour, no doubt, is the solvent, making possible and credible a far greater amount of idealism of whatever type than plain, straightforward portraiture will endure.

Mr. Gissing's chapters are full of matter, and we must needs leave most of it untouched. He defends the pathos of Dickens, even as it lapses itself in the death-beds of Paul Bombay and of Little Nell. Not "cheap" "mawkish," he declares, because not flagrantly untrue." Well, we would gladly break a lance with him here, but not at the g-end of an article. Besides, room must surely be found for the very curious passage in which, commenting upon Dickens's portraiture of middle-class women, Mr. Gissing suddenly breaks out into vehement declamation against the whole type dismissed:

"These remarkable creatures belong for the most part to one rank of life, that which we vaguely designate as the lower middle class. In general their circumstances are comfortable; they suffer no hardship—save that of birth, which they do not perceive as such; nothing is exacted of them but a quiet and amiable discharge of household duties—they are treated by their kindred with great, often with extraordinary, consideration. Yet their characteristic is acidity of temper and boundless pliance of querulous or insulting talk. The real business of their lives is to make all about them as uncomfortable as they can. Invariably they are unintelligent and untaught; very often they are flagrantly imbecile. Their very virtues (if such persons can be said to have any) become a scourge. In the high-ways and byways of life, by the fireside, and in the bed-chamber, their voices shrill upon the stifled ear. It is difficult to believe that death can stifle them; one imagines them upon the threshold of some other world, sounding confusion among unhappy spirits who hoped to have found peace."

No doubt this is the middle-class woman whom Mr. Gissing sees her; but has it much to do with Dickens? And if occasionally, shadowing it forth in humour, he draws such a picture, he certainly would not have subscribed to the further statement that "such women are a multitude no man can number; every other house in the cheap suburbs will be found to contain at least one specimen—very often two, for the advantage of quarrelling when men are not at hand." Can it be that this passage was really intended for one of Mr. Gissing's own novels, and that it has unwittingly got mixed up with his Dickens slips? In any case, it is out of the plane of a book remarkable, as a whole, for its sympathetic and tolerant attitude.

NOT TO BE READ AT ALL.

To be Read at Dusk, and Other Stories, Studies, and Sketches. By Charles Dickens. (Redway.)

THE reputation of Dickens may brave criticism and endure the stream of time, but it will not be exalted by such débâris as Mr. F. G. Kitton has unearthed from the pages of Household Words and elsewhere and collected under the title of To be Read at Dusk. The expiration of copyright seems to have rendered it possible for him to publish things which Dickens's responsible literary executors wisely left in oblivion. We are not grateful for so shameless a piece of book-making. These articles were mere journalism at best, by no means intended for a permanent existence. And the majority of them are quite unworthy of being paraded under the name of a great writer. The humour is worn very thin, so thin that you readily recognise the threads from which some middle-class humorists of our own day derive. The more serious pieces take Dickens quite out of his sphere. They are merely of the nature of leading articles on topics of the day. And to disinter the criticism of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood with its would-be funny description of Millais' "Carpenter's Shop," and its total want of artistic discernment or understanding, was a cruel thing.

FACILE EMOTIONS.

Songs of Love and Empire. By E. Nesbit. (Constable & Co.)

MISS NESBIT is not so easily summed up as are some of her sisters in poesy. She says so many conflicting things, offers so many changes of mood, that we are confused. And in A Pomander of Verse, her previous book, there were characteristics and excellences, not more than hinted at in the volume before us. There was a spring song, beginning, "The silver birch is a dainty lady," perfect in its simple way, and there were touches of ironical humour. Here it is mostly patriotism and plaintiveness, and we miss both the simplicity of the spring song and the ironical humour. More, we begin to doubt the author's sincerity. We begin to say, Has Miss Nesbit her own thoughts at all, or only sentimental ideals and memories? We know that she is quick to note Nature's changes, and sensitive to sun and gloom; but has she a point of view? has she a personality? Another book like the one before us we should say No; yet the memory of A Pomander of Verse convinces us that she has.

The new volume opens patriotically. When the Diamond Jubilee called for celebration, Miss Nesbit was at hand to celebrate it; and here is the result. Her loyalty is unimpugnably, and she has set it prettily enough to music. The rest of the book is given to Love, and all the joys and pains that surge in Love's wake. Miss Nesbit shows herself the comrade both of those that love and are gay and of those that love and are sorrowful. We do not say that she consoles; yet she indicates that she also has dwelt in the land of shadows, and as in mere companionship in adversity there is some consolation, it is possible for the disappointed to enjoy the grey delights of mutual grief as they read. But let them beware: Miss Nesbit's poems are dedicated to her husband!

Here are three stanzas of despair:

"Wide downs all gray, with gray of clouds roofed over,
Chill fields stripped naked of their gown of grain,
Small fields of rain-wet grass and close-grown clover,
Wet, wind-blown trees—and, over all, the rain.

Does memory lie? For Hope her missal closes

So far away the may and roses seem;
Ah! was there ever a garden red with roses?
Ah! were you ever mine save in a dream?

So long it is since Spring, the skylark waking Heard her own praises in his perfect strain;
Low hang the clouds, the sad year's heart is breaking,
And mine, my heart—and, over all, the rain."

A few lyrics as hopeless and as deftly turned as that, and the blighted reader dissolves away! Miss Nesbit is probably too much in the thrall of sentiment, too little disposed to fight against difficulties. To sing in the minor key is easier than to sing in the major, and therefore she does it; meaning, we suspect, only a small part of what she writes. Apparently a mood has only to present itself to be expressed in verse, whether genuine or spurious. We like her better, and trust her more, when the mood described is not her own, but another's, or Nature's—as in the following portrait:

"Like the sway of the silver birch in the breeze of dawn

Is her dainty way;
Like the gray of a twilight sky or a starlit lawn

Are her eyes of gray;
Like the clouds in their moving white
Is her breast's soft stir;
And white as the moon and bright
Is the soul of her.

Like murmur of woods in spring ere the leaves be green,

Like the voice of a bird
That sings by a stream that sings through the night unseen,
So her voice is heard.
And the secret her eyes withhold
In my soul abides,
For white as the moon and cold
Is the heart she hides."

Or as in those three fresh descriptive stanzas:

"The day was wild with wind and rain,
One grey wrapped sky and sea and shore,
It seemed our marsh would never again
Wear the rich robes that once it wore.
The scattered farns looked sad and chill,
Their sheltering trees writhed all awry,
And waves of mist broke on the hill
Where once the great sea thundered by.

When God remembered this His land,
This little land that is our own,
He caught the rain up in His hand,
He hid the winds behind His throne,
He soothed the fretful waves to rest,
He called the clouds to come away,
And, by blue pathways, to the west,
They went, like children tired of play.

And then God bade our marsh put on
Its holy vestment of fine gold;
From marge to marge the glory shone
On lichened farm and fence and fold;
In the gold sky that walled the west,
In each transfigured stone and tree,
The glory of God was manifest,
Plain for a little child to see!

And here is another poem that has some vigour. It stands distinct in the volume by reason of its suggestion of action, of which, as a rule, Miss Nesbit gives no hint. But here something is determined, done:

“Are you going for a soldier with your curly yellow hair.

And a scarlet coat instead of the smock you used to wear?

Are you going to drive the foe as you used to drive the plough?

Are you going for a soldier now?

I am going for a soldier, and my tunic is of red,

And I'm tired of woman's chatter, and I'll hear the drum instead;

I will break the fighting line as you broke your plighted vow,

For I'm going for a soldier now.

For a soldier, for a soldier are you sure that you will go,

To hear the drums a-beating and to hear the bugles blow?

I'll make you sweeter music, for I'll swear another vow—

Are you going for a soldier now?

I am going for a soldier if you'd twenty vows to make;

You must get another sweetheart, with another heart to break,

For I'm sick of lies and women, the barrow and the plough,

And I'm going for a soldier now!”

Miss Nesbit may give us more songs as good as that, and welcome. For invertibrate records of passing emotions, lachrymose and sentimental, we do not care. Blanche Amory's example is not a good one.

AGREEABLE GOSSIP.

Many Memories of Many People. By M. C. M. Simpson. (Edward Arnold.)

Mrs. SIMPSON was the daughter of Nassau Senior, and Senior knew most people worth knowing. Therefore, her book is full of interest to the lover of gossip and anecdote. It is impossible not to envy her. To have been tossed as a child in the arms of Archbishop Whateley, to have been a pet of Sydney Smith, to have grown up in the brilliant circle which gathered round the great Lord Lansdowne, to have been the friend of De Tocqueville, Ampère, the Grotes, and the Thackerays, to have known Cavour, Guizot, Rogers, Moore, Jenny Lind, Carlyle, and a long list of illustrious men and women; to have had, in fact, the cream of human society from childhood to old age, this is a lot given to few indeed. There is a delightful old-world touch about much of the book. Already those times are ancient history to us, the early Victorians recede into one perspective with the men of the later Georges and William IV.

One of Mrs. Simpson's earliest recollections is that she often, as a child, met the Princess Victoria in Kensington Gardens, and the Princess used to talk to her little brother. She sat in the Peers' Gallery when the Queen announced her marriage to Prince Albert, between the beautiful Lady Dufferin and a maid of honour; and she recalls “the Queen's sweet voice, and that the paper shook in her hand. By her side stood Lord Melbourne repeating inaudibly—we could see his lips move—every word she uttered.” She came, in her father's library, upon “a short, dark, stout gentleman,” whom her father called the Comte de Survilliers—otherwise the ex-King Joseph of Spain. He told Senior that his brother was “plutôt bon homme que grand homme.” In the summer evenings the ride in Rotten Row was the correct thing, for, as Mrs. Simpson says, everybody rode in those days, even bishops; and Delane of the Times, or Lord Lansdowne, would canter to the side of her father and herself. But this was before she came out. She gives the details of that coming out in a note, whence we rescue them; they have the fragrance of old lavender. She wore “a pale blue silk with what was called a Swiss bodice, the sleeves and front laced over white silk. If the party had been a ball I should have worn tarlatan, as young ladies never danced in silk. I had some wheat-ears, in silver and pearls, in my hair, which was in ringlets according to the fashion of the day. I followed my parents on the arm of Lord Glenelg, who had snow-white hair, and the people around whispered, ‘Spring and winter!’” It was at Lansdowne House, and the occasion was further marked by her introduction to Moore. Within the walls of Lansdowne House, Mario, Grisi, Persiani, Lablache, Tamburini sang to an audience of royalties and aristocracy, including the Duke of Wellington, and the young ladies in ringlets were thrilled. It is all “old and incredibly faded”; like the magnificent D'Orsay whom she saw dashing up to Gore House in his cabriolet, “displaying an immense extent of cuff and shirtfront, his crisp curly hair waving in the breeze . . . his diminutive tiger bumping up and down on the footboard behind.” He was not so magnificent to live with as to look at. Someone said to D'Orsay of his wife: “What a charming, pensive expression Lady Harriet has!” “She owes that to me,” was the reply.

Many anecdotes there are in Mrs. Simpson's book of a less cynical order than this. She tells us how Whateley, visiting her father's house without a servant, and perceiving a hole in his black stocking, would try to conceal it by putting a piece of sticking-plaster on the exposed part of his leg:

“He used to sit by my side at breakfast, balancing his chair, with his legs twisted into some extraordinary knot, which could not be untied in a hurry, playing with the tea-leaves, and scattering them over the table, and setting down his wet cup on the cloth so as to make a succession of little rings—totally engrossed in the conversation that was going on.”

There is a good story of Miss Edgeworth and her sister. They had been staying at Bowood:

“On the morning fixed for their departure Lord Lansdowne was handing her into her carriage, and said, with his exquisite urbanity: ‘I am sorry you cannot stay longer’; whereupon she replied: ‘Oh! but, my lord, we can.’ The trunks were taken off, the carriage sent away, and the ladies returned, to the consternation of their hosts.”

Of Thackeray she relates how she one day called on him to accompany her to a dinner at Greenwich. “He put his head out of his study-window and cried: ‘Wait till I have killed her!’ I think the victim was Helen Pendennis.” There is a story of Abraham Hayward, who remarked impatiently to a certain lady: “Of course, you do not know what a faux pas is?” “Is it a pas de deux?” she retorted. And there is a funny specimen of De Circourt's English: “I was to-day at an artist's of my friends. A negress was sitting to him, and I tasted her conversation and her moral for the space of two hours, and found them quite equal to those of a white.” But the real interest of the book lies in its descriptions of eminent people, which are too long for quotation, and in the extracts which are given from her father's journals. They are notes of conversations with various politicians—Lansdowne, Bright, Aberdeen, &c.—and are full of value. Altogether, this is a volume of reminiscences with hardly a really dull page.

BRITONS ABROAD.

Under the Red Crescent: the Adventures of an English Surgeon with the Turkish Army at Plezna and Erzeroum, 1877-8. Related by Charles S. Ryan, M.B., and John Sandes, B.A. (John Murray.)

China and Formosa: the Story of a Successful Mission. By the Rev. James Johnston. (Hazell, Watson, & Viney.)

Sunny Memories of an Indian Winter. By Sara H. Dunn. (Walter Scott.)

Old Tracks and New Landmarks: Wayside Sketches in Crete, Macedonia, Mitylene, &c. By Mary A. Walker. (Richard Bentley.)

DURING the Turkish war of 1877 Mr. Ryan occupied the position of surgeon in the Turkish army. It would not be easy to conceive of conditions more favourable for observation, and Mr. Ryan's book gives evidence of a temperament well fitting him to take advantage of his opportunities. With a rollicking humour he combines a ready sympathy with the more serious and important side of things. His intimate association with the officers and men of Osman's army has impressed upon his mind sentiments of regard and affection for both officers and men, and the publication of his work is therefore excellently timed. The pages are bright with such amusing gossip as this :

"The war correspondents of those fighting days in Spain [the days of the Carlist insurrection] were as dare-devil a crew as ever lived; and Leader described to me, with many a laugh, the circumstances under which he first met Edward O'Donovan, another Irishman, as gay and reckless as himself. Leader was in command of a small fort in the north of Spain during the height of the insurrection, when one day he espied a strange figure clad in a long dilapidated overcoat approaching the walls. The Spanish sentries yelled to the suspicious visitor to halt; and as he took no notice of them they fired on him, and the bullets kicked up the dust all round the stranger. The only result, however, was that he increased his pace and came on at the double, until he reached the walls off [sic] the fort amid a rain of bullets. 'Cease firing, ye blackguards!' he shouted in the simple dialect of Southern Cork. 'I'm Edward O'Donovan, and how the blazes can I get in unless you open the gate!' . . . Thus it was that Edmund O'Donovan, who was attached to the Government troops, walked alone into the enemy's fortress."

The principal figure in the history of the English Presbyterian mission to the Chinese is the Rev. William C. Burns, who seems to have been a man of conviction and purpose; and the story of his efforts has a certain unexpected smack of interest. His most enduring feat, probably, has been the translation of that long-suffering volume The Pilgrim's Progress into the language of the country. His greatest difficulty was to discover fanciful equivalents for Bunyan's names, and he spent many days among the tombs in the search for Mr. Pliable and Mr. Facing-both-ways. He was not without a sense of humour and could appreciate a joke—at the expense of one of his brethren. Mr. Johnston paid him a visit and was invited to address the congregation.

"Although I had not studied the colloquial more than a month or two, I learned a few sentences which I gave out boldly. They were delighted, and shouted with one voice 'Put chi' (. . . 'No end good'), 'Chin ho' ('First ste') . . . If I had stopped then I would have come off with flying colours, but rashly desiring to please the dear people, [I] went on until out of my depth. Though they looked so intelligently pleased, I put the question point-blank, 'Do you understand what I say?' As Christians they were too truthful to say 'Yes,' and as Chinamen too polite to say 'No'; so, after a pause, the old cloth-merchant answered, 'We shall pray to God that you may soon speak intelligibly.'"

Mr. Johnston's own humour is sometimes unconscious, as here :

"To the credit of the Chinese be it told that the 'Gospel boat' was never molested. Even pirates respected her. . . . The boatmen were not allowed to carry arms, but were instructed to present them with plenty of tracts and Bibles."

The pages are sprinkled with reproductions of photographs—mostly groups.

Mrs. Dunn is a very good traveller. She knows how to use her eyes, and she discerns alien prejudices and sentiments with sympathetic intuition. Also, her style gives evidence of conscientious endeavour. Consequently her Sunny Memories are readable memories. It was not easy to reduce to order the multiplicity of notions engendered of a brisk passage through so vast a tract, among races so widely distinct—with habits of thought and national peculiarities so various. But Mrs. Dunn, by the light of a quick intelligence, has admirably caught the leading feature of many of them; and to the reader of her entertaining book, Parsis, Tamils, Goorkhas, Rajputs, and a dozen others will stand as well apart as the Highland crofter from the Sheffield grinder. Mrs. Dunn's pages are here and there enlivened by symptoms of a pleasant humour. Take this as an example :

"We had ridden out under the awaking sky of the early morning hours; and as the pale lustrous dawn graduated into perfect day, and the sun rose glorious from behind the snows like an 'avenging fire-god,' causing the death-white Himalayas to kindle and glow in the light of his presence, a vision which made one speechless and almost breathless, our Transatlantic cousin remarked in a tone of calm finality, 'Wall, that's what I call vurry neat.'"

The illustrations are from excellent photographs.

Mrs. Walker dates her experiences as a traveller from days when travel was less a matter of course than it is to-day; and the crowded smudges of the customary kodak are replaced in this volume by some five-and-twenty clear-cut, scholarly little sketches that are full of character. A like quality of leisurely selection distinguishes the narratives, and lends to the style a certain air of placid good breeding.

BRIEFER MENTION.

The Artists and Engravers of British and American Book-Plates. By Henry W. Fincham. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

IN spite of Mr. Andrew Lang the collector of book-plates increases and multiplies. That "petty, trivial, and almost idiotic ghoul" (the collector) will be glad to place this bulky volume on his shelves, which are beginning to groan under the weight of works treating of his vilified hobby. The fact is, the book-plate is an institution. Its interests are many—social, personal, heraldic, and artistic—and they appeal particularly to a growing class, the fireside antiquaries of moderate means and busy leisure. For the use of these worthy persons Mr. Fincham has compiled a list of some 1,500 artists and engravers, who are responsible for about 5,000 signed plates; a list that gaily romps away from all competitors, and is calculated to fill the lay mind with a bewildered aversion. The initiated, on the other hand, will pore over it long and lovingly; the Ex-Librist would, if he could, make it a pocket companion; but that seems impossible, for it is almost a foot tall and turns the scale at 3½ lbs. Every page of this laborious catalogue is divided into four columns, wherein are entered particulars of the artist and his signature, the name of the original possessor, the "style" of the plate, and its date. There is an index of owners, and between seventy and eighty illustrations, including four impressions from original copper-plates, and a repulsive dream of Aubrey Beardsley's. And all this bearing upon what a critic not long ago called "the most infinitesimal of all conceivable topics"! Well, the infinitesimal and delightful Horace Walpole had his book-plate, where the paternal escutcheon gangles from the branches of a tree, beneath which is visible the neat antiquity of "Strawberry Hill"; and Mr. Gladstone himself, whom no one can call infinitesimal, uses a gift plate gallant with ensigns armorial and winged by wanton hawks.

The Age of the Renaissance: Eras of the Christian Church. By Paul Van Dyke. (T. & T. Clark.)

THIS is a brilliant and picturesque study of the most brilliant and picturesque period of history. The "era" dealt with by Mr. Van Dyke is, roughly, the fifteenth century; more precisely, from the return of the Pope out of the Babylonish captivity at Avignon in 1377 to the Sack of Rome by the Imperial army in 1527. There is, of course, a wealth of material for the illustration of this momentous age, and Mr. Van Dyke has selected from it skilfully and effectively. The book is to a large extent a gallery of striking portraits; and this is but natural and right, for the forces at work were precisely those which naturally come to a head and declare themselves in striking personalities. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, who was to have collaborated with his brother, and who now writes the introductory chapter, points out that the history of the Renaissance is essentially a history of the antagonism between two human types: on the one side the men of institutions, on the other the men of ideas. Here this antagonism is studied from the point of view of the Church: the attempts, within the Church to reform it, without the Church to reform religion, are the central theme. And Humanism proper is studied as a radical change in the attitude of the educated mind which prepared it for the Reformation. Our pleasure in Mr. Van Dyke's treatment of his subject is lessened by his use of such provincialisms as "loaned" for "lent" and "apologetes" for "apologists." Otherwise the manner, as well as the matter of the book, is of high quality.

The Hill of the Graces. By H. S. Cowper, F.S.A. (Methuen).

EUROPEAN travel in the centre of Tripoli has been prohibited by the Turks since 1880. This proved an irresistible attraction to Mr. Cowper, who left the capital both in 1895 and 1896 "for a few days' sport," and wandered at will through the districts of Gharian, Tarhuna, and M'salata. Mr. Cowper's chief object was the study of the megalithic ruins known as "senams," which he describes at length in this interesting volume. "Senams" are vast trilithons, looking like lofty and exceedingly narrow gateways. Before each stands the altar of some extinct ritual. Mr. Cowper believes that through these "senams" victims were led to the sacrifice. He identifies them with the Asherim or "groves" which the worshippers of Baal set up on high places, and believes—fatal propensity of the archaeological mind—that they may also shed light upon the nature of Stonehenge. In any case, his book, with its illustrations and its careful tabulation of the extant ruins, should be a useful addition to the literature of a little worked subject. Mr. Cowper is not so intent upon "senams" as to have no eyes for anything else. He gives an excellent account of Tripoli and its manners and customs, together with a plan of the capital, which, as surveying instruments are contraband in Turkish dominions, he accomplished by the primitive means of pacing and a prismatic compass. He has also succeeded in identifying the river Cinyps and the three-peaked hill of the Graces mentioned by Herodotus, and of restoring, on yet another point, our belief in that historian's much maligned veracity.

The Battle of Sheriffmuir. Related from Original Sources. (Stirling: Eneas Mackay.)

THIS little pamphlet does credit to its producers, though the "twenty original pen-and-ink drawings" are remarkably indistinct. It represents a class of work we would be glad to see more of—the serious contribution to local history. Its author has told the tale of the battle of Sheriffmuir with special attention to the configuration of the ground, and the details of the fight and the opposing forces are lucidly set down.

The Scots proverb, "There was mair tint at Shirramuir," is really justified, for though the battle was actually indecisive, it had the same effect on the Jacobite fortunes as a crushing defeat, for it prevented Mar's junction with the English Jacobites, and delayed the whole rising at a time when haste was most necessary. The narrative here is by no means full, for though it shows abundantly Mar's wretched incapacity as a general, it does not do justice to the great elements of disaffection to the forces themselves. The Stuarts of Appir and the Camerons of Lochiel apparently never went into the engagement at all. Lord Huntly and the Master of Sinclair, as is evident from Sinclair's own narrative, were anxious to lay down their arms before the battle. It was not without reason that Gordon of Glenbucket in his disgust cried, "Oh, for an hour of Dundee!"

When the author was about it he might have collected in his appendix some of the sayings relating to the battle, such as Argyle's

"If it wasna weel bobbit, we'll bobbit again"; and the famous, "I lost my father and my mither, and a guid buff belt that was worth them baith." Nor is the list of songs referring to Sheriffmuir quite complete. He gives two versions of the "Battle of Sheriffmuir," but he does not seem to be aware of the third and condensed form (No. 282 in Johnson) into which Burns threw the ballad. The first version is set down without the author's name, but it is preserved on a broadside in the British Museum as "The Race at Sheriffmuir, Fairly Run on the 13th of November, 1715," by the Rev. Murdoch McLennan, of Crathie, who at the time of the battle was some fourteen years of age. One other omission we have noticed, "The Marquis of Huntly's Retreat from the Battle of Sheriffmuir," which was reprinted in the 1844 edition of Motherwell's New Book of Old Ballads.

Progress in Women's Education. Edited by the Countess of Warwick. (Longmans, Green & Co.)

DURING the Victorian Era Exhibition last summer a large number of ladies gathered together at Earl's Court and read one another papers on the advance of woman in culture and commerce all over the British Empire. These are the papers, put into print and arranged by Lady Warwick, who also writes a preface. We do not know how they sounded from the lips of their composers; but they are very, very solemn reading, and we must admit that, having read four accounts of the education of women in India, we felt unable to face the remaining four, especially as, broadly speaking, women in India are not educated at all. To such, however, as are nervous of the encroachment of women upon men's employments the book carries consolation. For it would appear that women are still little more than gleaners in the field of labour, and, except in the case of city clerkships, are rather creating new demands than ousting the suppliers of already existing needs.

From the papers on education we gather that women can go in for an astounding number of examinations, and that seems to please them. Yet they yearn for more. Miss Nancy Bailey, who is a professional indexer, wants all indexers to combine and hold examinations and grant certificates.

We were most interested in Miss Cecil Gradwell's paper on "The Training of Women in Business." Miss Gradwell points out that women are very much addicted to starting a business without knowing anything about it, instead of expending a portion of their capital in learning its details. Also, they very soon grow tired of it:

"One often finds that those to whom work of any kind is absolutely novel enter into it, when necessity arises, with infinite courage and even enthusiasm. They bend the neck to the yoke unflinchingly, and serve their employers with loyalty and devotion. But as time goes on the monotony becomes irksome; they tire of their work, and though not less well done, it begins to be drudgery, and a time of struggle supervenes. One wonders if men go through the same stage; if they do, I suppose they feel it is no use kicking against the pricks, and, therefore, say nothing about it. If this is so, women might do well to imitate their philosophy."

We may tell Miss Gradwell that this is certainly so, and that any work which has to be done continually, regularly, and without reference to inclination inevitably becomes drudgery. And women will not be trained for business until they realise that business is not fun, even when, as in the case of the professional jester, fun is business.

The Campaign of Marengo. With Comments by H. H. Sargent. (Kegan Paul.)

THIS is the work of an American cavalry officer and student of tactics. Lieutenant Sargent studies the great campaign of 1800 mainly from a military and strategical point of view. He describes the relative situation of the French and Austrian armies on the Rhine and in Italy, the formation of that incredible Army of the Reserve at Geneva the stupendous march in the wake of Hannibal over the Great St. Bernard, the sudden descent between Melas and his base, and the decisive battle which left the French master of Italy and Napoleon master of France. Lieutenant Sargent's comments are most clear and informing to the lay mind. It is his object to track the secret of Napoleon's genius as a commander-in-chief by an analysis of his most brilliant and critical campaign; and he analyses in a luminous manner the mental qualities which composed that genius. The curious thing is that, great as were the qualities which Napoleon displayed on the field of Marengo he had no business to be there. His calculations had gone wrong: he was surprised and outnumbered; and it was only by a heroic effort that he pulled a triumph out of an impending and irretrievable disaster.

The Coldstream Guards in the Crimea. By Lieut.-Col. Ross - of - Bladensburg, C.E. (Innes.)

THIS is in reality a reprint of a portion of the History of the Coldstream Guards, published by the same author a few months ago. But that was an expensive book containing much matter of no particular interest outside the regiment. The general reader will be glad to have the extract which contains an exceedingly interesting and detailed account of the immortal and blundering Crimean campaign from the point of view of a single corps. The Coldstream Guards distinguished itself, but no one can read this chronicle without feeling that, like its brother regiments, it was put to much unnecessary suffering for a ludicrously small result.

English History for Children. By Mr. Frederick Boas. (Nisbet.)

THIS is an admirable little book for its purpose. It is written with great simplicity and clearness, and Mrs. Boas shows judgment in not overloading her narrative with facts, and in selecting for mention those that are not only important, but also picturesque and telling. We rejoice to see that the modern school of educationalists has not discarded Alfred and the cakes, and other delights of our childhood. And in other respects the advance is great, for the lesson has been learnt that education is a stimulus, and that to stimulate it is essential not to stupefy. Mrs. Boas' book is liberally provided with illustrations, well-chosen and various. The portraits of Wolsey and Oliver Cromwell are particularly good.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

DREAMERS OF THE GHETTO.

BY I. ZANGWILL.

This bulky volume, which contains that little masterpiece Chad Gadya, is not, in the ordinary sense of the term, a volume of short stories. One definite idea pervades it—viz., that the character of all Jews, whether they lived in the days of Rameses or the days of Victoria, has been influenced by practically the same forces and the same environment. This idea Mr. Zangwill has worked out in a variety of instances, blending the real with the imaginary. Mosos, Heine, Beaconsfield flit through his pages alongside fictitious Dreamers of the Ghetto of the fourteenth century and of our own day. In the author's own words: "This is a Chronicle of Dreamers, who have arisen in the Ghetto from its establishment in the sixteenth century to its slow breaking up in our own day. Some have become historic in Jewry; others have penetrated to the ken of the greater world and afforded models to illustrious artists in letters . . . ; the rest are personally known to me, or are, like 'Joseph, the Dreamer,' the artistic typification of many souls through which the great Ghetto dream has passed." (W. Heinemann. 470 pp. 6s.)

TALES OF TRAIL AND TOWN.

BY BRET HARTE.

Seven new stories by Mr. Bret Harte. All that is necessary is to say that only the author of The Luck of Roaring Camp could have written them, and to give their appetising titles: "The Ancestors of Peter Atherley," "Two Americans," "The Judgment of Bolinas Plain," "The Strange Experience of Alkali Dick," "A Night on the Divide," "The Youngest Prospector in Calaveras," "A Tale of Three Truants." The frontispiece, by Mr. Jacomb Hood, is charming. (Chatto & Windus. 302 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE INCIDENTAL BISHOP.

BY GRANT ALLEN.

A brisk story in Mr Grant Allen's best narrative manner. The hero is Tom Pringle, a sailor on the John Wesley, slaver. Circumstances make it politic for Tom to assume a dead missionary's garb, and he continues clerical to the end. Tom is a good fellow, despite the fraud. The story is business-like throughout. "Hard a-starboard!" are the first words, and after that it booms along. (C. Arthur Pearson. 248 pp. 6s.)

THE PRIDE OF JENNICO.

BY A. AND E. CASTLE.

Mr. Egerton Castle, one of the authors of this romance, is the translator of Stevenson's Prince Otto into French, and should therefore know something of the technique of a good story. He has also written fiction of his own. We mentioned Prince Otto because the book before us suggests it. It treats of a Princeling's court, and there is intrigue here and fighting there, and a well bred air over all. The manner is distinguished. (Bentley. 346 pp. 6s.)

VAN WAGENER'S WAYS.

BY W. L. ALDEN.

Mr. Alden's method is well known. He has a quaint, ingenious and fertile mind, and he is American through and through. In Van Wagener he has contrived a humorous inventor, and this book is his history. "The Explosive Dog," "The Flying Cat," "Incandescent Cats," "The Amphibious Torpedo"—these are some of the titles. In default of Mr. Stockton and Max Adeler Mr. Alden will do. (C. Arthur Pearson. 204 pp. 2s. 6d.)

BILLY BINKS, HERO.

BY GUY BOOTHBY.

The author of Dr. Nikola is here seen as a writer of short stories of Australia and other lands. Billy Binks, the hero of the first, is a young Antipodean, eight years of age, dressed in a red Crimean shirt, much torn, a pair of man's trousers, and a cabbage leaf hat. He is capable of oaths of remarkable scope and atrocity, and is good company. Mr. Boothby is a vigorous chronicler, and Billy does not suffer at his hands. The other stories are: "The Bully of Haiphong"; "A Child of Tonking"; "The Millionaire of Hornibrook Island"; "The Story of Lee Ping"; "Carrie Quin's Elopement"; "Daphne." (W. & R. Chambers. 244 pp. 3s. 6d.)

HIS GRACE O' THE GUNNE.

BY I. HOOPER.

The Gunne was a meeting place for thieves, and thither went Lurlin Kirke, who tells this story, in 1664. And Charles Heath the highwayman said to him: "Hey, my kinching coe, dost need another lambasting?" and gave him precepts for life. "Imprimis, be kind unto the dumb beasts. Next, when thou be'st a man, and will fag thy doxy, remember that she be weaker than thou. Do not strike too hard. Do not squeek upon thy kin, bung nyppers, foisters, and the like." Later, come adventures with quality, told more intelligibly. (Black. 282 pp. 6s.)

WAS SHE JUSTIFIED?

BY FRANK BARRETT.

The question of the title applies principally to bigamy, which the heroine committed with the hero. The heroine's name was Ikey, and she was brought up as a boy, but assumed her own sex in time to make complications. The hero was David Grant. Says the author: "Maybe you have seen David Grant; at one time he was known by sight to half London. . . . If you were at the 'Varsity boat-race in the hailstorm year you must have picked him out of the Light Blues as the smartest man of the crews. . . . You may have seen him lounging in evening dress . . . in the stalls of theatres or music-halls." The book is like this—melodrama in print. (Chatto & Windus. 309 pp. 6s.)

TENEBRAE.

BY ERNEST G. HENHAM.

A madman purports to narrate this story. He became mad because his brother stole his love. Therefore he killed the brother. Afterwards life was chiefly spiders. He saw spiders everywhere. They were not ordinary spiders, not even tarantulas, but larger still, as large as cows. The doctor who supplies an elucidatory appendix says of the madman's MS.: "The closing pages are most awful. The very paper seems to scream with torture." (Skeffington. 329 pp. 6s.)

CARPET COURTSHIP.

BY THOMAS COBB.

A society story told mainly in dialogue—clever dialogue and bright. (John Lane. 171 pp.)

TORN SAILS.

BY ALLEN RAINE.

This story, by the author of A Welsh Singer, is laid in a Welsh village. The setting bespeaks the drama. You don't have a narrow valley, a "streamlet," "rocky knolls," and stepping-stones, without a love story that moves through pain to bliss. The love-making is very tender: "Come and be the mistress of the old mill, f'anwylyd," says he, and what can she reply but "Caton pawb, Ivor, thou art taking my breath away"? (Hutchinson & Co. 359 pp. 6s.)

A SON OF ISRAEL.

BY RACHEL PENN.

This is a Russian-Jewish love-story, and it therefore bubbles with passion. David Rheba and Olga Ivanner are Jew and Christian, and they love and suffer through more than three hundred pages. The author mixes her pronouns and verbs rather badly sometimes: "I, a servant of God, hath joined your hands," says the priest, on page 115; and on the next page Olga exclaims: "Each art dragging at me." (John Macqueen. 306 pp. 6s.)

HER WILD OATS.

BY JOHN BICKERDYKE.

The author of Daughters of Thespis and other novels kindly gives a synopsis of his plot in lieu of a table of contents. From this we learn that the hero is a young English farmer, who adopts the bicycle but clings to his prejudices. She is "refined and beautiful."

Though refined and beautiful she is mysterious, which is more than can be said for the other heroine, Miss Belle Beresford. Belle's biography is written on the posters of the Piccadilly Theatre. Thus the London pavements alternate, as a background, with the "cool plash-plash backwaters above Goring." For the rest, there is a vicar called Mr. Smallmind. (Thomas Burleigh. 299 pp. 6s.)

THE HAND OF THE SPOILER.

BY R. H. FORSTER.

"Being the Adventures of Master Wilfrid Clavering at Corbridge, Hexham, and Elsewhere, in the Twenty-seventh, Twenty-eighth, and Twenty-ninth Years of His Late Highness, King Henry the Eighth." Corbridge and Hexham are townships on the banks of the Tyne. (Mawson, Swan & Morgan. 273 pp. 6s.)

HECTOR MACRAE.

BY HANNAH MACKENZIE.

A long story in small print. The authoress says that in her delineation of the modern Highlands and Highlanders she has tried to "extenuate nought, and nought set down in malice." (Simpkin, Marshall & Co. 373 pp. 6s.)

THE CONSECRATION OF HETTY FLEET. BY A. ST. JOHN ADCOCK.

A story that opens in an undertaker's shop, and ends in lurid sins and melodramatic suicide. The moral is good; but Mr. Adcock was nearer to life, and far more readable, in his East-End Idylls. (Skeffington & Son. 141 pp. 3s. 6d.)

HAGAR OF THE PAWNSHOP.

BY FERGUS HUME.

Hagar flies from the encampment of the Stanleys in the New Forest to the pawnshop of her miserly old uncle, Jacob Dix, a Lambeth pawnbroker: her impelling motive being the unwelcome attentions of Goliath, a red-haired villain—"half a Gorgio and half Romany." A fine girl is Hagar, and a free-tongued; and she wakes things up in the Lambeth pawnshop, where we find her attending to ten customers in as many chapters. In Lambeth, Hagar finds a lover of roving instincts—a caravan bookseller—and with him leaves London for the green country and the gipsy life. (Skeffington & Son. 252 pp. 6s.)

UNDER ONE COVER.

BY S. BARINO-GOULD AND OTHERS.

What can we say about these eleven stories by six writers, except to echo the publisher's pious hope that "one and all fulfil the cardinal requirements of being thoroughly readable and interesting." (Skeffington & Son. 255 pp. 3s. 6d.)

REVIEWS.

The Broom of the War-God. By Henry Noel Brailsford.
(William Heinemann.)

A CASUAL glance at this tale of the late Turco-Greek war indicates that the author has some of the qualities required for a successful novelist. He can observe minutely, and record his observations with a rough picturesqueness. Mr. Brailsford's story is absolutely devoid of plot, and its hero is a sentimental young gentleman called Graham, who is not more interesting than half a dozen other members of the Greek Foreign Legion, that strange cosmopolitan combination, "all the flotsam and jetsam of humanity, the ragged edge of society, swept up by the broom of the war-god." The author, who seems to have been a member of the Legion, or to have accompanied it in the character of a war correspondent, possesses either a marvellously retentive memory or an extremely capacious notebook. Unfortunately he is not equally gifted with the power of selection, or even with ordinary good taste. In his painfully minute account of the sayings and doings of the Foreign Legionaries he spares us nothing. Their silly and objectionable nicknames, their vulgar witticisms—generally rapid and frequently coarse—their filthy practices and polyglot blasphemies, are all set down in the most merciless detail, so that the book is quite unfitted for any but the strongest stomachs. Possibly the example of Mr. Kipling has led Mr. Brailsford astray. Here, for example, is the advance of the red-fezzed Turkish host at Pharsala:

"'Hallo!' said Smith, 'that road wasn't red a minute ago.' It was as though a vein had been opened on the moor three miles away, and the red blood trickled slowly down, a thin streak soaking its way through the yellow dust. The eyes of the company were fixed on the dry road, greedily watching the yellow absorbing the red. It had a fascination like nothing else on earth, this thin red symbol of terror that crept remorselessly over the sand.

'Well, I'm blown if it ain't old Turco at last,' said the company. And then, with their vision sharpened, they saw black squares like burnt patches on the brown heath. They seemed stationary, but while someone found a new patch nearer and more menacing, the first would move a little. And still the red line trickled down the road. Then it was the horizon that grew black, and the outline of the hills seemed ragged, confessedly irregular as the black squares came over them.

'W'y, you'd think they was ants,' said Simson."

The noise of a shell is well described:

"Then came a strange grinding noise, as if the mills of the gods moved through the air. It seemed irritatingly slow, yet still it moved, and towards the company. There is no sound more angry or sinister, it is the rasping of iron on iron, the crunching of steel jaws, the inexorable approach of some engine of death along an iron track that strives to retard it. And at last it fell among the soft sand some twenty yards in front, the embodied noise visible at last. Smith looked back to the company. 'Pretty close shave that was, eh!' His face was flushed; he looked as if he would shout, 'Come on, you damned coward, nearer, nearer,' to the shell. 'That was shrapnel; you can tell him by the noise. If that boy had burst 'e'd 'ave maide a mess of some of us. Queer noise, ain't it, though?'

'It's like an over'ead cash railway in a draiper's shop,' said Simson."

These extracts will give some idea of Mr. Brailsford's strength as well as his weakness. Some day he ought to write a really good story, but he must first acquire the virtues of compression and selection.

* * * *

God's Foundling. By A. J. Dawson.
(Heinemann.)

THIS is a somewhat difficult book to criticise, for it is a curious mixture of good and bad work. Mr. Dawson can write well enough, but he does not do so with any regularity, preferring a preciosity of phrase and extravagance of metaphor which land him in the ludicrous. This is the sort of thing:

"But where this hat's brim's little shadow fell across either side of Mr. Morley Fenton's forehead, thin, knotted, pale veins were throbbing and writhing, like baby snakes in the sun-warmed hollow of a fallen tree."

And the women in the book are very poor—dolls all of them, though of slightly different patterns and stuffing. One feels that the author cared very little about them, felt them a necessary nuisance in his story. He might, indeed, perfectly well have left them out; the respectable ones, at any rate. Nor are we much impressed by Mr. Leo Tarne, an epigrammatic Bohemian, without the courage of his convictions. He is supposed to be a sort of mentor of evil to the hero, and he rather bores us. He talks like this:

"She is not Greek. She is Byzantine, and ravishing. She is less beautiful than charming, less charming than adorable, less adorable than fascinating. She is simply the Carissima—an incarnate temptation, a sin set to the music of a can-can movement. She is Paradise and the other place, Paris, Florence, Monte Carlo, Naples, Brussels, and the Orient, condensed into five feet of femininity; the seven deadly sins and all the cardinal virtues, with others; the voice of an angel, the only real purple head of hair in the universe, and a lisp with which she might govern Europe—all that, and more, set in a bewildering maze of frou-frou, and christened Lisé Veeci for lack of a name. But come, let us find this telegraph-place, for the Carissima is a creature who makes countless engagements, and affects a method in the order in which she breaks them."

On the other hand, the three principal characters—Morley Fenton, the precise man of business with a load on his conscience; George Barnard, the big honest child-like Bohemian; and Harold Foster, the "foundling," who is really Fenton's illegitimate son—are strongly drawn and well contrasted. And there is a moral idea in the book, the purification of the hereditary taint upon Harold's soul in the furnace of life, and his final emergence as what Mr. Dawson calls a "clean" man, ready for the service of his fellows. Possibly the gospel of "wild oats" is a fallacious one—we are not concerned with that—but, at any rate, it finds in God's Foundling effective pleading. That Harold Foster should ultimately marry one of the dolls is, we suppose, a concession to sentimentality. Mr. Dawson would do better if he had some humour.

SOME APHORISMS.

VI.—LA BRUYÈRE.

As a moralist he is sagacious rather than profound—a man of the world who gives us the fruits of his experience of life, rather than a philosopher who records the results of his researches.” Thus Mr. Henry Attwell introduces La Bruyère to readers of his new and dainty volume of selections from the French pensée writers, entitled Pensées from French Gardens. Mr. Attwell allots more space to La Bruyère than even to Rochefoucauld, and we take the liberty of transcribing some of his renderings of La Bruyère’s shorter sayings:—

Everything has been said; and one comes too late after there have been men, and thinking men, on the earth for more than seven thousand years. As to the conduct of life, the choicest and best that could be written has been forestalled. One does but glean after the ancients, and after the able men among the moderns.

There are certain things which are intolerable when second-rate: poetry, music, painting, and public speaking.

The pleasure of criticism deprives us of the delight of being greatly moved by very beautiful things.

Many people possess nothing worthy of mention but their name. When you look at them closely they are the merest nobodies. Seen from a distance they are imposing.

We should try to make ourselves very deserving of some sort of employment. The rest is no concern of ours. It is the business of other people.

If it is a common thing to be struck by what is rare, how is it that we are so little affected by virtue?

Love begins with love; and there is no passing from firm friendship to even feeble love.

Love which grows by degrees is too much like friendship to become a violent passion.

It is a weakness to love. It is often another weakness to cure one’s-self of the passion.

If a very plain woman begets love, such love is ardent; for it arises either from a strange weakness on the part of her lover, or from charms that are more powerful than those of beauty.

How difficult it is to be satisfied with anybody!

Observe carefully those who can never see anything worth praising in others, who are always finding fault, and whom no one can please, and you will find that they are persons who are liked by nobody.

Of all the ways of making a fortune, the shortest and best is to let people see clearly that it is to their interest to be of service to you.

There are two methods, and two methods only, of making one’s way in the world—by one’s own industry, or by profiting by the stupidity of other people.

Self-assertion is not so much a matter of will as natural disposition. It is a fault, but an innate fault. A naturally modest man does not easily become the reverse. It is of no avail to say to him, “Carry your head high and you will make your way.” If he neglects the part badly, it would do him more harm than good. What is wanted to secure success at court is genuine, frank confidence.

One need have achieved less to suggest the question: “Why did you forget that appointment?” than, “Why did you not get it?”

It is boorish to give with a bad grace. If the act of giving itself is an effort, what matters the additional cost of a smile?

We dread an old age to which we are by no means sure we shall ever attain.

Nothing cheers a man’s heart more than to know that he has had the sense to avoid committing some foolish act.

There is in some men a certain mediocrity of intellect which helps to make them discreet.

MR. MEREDITH AND FAME.

IN PRAISE OF SHAGPAT.

THE gentle and genial writer of “The Looker-on,” in Blackwood’s Magazine, makes the following suggestive remarks apropos the seventieth birthday of Mr. George Meredith:—“I remember no time when he was not famous; not, indeed, as Miss Corelli is, but in a much wider world than is meant when we speak of ‘literary society.’ Quite as long ago as then his name was the name of a true man of genius who had well and comfortably made his proofs. We cannot have it, and it must not be allowed, that he was ‘discovered’ in 1885 by the ladies and gentlemen who stumbled on Diana of the Crossways at the circulating libraries. Is Fitzgerald renowned or not—he whose transmutation of Omar’s quills of precious gold dust into a fine cup was thrown into the ‘All at 4d.’ box? Renowned he is, and firm on the after-death foundation of fame. But there is not much call for his book at the circulating libraries.

Yet those authors are not to be believed who declare themselves—I mean poets, novelists, essayists—indifferent to popular favour. It would be unkind to believe them; for being versed in the secrets of the heart, they must know that the sentiment they vaunt is so far from being noble as to be more or less inhuman. For one thing, real indifference would signify contentment that the mass of our fellow-creatures are too stupid and soulless to know what is good for them. Meredith has far too much warmth, is far too sympathetic, to have ever been indifferent to the lack of wide appreciation, though the best was never wanting; wherefore I bid you believe that, going cheerily and unswervingly upon his lofty path, it was with no Timon-of-Athens scowl, but with a glad flinging out of the arms, that he found general popularity awaiting him at the Crossways.

But why there, and not at an earlier stage, will never be known in this world. It is a fine story, Diana of the Crossways, but no greater in any respect than others its predecessors. A rush to the libraries for The Egoist—that supremely excellent display of Meredithian penetration and humour—was not to be expected. But the splendid romance and the glowing presentation of character in Harry Richmond—why with that before them in 1871 did the general public remain unaware of a great novelist and brilliant man of genius till ‘Diana’ appeared fourteen years afterward?

The general public. Yes; but it is certain that every professed Meredithian, even among the devout, is clear of reproach at this day? In the year 1898, being the thirteenth after the publication of ‘Diana,’ is there no dulness of apprehension even among these? If not, how comes it that we hear so little of The Shaving of Shagpat? The publisher will say that The Shaving of Shagpat sells, no doubt; but there is nothing in that unless he can disprove that the circulation of the book is mainly among members of the profession to whom its title appeals as a trade manual, or else as an amusing brochure particularly interesting to barbers. If the infrequent reprints of the story of Shibli Bagarag are not taken up in this way, where do the copies go to? Who else reads them? Wherever I hear Meredith praised I push inquiry into the merits of ‘Shagpat,’ and rarely find that anything is known about them. Some admirers of the author have but a faint recollection of this book; others frankly admit that they never came across it; some look as if they then heard its title for the first time, and doubt whether they heard aright. Scriptures on Meredith usually mention Shagpat, but only as a bibliographical item,—the first of our author’s productions. The writer of a leading article in a great London newspaper—one of those that made obeisance and compliment to Meredith on his birthday—could praise the Story of Chloe above its author’s opinion of that early work; but had not a word for The Shaving of Shagpat though he named it.

And all this while The Shaving of Shagpat invites curiosity by being quite unlike the Meredithian novels—a thing unique; and when explored, it is found to be a wonder of invention, imagination, fancy, wit. An Eastern tale in a string of stories, like to the Thousand and One Nights’ Entertainment, it challenges comparison with a laughing audacity, and brings no shame on the challenger thereby: no, but glory and honour. Of the Meredithian obscurity and complication of phrase that some complain of, no trace here in a single line. Is there a Meredithian mannerism?—Not in The Shaving of Shagpat.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S SPRING ANNOUNCEMENTS

New Spring Announcement List, beautifully Illustrated, will be sent post-free on application.

"A NOTABLE ADDITION TO THE LITERATURE OF SPORT."

The Daily Telegraph (nearly a column review).

Just ready. Crown 8vo, wrapper, 2s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

Illustrated by 80 Photographs.

With Bat and Ball;

Or, Twenty-five Years of Australian and English Cricket.

WITH HINTS TO YOUNG CRICKETERS ON BATTING, BOWLING, AND FIELDING.

By GEORGE GIFFEN.

"There is not a dull page from first to last. Indeed, Mr. Giffen is to be congratulated upon having given us a book on cricket which is worthy to rank beside any that have yet dealt with the game."—St. James's Gazette.

"An intensely interesting book."—The Sporting Chronicle.

"A book which we may say we like immensely, and which we unhesitatingly recommend to our readers.....the book is honestly worth a good deal more than the figure at which it is offered. The illustrations alone are well worth the money."—Athletic News.

Ready immediately. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. Illustrated by numerous Diagrams, &c.

Cryptography;

Or, the History, Principles, and Practice of Cypher Writing.

By F. EDWARD HULME, F.L.S., F.S.A.,

Author of "Familiar Wild Flowers," "Mythland," &c., &c.

A practical manual of cypher writing by an eminent authority on the subject. Mr. Hulme has always written in a popular manner even on intricate subjects, and at the low price of one shilling such an interesting and useful book is sure to prove in demand.

Ready shortly. Long 8vo, sewn, 1s.

A NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "MADE IN GERMANY."

"Marching Backward"

By ERNEST E. WILLIAMS,

Author of "Made in Germany," "The Imperial Heritage," &c., &c.

A brilliant treatise on the burning question of increased foreign competition and depressed home industries; with the causes and remedies of those evils.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION. BROUGHT THOROUGHLY UP TO DATE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

All about the Income Tax, House Duty, and Land Tax.

By C. FORWARD.

A plain practical guide to taxpayers on Assessments, Appeals, Reductions, and Repayments, with Examples of the Official Forms correctly filled.

TWO SPLENDID NEW SHILLING NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, wrapper, 1s. each. Striking and attractive Pictorial Covers.

An Italian Fortune Hunter.

By B. D. DE TASSINARI.

A clever and original society story, illustrating the influence of money in the matrimonial market. The novel displays a certain power of subtle analysis which raises its tone far above the average, and, with its striking cover, "An Italian Fortune Hunter" should command a large sale.

Countess Petrovski.

By "ORME AGNUS."

A remarkable story of political intrigue, showing how a clever and beautiful Russian Countess, employed by the Government of the Czar as a spy, becomes a leader of English society, and gradually draws into her net a Secretary of the Prime Minister, and thus obtains possession of a secret treaty.

AN IMPORTANT FIVE-SHILLING NOVEL

Ready shortly.

GUY BOOTHBY'S NEW STORY ABOUT DR. NIKOLA.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, bevelled, special design, 5s. With 6 Illustrations STANLEY L. WOOD.

The Lust of Hate.

By GUY BOOTHBY,

Author of "Dr. Nikola," "The Fascination of the King," "Bushigrams," &c.

Dr. Nikola, probably the most successful character introduced into fiction during recent years, again makes his appearance in this new novel, and that alone is sufficient to indicate that the book will be one of the principal successes of the season.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. each.

Ready immediately. With Frontispiece by RAYMOND POTTER.

J. S. FLETCHER'S NEW ROMANCE.

Pasquinado

One of the most striking and original romances that Mr. J. S. Fletcher has written. The social contrasts it presents are of enthralling interest, and the book will doubtless add greatly to this clever writer's reputation.

Ready immediately. A NEW NOVEL BY E. PHILLIPS-OPPENHEIM.

With 2 Illustrations by STANLEY L. WOOD.

As a Man Lives.

The Author of "False Evidence," "The World's Great Snare," "The Amazing Judgment," &c., &c., has never written a more powerfully interesting and dramatic work than this. From the first page to the last the reader's interest is enchained.

Ready shortly. RICHARD MARSH'S Spring Novel.

With 2 Illustrations by STANLEY L. WOOD.

The Datchet Diamonds

By RICHARD MARSH,

Author of "The Crime and the Criminal," "Philip Bennion's Death," &c.

A breathlessly exciting story, told in Mr. Marsh's well-known entertaining style. The success which all his books have attained will insure attention to this volume.

Ready shortly. A NEW WAR STORY. With 4 Illustrations by
STANLEY L. WOOD.

For the Rebel Cause.

By ARCHER P. CROUCH.

An exciting story of the late Chilian Civil War. It is full of stirring scenes and marvellous adventures, and gives graphic pictures of South American life.

TWO NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. each. Ready shortly.

With Frontispiece by FRANCES EWAN.

A Stolen Life.

By M. McDONNELL BODKIN, Q.C.,

Author of "White Magic," "Lord Edward Fitzgerald," &c.

A domestic tragedy, written with much power and skill by an author who has achieved many literary successes, notably, "The Adventures of Juggins, Q.C.," "White Magic," &c.

With Frontispiece by FRANCES EWAN.

Sir Tristram.

By THOROLD ASHLEY.

A powerful story. It is full of humorous touches and pathetic incidents and is written in a bright and crisp literary style. Sir Tristram, although a baronet, is not one of the conventional type.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1898.

No. 1349, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor at a Railway Station . . .                      | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . .                    | 0 15 3  | 6 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE scheme, which was first mooted in the Times in November, 1896, for raising a subscription with which to defray the cost of obtaining a portrait of Mr. Herbert Spencer, has been successfully carried through. The portrait, painted to commemorate the completion of Mr. Spencer's Synthetic Philosophy, is the work of Prof. Hubert Herkomer, R.A., and is adjudged a good likeness. It will be sent to the Royal Academy this year, and then during Mr. Spencer's life-time will hang in the Tate Gallery; afterwards, with the approval of the trustees, finding its permanent home in the National Portrait Gallery. We trust that the final removal will be long deferred.

MR. CONRAD'S Nigger of the "Narcissus" is an exercise in impressionism so much in the class of The Red Badge of Courage that it is peculiarly interesting to read Mr. Stephen Crane's opinion of it. He writes: "It is unquestionably the best story of the sea written by a man now alive, and, as a matter of fact, one would have to make an extensive search among the tombs before one who has done better could be found. As for the ruck of writers who make the sea their literary domain, Conrad seems to expect simply to warn them off the premises, and tell them to remain silent. He comes nearer to an ownership of the mysterious life on the ocean than anybody who has written in this century."

MR. CONRAD'S book, by the way, is called in the American edition The Children of the Sea, The Nigger of the "Narcissus" having been considered too ungainly. A new work from his pen, consisting of short stories, is announced, under the title Tales of Unrest.

IF M. Zola reads the Daily Chronicle, he must have been amused by a paragraph in Wednesday's issue. We are tempted to quote it: "Has Mr. George Moore lost his old admiration and affection for M. Zola? If not, why should a series of private letters from the latter to the former appear in the catalogue of a well-known Holborn bookselling firm? There are six of these, and they may all be had for the moderate sum of £4 3s. That this is dirt cheap is evident when we add that one of them refers 'to the English school of fiction and the success of M.,' and another 'advises M. as to the best method of publishing a novel in Paris,' and positively 'invites him to take up in England the superb rôle of introducing to the English "la littérature vivante." How can Mr. Moore possibly have parted with such a flattering invitation?"

A CORRESPONDENT of the Daily News has been studying the two sermons delivered recently by Dean Farrar at Great St. Mary's, Cambridge, to some purpose. On subjecting them to analysis, he finds that the allusive and eloquent preacher used altogether more than eighty different quotations, and twenty-three Scriptural phrases or texts, exclusive of paraphrases. Thus: "Dean Farrar has four Greek quotations in the original—Pindar, 'the Greek comedian,' 'the Greek father,' and an unacknowledged passage; also two Greek words used by St. Luke, and Latin quotations in the original from 'the Roman poet,' 'the Roman bard,' 'the gay lyrist,' St. Augustine, St. Francis Xavier, and Orosius, to say nothing of the inscriptions on the dials of Balliol College and Lincoln's Inn, and such flowers of speech as 'summum bonum' and 'toto cælo, toto inferno.' Some score of sentences, which may be prose or poetry, are found in the two sermons within quotation marks and without their source being stated. Dean Farrar quotes poetry without mentioning the author (Shakespeare, Tennyson, &c.) twelve times in all—the total amounting to forty-seven lines. He also quotes 'a late eminent judge,' 'the German writer,' 'a brutal onlooker,' and 'one of our greatest men of science.'"

IN addition to the unacknowledged quotations, Dean Farrar mentioned by name the following authorities when making use of their words:

- Christ (three passages).
- David.
- Solomon.
- St. Peter.
- St. Paul.
- St. John.
- St. Luke.
- St. Augustine.
- St. Francis Xavier (two passages, Latin and English).
- Mareus Aurelius.
- "Cleantha."
- Epictetus.
- Hermas.
- Pindar.
- Pynho.
- Orosius.
- Leibnitz.
- Aniel (two passages).
- Von Hartmann.
- Novalis.
- Schopenhauer.
- Salvator Rosa.
- Henry Smith.
- William Brown (the boy martyr).
- Shakespeare (two passages acknowledged).
- Milton (four passages).
- Browning (ditto).
- Byron (twice).
- Renan (twice).
- Wordsworth.
- Lord Herbert of Cherb-urg
- Emerson.
- Ruskin.
- Thackeray.
- Sir Fitzjames Stephen.

"After this it savours of anti-climax to add that the preacher also alluded by name, without quoting from, to the prophet Isaiah, Whitfield, Augustus Caesar, Trajan, St. Louis of France, St. Francis of Assisi, St. Thomas Aquinas, the author of the Imitatio Christi, Dives, Lazarus (the subject of miracle), 'the poor, ugly teacher whom the Greek Pharisees doomed to drink hemlock,' Mary (Queen), Othello, Desdemona, Cordelia, and Pan." The achievement is well worthy of record.

THE following lines are printed on the title-page of Mr. I. Zangwill's new volume, Dreamers of the Ghetto—"The story of a Dream that has not come true":

"MOSES AND JESUS.

In dream I saw two Jews that met by chance,
One old, stern-eyed, deep-browed, yet garlanded
With living light of love around his head,
The other young, with sweet seraphic glance.
Around went on the Town's Satanic dance,
Hunger a-piping while at heart he bled.
Shalom Alechem, mournfully each said,
Nor eyed the other straight but looked askance.
Sudden from Church outrolled an organ hymn,
From Synagogue a loudly chaunted air,
Each with its Prophet's high acclaim instinct.
Then for the first time met their eyes, swift linked
In one strange, silent, piteous gaze, and dim
With bitter tears of agonised despair."

THE most unaffectedly amusing guide-book we have ever seen is Hind Head, by Mr. Thomas Wright, of Olney. Mr. Wright entered with extraordinary zest into his task, and he describes not only the country, but the best-known inhabitants. More, he supplies a preface consisting of a short biography of himself by a friend, and there is his portrait by way of frontispiece. This is the very crown of thoroughness.

MR. WRIGHT'S first celebrity is Mr. Conan Doyle; and then we come to a chapter headed enigmatically and not very happily: "Mr. Grant Allen: The Devil's Jumps." At Hind Head, it seems, Mr. Grant Allen is spoken of "not merely with respect, but almost with affection. He is 'our Grant Allen.'" Moreover, "in relating an anecdote he is inimitable. In his lips venerable stories from the Talmud, or other archaic repositories, gather new charms and sparkle with unsuspected fun. I like FitzGerald's Omar, the rendering is better than the original. He can rarely resist administering a sly poke at the clergy." In all that he writes he dispenses "a dry humour recalling the flavour of Sir Walter Scott."

ANON Mr. Wright called on Mr. Le Gallienne, who is also a Hind Head celebrity, and spent an ambrosial evening. The poet was genial. "There was no attempt at pose (How one detests Goethe for his attitudes!), everything was pleasant, easy, and natural." Talk flowed like water. "I asked whether he did not rank Keats above Shelley. 'One must do so,' he replied; 'Shelley is more music than poetry.' . . . The conversation turned to Mr. Le Gallienne's new translation of Omar Khayyam, and my poem 'Edward Fitzgerald at Bedford. . . . Some,' he remarked, 'have fallen foul of The Quest, but it contains nothing harmful. It is mere boyishness, and I am afraid,' he said, lighting a cigarette, 'I shall always be a boy.' At length Mr. Wright departed. "When he turned away I felt that we had done each other good. I knew that we had electrified each other. I felt drawn to him as I have felt drawn to very few. When I got back to Grayshott I took up The Quest, to finish it. . . . When I reached the last paragraph I could not restrain tears."

A LETTER of Carlyle's, hitherto unpublished, which has come into the market, contains the following pessimistic utterance on his calling: "Literature is like money, the appetite increases by gratification; the mines of literature, too, are unwholesome and dreary as the mines of Potosi; yet from either there is no return, and though little confident of finding contentment, happiness is too proud a term. I must work, I believe, in those damp caverns, till once the whole mind is recast, or the lamp of life has ceased to burn within it."

THE American Ambassador has recalled, in an interview in Cassell's Magazine, the Swinburnian stanza from which Bret Harte borrowed the metre of "The Heathen Chinese." It surges along thus gloriously:

"Who shall seek, who shall bring,
And restore thee the day
When the dove dipped her wing
And the oars won their way,
Where the narrowing Symplegades whiten
The straits of Propontis with spray."

"The Heathen Chinese" is a precious gem of humour, but it is melancholy, none the less, to reflect that its success has probably made it impossible for any more serious verse to be written in the same irresistible measure.

AN extraordinary book lies before us. The title is Tales from the New Testament, and the author Mr. F. J. Gould, and it is an attempt to make the story of the Gospels more interesting to children by retelling them in colloquial English. Look at this passage from Mark vi., as improved by Mr. Gould:

" 'I know what you will say,' Jesus went on. 'You will say, "Doctor, heal yourself." You will say that if I can cast out devils and cure sick folk in other places, I ought to be able to do it here among my own family and my old neighbours. But you know a prophet very often gets no notice taken of him by the people of his own village or country, and so he can do no mighty works among such unbelievers. You don't believe in me, and I can't perform cures for you. In olden days there was a famine in this land, and the prophet Elijah went to live with a widow, and all the time she sheltered him in her cottage heaven blessed her with plenty of food; but she was not a Jewess, there were no Jewesses good enough to have so much done for them. Then, again, there were many lepers in this country in the days of the prophet Elisha, but he never healed any of the Jews; they did not deserve it; he only healed a foreigner from the land of Syria. And so to-day I cannot come here to—'

A loud shout of anger stopped the speaker.

'You are insulting us!'
'Who are you to talk like this to respectable people?'

'Kick the scoundrel out of the synagogue!'
'Hang him on the nearest tree!'
'Pitch him over the cliff!'

Clamoring across the benches, the men of Nazareth rushed at the Carpenter, and dragged him out of the meeting-house."

Is it not hideous? One has almost a sense of impropriety in looking at it.

THE same or another Mr. Gould has had "chats" with eighteen "Pioneers of Modern Thought," which "chats" he has now put together in a volume. We cannot help admiring the ingenious way in which Mr. Gould has found complimentary adjectives for the eighteen. Thus his preface: "I wish I could chat all the chats again with witty Momerie, brilliant Crozier, silver-penned Mrs. Lynn Linton, grand old Chartist Harney, thoughtful Miss Plumtre, strenuous George Jacob Holyoake, brave-spoken Foote, gentle Miss Mathilde Blind, liberal Picton, scholarly Wheeler, independent Voysey, eloquent Coit, anecdotal Conway, philosophical Coupland, charmingly metaphysical Mrs. Husband, idealistic Muirhead, studious Whittaker, and encyclopædic Robertson."

THE Idler, under its new control, is a shade less comic and more actual and literary than it was. But there has not been time for a revised policy to take full effect. Among the March articles is one that relates the story of the Germ, the Pre-Raphaelite magazine, another on Great Britain as a Military Power, a third on English Cricketers in Australia, and a fourth on Doró in England. The pictures are fair, although they cannot compare with those offered by American magazines. It is increasingly strange that the Atlantic should make such a difference.

A FORTNIGHT ago the Outlook propounded to its readers the following literary enigma: "Who Wrote this Sonnet? It lies before us on a large quarto half-sheet, dulled, apparently, by time, and in form the page—evidently a proof—distinctly copies the sumptuous edition, in two volumes, quarto, of Gay's Poems, issued by subscription about the first quarter of the eighteenth century:

"We found Him first as in the Dells of May
The Dreaming Damsel finds the earliest Flower:
Thoughtless we wandered in the Evening
Hour:
Aimless and pleased we went our Random
Way:
In the foot-haunted City, in the Night,
Among the alternate Lamps we went and came
Till, like a humorous Thunderbolt, that Name,
The hated Name of BRASIE, affailed our Sight.
We saw, we paused, we entered, feeking Gin.
His Wrath, like a huge Breaker on the Beach,
Broke infant forth. He on the Counter beat
In his infantile Fury; and his Feet
Danced Inopotent Wrath upon the Floor within.
Still as we fled we heard his Idiot Screech."

LAST week's Outlook contained the answer, which was astutely and correctly given by Miss Edith Palliser, the Secretary of the Central Society for Women's Suffrage. The answer is—Robert Louis Stevenson. As to the how and why of his writing it the Outlook says: "Thereby hangs a tale, and if we can prevail upon our contributor, 'C. B.' [the propounder of the "enigma" to unfold it, next week or the week following, a not unamusing record of Stevensonian 'High Jinks' in the early seventies may be unrolled."

MEANWHILE, the Outlook is embarking on a reckless series of enigmas. Pleased by the notice taken of the circular red badge it wears on its cover, our contemporary asks its readers to guess "what it is, and why chosen." Our own guess is, that it was taken from a lady's brooch, possibly one belonging to the wife of a distinguished critic.

A WRITER in the Scots Pictorial says: "I is not easy to write about Mr. Andrew Lang"; he then writes four columns about him, saving four inches allotted to Mr. Lang's portrait. The article is gossippy, almost audacious; but in the following passage Mr. Lang's literary characteristics are felicitously touched:

"His quality is the most delicate, intangible thing in the world. As some one has put it he has the art of giving in a single, sure, deft apparently careless touch, the feeling of many things widely separate: of men's dreams in olden time and men's thoughts to-day; of ancient tale and the gentle modern derision of it, with the delight in 'Elzevirs,' the love of quaint relics, and that passion for Nature and the outdoor life which often exists apart from these other likings. The literary effect is a thing by itself, a thing which cannot be described. Mr. Lang has been compared to the jongleur, who, in the castles of old, used to make the days so bright for rusty barons and fair wearied ladies that time was measured by his visits. The comparison is not unfit. Gay intimate, softly fascinating, our 'worthy' would have been a very king of the wandering clan, singing now of a Court of Love, now of Palestine, with a strange, far-away grace while his eyes looked askance, dreaming of old gods, old mysteries, and the riddle of existence. Something more than a jongleur he undoubtedly is, but that first and that last, with store of learning ever ready to the touch of the angling fancy."

A WRITER in the Westminster Review surveys the "Dog in Literature." The article will interest dog-lovers, who, however, are reminded that, with one immortal exception Homer used the dog as a type of shamelessness, and that in the Bible the dog is mentioned only with disgust. The writer might have added that Shakespeare scarcely acknowledges intimate friendship between dog and man. More often than not his reference to dogs are uncomplimentary. Theseus' and Hippolyta's praise of the hounds of Sparta is splendid, but it is not the language of an intimate love. And the lord and huntsman in "The Taming of the Shrew" who discourse so well about Clowder and Silver and Belman love their dogs as huntsmen rather than as men. Oddly enough, the riter, Mr. J. Hudson, entirely omits to mention Launce and his dog, in "The Two Gentlemen of Verona." Yet in Launce's complaints and upbraiding of his "cruel-hearted cur," who has "no more pity in him than a dog," there is an ironical suggestion of real dog and man attachment.

AMONG Mr. Hudson's less familiar doggy selections is Sir Edwin Arnold's rendering of an Eastern legend, in which an adulteress who is being led out to be stoned is saved through a dog. On the way she sees the dog lying in the sun half dead with thirst, and she tenders the poor animal her shoe full of water:

"But the King,
Riding within his litter, marked this thing:
'The law is that the people stone thee dead
For that which thou hast wrought; but there is come
Fawning around thy feet a witness dumb,
Not heard upon thy trial.

I hold rule
In Allah's stead, who is "the merciful,"
And hope for mercy; therefore, go thou free—
I dare not show less pity unto thee!"

A LECTURER at Highgate has been explaining, for the benefit of literary pilgrims, the means by which they may identify the position of Andrew Marvell's cottage on Highgate Hill. It stood, he said, next door to Lauderdale House, where Nell Gwynne once lived, and, when Sir Sydney Waterlow leveled it to the ground, he, the lecturer, asked to be allowed to place a stone on the site. Sir Sydney said that in all probability the whole of the land would soon be built and such a mark would therefore be hidden. He, however, consented to place the stone from the cottage doorstep in the wall adjoining Highgate Hill, exactly opposite the former entrance to the cottage, and to this day the stone remains as the only reminder that the famous writer and politician once lived at Highgate.

MR. JOHN LANE'S remarkable gift for adorning a book with a dainty and alluring type and form is again displayed in the new volume on Journalism for Women, by M. E. A. Bennett, which has just reached us. The cover is bright and charming. A scarlet-clad dame, presumably a woman journalist, points to an upward path winding through a green landscape. The design is bold and quite successful, and it strikes the keynote of a pleasant and practical work. It were well if more publishers realised the relationship that should exist between the outside and inside of a book.

UNDER the title, "The Epic of Ladies," a Cambridge poet, who hides his identity, in the Granta, under the simple letter "K," very dexterously chaffs Mr. Samuel Butler's theory that the Odyssey was written by a woman. Thus:

"An axiom, so safe and sure
That everyone may know it, is
The simple fact, no more obscure,
That Homer was a poetess;
The marks of female style we meet
In every single line of his,
Apparent in those dainty feet
And harmonies divine of his.

Nay, if a man in Homer's lore
Is reckoned very well up, he Ascribes the cantos twenty-four Undoubting, to Penelope,
And thus, though long in darkness sealed,
Appears the whole reality;
The secret is at length revealed
Of Homer's personality.

Thus all those wondrous wanderings
And perils of Ulysses's
Turn out to be imaginings
(Embroidered) of his missis's;
And long ere woman learned to ride
Like Shorland or like Michael,
A harder wheel she knew to guide,
The ancient Epic Cycle."

A CORRESPONDENT writes:

"In the recently published work, Annals of a Publishing House; William Blackwood and his Sons, their Magazine and Friends, by the late Mrs. Oliphant, the authoress says of the Scots Magazine, referring to the events of the year 1817, 'Constable's small magazine, which they (Pringle & Cleghorn) managed for a short time, soon went the way of all 'dull periodicals.' For a 'dull' periodical, none has been more quoted from except its English contemporary, the Gentleman's Magazine; but regarding its discontinuance, which did not happen till 1826, all bibliographers appear to be at fault. Lowndes says of the Scots Magazine and the Edinburgh Magazine and Literary Miscellany, 'This and the preceding periodical were driven out of the field soon after the appearance of Blackwood's Magazine.' The facts are, that the Miscellany was purchased by Constable and incorporated with his Scots Magazine, and its title added in 1803; and the Scots Magazine was purchased from Alexander Cowan, the trustee on Constable's estate, on July 12, 1826, by William Blackwood, although, strange to say, he did not incorporate the ancient magazine with his own and younger periodical, Blackwood's Magazine, the usual practice of a publisher under similar circumstances. The latter fact, discovered by Mr. G. W. Niven some time ago, was communicated to the pages of the Scots Magazine (Cowan & Co., Perth) in February, 1896, in an article entitled 'The Scots Magazine, 1739-1826,' but evidently Mrs. Oliphant did not avail herself of the information there given. The evidence of the sale of the copyright is contained in the following advertisement, which appeared in the Edinburgh Evening Courant of July 27, 1826, a file of which for that year may be consulted in the Mitchell Library, Glasgow. It is as follows: 'Edinburgh Magazine: A new series of the Scots Magazine. The Trustee upon the Sequestrated Estate of Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. begs to inform the subscribers to the above Work that the Publication of it is now discontinued, the copyright having been purchased by Mr. Blackwood, Edinburgh, 12th July, 1826.' As Mrs. Oliphant's work purports to give an authoritative history of Blackwood's Magazine, it is natural to expect the fact to which attention is now called should have received mention, but, as already stated, the authoress—like the bibliographers—appears to have been unacquainted with the transaction."

MR. GEORGE REDWAY writes: "I shall feel much obliged if you will make known to your readers that I have decided to print a special presentation edition of R. Farquharson Sharp's Dictionary of English Authors, recently published, in order that bona fide booksellers may obtain a copy for their personal use without expense. Country booksellers applying for a copy should state conveyance, and the book will be delivered free into the hands of their London agent.

Town booksellers may receive the book through their collectors; but immediate application in writing is necessary, as the number printed will, of course, depend on the extent to which this offer is accepted."

THE little volume, entitled Formby Reminiscences, which was originally printed for private circulation only, has met with so great a demand that it has been decided to reprint an edition for general sale. This will be published by Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. during the course of the present month. The author, Mrs. Jacson, is a grand-niece of the first Sir Robert Peel.

THE Religious Tract Society, which will be 100 years old in May, 1899, proposes to inaugurate its Centenary Celebration on Tuesday, the 22nd of the present month. At three o'clock p.m. on that day a meeting will be held in the Mansion House, at which the Lord Mayor will preside, and the claims of the Society will be advocated by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Earl of Meath, the Bishop of London, and others. At seven p.m., on the same day, another meeting will be held in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place. To meet the vastly increased claims on the Society, which assists publication work in 226 languages, it is proposed to raise a special Centenary Fund, as a fitting commemoration of the hundredth year of the Society's existence.

M. EDOUARD ROD will give a lecture at Stafford House, St. James's, on Wednesday, March 23, at a quarter to four p.m., on "Le Roman Français Contemporain." The chair will be taken by the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava. Tickets can be obtained from Mlle. Souvestre, 42, Onslow-gardens, S.W., or Mrs. Augustine Birrell, 30, Lower Sloane-street, S.W.

M. BOUTET DE MONVEL is to be followed to America by M. Carolus Duran, who also has commissions to paint portraits there. These visits should be very profitable. English artists must regret that American taste in pictures is so inveterately French.

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co. are about to issue A Book About Bells, by the Rev. G. S. Tyack, author of The Historic Dress of the Clergy, &c. It will be fully illustrated.

MR. JOSEPH HATTON'S new novel will be published this month by Messrs. Hutchinson, who have lately issued the fifth edition of the same author's The Dugger and the Cross. The new story will be called The Vicar, and will be a story of the day, the scenes alternating between London and a Worcester village.

THE next number, the last but one, of Mr. W. Rothenstein's series of English Portraits, will be published immediately. It will contain drawings of Sir Henry Irving and Mr. George Gissing.

HAMLET AND "WE BERLINERS."

I CANNOT congratulate the friends of Shakespeare in Germany upon their treatment of the Lyceum Company which visited Berlin this month. "Hamlet" was played in the New Royal Theatre, with Mr. Forbes Robertson in the title-rôle, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell as Ophelia; and on the morrow of the performance the whole Berlin Press, with but one or two honourable exceptions, damned Mr. Robertson with the faint praise that he was interesting, but not convincing. I am not qualified to defend the actor's merits against the strictures of expert critics. As a mere layman in the stalls, I am glad to put on record that his wonderful gift of elocution revealed to me fresh beauties in Shakespeare's text. In the rebuke, for instance, which Hamlet addresses to Horatio against the things "dreamt of in your philosophy," I had hitherto always heard the emphasis put upon the pronoun. Mr. Robertson, however, laid the stress on "philosophy," which is obviously right. It refers back to the Prince's resolve to "wipe away . . . all saws of books, all forms, all pressures past," and it removes the touch of assumption which makes the couplet so serviceable to quote. In the great soliloquy, again, in the third act, I fancy that, if this were the time and place, I could prove Mr. Robertson's delivery to be nearer to Shakespeare's intention than that of Herr Josef Kainz in the Deutscher Theater in Berlin. Where the latter is turbulent and aggressive, with the audience obviously in his eye, Mr. Robertson simply let us overhear him as his meditation slowly grew to shape. Yet more, in the play-acting scene, where an English actor cannot but study the effect of Maclise's picture in the National Gallery, Herr Kainz' vehemence is a serious error in my sight. Shakespeare never meant Hamlet to be fidgety, but the fleeting emotions of the Prince's spirit were faithfully reflected on Mr. Robertson's mobile features.

But my quarrel with the Berlin public goes deeper than this. It was unmannerly that the Teuton neighbour on my right rose and went out in the middle of the play with a "this will never do" upon his lips. It was distracting that my left-hand neighbour should have been cutting the leaves of his German text the while the play was in progress. Such lapses from good taste can be forgiven; but what I find harder to forgive is the totally perverse point of view from which the critics approached the occasion. It is far from my purpose to belittle what I only very imperfectly understand. Shakespeare's debt to Germany cannot be estimated too high. In a sense he was discovered by the German commentators, as he was certainly adopted for their own. Private rights of ownership in this priceless property it would be idle to maintain and futile to grudge. Carlyle's fine dictum settled the matter long since: "We are all poets when we read a poem well." Such recreation, however, is possible to the tyro in Shakespearean lore. The problem of the quartos, the mystery of the lost Hamlet, the research into the Prince's age, these matters are not essential to an intelligent enjoyment of the play. It is as well, by the way, that this should be so, for the scholars are as hopelessly divided as ever. Prof. Dr. Döring, of Berlin, for instance, in his Neuer Versuch zur ästhetischen Erklärung der Tragödie (Gaertner, 1898), identifies the Hamlet of the first recension with the W. H. of the earlier sonnets, and refers them both to William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke. But now Mr. Sidney Lee has proved that Thorpe would never have addressed my lord of Pembroke without the titles of his rank. And if W. H. is not Lord Pembroke, what becomes of Dr. Döring's whole contention: "Loslösung Hamlets von Pembroke ist das Wort des Rätsels"?

What should have become of all the dust which the scholars have raised about our ears, as we listened to Mr. Forbes Robertson as Hamlet? The great building of Kroll's Theatre in Berlin was filled in all places which command a view of the stage. A princess was in the boxes and an ambassador in the stalls. The British residents in Berlin had assembled to do honour to their countrymen; but the bulk of the house—as a tailor's apprentice could have proved—was composed of Germans. Forty years, save one, had passed since Shakespeare's German friends had entertained him in his native guise. To many who had grown up under this disability, it came as a veritable surprise that Shakespeare was an English poet. Here then, I thought, was the opportunity for which this city in the plain had been waiting for more than a generation. Now was the time to correct the foreign conventions, to supplement Schlegel and shake off the commentators' yoke, to learn to know Shakespeare as his own people know and love him. And yet, what was the result? Most of them would not realise that they had suffered a disability at all. They failed even to appreciate its removal, and turned the tables on their benefactors, crying out for the forty years in the desert. With the almost unique exception of the able critic of the Vossische Zeitung—honoris causa nomino—one after one they rejected the brilliant lesson which had been taught them. One after one they turned away from an Englishman's rendering of an Englishman's play for the simple reason that it was English. This fault was more than the common prejudice—less common by far in Germany than among ourselves—against everything foreign. It was genuine jealousy for Shakespeare's fame, a genuine and seemingly ineradicable belief that Schlegel's text and Josef Kainz' personation are truer and nearer to the Shakespearean Hamlet than the ipsissima verba in Mr. Forbes Robertson's mouth. One critic wrote that "the just demands which we Berliners make of the actor of Hamlet were by no means satisfied," and another appeared to formulate those demands by saying 'Hamlet' in Germany is almost better known than 'Faust'; the man of culture can repeat whole passages by heart; the 'Hamlet' problem is always with us, and the performances of the best interpreters are familiar to the smallest detail." A third critic wrote more bluntly: "It touches us Germans to the quick to see Shakespeare, who has become almost more one of ourselves than even our own poets put on the boards in a foreign dress. This applies above all to "Hamlet," whose turns of expression have gone straight into the German treasury. The sense of foreignness which an English Hamlet creates is increased by the peculiar style in which, as we saw last night, the dramatic art of England moves. England is the land of tradition—even in art." Oh, ye Germans and Berliners, confounding thus blindly the spheres of native and foreign, what style and tradition should the English stage conserve but those of Shakespeare, the Englishman! My goosequill would fain borrow a feather from Matthew Arnold's pen to deal adequately with the last of these citations. For while I am angrily casting about how to turn "smug" and "priggish" more courteously, the lightning of his irony would have played upon your pretensions, would have stript your self-assertiveness bare would have probed your feelings, thus touched to the quick by the sound of Shakespeare in his mother-tongue, would have pressed the point home again and again with a grim facility of a master-hand until you cried out for mercy. What is the value of this Philistine convention that Hamlet is more German than English? What are the counterfeits in the "German treasury" to the jewels from Shakespeare's lips? What is the gain of your "men of culture" above ours that you should be so hyper-sensitive to disillusion? I do not question the excellence of Schlegel's rendering. It almost ranks with the English Bible among the masterpieces of the translator's art. But there is nothing in it from a literary point of view which can justify this talk about demands.

Appropriately enough, the fourth volume of the re-issue of Schlegel and Tieck's Shakespeare, which Prof. Brandt is editing for the Bibliographical Institute in Leipzig, was published at the same time as the English company visited Berlin. It contains three plays, "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," and "Othello," to each of which Dr. Brandt has supplied a brief introduction and notes. I have read one more their "Hamlet" in this "treasury" side by side with the Temple volume, and admirable as it undoubtedly is, if it spoil them for the English version, then they have no ear for language. To the lovers of Shakespeare I need hardly apologise for selecting one passage in illustration Ophelia's speech, when Hamlet leaves her in act iii., sc. i., runs in German as follows: "O welch ein edler Geist ist hier zerstört! Des Hofmann's Auge, des Gelehrten Zunge, Des Krieger's Arm, des Staates Blum' und Hoffnung, Der Sitte Spiegel und der Bildung Muster, Das Merkziel der Betrachter: ganz, ganz bin Und ich, der Frau'n elendeste und ärmste, Die seiner Schwüre Honig sog, ich sehe Die edle, hochgebietende Vernunft Mistönend wie verstimmte Glocken jetzt; Dies hohe Bild, die Züge blüh'nder Jugend, Durch Schwärmerei zerrütet: weh' mir, wehe Dass ich sah, was ich sah, und sehe, was ich sehe."

As a whole and in detail it is demonstrably inferior to the original. Without being hypercritical, where, we may ask, is "the observed of all observers" in "das Merksziel der Betrachter"? How does "die seiner Schwüre Honig sog" reproduce the magic of the line "That suck'd the honey of his music vows"? or "mistönend wie verstimmte Glocken jetzt" express "Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh"? Where are the rhythm and alliteration and suggestion of "That unmatch'd form and feature of blown youth Blasted with ecstasy," in the translator's conventional rendering? How different, even, are the associations of "Schwärmerei" from the Shakespearean "ecstasy." Has Germany missed nothing of beauty by accepting the substitute for so long, and was it a tenable attitude, when Mrs. Patrick Campbell made Shakespeare's music more melodious, to pretend that they preferred their own:

"When they wiped their mouths and went their journey, Throwing him for thanks—'But drought was pleasant'?"

There was, as I have said, one exception to this wilful blindness of the German critics. One writer had the grace and wit to see that the rare visit of the Lycoum company to Berlin should be used to rectify the Berlin standard. I conclude this protest by quoting the following sentences from the evening edition of the Vossische Zeitung. It is not too late to hope that their candour and courage will win their due effect:

"Mr. Robertson's artistic wisdom," wrote the critic, "prompted him to lay every stress upon the brimming life of the soul. Hamlet moved his fellows like a kind of sleep-walker, soft of speech and gesture, good-hearted, gentle-minded, but with something strange upon him. When they addressed him, he turned silent, and looked doubtfully at them, like strangers alien to his kind. He listened less to their words than to his own inward voice. But when he was alone, then Hamlet came to life indeed. Then, in self-communing, his sensitive spirit woke up, and in tones of thunder he spoke to his second self, as though another man were present before him in the flesh. This visionary, keen-sighted, transcendental trait in Hamlet, which I never saw worked out before, was admirably suited to Mr. Robertson. Here we had England itself, the land of mists and ghosts, and then we realised that Shakespeare's ghosts were something more than superstition. . . . Next to this tender, tender Hamlet, a tender, slender Ophelia—mimosa next to mimosa. I gained the impression that Mrs. Patrick Campbell's performance was not adequately appreciated by our German public, perhaps because they looked for a more conventional attractiveness, and, therefore, were correspondingly disappointed. The more emphatically should be stated that this Ophelia was fully worthy of this Hamlet. She, too, was thoroughly English, with nothing of that pette's girlishness, ripe, sweet and sensuous, which our crass German interpreters have gradually evolved into an ideal of sinful love, the precise Antipodes of the true Ophelia. Mrs. Patrick Campbell gave us the real Ophelia of Shakespeare, a maiden shy, pensive, impressionable, all sweet yielding and timid innocence. Her commonest phrase was: 'I will obey'; her deepest instinct was fear. She was like a dove fluttering in the storm, and falling broken to the ground. . . .

"Ophelia and Hamlet, as rendered to us by Mrs. Campbell and Mr. Robertson, were the fore-runners of a cleaner morality and a tenderer imagination, born too soon into a world too harsh for them, 'aristocrats of nervous sensibility,' as the modern catch-word terms it, who owed their misfortunes to their too early birth."

L. M.

MR. MEREDITH'S ODE.

I HAVE read Mr. Meredith's Ode in the current Cosmopolis with an amazement passing words. Amazement for its power, amazement for its sins, its flagrantries, its defiant pitching to the devil of all law recognised even by the boldest, the most scornful of merely conventional tradition; amazement—for it fulfils its title, it is itself an anarchy, a turbulence, tumultuously eruptive as the Revolution in its first unchaining. To say it is not a perfect poem would be mild. It challenges all order; it has every fault within a poet's compass, except the tame faults, except lack of inspiration. On the plenitude, the undeniable plenitude, of its aggressive force, it seems to stake everything. No one can complain that Mr. Meredith fears his fate too much. I am in tune with most audacity, but Mr. Meredith leaves me gasping.

You must read the poem once, as you play a difficult fantasia once, merely to see how it goes; a second time, to begin to read it; a third time, to begin to realise it. All the arduous power and all the more repellent vices of Mr. Meredith's poetic style are here at grips, exalted by mutual antiposition and counteraction. Never has he been more intermittently careless of grammatical construction, obscuring what is already inherently difficult. He storms onward like his own France, crashing and contorting in his path the astonishing sentences, now volcanic and irresistibly thundering, now twisted and writhing or furiously splintered. The metre is likewise; lines blocked, immobile, inflexible, with needless rubble of words, or whirring all ways like snapped and disintegrated machinery; yet at times forcing their way to rightness through sheer inward heat, and leaping like a geyser-spout—magnificently impressive.

For the Ode is wonderful, though an unlawful wonder. The first nine stanzas, with all their perverse difficulties and disfeatures, are full of astonishing imagery, passages like the loosing of pent fires. The poem has a devil in it. By no other word can we describe the magnetic intensity of its repellentness and arrestingness. Those who overcome their first recoil must end in submission—if protesting submission—to its potency. No youth could rival the other furnaces of this production of age, no young imagination conceive these images which outpour by troops and battalions. Mr. Meredith's own language can alone figure the poem:

"Ravishing as red wine in woman's form,
A splendid Maenad, she of the delirious laugh,
Her body twisted flames with the smoke-cap crowned,

. . . . who sang, who sang
Intoxication to her swarm,
Revolved them, hair, voice, feet, in her carmagnole."

That splendid outburst is all for which I have room. If this Ode be not a success (as I wish I might persuade myself it is), more power has gone to such a failure than would make a score of reputations. And assuredly much, very much, it were blind to call anything but success.

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

XI.—A WIFE.

"THERE'S another!" she exclaimed, as she threw down the book. "Three books from Mudie's this morning, and not a single one I want to read."

"What book is that?" I asked.

"The Disaster," she said.

"It has been well reviewed," I remarked.

"One notice said it was better than Zola and better than Stephen Crane," she said, "and so I ordered it. But it's a translation; and I hate translations; they never seem real. And it's all about the French—and years ago. I'm sure I don't care what French people were doing when I was in my cradle."

"Well, what are the others?"

She picked them up and read the titles from their backs.

"Simon Dale and Shrewsbury."

"By very capable authors," I said.

"Yes, but why does Anthony Hope want to write about people he can't know anything about—and I don't care anything about?"

"The historical novel," I said, "if well done, gives you a sort of insight into a period which—"

"Pouf!" she said. "Do you suppose I read novels to get insights into periods?"

"You read them to be amused, no doubt," I said. "But isn't it possible to combine amusement with—"

"No," she interrupted. "When I am instructed I am not amused. Besides, one isn't instructed. When I read a historical novel I know all the time that the people aren't real people; and even if they were, they're dead. And I really don't care much about people who have been dead for hundreds of years."

"Then do you like novels about the future—Looking Backwards, or The Time Machine?"

She pondered a moment, wrinkling her brows. "Well, I can't say that I exactly like them," she said; "but one has to read them, because everyone talks about them. But how can you be really interested in people who never existed—people you can never possibly meet?"

"Then the novel you want is a novel dealing with people of the present time? The Society novel?"

"Oh, no! Not the Society novel. The people are less real than—than the Martians. Now, let me see—I think, if I could order a novel, I would get Mr. Hope, or Mr. Wells, or Mr. Frankfort Moore, to sit down and write a story about the people he knows, the sort of people one meets every day, only—you know—put into strange situations. They can do it, I'm sure. Look at I Forbid the Banns, and The God in the Car. Mr. Frankfort Moore wrote one of them, didn't he? And yet he will write stories about stupid people in the last century."

"Then you want stories about the present time?"

"Of course. It's the present time now, isn't it? And now is the most important time."

"And about people you know something of?"

"Well, not about Zulus, like those stories I had the other day. The White Hecatombe, wasn't it?"

"What about Louis Becke?"

"There are always some white people in his tales?"

"And what about Many Cargoes? Jacobs writes about bargees, and you don't know any bargees."

"Yes, I liked Many Cargoes. But, then, you—you—I don't know, I think I should like to know those bargees."

"And what about A Child of the Jago? I should have thought that the people in that were a long way further away from you than the people of the Middle Ages. And you've read that twice."

"Oh, but it gives one such an insight into—"

"I thought you didn't read novels to get an insight into anything."

"Oh, bother! How should I know why I like a novel?"

She picked up the three offending books, and tied a piece of string round them.

"You are going out," she said. "Do leave these at the library and get me some more. I don't mind what they are, so long as they are about nice people—who are alive."

I took the books.

"But—mind," she said, "nothing about Cavaliers—or foreigners."

"I will do my best," I said.

"Or Jews," she added, as I reached the door.

THE WEEK.

THREE bulky volumes of travel give character to the past week's output of books. A timely and important work is Lieutenant Seymour Vandeleur's Campaigning on the Upper Nile and Niger. This is a book which all who are desirous to understand the Niger question, now becoming so acute between France and England, will do well to turn. The circumstances under which the French occupied Bussa and Borgu are fully described. Sir George T. Goldie supplies an Introduction to the volume; and from it we quote this inspiring and instructive passage:

"All geographers and many publicists are familiar with the fact that the region in question possesses populous towns and a fertile soil, and, most important of all, races whose industry is untiring, notwithstanding the discouraging and paralysing effects of insecurity of life, liberty, and property. They know that these races are possessed of high intelligence and considerable artistic skill, as displayed in their fine brass and leather work. They know that the early marriages in those latitudes, and the fecundity and vitality of the negro races, have, through countless generations, largely counteracted the appalling destruction of life resulting from slave-raiding, and that under reasonable conditions of security the existing population might soon be trebled and yet live in far greater material comfort than at present. They know, in short, that all that is needed to convert the Niger Sudan into an African India is the strong hand of a European protector."

But the interest of Lieutenant Vandeleur's pages is not wholly political or military. Opening the book at random we come upon this picture of a valley which was "literally covered with game of all sorts; thousands of zebra were placidly feeding with innumerable herds of antelope of different species—wildebeest, hartebeest, a few mpala, and many gazelles, while away in the distance there were a few stately giraffe. Secure in their numbers, they seemed to scorn the presence of three lions which were eagerly watching them from one flank, while in the middle of the moving mass stood two great unwieldy rhinoceros, which contrasted strangely with the diminutive gazelles."

The book is well illustrated, and contains some good examples of military sketching.

If Lieutenant Vandeleur's book allies itself to the Niger trouble, Mr. Lionel Deele's Three Years in Savage Africa throws light on problems connected with our South African possessions and interests. The dedication of the book to Mr. Cecil Rhodes is significant. Mr. Deele is of French extraction, and, according to the account which Mr. H. M. Stanley gives of him in the Introduction he has written to the volume, he has been a great traveller from boyhood. In 1890 he was entrusted with a scientific mission by the French Government. On his return to France "he was reproached with having been too partial towards the British Administrations in the various countries he had travelled, and especially with having been too biassed against the French padres in Uganda, and having charged them with political intrigue." Later, Mr. Deele accompanied his friend Mr. Cust, of the Pall Mall Gazette, on a nine months' tour in South Africa. The great journey northward to the Zambesi, and thence to Lake Tanganika, which this book records, was begun in 1891, and was carried out with the usual quantum of adventures and disagreeables. Mr. Stanley answers for the readableness of the book: "No page is dull . . . his touch is light, his language clear and idiomatic, his tastes are simple, and the result is one of the brightest books of travel we ever read."

THE South Sea Islands are the subject of a book of travel, entitled Brown Men and Women, by Mr. Edward Reeves, a New Zealand writer, who knows the islands well. Mr. Reeves is very bitter against political missionaries, and against all who interfere with the freedom and native traits of the islanders. Indeed, one of his aims is to show

"how superior in happiness the healthy, singing, laughing, well-fed, fat, sober, land-owning, young or old South Sea Island savage, erect and tall, without a care or a curse, is to the white slave of Stepney, to the drunken barbarian of Glasgow Wynds, to the landless, joyless, Wiltshire hind, marching stolidly, with bowed back and bent head, day after day nigher the workhouse, and, more than all, to the starving, diseased, little savage children of Deptford, growing up in Old England, a danger and a curse to the next generation."

Mr. Reeves has illustrated his book with a number of fine photographs of South Sea Islanders, men and women, especially the beautiful women of Samoa and Tahiti and Haapi. Some of these girls might be the heroines of Mr. Louis Becke's stories of "Reef and Palm."

Mr. Gregory's Letter-Box, 1813-30, is a curiously entitled book. The "Mr. Gregory" is the Right Honourable William Gregory, whose autobiography was edited by Lady Gregory four years ago. Lady Gregory now supplements that work by these selections from her husband's grandfather's political correspondence. Mr. Gregory was Under-Secretary for Ireland from 1813 to 1831. Lady Gregory writes:

"I see no need to apologise for their publication, purchase and perusal being non-compulsory, but I may quote a sentence of Lord Rosebery's: 'The Irish question has never passed into history, for it has never passed out of politics.' And also a word said to me by Mr. Lecky, that far less is known of the early part of this century in Ireland than of the close of the last."

There will be found in this volume letters to and from Lord Wellesley, Mr. Peel, Mr. Croker, Lord Talbot, and others. There can be no question that the book is important to students of Irish history.

MR. ERNEST RHYS has put forth a volume of Welsh Ballads inspired by, or directly paraphrased from, old Welsh models. In his notes at the end of the volume Mr. Rhys gives the following account of his aims:

"In the foregoing poems, whether original or not, it will be found that what may be called the traditional method has generally been followed in transferring Welsh words or Welsh characteristics into English verse. The idiosyncrasy of Welsh verse can at best, however, be very imperfectly maintained in an English medium; and the present writer has cared more to keep to the spirit than the exact letter of the old poets in The Black Book of Carmarthen and The Red Book of Hergest. Their poems are given here, accordingly, rather as paraphrases than translations; with everything freely eliminated that seemed likely to cause friction, or make their chances of being immediately enjoyed, as poetry must be if it is to have its free and full effect."

THE second volume is issued in Messrs. George Bell & Son's edition of the works of George Berkeley. It will be remembered that the Introduction to the first volume was written by the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour. The bulk of the present volume is taken up by Berkeley's Alciphron, a work to which the general reader to-day is a stranger.

Nevertheless the editor, Mr. George Simpson, writes:

"Alciphron was, and is likely to be, the most generally enjoyed of Berkeley's volumes. It is supple and variously entertaining, with merits that far outbalance its defects. . . . Were its philosophical value . . . less it would still be eagerly read, for, in an age of delicate and unmetrical prose, it stands distinguished by delicacy and symmetry."

Alciphron consists of seven dialogues, in which the Free-thinker is considered as a heist, libertine, enthusiast, scorner, cynic, metaphysician, fatalist and sceptic.

MR. VERNON BLACKBURN has put forth a timely volume of musical appreciations under the title of The Fringe of an Art. A photogravure portrait of Gounod faces the title-page.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE HUMOURS OF BOOKSELLING.

MR. JOHN SHAYLOR, of Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co., is perhaps the best bibliophile in London, and his store of bookselling anecdotes must be well-nigh inexhaustible. He has just given a budget of these to the Publishers' Circular, from which we take leave to reprint a portion of Mr. Shaylor's highly entertaining article. Mr. Shaylor writes:

The following specimens of humour are without classification, and readers must decide for themselves to which class they belong, collected as they have been at random from many hundreds of a similar character. A scholar and a gentleman entering a bookseller's shop inquired for a translation of Omar Khayyam: "No," said the bookseller promptly, "there is no such book. Homer wrote the Iliad and the Odyssey—both of which I have in stock, but I did not write the book you are inquiring for. The bookseller evidently had not heard of the now popular Persian poet. Another gentleman had an important inquiry for a book the only clue to which that could be given was that it had a Hermit Crab on the cover. The intelligent bookseller had no difficulty in recognising that Drummond's Natural Law was the book required; on the other hand, little intelligence was shown by the bookseller who instructed his collector for the Journal of Horticulture office for a copy of Wilberforce on the Incarnation, he was evidently thinking that the Incarnation was a variety of the carnation. An inquiry was made of an assistant for a certain book found in Russia, when answer was given that he did not think it could be done in Russia, but he thought he could get it done in Rome. During the brilliant summer of 1897 it will be remembered that wasps were very plentiful. A bookseller having obtained on three separate occasions a copy of Aristophanes' Wasps, ventured the opinion that he believed the copies were required for some experts who were inquiring into the cause of the plague. . . . "My mind conversant with the titles of books is all that is necessary to translate what works were required when the following were asked for: 'Earnest Small Travellers,' and 'Alice the Mysterious,' by Bulwer, explained themselves. Homer's 'The Ills he had,' and Caesar's 'Salvation Wars,' were only Homer's Iliad and Caesar's Helvetic Wars slightly altered. 'Curiosities of a Woman-Hater' was only Curiosities of Nomenclature. 'Little Monster,' by J. M. Barrie, the author of 'Widow's Thumbs,' sounds peculiar. It appears rather disloyal to ask for 'The Queen's Beer,' but it was Her Majesty's Beer that was wanted. Hall's 'Bear Track Hunting' for Hall's Brie-à-Brae Hunter; 'All the Nights' (Hall & Knight's) Algebra and 'Sun and Shines' (Sommerstein's) Arithmetic show gross ignorance of educational literature.

Although, according to Dr. Johnson, 'Wit will never make a man rich,' yet human nature would be poor indeed without it. Probably this explains the strange habit of associating a certain class of imaginary literature with certain days. Thus regularly on April 1 inquiries would be made by some small boy, or a bigger one denuded of wit, for 'The History of the World before the Creation'; another would inquire for 'A Treatise on the Extraction of Milk from the Pigeon,' by a 'Practical Fancier'; or, again, 'The Extraordinary Adventures of Adam's Grandfather,' written by himself; failing that, get 'A Pattern of Eve's Fig Leaves,' by an "Experienced Dressmaker."

Ignorance on the part of readers is accountable for the frequent inquiries made for books supposed to have been written by certain characters in fiction, such as 'The Idols of the Market Place,' by Squire Wendover, mentioned in Robert Elsmere. 'Sweet Bells Jangled,' quoted by Anstey in The Giant's Robe. 'The Pilgrim's Scrip,' by Richard Feverel, from G. Meredith's Ordeal of Richard Feverel, and many times have the 'Electric Creed,' by Marie Corelli, mentioned in The Romance of Two Worlds, been asked for. . . .

A lady recently asked a London bookseller if he had in stock the sequel to A Fallen Angel, by one of them. She believed there was such a book, but did not know the exact title; had he, she suggested, The Eloping Angels that she could see, as perhaps that might be the book she was looking for. "No," replied the bookseller, he had not; and unwittingly, and without sufficient reflection, he ventured the remark that he had in stock the Heavenly Twins, perhaps that would be the sequel. The record can be better imagined than expressed."

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. BARNES, OF ZUMMERZET (?).

SIR,—I fear that my causeries have not the symmetry of the ornithorhynchus, or whatever fascinating beast it was that the late Sir Richard Owen reconstructed from a single bone. Mr. Andrew Lang, in reconstructing my arguments from a single short quotation in your admirable paper, has made me say or imply things which I never even dreamed of—as he will admit, as soon as he has done me the honour to peruse the full text of my paper in the Pall Mall Magazine. He will then acknowledge that I did not attempt "destructive criticism" of his "native language and literature"; that I did not rate the dialect-writers of Scotland on a level with those of Somerset; or indulge in a general orgie of folly. It will give me the greatest pleasure to discuss with Mr. Lang any of the questions raised in my causerie or his letter; but if we begin by criticising what we don't happen to have read we shall only be darkening counsel.

"Phonetically," says Mr. Lang, "Zummerzetese may be interesting, but I confess to being much more interested in dialects that preserve words and phrases which modern English has lost. The dialect of Scotland does preserve such words and phrases in large numbers. If Zummerzetese does so, de manus, it is more interesting than I gathered from a study, by no means prolonged or elaborate, of the works of Mr. Barnes."

On this let me say: (1) William Barnes (as Mr. Lang may discover with no effort beyond that of reading my article) was not a Somersetshire, but a Dorsetshire, man, and used the Dorsetshire dialect. The correction is, no doubt, trivial; but we may as well be accurate.

(2) The dialects of the South-West of England (of Somerset, Dorset, Devon, and Cornwall), though quite distinct, do preserve large numbers of words and phrases which modern English has lost—old English words, French words, Celtic words. They are rich in varying degrees: but each is rich in such words. For proof of this I refer Mr. Lang to the publications of the English Dialect Society.

(3) But surely dialect in poetry appeals by something more than this merely philological interest. We do not, I apprehend, define or summarise the value of dialect in a song of Burns by saying that it preserves words which modern English has lost. To certain kinds of verse dialect adds a peculiar charm—and a charm which is essentially poetical rather than philological.

(4) If Mr. Lang deny this, I retire. If he grant it, I proceed, and urge that, though Barnes be a vastly inferior poet to Burns, there is no reason why he should be denied the chance which has never been denied to Burns; no reason why he should be forbidden to write "olom" for "elm," while Burns is allowed to write "aik" for "oak." I submit that if native speech, inflection, accent, add charm, in Mr. Lang's opinion, to Northern song, they may possibly add charm to Southern song. Mr. Lang, as a Northerner, may not be able to perceive it there: but I do not see why he should exalt that simple accident into a principle of criticism.—I am, &c.,

A. T. QUILLER-COUCH.

SIR,—It seems to me that Mr. Lang, with characteristic but amiable indiscretion, has entered the lists against Mr. Quiller-Couch singularly ill-equipped. If Mr. Lang can see nothing in the poetry of William Barnes but "oddly spelled English," he is either painfully ill-acquainted with his subject, or shows a lack of appreciation for simple, direct, and often acutely realised lyric verse, which one is surprised to find in so sedulous a nurse of younger reputations. Indeed, on the face of it, he is sadly in the dark. To begin with, Barnes did not write in the Somerset, but in the Dorset, dialect; I assure Mr. Lang that there are marked differences to the trained ear; and why, in the name of all wild parallels, compare the whole of Scots verse-writers with those produced by a single English county? If a comparison is to be made at all, let it be between all England and all Scotland, or, if Mr. Lang prefer it, say between Dorset and Ross.

On Mr. Lang's theory that the dialect of Barnes is only "oddly spelled English," it may be an interesting exercise for him, and all of his belief, to give the ordinary equivalents for such words as these: Anewst, backbron', amper, blooth, branten, tutty, marréls, colepexy, hidybuck, gally, dunt, drashel; and if, after this, Mr. Lang is prepared to reconsider Barnes as a poet, let him turn to such verses as "Ellen Brine of Allenburn," "Fatherhood," "In the Spring," "The Love Child," and, as it has always appeared to me, that wonderful piece of faithful realisation, "Evenèn in the Village."—I am, &c., C. K. BURROW.

Highgate: March 7.

WHY NOT SCHOOLS IN LITERATURE?

SIR,—Tell me why an author, no less than a painter, should not belong to a school? Watts, for instance, paints clearly under the influence of Titian. Sir John Millais has himself called his contribution to the Diploma Gallery of the Royal Academy "A Souvenir of Velasquez."

Most of us have seen the well-known remark of Guizot's, that "a great artist is perpetuated not merely by his own works, but he collects almost always around him men who are capable of receiving his inspiration, of being penetrated by his spirit. While these disciples do not possess that original genius, which lessons may merely develop and direct, they are in no sense copyists, nor do they join in any servile imitation of the models offered them. They form, in fact, what is known as a school, and add but a greater glory to the manner, the name, and the remembrance of its distinguished founder."

The same rule applies unquestionably in literature. Let us take the two most distinguished writers of English prose fiction—George Meredith and Thomas Hardy. In the first case, we may discern the influence of Victor Hugo, Dickens, Carlyle, Disraeli, Byron, and Ruskin, not to mention many others. In the case of Thomas Hardy, one finds other spirits at work. His English style is purer than Mr. Meredith's, and, while it owes much of its weight to that philosophic school of which, perhaps, George Eliot was the most popular exponent, he writes, at his best, rather as a poet than a Spencerian psychologist. Certain things in Mr. Hardy remind us of Balzac; lines here and there have the ring of Swinburne; yet, on the whole, he owes, perhaps, less to his predecessors and contemporaries in literature than any other author at present in England.

And what effect have these two men of genius produced on the younger authors of their generation? George Meredith has, undoubtedly, the greater number of so-called imitators. Men who do not read him at all are accused of copying him. This may be due to the fact that both Meredith and his supposed copyists have an admiration for Victor Hugo. Mr. Hardy, on the other hand, being an observer of life rather than a student of books, has a smaller following, and, indeed, unless a writer ventures to introduce a rustic into his story, he need never fear any accusation of catching the "Hardy trick."

We all remember Andersen's sad, but too cynical, story of the toy nightingale. The whistle's note was considered far more natural, pleasing, and "inevitable" than the bird's song. The tale is a good one, but not quite fair to the critical faculty. As a matter of fact, real singers do not, and have not in the past, suffered long under neglect and misprision. And when a genuine voice has been for a little while overlooked, the reason is to be found, not in the out-screaming of a successful impostor, but in the sweeter singing of some better nightingale. And then, after all, some of us prefer canaries. The cuckoo fascinates many. Great poets have loved the lark. Some ladies adore a parrot. Why not be amiable and leave our neighbours to choose their own birds? I, for my part, had a friend who worshipped a few geese. As geese, they were charming. My friend, I remember, found owls, in comparison, a bore and doves immoral. Are we not equally capricious about our authors? Your dearest genius gets on my nerves. The boon companion of my sleepless soul seems, to your mind, a very tedious, a most pedantic and affected and unreadable second-rate wretch. Your wife dotes on the pages of Mrs. So-and-So—a woman you hate. Your son drenches his youth in poetry which makes you sick. My sister can sit spell-bound on a summer's day over volumes which I could not read if they were the last left on this earth. My cousin's library—his Paradise—would be to me the tomb of every belief in literary art. Yet your wife, your son, my sister, and my cousin are intelligent creatures. They have a right to their caprices, and could justify them with chapter and verse from the judgments of established reviewers. What, for instance, could one say to a young gentleman who, on being reproached for his admiration of an absurd work, quotes the laurelled and enormous Mr. X. in support of his vulgarity?

Now, what, you will ask, has all this pretty jumble about pictures and parrots, and Victor Hugo, and mistaken relatives, to do with a literary school? I believe I mean that this is a large world, and that there is ample room for masters, disciples, and readers. Let us by all means take our nightingale, our owl, or our goose, but let us know him to be such. My poor friend, whom I can never quote too often, loved her geese, not because she thought them stars, but because they were ordinarily considered the proverb for stupidity. All I ask is clearness; the present impulse seems rather toward confusion. I see all the newspapers, and, so far as I can judge, no two critics agree in their estimate of a book. One may like it because it is romantic, the other condemns it because he has never heard people talk "like that." Another volume is found by a family journal a message to the age, while one is warned by an equally respectable weekly to lift it with the tongs and place it where the flames are quickest. In the more serious branches of literature one historian is lauded because he is so dull that no one will trouble to refute his assertions; another is denounced because he is so brilliant that he must be mistaken. One is quite certain that English history was never meant to be in the least entertaining. "But I stay too long with you, I weary you." (Now and again I venture to quote Shakespeare, for he is still read a little, even by those who write at great length about him).—I am, &c., A BEGINNER.

THE BOOKLESS EAST-END.

SIR,—Our attention has been called to some remarks in your issue of February 26, under the heading of "The Bookless East-End," which are obviously intended for our establishment, and, as some of the remarks made are in our mind more likely to injure than to help our business, we feel bound to address a few words to you on the matter. It is patent that the writer of the article has little or no knowledge of second-hand booksellers, or he would have known our firm, which, having been in existence since 1820, has a reputation almost as well known in the United States of America as it has in this country. As your correspondent, in your issue of March 5, truly points out, we have by far and away the largest collection of second-hand books in London. But above and beyond the different classes of books enumerated by your correspondent, we have the largest stock of miscellaneous literature, not only in London, but in England; and, as we number amongst our clients all sorts and conditions of men, from the nobility down to the humble mechanic, we believe we may claim that there is one good bookseller's shop between Aldgate and Stratford, notwithstanding the opinion of the writer of your article to the contrary. Trusting you will insert this,—We remain, yours truly, E. GEORGE & SON.

[Messrs. George & Son do not seem to have perceived that our contributor's search in the East-End was avowedly for new-book shops. The mention of Messrs. George & Son's secondhand-book shop—the importance of which was well known to our contributor—was purely incidental, and was certainly not intended to be uncomplimentary.]

WAGNERIANA.

SIR,—A few years ago some of the letters which Richard Wagner addressed to August Roeckel were published, and form an invaluable contribution to our knowledge of the master and of the way in which he regarded his creations. Written to an intimate and life-long friend, they are full the spontaneous expression of his inner life, and throw a strong light on the relation of each other of the two sides of his nature—the artistic and the philosophical. It is in the seventh of these published letters that we find a most interesting account of the discrepancy that existed for years between Wagner the artist and Wagner the philosopher, as well as a very clear statement of what is in reality the intrinsic value of his work.

"The period," he says, "when I began to write from direct intuition dates from The Flying Dutchman"; this was followed by Tannhäuser and Lohengrin; and whatever poetic expression may be found in these it must be ascribed to the sublime tragedy of self-renunciation, of the denial of the Will—a denial as conscious and voluntary as in the end it is inevitable, a denial which alone gives deliverance. It is this nature which imparts to my poetry and my music its consecration, without which I think that they may have of pathos and power to quicken and kindle emotion could not possibly belong to them."*

He then goes on to say that while his intuitive perception as an artist always aided him with such unerring certainty to make self-sacrifice the supreme means whereby final deliverance is wrought out, his conclusions as a philosopher had led him to build up a world of optimistic Hellenism, in which the sinking of the individual will was, of course, no place.

This curious conflict between reason and intuition continued so long that he had stretched out a large part of the Nibelungen dramas before he was able to harmonise the philosophical with his artistic nature. It was during the composition of the Götterdämmerung (which was the first part of the tetralogy finished) that the long period of "Sturm und Drang" came to an end. The original form of the closing scene of this drama may be mentioned as the one instance where the philosophy of the author overpowered his intuition, to which in his previous works he had invariably remained true. In this case the result was so completely unsatisfactory that the crisis was perhaps hastened; and the offending passage was happily rewritten, after the inspiration of the artist had been fully accepted by the intellect of the thinker.

The works that followed deal (as we might expect) more consciously and directly with the deepest questions that concern mankind. If "Tristan and Isolde" declares Love in its intense personal form as a terrible torture" (so Wagner describes it in these letters), we may also learn therefore how it is possible to pass through that fiery furnace:

"To lose the pain of consciousness,
And quench at last the life-long thirst
In deepest founts of cosmic life."

The last finished work, "Parsifal," portrays Love in its sublimated impersonal form, which it is the same thing as (and, indeed, would better be called) sympathy, or suffering with (Mitleid) all sentient creatures; and in this final stage of evolution it is shown to be the strongest ethical power in the world. And both dramas demonstrate (1) the nothingness of external phenomena in their forms of Time and Space; (2) the fact that human suffering is directly proportional to the sharpness of the distinction which the "ego" draws between itself and the "non-ego"; and, furthermore, we learn that sooner or later, with more suffering or with less, the walls of partition crumble away, and the Self passes out into the boundless life of the universe.

**riefe an August Roedel von Richard Wagner.* Leipzig, 1894. V., p. 66 sqq.

A. BRODRICK BULLOCK.

Rome: Nov. 17, 1897.

ROUND TOWERS.

SIR,—In your review of the reprint of that discredited volume of Henry O'Brien's on The Round Towers of Ireland you offer some suggestions as to the probable need for these towers, which exist in Scotland as well as Ireland.

You will pardon me for saying that a close examination of these towers would show that in every case your suggestions are somewhat out of date. The researches of Dr. Petrie and Mr. Joseph Anderson have shown very conclusively that, taking into consideration the form of these towers, their isolation and their internal arrangements, as well as by numerous references in the early annals, they were solely intended to afford an asylum for the ecclesiastics, and a place of security for the relics, such as books, bells, crosiers and shrines, under their guardianship. These things were regarded with extraordinary veneration by the Celtic tribes, and they took remarkable care in providing a place of safety for them.

The substantial character of the building attests that these towers were not built for any temporary purpose, but to resist the ravages of the Northmen—a constant source of terror.—Yours truly, 93, Devonport-road: DAVID STOTT.

March 5.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

M. ZOLA'S Paris has received "Paris," the instant and careful attention of English critics, both in Mr. Vizetelly's translation and in the original. Yet most of the reviews of Paris are descriptive rather than critical. The complexity and populousness of the book have amazed, and perhaps somewhat paralysed, the critical mind. Apart from this, there is no doubt that, as the Daily Chronicle says, the interest of the book is psychological rather than literary; and that "it is impossible . . . for any book written by M. Zola to be received at this moment solely upon its literary merits and demerits. Inevitably, it is an incident in a dramatic history, and an item in the controversy between the sturdy novelist and the corruption he has attacked." Paris, says the Athenæum, "can hardly be praised from the standpoint of a work of art; it is far more a disguised pamphlet or sermon." The Westminster Gazette ranks Paris below Lourdes and Rome: "There was, in spite of obvious faults, a human interest which redeemed those books, and made them something more than tracts for the times, or pictures of the nineteenth century in the lurid medium of M. Zola's imagination. But Paris is a laborious effort to cover the ground in a manner which cannot be artistic as a whole, and which in detail is, for the most part, highly disagreeable." On this phase of the book the critic we are quoting writes:

"In order that the book may be complete, every phase in Paris must make its appearance, every phase of high life and low life (it is as a rule low life in both cases) must be described. Our old friend from Lourdes and Rome, the Abbé Pierre Froment, is once more the peg on which it all has to hang. The unfortunate man is kept trotting from pillar to post, appearing here, reappearing there, passing breathlessly from the financier's drawing-room to the slums of Montmartre, from the church to the chamber, from the salon of the old noblesse to the boudoir of the demi-mondaine—not because there is any cogent reason why he should visit such places, but because the colossal enterprise of his creator, M. Zola, requires that he should see everything and expose everything."

The Daily Telegraph's critic writes in the same vein:

"Descriptive details, personal details, political details, business details—details ad nauseam, exuberant, bewildering, and wearisome—furnish M. Zola with materials for the padding-out of his stories to unconscionable dimensions. Paris compels its readers to become intimately acquainted with scores of personages—mostly ignominious—who are to the leading characters of the romance exactly what walking 'supers' are to the 'principals' of an historical play. Nobody wants to read the elaborate biography and psychological analysis of a journalist or stockbroker, legislator or speculator, who just flits across the stage as an illustration of bad manners and worse morals, and then vanishes permanently from the scene without having awakened the least desire in any of the audience to learn what ultimately becomes of him. Such people crowd M. Zola's turgid pages, and are altogether unworthy of serious attention."

The Times' and Chronicle's critics fasten upon M. Zola's social philosophy, his estimate of the present condition of Paris and his prescience—if it be prescience—of its future destiny. "The novel," says the Times, "is a scathing satire professedly founded on facts, many of which are undeniable."

Says the Daily Chronicle:

"With all his faith in France and all his zeal for her future glory, this volume is a more daring and a more concentrated indictment of modern society as it is seen in France than the most scathing of the earlier books. La Terre was a marvellous epic of rural brutality. Germinal was a hideous exposure of the industrial world, as L'Argent was of the swindling which parades as high finance. Other evils of Parisian life were pictured with equal power, and, although the methods were not always beautiful, the manifest sincerity of the whole is now acknowledged by all who understand. But in Paris we have a kind of concentration."

The Times, commenting on the tone of the book, says:

"The best excuse for his final lapse into despairing pessimism is the rottenness and corruption he sees all around him. Pourriture is, we presume, the word in the original French, and there is no exact synonym in our language. Pourriture is never partial; it pervades and taints everything like blood poisoning."

Yet both these critics give prominence to M. Zola's curious optimism. M. Zola, says the Times,

"is almost as rhapsodical as Hugo as to the glorious destinies of the centre of civilisation. Looking out from the heights of Montmartre, as he has often done, at the last he sees Paris no longer in the blackness of shadow, but illuminated in the bright radiance of a sinking sun. He sees the symbolical promise of a glorious harvest. Unfortunately, patriots must possess their souls in patience. It is but cold comfort to know that reason in the end must prevail over superstition, and that a religion grafted upon science will come to the birth by the sure but slow processes of evolution."

And the Daily Telegraph says that M. Zola's forecast of a new religion is the most hopeful and attractive feature of Paris. It quotes the following passage:

"'Who can say,' he writes, 'that science will not some day quench the thirst for what lies before us? A religion grafted on science is the indicated, certain, inevitable finish of man's long march towards knowledge. He will come to it at last as to a natural haven, as to peace in the midst of certainty, after passing every form of ignorance and terror on his road. Is there not already some indication of such a religion? If precursors, scientists, and philosophers—Darwin, Fourier, and others—have sown the seed of to-morrow's religion by casting the good word to the passing breeze, how many centuries will be required to raise the crop? People always forget that before Catholicism grew up and reigned in the sunlight, it spent four centuries in germinating and sprouting from the soil. Grant some centuries to this religion of science, of whose sprouting there are signs upon all sides, and by and by the admirable ideas of some Fourier will be seen expanding and forming a new Gospel, with desire serving as the lever to raise the world, work accepted by one and all, honoured and regulated as the very mechanism of natural and social life, and the passions of man excited, contented, and utilised for human happiness!'"

"This," says the critic, "may be a visionary's utterance, but it is certainly an eloquent and impressive one."

The Athenæum says that M. Zola's "apostrophes to Paris—the Paris of the future, which is still to be the centre of light for the universe," are "eloquent," and are the best parts of the novel.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, March 10.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

THE SPRING OF THE DAY. By the Rev. Hugh Macmillan, D.D. Ishister & Co., Ltd. 5s.

THE HOLY BIBLE. Vol. VI. EZEKIEL TO MALACHI. Edited by J. W. Mackail. Macmillan & Co. 5s.

ERAS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH: THE AGE OF CHARLEMAONE. By Charles L. Wells, Ph.D. T. & T. Clark. 6s.

THE BURDENS OF LIFE, AND OTHER SERMONS. By Alfred Rowland. Horace Marshall & Son. 3s. 6d.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

MR. GREGORY'S LETTER BOX, 1813—1830. Edited by Lady Gregory. Smith, Elder & Co. 12s. 6d.

EGYPT IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY; OR, MEHREMET ALI AND HIS SUCCESSORS UNTIL THE BRITISH OCCUPATION IN 1882. By D. A. Cameron. Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THIRTY-NINE YEARS IN THE ARMY. By Sir Charles Alexander Gordon, K.C.B. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.

THE ROYAL HOUSEHOLD. By W. A. Lindsay, Q.C. Kegan Paul. 25s.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

WELSH BALLADS, AND OTHER POEMS. By Ernest Rhys. David Nutt. 3s. 6d.

A BALLAD OF CHARITY, AND OTHER POEMS. By Gerald Wallace. David Douglas.

CAMEOS, AND OTHER POEMS. By Florence G. Attenborough. W. Reeves.

REASON AND FAITH: A REVERIE. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

CINQ MOIS AU PAYS DES SOMALIS. Par Prince Nicolas D. Ghika. Georg & Co. (Genève).

BROWN MEN AND WOMEN; OR, THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS IN 1895 AND 1896. By Edward Reeves. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 10s. 6d.

A MODERN PILGRIM IN JERUSALEM. By John Rooker, M.A. S.P.C.K.

THREE YEARS IN SAVAGE AFRICA. By Lionel Deale. With an Introduction by H. M. Stanley, M.P. Methuen & Co. 21s.

CAMPAIGNING ON THE UPPER NILE AND NIGER. By Seymour Vandeleur, D.S.O. With an Introduction by Sir George T. Goldie. Methuen & Co. 10s. 6d.

NORTON-SUB-HAMDON. By Charles Task. Barnicott & Pearce (Tanniton).

BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES: PETERBOROUGH, THE CATHEDRAL AND SEE. By the Rev. W. D. Sweeting, M.A. NORWICH, THE CATHEDRAL AND SEE. By C. H. B. Quennell. George Bell & Sons. 1s. 6d. each.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

THE ORIGIN AND NATURE OF MAN. By S. B. G. M'KINNEY. Hutchinson & Co.

A STUDY OF ETHICAL PRINCIPLES. By James Seth, M.A. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 7s. 6d.

EDUCATIONAL.

TOURIST'S VADE MECUM OF FRENCH COLLOQUIAL. Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons. 1s.

GREAT EDUCATORS SERIES: HORACE MANN AND THE COMMON SCHOOL REVIVAL IN THE UNITED STATES. By B. A. Hinsdale, Ph.D. Wm. Heinemann.

THE UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES: LIVY, BOOK IX. W. B. Clive. 3s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A ROLL OF THE GRADUATES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW: FROM 31ST DECEMBER, 1727, TO 31ST DECEMBER, 1897. Compiled by W. Innes Addison. James MacLehose & Sons.

THE GRENADA HANDBOOK, DIRECTORY, AND ALMANAC: 1898. Compiled by Edward Drayton. Sampson Low.

WITH BAT AND BALL. By George Giffen. Ward, Lock & Co.

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF SKATING. By Fred Foster. B. W. Warhurst. 5s.

THE CARE OF THE SICK AT HOME AND IN THE HOSPITAL: A HANDBOOK FOR FAMILIES AND NURSES. By Dr. Th. Billroth. Translated by J. Bentall Edeau. Fifth edition. Sampson Low. 2s. 6d.

THE WORKS OF GEORGE BERKELEY, D.D., BISHOP OF CLOYNE. Edited by George Sampson. Vol. II. George Bell & Sons.

SENTIMENTAL EDUCATION; A YOUNG MAN'S HISTORY. Translated from the French of Gustave Flaubert, by D. F. Hannigan. 2 vols. H. S. Nichols, Ltd.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, GALWAY: CALENDAR 1897-8. Dublin University Press.

THE SUFFOLK SPORTING SERIES: CYCLES. By H. Graves, G. Lacy Hillier, and Susan Countess of Malmesbury. Lawrence Bullen. 6d.

A MANUAL OF AGRICULTURAL BOTANY, FROM THE GERMAN BY DR. A. B. FRANK. Translated by John W. Paterson. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 3s. 6d.

NOTES ON NEW EDITIONS, ETC.

MR. JAMES SETH'S Study of Ethical Principles (Wm. Blackwood & Sons) has come to its third edition, which contains new chapters on "The Method of Ethics" and "Moral Progress."

MR. D. F. HANNIGAN has translated Flaubert's L'Education Sentimentale, which he not unjustly describes as "an encyclopædic novel," and "a vast treasure-house of pitiless observation." Mr. Hannigan claims that his translation follows the text minutely, and that the author's characteristics are preserved. Mr. H. S. Nichols publishes.

In the "Great Educators" (Wm. Heinemann) series we have a new volume devoted to Horace Mann and the Common School Revival in the United States. This has been prepared by Mr. B. A. Hinsdale, Ph.D., whose "single purpose" has been "to place before the reader Horace Mann as an educator in his historical position and relations."

FROM MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO. comes a new edition of Mr. T. Rice Holmes's History of the Indian Mutiny. "Among the most important alterations and additions are those which relate to the Afghan War, the battle of Sacheta and the events which led up to the battle of Chinhat, the defence of Lucknow Residency, Havelock's campaign, Lord Canning's Oudh proclamation, and the vexed question of Sir Colin Campbell's responsibility for the protraction of the war. On the whole, the text is enlarged by about twenty pages; and several new appendices have also been written."

Cycling (Laurence & Bullen) is reprinted from The Encyclopædia of Sport, with additions and alterations, and is the joint work of Mr. H. Graves, who deals with the general and mechanical branches of the subject; Mr. George Lacy Hillier, who treats of cycle racing; and Susan, Countess of Salisbury, who writes on cycling women. Their articles make a slim but well-illustrated with diagrams.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

IMMEDIATELY: AN IMPORTANT WORK.

BY THE LATE CAPTAIN SIR RICHARD F. BURTON, K.C.M.G., F.R.G.S., &c.

THE JEW, THE GIPSY, & EL-ISLAM.

BY THE AUTHOR OF

"The Thousand and One Nights," "The Book of the Sword," &c.

Edited, with an Introduction and Brief Notes, by W. H. WILKINS. In large royal 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with Photogravure Portrait of the Author from the Picture by the late Lord LEIGHTON. 21s. net.

SECOND EDITION.

Edited, with a Preface, by the COUNTESS OF WARWICK.

JOSEPH ARCH.

The Story of His Life Told by Himself.

In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with Photogravure Portrait, 12s.

"Of absorbing interest. Altogether it is a notable book, the story of a great career, which has made its mark on the people and the State. No bishop's life was ever issued in a more presentable volume, or under auspices of a more unimpeachable respectability."
Daily Chronicle.

"Full of interest from every point of view. A striking autobiography."
Manchester Guardian.

THE CONCISE KNOWLEDGE LIBRARY.

PRICE 5s. PER VOLUME.

Each in large crown 8vo, half-bound leather and gilt.

Volume I., 788 pages, with 530 Original Illustrations.

NATURAL HISTORY.

BY R. LYDEKKER, W. F. KIRBY, R. BOWDLER SHARPE, and other Experts.

"One of the most remarkable works ever published in an age of cheap books."

Daily Telegraph.

"No criticism is necessary of the volume on Natural History in the Concise Knowledge Library. The work is excellently arranged, beautifully printed, neatly illustrated, and readily and strongly bound. It is a model of how a book of reference should be produced.
The contributors are the highest authorities on zoological science."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Volume II., with over 600 pages and 104 Illustrations, beautifully printed on art paper.

ASTRONOMY.

By J. ELLARD GORE, AGNES CLERKE, and A. FOWLER.

"This excellent work, which is not only of a high standard throughout, but remarkably free from casual slips. The illustrations which accompany the present volume are fully up to date in their standard of excellence; and we may confidently predict for 'The Concise Knowledge Astronomy' a long career of usefulness and popularity."
Athenæum.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S NEW 6s. NOVELS.

PUNCH says:—"Life is short, books to be reviewed are multitudinous, and available space in Mr. Punch's columns is exceedingly small. But my Baronite rarely resists the temptation to take up a novel bearing the brand HUTCHINSON. They must have a taster of uncommonly quick, true instinct. Certainly they have of late introduced to the public some promising new hands."

SECOND LARGE EDITION.

No longer will 'Iota' be known as the painter of 'A Yellow Aster,' but as the author of 'Poor Max.'

BY IOTA.

POOR MAX.

A powerful book of deep interest."—Academy.
A novel full of thought, wit, character, and charm. Mrs. Caffyn justifies her claims to be, or on the way to be more, than an extremely clever writer. It forms a study of extraordinary interest, of agreeable variety, of engaging attributes; it fascinates, and yet is pathetic. Besides Judith and Sandy, there are several persons revolving round the attractive Max, and all are nearly as witty as the vivacious young author himself. In fact, the pages of this book are strewn with epigram and repartee, and wit and wisdom, sufficient to furnish forth a dozen novels."—Globe.

BY ALLEN RAINE,

Author of that Successful Novel "A Welsh Singer."

TORN SAILS.

A Tale of a Welsh Village.

BY ARABELLA KENEALY.

WOMAN AND THE SHADOW.

Miss Kenealy's delightful novel... A book which is intensely human."

Daily Telegraph.

BY "ALIEN."

WHEAT IN THE EAR.

[Next Week.

SECOND EDITION.

ADELINE SERGEANT'S NEW NOVEL.

THE LADY CHARLOTTE.

Every page of this brilliantly written novel gives ample evidence of her marked ability as a story-teller, and of her skill in investing her characters with humanly natural attributes."—Daily Mail.

SIXTH LARGE EDITION.

BY F. F. MONTRÉSOR.

AT THE CROSS ROADS.

"The finest work of fiction published this year."—Literary World.

THIRD EDITION.

"A notable novel."—Daily Chronicle.

BY M. E. MANN, Author of "SUSANNAH."

THE CEDAR STAR.

The Academy says:—"A charming story."
"Among the great mass of novels 'The Cedar Star' stands out prominently by virtue of its striking qualities. Good—remarkably good. A clever novel."—St. James's Gazette.
"This delightful story is all that a novel should be. It is brilliantly written, and full of human sympathy. It is, indeed, as charming a piece of fiction writing as I have come across for a long time."—Queen.
"An excellent literary style; she can draw a character in a few strokes, is inventive of plot and abundant in incident; her creations remind one pleasantly of Thackeray. The author is bound to go far."—Punch.

BY EMERIC HULME BEAMAN.

THE PRINCE'S DIAMOND.

"The humour of the situations into which he is forced and his behaviour in them gives the most exquisite delight. The skill with which Mr. Beaman manipulates this humour is really remarkable, his book continually calling up reminiscences of 'Jack Bragg' and
'Barry Lyndon,' though, unlike those works, it never becomes monotonous."
N.B. Daily Mail.

BY MARY ANGELA DICKENS.

AGAINST THE TIDE.

In cloth, gilt, 6s.

"We congratulate Miss Dickson; this story is by far the best she has yet written—deserves especial praise."—World.

"It is indeed an engrossing story."—Academy.

BY ANNIE S. SWAN.

WYNDHAM'S DAUGHTER.

"Will bear comparison with any of her previous works."—Scotsman.

NEW VOLUMES OF HUTCHINSON'S SELECT NOVELS.

Each in crown 8vo, handsome cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

GR. By B. L. FARJEON.

Th VILLAGE BLACKSMITH. By DARLEY DALE. [In the Press.

TATTERLEY. By TOM GALLON.

[In the Press.

A STUMBLER IN WIDE SHOES. By E. SUTCLIFFE MARCH.

LONDON · HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW.

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & CO.'S SPRING LIST.

THIS SEASON'S NOVELS.

THE SPIRIT IS WILLING.

By PERCIVAL PICKERING, Author of "A Life Awry," &c.
Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"The history is not new in itself; but there is something fresh and sympathetic in his manner of telling it. His style is simple and unaffected."—World.

A DEPARTURE FROM TRADITION, AND OTHER STORIES.

By ROSALINE MASSON.
Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"The stories are well conceived and brightly written. They are all interesting and perfectly wholesome.....They run smoothly, and the volume is one which may be safely ordered from the library."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

ONE CROWDED HOUR.

By A. BERESFORD RYLEY.
Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"The story is never wearisome. There are clever, if somewhat lurid pictures of certain phases of Parisian life, innumerable French quotations which have the rare advantages of being correct, and the dialogue is exceptionally neat."—Morning Post.

A BRANCH OF LAUREL.

By A. B. LOUIS, Author of "Mallerton."
Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

".....By A. B. Louis, is a very charming story, founded on facts, of the times of Louis XIII. and Cardinal Richelieu. The scene is laid in Loudun in 1633, and the glimpses afforded of the religious and social life of the period are extremely interesting."—St. Paul's.

HIS FORTUNATE GRACE.

By GERTRUDE ATHERTON,
Author of "Patience Sparhawk," &c.
Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Of little novels we have come across, none are more bright and delightfully amusing than Mrs. Atherton's 'His Fortunate Grace,' a work which has just appeared: one which threatens to be most successful. It is charmingly written, in a style so fresh and buoyant as to grapple with one's attention at once."—Vanity Fair.

TALES OF THE KLONDYKE.

By T. MULLETT ELLIS.
Large crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Ellis has a picturesque vocabulary and a commanding flow of conversation. He has more. He has a knowledge of the land and men upon which he writes. The book will well repay perusal."—Whitchell Review.

A NEW NOVEL.

SECOND LIEUTENANT CELIA.

By L. C. DAVIDSON.
Fully Illustrated, large crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

[Now ready.]

A Remarkable Novel.

IN YEARS OF TRANSITION.

By SAMUEL GORDON.
Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"The descriptions of low life in Paris are strong without being coarse; and the writing is excellent. It is a careful work, with no easy rhetoric and no gaudy colouring."—Academy.

"From first to last the interest is absorbing; there is not a superfluous line, every chapter opens out a fresh development in the character of the hero. It is a book to read and think over."—St. James's Budget.

"A powerfully written story, which holds attention from first to last."—Freeman's Journal.

"The work of a true artist.....All through such a level of excellence is maintained as to make the selection of striking passages a task both difficult and invidious."—Weekly Sun.

A Book of Special Interest to Anglo-Australians.

SPORTING REMINISCENCES.

By THOMAS HAYDON.

Dedicated, by permission, to the Right Honourable the EARL OF HOPETOUN, P.C., G.C.M.G.
Containing Chapters on Flemington, Randwick, the Melbourne Cup, Australian Horses, Theatrical Memoirs, Tasmania, &c., &c.
Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Haydon's subjects are the racecourses, the racing, the clubs, the horses, the coursing, the athletics of the great 'island-continent,' on which he is admittedly an authority. For English sport-lovers, therefore, this volume will have strong attraction."—Globe.

An Important Military Work.

LETTERS ON APPLIED TACTICS.

By Major GRIEPENKERL. Translated by a Retired Officer.

With 4 Coloured Maps in Text and 5 Large Maps in pocket at end, square demy 8vo, 8s. net.

"* * * The above work reached a Fourth Edition in German, and has been translated into French, Roumanian, as also into Japanese, by order of the Japanese War Office. Lieut.-Col. HENDERSON, Professor of Military History, Staff College, Camberley, writes: "It is undoubtedly the most useful and practical book on tactics in any language, and the translation into English is admirable. I shall certainly recommend all officers with whom I have anything to do to get a copy and study it closely."

"It is a work worthy of close study, and an excellent preparation for those who contemplate an attack on the portals of the Staff College."—Broad Arrow

"A few more books like this and the occupation of the army crammer will be gone."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Admirable lucidity and precision characterise the exercises, from the study of which young officers will undoubtedly derive much profit."—Army and Navy Gazette.

BOOKS bearing on the present state of Public Affairs:—

EGYPT.

LORD CROMER: a Biography. By H. D. TRAILL,
D.C.L. With Portraits and Illustrations, demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

SPAIN.

DON EMILIO CASTELAR. By DAVID HANNAY.
With Frontispiece Portrait, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

INDIA.

THE AMEER ABDUR RAHMAN. By STEPHEN WHEELER, F.R.G.S., sometimes Fellow of the Punjab University. With Portraits and Maps, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GERMANY.

THE GERMAN EMPEROR WILLIAM II. By CHARLES LOWE, M.A., Author of "Prince Bismarck: an Historical Biography," &c. With 2 Portraits, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

UNITED STATES.

A HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY.
FROM 1775 TO 1893. By EDGAR STANTON MACLAY, A.M. With Technica Revision by Lieut. ROY C. SMITH, U.S.N. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, gilt top, £t 11s. 6d.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND. By JAMES LOWRY WHITTLE. With 2 Portraits, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THE RT. HON. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN. By S. H. JEYES. With Frontispiece Portrait, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHINA.

LI HUNG CHANG. By Professor ROBERT K DOUGLAS. With Frontispiece Portrait, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

London: BLISS, SANDS & CO., 12, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C.

FROM WALTER SCOTT'S LIST.

Now ready, crown 8vo, half-antique, paper boards, 3s. 6d. THE THEATRICAL WORLD OF 1897.

By WILLIAM ARCHER. With an Introduction by SYDNEY GRUNDY, an Epilogue by WILLIAM ARCHER, and a Synopsis of Playbills of the Year by HENRY GEORGE HIBBERT.

May still be had uniform with the above— THE THEATRICAL WORLD of 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Each of the above Volumes contains complete Indices of the Plays, Authors, Actors, Actresses, Managers, Critics, &c., referred to.

The above Volumes are all supplied in a uniform cloth binding, 3s. 6d. per Volume.

DRAMATIC ESSAYS. 3 vols. Edited by WILLIAM ARCHER and ROBERT W. LOWE. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. each. Vol. I. DRAMATIC ESSAYS by LEIGH HUNT. Vol. II. By WILLIAM HAZLITT. Vol. III. By JOHN FORSTER and GEORGE HENRY LEWES. Each of the above vols. contains Introduction, Notes, and Portrait Frontispiece.

A NEW WORK BY MR. HAVELOCK ELLIS. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

AFFIRMATIONS. By Havelock Ellis, Author of "Man and Woman," "The Criminal," "The New Spirit," &c.

A strong book, having the courage of its opinions, and it says many things which want to be said.—Chronicle.

A robust, logical, helpful book. It requires readers who are not fainthearted and narrow; and it deserves to find them.—Literary World.

Even where we agree and approve least we recognise the vigour, the zestiness, the stimulating qualities of his work.—Atheneum.

The author of "Affirmations," at all times an eminently readable writer, reveals himself as an acute and sagacious critic and a thinker of little speculative power.—Literature.

A NEW BOOK ABOUT INDIA. Demy 8vo, gilt top, art linen, with 14 Full-Page Illustrations, 6s.

JUNNY MEMORIES of an INDIAN WINTER. By Mrs. ARCHIBALD DUNN, Author of "The World's Highway."

This record of travel is written with insight and knowledge. There are many illustrations in the volume, and some of them—notably those of the interiors of mosques and temples—are of more than ordinary interest.—Speaker.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. THE SOCIALIST STATE: its Nature, Aims, and Conditions. Being an Introduction to the Study of Socialism. By E. O. K. GONNER, M.A.

To hook known to us gives in so brief a compass so complete, so and so informing an introduction.—British Weekly.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES. FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with Diagrams.

SLEEP: its Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, and Psychology. By Dr. MARIE DE MANACEINE (St. Petersburg).

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. HALLUCINATIONS and ILLUSIONS: a Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 124 Illustrations. THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E. W. SCRIPURE, Ph.D. (Leipzig).

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. THE PSYCHOLOGY of the EMOTIONS. By Prof. T. H. RIBOT.

TWO EXCELLENT BOOKS ON CYCLING. NEW EDITIONS, in paper covers, price 1s. each; in elegant cloth covers, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. each.

LADY CYCLING. By Miss F. J. BRISKINE.

WELL WRITTEN little book that should be useful to many a woman, and, indeed, if they would only act upon the advice it gives, to all who are not novices.—Times.

ALL ROUND CYCLING. By Sir B. W. RICHARDSON, G. LACY HILLIER, EVELYN EVERETT GREEN, L. RIVERS VINE, JOHN WATSON, F.L.S., P. A. THOMAS, B.A.

Useful and entertaining.—Daily Mail.

A NEW AND INVALUABLE HANDBOOK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; half-roan, 3s. 6d.

HANDBOOK of HOUSEKEEPING for SMALL INCOMES. By FLORENCE STACPOOLE, Diplomist of the London Obstetrical Society, Lecturer on the National Health Society, and for the Councils, &c.

Comprehensive, practical, and clear.—Atheneum.

The greatest value to young housewives.—Literary World.

Perfect treasury-trove of household hints.—North British Daily Mail.

Book which every mother would do well to provide her daughter with for her marriage.—Birmingham Gazette.

London: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square

TWO IMPORTANT BOOKS

TRAVELS IN THE COAST LANDS OF BRITISH EAST AFRICA,

AND THE ISLANDS of ZANZIBAR and PEMBA.

By W. W. A. FITZGERALD, F.R.G.S., F.R.C.I. With 15 Maps, 117 Illustrations, and Appendices. Demy 8vo, 23s.

"It teems with facts which every merchant and manufacturer in Great Britain ought to make himself acquainted with. Not that the book is specially devoted to the interests of trade. On the contrary, it is one which will delight the general reader with its tales of adventure, its descriptions of native customs, and its vivid touches of tropical colouring.....Mr. Fitzgerald's book is profusely and beautifully illustrated with characteristic scenes of tropical life, and an additional value is given to it by a number of excellent maps.—South Africa.

"Abounds in curious and interesting notes on native customs and things interesting to the naturalist and the sportsman.....The volume is crammed with valuable information.—The Scotsman.

"Deserving a warm welcome for its living interest and practical value.—Glasgow Herald.

BRITISH COLUMBIA for SETTLERS

Its Mines, Trade, and Agriculture. By FRANCES MACNAB, Author of "On Veldt and Farm," &c.

With Three Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"For the ordinary reader who has not thought of visiting British Columbia even as a tourist, and who merely turns to the volume for his enjoyment, there is an abundance of interesting matter. As a further attraction the book is written in a fluent yet vigorous style.—Glasgow Herald.

"The writer does not make the mistake of many enthusiasts of minimising the difficulties, but rather emphasises them, although she does not fail to bring out the abundant rewards which industry and perseverance are sure to gain. The book is full of facts, figures, and references.—Dundee Advertiser.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, London.

MR. F. E. ROBINSON'S LIST.

UNIVERSITIES OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE. ILLUSTRATED POPULAR HISTORIES of the COLLEGES. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. net per volume.

LINCOLN COLLEGE, OXFORD. By the Rev. A. CLARK, M.A., Hon. LL.B., St. Andrews, Rector of Great Leighs, Chelmsford, late Fellow of Lincoln. [Ready.]

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE. By the Rev. H. P. SNOOKS, LL.D., Vicar of St. Paul's, Cambridge, Harness Prize-man 1877. [Ready.]

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD. By the Rev. W. H. HURTON, B.D., Fellow and Tutor of St. John's, Birkbeck Lecturer in Ecclesiastical History, Trinity College, Cambridge. [May.]

OTHER VOLUMES TO FOLLOW.

PRAYERS of the SAINTS: being a Manual of Devotions compiled from the Supplications of the Holy Saints and Blessed Martyrs and Famous Men. By CECIL HEADLAM, B.A. Fcap. 8vo, morocco gilt, specially designed by E. B. Hoare, 5s. net. [April.]

SELECTIONS from the BRITISH SATIRISTS. With an Introductory Essay by CECIL HEADLAM, late Demy of Magdalen College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

ATHEUM.—"His book was a decidedly good idea, which has been well carried out. The introductory essay is a scholarly performance."—Times.

"The introduction is long and elaborate; it proves that the writer is a sound student of our literature."—The Guardian's Instruction; or, the Gentleman's Romance. Written for the Diversion and Service of the Gentry. A Reprint from the Edition of 1688.

This quaint little book contains a defence of the University of Oxford, interesting details of life there, and advice to parents of position on the education of their sons.

With a Biographical Introduction. Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. TIMES.—"All who care for the literature and social history of the seventeenth century will be greatly obliged to the editor for the reprint....His (Stephen Penton's) etiological maxims are really worth reading by the side of Locke's short treatise."

FALL MALL GAZETTE.—"One of the most delightful and fascinating little volumes which it has been my lot to chance upon for many a long day....The advice the author gives about the education of the sons of gentlemen....is full of gentle piety, of shrewd common sense, of courtesy and of sound, and at times delightfully naive, worldly wisdom, written with a dignity and style that are simply irresistible."

THE COUNSELS of WILLIAM de BRITAINNE. A Volume of Seventeenth Century Precepts and Aphorisms. Revised by HERBERT H. STURMER. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

PALE.—"It is out for a school prize." FALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Mr. Sturmer has accomplished his 'leil' well and carefully; his introduction is excellent....The author, whoever he was, knows how to turn an aphorism with so neat a touch that he must have been ancestor of Mr. George Meredith."

RECORD.—"Probably many of our readers will be glad to be told that the book is a treatise for young men, much like Lord Chesterfield's Letters in some respects, but superior in moral tone, while equally shrewd and more philosophical."

London: F. E. ROBINSON, 20, Gt. Russell St., W.C.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Just published. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, with Illustrations, price 25s.

BRIEF LIVES: Chiefly of Contemporaries, set down by John Aubrey, between the years 1669 and 1696. Edited, from the Author's MSS., by ANDREW CLARKE, M.A., Lincoln College, Oxford, &c.

Speaker: "Mr. Clarke has produced an edition of Aubrey's 'Lives,' which is not only fuller than its predecessors, but immeasurably better, and reflects equal credit on him and the Clarendon Press."

Demy 8vo, 6 vols., £4 18s.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of GEOFFREY CHAUCER. Edited, from numerous Manuscripts, by W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. In 6 vols. With Portrait and Facsimiles.

Notes and Queries: One of the most monumental editions of an English classic that English scholarship has supplied."

Demy 8vo, uniform with the above, 18s. CHAUCERIAN and OTHER PIECES. Edited, from numerous Manuscripts, by W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D.

Saturday Review: "This is the only thing wanting to save the six-volume edition from the possibility of evil."

Third Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. SHAKESPEARE as a DRAMATIC ARTIST: a Popular Illustration of the Principles of Scientific Criticism. By R. G. MOULTON, M.A.

Mr. WILLIAM ARCHER in Macmillan's Magazine: "Mr. Moulton's studies of certain of Shakespeare's plays are full of subtlety and sagacity, and render his work a really valuable contribution to Shakespearean criticism."

Cloth, bevelled boards, 4s. 6d.

THE TREASURY of SACRED SONG. Selected from the English Lyric Poetry of Four Centuries. With Notes, Explanatory and Biographical. By the late F. T. PALGRAVE, M.A.

Times: "A more delightful collection it would be difficult to conceive, and the fascination of infinite variety carries us on from page to page."

* An Edition is also issued printed on Oxford India Paper, superfine cloth, 7s. 6d.; and in various superior leather bindings.

Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 1s. ELEMENTARY POLITICAL ECONOMY.

By EDWIN CANNAN, M.A. Scotsman: An excellent little book on Elementary Political Economy. The author gives clear explanations and illustrations of the theories generally accepted by orthodox economists. Students desiring to obtain an easy initiation into the leading principles of the science may do so with the aid of Mr. Cannan.

2 vols. 12s.

A SELECTION of PASSAGES from PLATO for ENGLISH READERS. From the Translation by the late B. JOWETT, M.A. Edited, with Introductions, by M. J. KNIGHT.

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

Just published, extra fcap., 1s. net. HINTS for ETON MASTERS, taken from a MS. Journal, dated 1862, by the Author of "Ionica."

Academy: "Rich in good sense, most admirably expressed."

Long Primer, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE OXFORD BURNS. With Notes, Glossary, Index of First Lines, and Chronological List. Edited by J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A. Complete Edition. Also on Oxford India Paper, from 7s. 6d., and Miniature Edition, 3 vols., from 10s. 6d.

Minion, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE OXFORD BYRON. Being the Poetical Works of Lord Byron. Copyright Edition. Also on Oxford India Paper, from 10s. 6d., and Miniature Edition, 4 vols., from 14s. 6d.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, AMEN CORNER.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS :                           | PAGE    |
|-------------------------------------|---------|
| Chaucer at Popular Prices ... ..    | 303     |
| The Sundering Flood ... ..          | 304     |
| The Towneley Plays ... ..           | 305     |
| Prof. Hommel and the Higher Critics | 306     |
| Slender History ... ..              | 306     |
| The Border ... ..                   | 306     |
| On Democracy ... ..                 | 307     |
| Early Printers ... ..               | 307     |
| BRIEF MENTION ... ..                | 308     |
| THE NEWEST FICTION ... ..           | 309     |
| Reviews ... ..                      | 310     |
| SPRING ANNOUNCEMENTS SUPPLEMENT     | 311-324 |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..               | 325     |
| TO ENGLAND: A POEM ... ..           | 328     |
| STEVENSON'S FABLES ... ..           | 328     |
| A PLEA FOR PURE ENGLISH ... ..      | 329     |
| ZOLA'S "PARIS" ... ..               | 330     |
| THE WEEK ... ..                     | 332     |
| DRAMA ... ..                        | 332     |
| CORRESPONDENCE ... ..               | 333     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..        | 334     |

REVIEWS.

CHAUCER AT POPULAR PRICES.

Works of Geoffrey Chaucer (Globe Edition). Edited by A. W. Pollard, H. F. Heath, M. H. Liddell, and W. S. McCormick. (Macmillan & Co.)

IN the concise and scholarly preface to this volume, Mr. Pollard traces the vicissitudes through which it has gone. Mooted so long ago as 1864, editor after editor has failed to cope with its exacting demands upon his time, until by the joint labours of four scholars it has at length become an accomplished fact. Most admirable and scholarly, it will enhance the credit which the Globe Library has already acquired for its texts. Only upon some minor points of editing do we differ from the authors. In particular, we do not hold with their practice of marking the prolongation of the final e by a dot over the letter. It is true that Chaucer has no set rule in this, beyond metrical convenience. But for this very reason more than one reading is possible in various lines; and we would have preferred that each reader should have been free to choose for himself.

It is too much to hope that this edition will make Chaucer popular. No editing, and cheapness of price, will effect that. The general reader will never trouble to master his archaism of language, spelling, and metre—easy though the principles of the last be to master. It is a pity; because the poet is so framed for popularity as Chaucer. He has all the things which the general reader likes; he has none of the things which the general reader dislikes. He tells a plain tale plainly; he chews imagery (which the general reader hates), or, if he uses it, he confines himself to simple and explicit similes; he busies himself with deeds, not meditation; if he vents a little philosophy, he lifts it straight out of the indispensable Boethius, and when the reader sees the warning name "Boece" he can always skip; he is cheerful, lucid, and in definition and open air. It will not avail. "He may be a very good poet," says the general reader, "but he spells so badly!"

So he remains for the student of poetry, who rather prefers bad spelling. Chaucer's foremost charm for Chaucer-lovers is, in fact, very like the charm of his spelling. It is his ingenuousness, his babbling felicity. It is a charm altogether modern, because antique—a charm lent by our age to his youth, a charm, like the mellowed colouring of a Titian, which was not there when Chaucer wrote.

"His wouning was full faire upon an heath, With greene trees y-shadowed was his place," says the poet; and we exclaim "Delightful! what a haunting picture in a few simple words!" It is so much to us, because it was so little to Chaucer. To his contemporaries it must have been an every-day statement in matter-of-fact language. A child's speech is not charming to another child. Thus, much of Chaucer which we call inspired felicity seems so to us, because he has grown young by our growing old. His contemporaries valued him for his modernity. It is the mixture of this added and adventitious ingenuousness with his native shrewdness and man-of-the-wordliness—which gives him so piquant a flavour on our literary palates.

It is too late a day to criticise the genius of Chaucer in his matured work. What fresh can be said about those exquisite vignettes of the Canterbury pilgrims, touched in with such few strokes, with such taking humour, so instantly recognisable, that they are worth tomes of history in revealing to us what manner of men our ancestors were? Chaucer's finest humour is not in his broad strokes, his laughter from the full lungs, but in the sly touches where he has his tongue in the cheek. The picture of the Prioress is a masterpiece in this kind; perfectly polite, yet full of subdued pleasantry. Her dignified assumption of court airs, her demure and mincing manners, her British-French, her singing of divine service—

"Entuned in her nose full seemely,"— her dainty pitifulness for animals, are all wrought into a delicious character, ending with that admirable line—

"And all was conscience and tender heart."

Equally delicate is the portrait of the young squire, with his crisped locks:

"Embroidered was he, as it were a meade
All full of freshe flowres white and reede;
Singing he was, or fluting, all the day;
He was as fresh as is the month of May."

Shakespeare surely had these lines in mind when he drew Master Fenton: "He speaks holiday, he has eyes of youth, he smells April and May." Of the Tales themselves, the very finest is doubtless the "Knight's Tale," that epic in little. The picture of Emily rising on May morning—

"Up rose the Sun, and up rose Emily," the spirited picture of the tourney, and the subtly pathetic death of Arcite:

"What is this world? What asketh man to have?

Now with his love, now in his colde grave, Alone, withouten any company!"

All these things are famous. Equally famous is the mock solemnity and quiet humour of the story regarding the cock and the fox—the most admirable comedy in the Tales. Very little known, however, is the early poem, "Troilus and Cressyde." Yet Mr. Pollard is hardly mistaken in calling it a masterpiece. Worked out in the subtlest detail, it is full of touches possessing, to a degree unique in mediæval work, the modern quality of intimacy. The whole of Pandarus's scenes with his niece are informed with these touches, giving a life-like reality to the tale. Cressyde's girlish playfulness, and her uncle's jocoseness, are excellently conceived:

"Now by your fay, mine uncle," quoth she,
'dear,

What manner wind guideth you hither here?
Tell us your jolly woe and your penance!
How far forth be ye put in lovès dance?"

'By God,' quoth he, 'I hop alway behinde!
And she to-laughe, as though her heart's breast.

Quoth Pandarus, 'Look alway that ye find Game in mine hood!'"

And again she surprises him meditating:

"And up it put, and went her in to dine;
But Pandarus, that in a study stood,
Or he was ware, she took him by the hood,
And saide, 'Ye were caught or that ye wiste!'"

When he asks her a sudden question as to whether Troilus is a good writer of love-letters:

"Therwith all rosy-hued then wex she,
And gan to hum, and saide, 'So I trow!'"

In all this poem, the only thing known by universal quotation is the lovely image of the nightingale:

"And as the new-abashed nightingale,
That stinteth first when she beginneth sing,
When that she heareth any herde tale,
Or in the hedges any wight stirring,
And after sikker doth her voice out-riug;
Right so Cressyde, when her drede stente,
Opened her hearte, and tolde all her entente."

But to quote Chaucer would be endless. Enough that now, for three-and-six, any man can possess the most admirable raconteur, save Homer, in the poetry of any language; as full of felicitous touches of nature as the old Greek himself, and with a power of humour and satire which no Greek possessed; while in delineation of character he probably stands next to Shakespeare.

Now, let us take our courage in our two hands, and—having not the fear of "established repute" and other such bugbears before our eyes—say that Chaucer is mortal and has faults. It is a limitation rather than a fault that (as has already been noted) he has little or no power of imagery. In this respect he resembles the mediæval poets in general, and the bulk of the classic poets, most of whom do not attempt the opulent imagery, bold or subtle or both, which is so striking a feature in the style of sixteenth, seventeenth, and nineteenth century poetry. There are exceptions, headed by Dante among mediæval, and Aristophanes (we think) among classic poets. But in the main Chaucer merely shares this limitation with his brethren. His actual faults might perhaps be gathered under one fault. He is long-winded. Shade of Mistress Quickly! what high-roads of narration he can achieve! In this again he is the child of his time. The mediæval raconteurs minded too well that art is long, and forgot most villainously that life is short. If Chaucer followed them in their sin, he gave us much better recompense. He is garrulous as a bird, and out of that come both his merits and defects; out of that comes his bird-like freshness, and comes, too, his bird-like loquacity. Who has not sometimes wished that he might shut off a too voluble canary as he might a musical-box? From this habit spring torturing prolixity, and detailed felicity. Take "Troilus and Cressyde." His garrulity is the cause of unnumbered stanzas in which the stream of the story crawls sluggishly on, expanded amidst dreary flats of verbiage, or dammed by long monologues barren of beauty and interest. But this leisurely deliberation also results in those delightful minute touches which take us by an intimate surprise with their life and character; Cressyde taking Pandarus by the hood with girlish playfulness, the chatter of the ladies who pay her their visit of condolence on her departure from Troy, and many another detail which a more concise chronicler would have missed.

It is, perhaps, part of this defect that, particularly in his earlier work, he is apt to be clumsy in construction, inartificially artificial. In "The Death of Blanche the Duchess" he must drag in an elaborate machinery of dream, with a long description of a visionary hunt, &c., merely in order to exhibit John of Gaunt bawling the death of his wife. And, redundancy upon redundancy, even this prolix dream has to be prefaced by a prolix relation of the legend of "Halcyone," merely because he is supposed to be reading this legend before he goes to sleep, and it concerns a marital bereavement.

In the Canterbury Tales all this is much amended. The construction is happy; the introduction concise and unsuperfluous; he employs his detail with selection and compression; and the same may be said of the best among the "Tales." But even here there are tales and parts of tales in which mediæval loquacity breaks out irrepressible and intolerable. The "Monk's Tale," the Parson's prosy sermon, and the still drearier "Tale of Melibœus," are the worst examples. Even the "Story of Grisildis" would have borne compression. One consequence of mediæval garrulity haunted Chaucer to the last—the propensity to leave his poems unfinished. The Canterbury Tales is a fragment. Just so it took two poets to complete the Roman de la Rose. Just so Spenser left the Faerie Queene unfinished; and so, usually, does the reader. For Spenser imitated Chaucer's diffuseness, as well as his language.

Such, then, is Geoffrey Chaucer; a poet neither sublime nor faultless, but assuredly a great poet. Of all our great poets he is the most objective, and therefore best fitted for the average Englishman. Far more than Shakespeare, he is the Englishman's poet. Half of Shakespeare is a sealed book to the average reader, whereas the whole of Chaucer is well within his grasp. The spirit of the plain, common-sense Anglo-Saxon in Chaucer's person takes its place in poetry. Humorously observant, clear and strong in language, full of zest in life and all the external activities of men, he might be called a Shakespeare with the spiritual side omitted. Whatever men do he can delineate with moving fidelity; he has less power over what they feel. Laughter is his, and a certain sweet and primal pathos; but, as Mr. Pollard well observes, he is not a poet of love. And this although he is constantly writing of love, following the poetic conventions of his time. The passion in "Troilus and Cressyde" is little beyond the naked sexual instinct. Though Dante and Petrarch had shown him the way, English poetry had to await the sixteenth century and Spenser before that lofty movement began which has issued in the love-poetry of Shelley, Tennyson, Rossetti, and writers yet later. Let us be satisfied with the Chaucer we have, with his robustness, his movement, his character, his pathos, his verve, his sly humour, his felicitous naïveté, his cheery sanity; the finest story-teller in modern Europe, the poet of the typical Englishman—whom (by a most English irony of fate) the typical Englishman does not read. Nor ever will; for if he could take the trouble to master Chaucer's language he would not be the typical Englishman.

THE SUNDERING FLOOD.

The Sundering Flood. By William Morris. (Longmans.)

WHEN William Morris wrote this story he seems to have had in his mind the England of Arthur and Lancelot—a dim, half-known country with here and there a walled town or a knight's castle, and the ground still uncultivated, the woods masterless "and abounding in antres vast" and a goblin-haunted hollows. He offers a curiously romantic map of this fanciful territory as it might have been conceived by the monk dwelling in the House of the Black Canons at Abingdon "who gathered this tale." It is the picture of such a vision as could well be entertained by a man of the experience of William Morris, who might easily dream his favourite Cotswolds into "the Great Mountains" of the story, and add thereto torrents and steadings, and eke it out from that other chamber of remembrance where lay his early days in Essex and Epping Forest, and his knowledge of the broad lower Thames. The family likeness in his ideal landscapes excuses, if it does not justify, this theory of their origin.

Most charitable would it be, also, to assume that he had dreamed his local colour, for the circumstances are jumbled together from many centuries. In the country are abbeys, grey village churches, and friars, and as the last did not arrive in England till the reign of Henry III., they seem to indicate the date very exactly. But instead of being under a Norman king and a feudal system, the country is broken up into a number of independent communities very much as if Ithaca had intruded itself into mediæval England. Here are dales governed by their motes, towns which seem to be republics, one district at least ruled by a baron, and that Game Laws or Foresters' Rights exist there is no word to signify. On the whole, therefore, it will be sufficient to warn off those who seek for historical accuracy in their novels. We may fairly assume that as Mr. Morris deliberately jumbled his knowledge of English landscape into this wild territory of dream, so also of set purpose he confounded epochs and times, and out of his knowledge constructed this ideal period wherein he sets succeeding systems of Government side by side. Though generally treating of the prehistoric, or at any rate vague and traditional time of the Round Table, he adds institutions as late as the fourteenth century. To do anything else than assume the confusion to be planned would be to accuse him of the grossest carelessness—the fault unpardonable in an artist.

Next we come to the manner of speech adopted by this Abingdon clerk, who must have lived very late indeed, inasmuch as though a writer may confuse the past, he cannot mingle it with the future. He writes a prose closely akin to that of Chaucer in his "Tale of Melibœus," except that Chaucer is less archaic and puzzling than his imitator. But, in sooth, William Morris was neither kith nor kin of Chaucer. The early poet's strength lies in the sane and clear representation of what he saw with his own eyes and believed in his own heart. Our clerk of Abingdon, supposed to represent his time, runs over with superstition: dwarfs, landwights, sorcerers absolutely throng his pages. What a very slight part witchcraft plays with the Canterbury Pilgrims! As little almost as it does in the Decameron. Well, Chaucer in verse Bocaccio in prose, were in their day masters of fiction. But all the magic they deal in is the sorcery by which genius sets before us characters more living than life itself, compressing as they do the essence of many into one. Knowledge of life, that is the artist's true material, and all else but wrappage and framework. But before dealing with that prime essential of art, a word has to be said about another minor point. In this volume, as in its predecessors, the prose narrative is broken and relieved by verse, and here again Mr. Morris has chosen to give only a rough and distant imitation of his original, for his bard deigns not to alliterate, as his contemporaries did. It is not without interest to compare the effusion of this Anglo-Saxon Scald with such an admirable version as, for instance, the late Laureate's "Battle of Brunanburgh." We select what in our estimation seems to be the best stanza in the book, and is also complete in itself as a description of Spring:

"Now the grass growth free
And the lily's on lea,
And the April-tide green
Is full growth beseen;

And far behind
Lies the Winter blind,
And the Lord of the Gale
Is shadowy pale;
And thou linden be-blossomed with bed of the worm
Cometh forth from the dark house as Spring from the storm."

It is pretty, but much too smooth and Morrissan. Compare it with a verse of Brunanburgh:

"Then with their nail'd prows
Parted the Norsemen, a Blood-reddened relic of Javelins over
The jarring breaker, the deep-sea billow
Shaping their way toward Dyflen again,
Shamed in their souls."

There is a something of languor in the poetry of the Sundering Flood, and no verse that will compare with that fine couplet in its predecessor:

"Bitter winter, burning summer, never more shall waste and wear,
Blossom of the ross undying makes undying
springtide there."

The thought is one of those felicities that continue to haunt the mind long after they have found expression, and it echoes in what is perhaps the most exquisite prose passage in the volume:

"She would, as it were, tell stories of how it would betide that at last they should meet—both grown old—and kiss once, and so walk hand in hand into the Paradise of the Blessed, here to grow young again amidst the undying spring in the land where uneasiness is come to ought; and then would she sit and weep as if there were no ending to the well of her ears."

There are in the Water of the Wondrous Isles many such passages, where the poet's broad and tender humanity, his deep sympathy with the low music of parting and valediction, of wistful dreams and hopes, flash out in obviously simple and pathetic words, and there are also rugged and repugnant inversions and obscurities couched in language to be abhorred. Here he neither rises so high nor sinks so low; he is nothing worse than a drum at his dullest, and at his best seems dwelling again on some eloquent passage of the earlier book. If the Sundering Flood had been written before the other, our impression would have been that the poet was dawning upon him, but had not yet ripened into full and adequate expression. At the same time this is the more artistic book of the two, in so far as it shows greater evidence of plan and selection. But it is not inspired either as to its incidents or the language in which they are told.

The real gift of Mr. Morris as a romancer lies in his ability to picture some of the sweetest and most engaging figures to be found in fiction. But he saw them only with the sure, but momentary, glimpse of a poet.
We may fancy him to have beheld some fair
Cotswold lass and lad and to have transported them in his fancy back to the Dark Ages, to live called one Elfhild and one Osberne, and then, from his reading, to have imagined adventures appropriate to their day. But the worst of it is that the lines are so well-travelled. Like "Roland brave and Olivier, and every paladin and peer," Osberne must obtain his enchanted sword and, like Excali-bar and Durindante, it is delivered by the hands of a supernatural visitant. It is high "Board-cleaver," and the giver is Steelhead, one who might be mate to Birdalone's friend the Wood-wife. He also bestows a bow and magical arrows, and is the good fairy of the tale. To Elfhild a dwarf presents a pipe of sorcery, whose virtue may be apprehended from the pretty extract we make:

"And she drew forth a pipe from her bosom and fell to playing it, and a ravishing sweet melody came thence, and so merry that the lad himself began to shift his feet as one moving to measure, and straightway he heard a sound of bleating, and sheep came running towards the maiden from all about. Then she arose and ran to them, lest they should shove each other into the water: and she danced before them, lifting up her scanty blue skirt, and twinkling her bare feet and legs, while her hair danced about her:
and the sheep they, too, capered and danced about as if she had bidden them, and the boy looked on and laughed without stint, and he deemed it the best of games to behold."

The story of the love of these two form the artless plot. If worked out in plain and simple language it would have been a pleasing essay in the genre of fairy tales for children, even though with all his magic and spells Mr. Morris produces no effect comparable to that, for instance, which results from the wandering of Sir Palomedes and the "Questynge Beste" through the pages of Mort d'Arthur. For anything beyond that it is naught. The author had a quick and sure eye for any fair vision of men and women, but never did he master that essential of all great novels, the effect produced on character by the shocks and blows of circumstance. Barring that his lovers add a few feet to their stature and a few pounds to their weight, they are at the end what they were at the beginning, as wise and not a whit less virtuous. And where this is so it is obvious that the wildest adventure has no more literary value than an exciting paragraph in a daily paper.
Nor can we believe that it is at all true to represent a boy of twelve as matchless alike in courage and wisdom. Rather are folly, and even a certain cowardice, the characteristics of that period when boys are like puppy-dogs that, though destined to be staunch and true as steel, will in their callow days fly from a kitten or a rat. But if the author's interest had lain in the growth and development of mental qualities, the Cotswold Hills of the nineteenth century would have afforded a better stage than the dim and little understood time when chivalry was dawning. For you do not make literature great by blazoning it with the picturesque elements of history. Gil Blas of Santillane, sallying forth on his old mule, his head crammed with folly and nonsense, is as enduring, yes, and as interesting a figure as the bravest and most renowned knight of Christendie.

THE TOWNELEY PLAYS.

The Towneley Plays. Re-edited by George England. With Side-notes and Introduction by Alfred W. Pollard, M.A.
(Early English Text Society.)

SOME sixty years ago the Towneley Plays, rarest of mediæval dramatic cycles, were first printed from the unique MS. by the Surtees Society. That edition is hardly up to the level of modern requirements, and has, moreover, become rare, and the Early English Text Society very wisely decided to reprint the plays from a new and careful transcript by Mr. George England.

Mr. Pollard, of the British Museum, contributes a preface, in which he recapitulates what the Surtees editor had to say about their nature and origin, and supplements that by some new facts and speculations to which recent investigations have opened the way.
On the vexed question whether the plays were originally performed by the trade guilds of Wakefield in the streets of that city, or by the Augustinian canons of Woodkirk at their fair, Mr. Pollard has nothing material to adduce. The doubt remains where it was. But the publication, in 1885, of the York plays has revealed the curious fact that five of these have a common origin with five of the Towneley cycle; and starting from this basis, Mr. Pollard has been able to push a good deal further the theory of his predecessor, that this latter cycle must be regarded as a composite one, partly original and partly borrowed.

An analysis of the York parallels,
and of the metrical and other characteristics of the Towneley Plays themselves, leads Mr. Pollard to distinguish at least three hands. The nucleus of the cycle, he thinks, consists of a group of plays of a simple religious didactic type, very similar in tone to the Chester Plays.
Upon these have been engrafted somewhat bungled versions of five or more plays introduced from the neighbouring city of York. And, finally, the work has been completed, say about 1410, by "a writer of genuine dramatic power, whose humour was unchecked by any respect for conventionality."

It is in the contributions of this third hand, capable at once of vigorous force and of exquisite tenderness, that the dramatic value of the Towneley Plays mainly consists. As Mr. Pollard says, "his additions entitle it to be ranked among the great works of our earlier literature." We have little doubt that Mr. Pollard's analysis of the cycle is on the right lines; but how would he explain the existence side by side of two alternative versions of the Nativity, or Shepherds' play?
One cannot have been written to supersede the other, for Mr. Pollard assigns them both to the third and latest writer. Yet surely some reason is required for the doublet, to which there is not, so far as we know, a parallel elsewhere.

We should be glad to think that this new edition might win for the Towneley Plays readers outside the charmed circle of students of Early English. They deserve it for the freshness of their paths and of their humour, and for the real and somewhat unexpected mastery of dramatic art which the best of them display. Two stanzas alone we can find space to quote. The first is singled out by Mr. Pollard as representative of his earliest and most devotional author:

"Whan I all thus had wed hir thare,
We and my madyns home can fare,
That kyngys daughters were;
All wroght thay sylk to find them on,
Marie wroght purpyll, the oder none
Bot othere colers sere."

And the other is from the third hand, the genius:

PRIMUS PASTOR.

"Hayll, comly and clene! hayll, yong child!
Hayll, maker, as I meyne, of a madyn so mylde!
Thou has waryd, I weyne, the warld so wylde;
The fals gyler of teyn, now goys he begylde.
Lo, he merys;
Lo, he laghys, my swetyng,
A welfare metyng,
I haue holden my hetyng;
Haue a bob of cherys."

We observe with gratitude that the Early English Text Society have replaced their familiar lilac wrapper in this issue by a workmanlike cover of brown cloth.

PROF. HOMMEL AND THE HIGHER CRITICS.

The Ancient Hebrew Tradition. By Dr. Fritz Hommel. (S.P.C.K.)

So far back as 1889, Prof. Welhausen, in search of facts to support his theory that much of the Book of Genesis was written after the Captivity, happened to fall foul of the fourteenth chapter. He said—following therein Dr. Nöldeke—that it was impossible that four kings from the Persian Gulf should have invaded the Sinaitic peninsula as there recorded, or should have taken prisoners who were rescued by Abraham. He or some of his followers also suggested that the names of the persons and places mentioned in the chapter in question were made up for the occasion, the name of Jerusalem, in particular, not having been given to Melchizedek's city till long afterwards. But a good deal of water has flowed under the bridges since then. The cuneiform texts from Babylonia lately deciphered by Mr. Pinches exhibit Chedorlaomer of Elam as a very real monarch indeed, and as a contemporary of Khammurabi, King of Babylon, who seems to be the Amraphel of the Bible; while the Tel-el-Amarna tablets show that Jerusalem was called Uru-salim—which is evidently the same name—in 1400 B.C. This, while it does not exactly (to use the time-honoured phrase) "prove the Bible to be true," shows, at any rate, that the Biblical narrative involves no impossibilities. Dr. Hommel accordingly writes a book in which he belabours his brother professor Welhausen and the Higher Critics generally in the heavy-handed German manner. It is translated by the S.P.C.K., and is advertised by them as "a triumphant refutation of Welhausen's theories." And this is the way in which it comes to appear in these columns.

Looking at it impartially, and with the respect due to Dr. Hommel's undoubted learning, we doubt that there is anything triumphant about the book but its tone. Dr. Hommel does good service in exposing the absurd claim of some of his opponents to show the exact point of each chapter and verse where, as they assert, one contributor to the Book of Genesis left off and another began. But he does not disprove the teaching of a whole school by showing that some of its pretensions are exaggerated. The Jews, too, have always shown themselves more clever at annexing the ideas of other people than at discovering new ones for themselves, and if, in this case, they have "lifted" the whole story of Chedorlaomer's raid, and have read it as a mere episode in the life of their national hero, Abraham, they have only acted after their kind. When the Alexandrian Jews wanted to tack themselves on to the Greek nation, and forged histories showing their descent from the Spartans, they did exactly the same thing.

It seems, too, that writers like Dr. Hommel rather misunderstand the position of the pompously named "Higher" Criticism. Dr. Welhausen and his school do not want to prove the Bible to be false, but to ensure that its statements and history shall be judged by the same rules as those of any other book. And, rightly or wrongly, their view of the matter is beginning to prevail. Even the book before us is a proof of it. On p. 158 the author himself draws attention to the fact that while in Genesis xiv. 10 the King of Sodom is said to have been killed in the raid, yet in v. 17 he is reported to have met and conversed with Abraham on the latter's return from his rescue expedition. Dr. Hommel gets over the difficulty by a reconstruction of vv. 17-21, in which he makes Melchizedek, and not the King of Sodom, Abraham's interlocutor. A Semitic scholar of Dr. Hommel's attainments is most probably right, but before the coming of the Higher Critics would not his suggestion have been repudiated by the champions of inspiration as an audacious tampering with the Word of God?

SLENDER HISTORY.

The Story of Canada ("Story of the Empire Series"). By Howard Angus Kennedy.

THE history of the making of Canada seems to fall naturally into three periods. The first is the era of the great adventurers, French and English, when isolated settlements were formed and a perpetual guerilla warfare maintained against the Hurons and the Iroquois; then came the period of English conquest and English consolidation; and, last of all, we have the Canada of the past seventy years, a sort of corpus vile for constitutional and economic experiments. For the lover of romantic tales the first portion has the major interest. Few stories are so extraordinary as that which tells of the earlier efforts of De la Roche, of Chauvin and De Monts and the great Champlain. Henry IV. was the prime instigator of the scheme, though his minister Sully did his best to dissuade him, and in his letter of 1608 to the President Jeannin calls the whole system "contrary to the genius of the nation." Perhaps he was right. "Contrary to the national genius." Has the history of French colonisation been such as to disprove the phrase? But, at any rate, the movement has given a roll of great names to history. The story of the Jesuit mission in the wilds is a marvellous record of the heroic. "The ink seems to turn red," says Mr. Kennedy, with pardonable exuberance, "as we read the story of their fate." Brôbeuf, Jogues, Maisonneuve, Dollard—it is hard to pick and choose among them; but if we have a favourite it is the Sieur de la Salle, who formed the bold scheme of finding a western route across the continent to China. He had to strive with apathy at home and discontent among his followers; he was murdered in the end by mutineers while in the act of leading a forlorn hope from the Gulf of Mexico northward; but he had shown the way for others, and laid the foundation of the future settlement of New Orleans.

The disastrously patriarchal government in Paris soon brought about the ruin of French colonial power, and we come to the wars of Wolfe and Montcalm and the rise of English supremacy. Among the more interesting features of the period are the little settlements by broken Highland clans who sought to establish new Breadalbanes and Lochabers in the West. The feuds between the Hudson Bay and the North-West companies in one part, and distracting political, racial, and economic difficulties in the other, disturb the history of the colony almost down to our own day. It seems a pity that more space is not devoted to the singular work of Lord Durham, who for all his unsuccess was one of the most remarkable Englishmen who ever meddled with Canadian affairs. The relations with the United States, the various separatist movements, and the vexed question of tariffs, are briefly but clearly treated. This little book makes no claim to be exhaustive, and the manner of writing is not always perfect; but it fulfils a useful purpose, and its author—to adapt his own quotation—has done "slenderly," but not "meanly."

THE BORDER.

Border Raids and Reivers. Robert Borland. (Fraser: Dalbeattie.)

IN spite of Mr. Borland's book a scholarly and authoritative monograph on Border history still awaits the man and the hour. It is no depreciation of Border Raids and Reivers to say this, for its author has evidently written for the general reader, not for the historical student. To the latter, indeed, this volume will be of little value, but to the former it will prove a quite readable sketch of a highly interesting spécialité of British history. We do not desire to take too seriously, much less to handle with any approach to severity, a work with this limited aim. Yet Mr. Borland rather courts such treatment by the way in which he has employed his authorities. It were better frankly and consistently to have omitted all indication of the sources from which he drew, and simply and modestly given the story in his own words, than to have mentioned them in a sparing and irregular manner here and there. It is characteristic, too, of the writer's casual mode of procedure, that when he does cite chapter and verse he neglects a primary duty in not telling us what edition he is using; as, for instance, in his references to his most important authority, Nicholson's Leges Marchiarum. If he is quoting, as he should be, from the later edition, that of 1747, either he has wittingly played with the text in a reprehensible fashion, or he has been guilty of careless transcription and misquotation. Either of these sins is unpardonable in any historical work, even in one intended more to amuse than to instruct.

Again, no rule is followed in his pages with regard to the form in which excerpts are presented: in some the orthography has been modernised, in others, though taken from the same records, the original rehashes are preserved. If, in a subsequent edition, the author elects to adhere to the latter and preferable plan, it will be necessary (in the absence of an index) to append a glossary of antiquated, obscure, and technical terms. What can the ordinary reader make of "splents" and "currys," of "cassin" and "pyckery," and such like weirdsome wonders. Chronologically, the book is a sad jumble. Those who are not more than ordinarily familiar with the general course of English and Scottish history will find it difficult to grasp the sequence of events. We have noted but a few downright mistakes. "Hand-fasting," however, existed long before the Scottish marriages came into being, and, of course, was very far from being limited to that district; a part of Valentia was "subdued by the Saxons"; nor was the clan system "peculiar to Celtic tribes." For the rest, while Mr. Borland's style is sometimes careless, at other times he shows a tendency grandiosus pompare modis. "Emit a proclamation," and "adhibit a signature," are samples of obsolete usages which can hardly be accepted as literary English.

ON DEMOCRACY.

The Rise of Democracy. By J. Holland Rose, M.A. (Blackie.)

Mr. Rose's summary of the evolution of democracy is a book which might have had considerable value, for, speaking generally, we are all ignorant as to what happened a generation back. Unfortunately, however, his work lacks all charm of style, though it is clearly written. The book is not laborious enough to serve for reference; it is only a first attempt at a task which someone else will have to accomplish. Meanwhile, however, it is useful, and suggests interesting ideas. One thing well brought out (in a chapter on "Phases of Political Thought") is the influence on politics of the crown of Darwin's work. It has done away with abstract political theorising from general principles; the theory of Evolution "has exercised on all thinking men, and indirectly through them on the unthinking, a most important influence in exposing the folly both of immobility and of sudden and reckless change in the political world." Another conclusion of Mr. Rose's we should be less inclined to adopt; he holds that extension of the franchise has increased political instability. It is true that the swing of the pendulum has been excessive since the violent reaction of 1830; but that does not seem to prove much. Setting aside the Home Rule question, which has nothing to say to democracy, there has been no important cleavage between the two programmes, for the excellent reason that statesmen on both sides recognise frankly that they are servants of the democracy, not its masters, and endeavour, first of all, to interpret its wishes, only, in the second place, to influence those wishes and never to impose their own will. Consequently, although there is a frequent change of ministers, there is no great change of measures; the people know in a general way what they want, they merely leave to the ministers to find out the best way of attaining that. As the result is never ideal, the people give a chance to the other set to see if they can do better; but upon the whole our national policy is surprisingly stable. The single issue over which one can trace violent fluctuations in public opinion was the Home Rule question, an exceedingly complex and puzzling problem, where England had no clear view of its own interest for a guide. Mr. Gladstone forced it on the country in a sudden and violent manner; it is only now that things have assumed their normal condition, and that either party may be relied on to adopt the traditional English policy of trying whether a compromise will not work. Disraeli's dishing of the Whigs is the most fruitful political precedent of the half-century; since then no one opposes a measure without the assurance that he may probably vote for something very like it in a twelvemonth. This arises from no political profligacy, but simply from the fact that under a working democracy no minister proposes a scheme unless it is pretty closely in accordance with his conception of the popular will.

EARLY PRINTERS.

The Printers of Basle in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries: their Biographies, Printed Books, and Devices. By Charles William Heckethorn. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

This work might be described rather more as bibliographical than biographical, even though the author does not profess to give a complete bibliography of all the works printed by those Swiss printers who flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Printing was introduced into Basle about 1472, that city being one of the earliest to embrace the new art after Adolphus the Second had besieged Mayence in 1462 and the first printers of that place were dispersed. Under those circumstances the workmen considered themselves relieved from the oath of secrecy made on entering the services of the Fust and Guttenberg partnership. Bertoldus was one of these printers, and it was he who established the first press in Basle. Owing to the absence of dates and places of origin it is difficult to identify his work, but it seems to be clear that Bertoldus was the pioneer of typography in Basle.

Froben was, perhaps, the most celebrated of these printers, and he is sometimes called the German Aldus (because he was born in Bavaria). Froben printed the first octavo edition of the Bible in Latin; this was in 1491, and in 1516 he printed the first edition of the New Testament in Greek that was ever published. Most of his work was of a scholarly nature, and much was due to his friendship with Erasmus.

Though Mr. Heckethorn's work is very lavish in its illustrations of title-pages, colophons, and devices, it is a great pity he did not give a few reproductions of the various founts of types used by the early masters of typography. They were just as easily reproduced, and would have given a more concise record of their work. At the same time one could have compared the italic, gothic, and roman types employed with those used in other countries, and in many cases could have traced their origin. For instance, Froben was the first to adopt Aldus's italic type — which was called Italian.

The late William Morris, though he adopted for his Kelmscott Press a modified form of letters based on Jensen's roman, thought very highly of the work done by the Basle printers. One marvels, when considering the crude materials employed and the rough appliances at hand, how such fine and lasting work was produced. In a certain way Mr. Morris was correct when he remarked that no good printing was done after the sixteenth century. It is a strong statement; but in an artistic sense there is some truth in it, because it was in later times that the commercial element entered into the production of books, and this limited the consideration of the artist and scholar.

Apparently this is Mr. Heckethorn's first venture in the field of typography, and altogether, if not complete in its bibliography, the matter he has given us is of a useful kind, and makes, with its large number of illustrations, an interesting volume. He has done his work fairly and correctly as a rule, but large allowances must be made for a work of this kind, because of the lack of dates and variations in spelling. There are one or two discrepancies in his book, for instance, in the first six pages Guttenberg and Guttenburg are both used, but the dates, generally, may be accepted as being correct.

BRIEFER MENTION.

Three Years in Savage Africa. By Lionel Deele. (Methuen & Co.)

THIS is a delightful book. Mr. Deele's journey was three years long, beginning at Cape Town, and ending only at Mombasa, near the equator. Tribe after tribe, chief after chief, emerge, and always—almost always—some dialogue or adventure reveals and criticises the impact of civilisation on savagery, of big brains on small brains.

Mr. Deele tells how, when he blew his nose in the presence of the Queen of the Makalaka, she and her entire court burst into roars of laughter. In this incident, and in many like it, we find the significance of Mr. Deele's report of savage Africa. We are made to realise the meeting of white and black—the meeting which is no longer accidental or private, but politic and pregnant. The laughter of the Makalaka at Mr. Deele's action would have been amusing in the pages of Speke and Livingstone. To-day it has an almost pathetic interest; the Makalaka will so soon cease to find a pocket-handkerchief funny! Day by day, and bit by bit, savage Africa is being accustomed to European ways. When Mr. Deele visited Lo Bengula—whom he compares to the Czar Alexander in imposing appearance—this is what he saw:

“Crowds of natives were pouring in continuously, and as soon as they reached the opening leading into the royal enclosure they threw themselves flat on the ground, shouting, ‘Nkosi [chief], Uhlabantu [eater of people], Lion of lions, Stabber of heavens, Great black calf, Thunderer’—and other terms of praise.”

That is native enough; but while his people shouted, the stabber of the heavens was “sitting on an old champagne box, nervously shaking one of his legs.” Where champagne and nerves can go, what may not follow?

The Theatrical World of 1897. By William Archer. (Walter Scott.)

WITH this volume Mr. Archer brings the number of his yearly surveys of the stage to five, and to signalise the achievement he has added a most interesting statistical epilogue, showing at a glance the character and popularity of the plays which Londoners during that period have been called upon to see. This tells us that there have been 65 successes, 54 doubtful cases, and 116 failures (from the popular, not the artistic, standpoint); that the average number of successful plays each year is 13, against 23 failures; that the time given to plays of home manufacture was 2,835 weeks, against 780 weeks to plays from abroad; also, that during these five years Mr. H. A. Jones's ten plays have run (in London) 107 weeks; Mr. Pinero's seven plays 90 weeks; Mr. Grundy's eight plays 69 weeks; Mr. R. C. Carton's five plays 63 weeks; Mr. L. N. Parker's six plays 58 weeks; and Mr. J. M. Barrie's three plays 53 weeks. The bulk of the book consists of reprints of Mr. Archer's World criticisms. A preface by Mr. Grundy, incisively written, yields the phrase: “The interesting, the irritating, the amusing, the depressing, the indispensable Romeike.”

Campaigning on the Upper Nile and Niger. By Seymour Vandeleur. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. VANDELEUR has been concerned of late years in the British operations on the Upper Nile and in the Niger districts, and he has made a capital book out of his experiences. So close a diary (for this is practically a diary) of adventure and soldiering in Africa cannot be summarised here; and we prefer to give an idea of the book by quoting one of the many chance episodes which lend colour to its pages. Here is an incident that occurred in our author's experience when returning to Mombasa along the great plain of the Nollosegeli River. A hill presented itself, and over its brow a warlike party was seen advancing: “Were they friends or enemies?”

“We took our rifles and waited for them to come up. They came straight on, and as the leaders approached they came and shook hands with us, proving to be at the head of a Masai war-party, composed of the same El Moran, or warriors, who had massacred the caravan in the Kedong Valley. It was a curious sight to see, and the column passed rapidly on in single file, threading its way through the mountains. They were divided up into detachments, wearing different kinds of head-gear; some had great head-dresses made of monkey skins, others of goat skins, whilst some had capes of ostrich feathers over their shoulders. They carried spears and shields, most of the former wrapped in rags or painted red to avoid detection. Their leaders were friendly enough, and wanted us to go with them to raid the Kimariongo tribe, who live near Ingoboto, east of Elgon, but two or three of the Elmoran were insulting, and brandished their spears as they went by. I counted 484 in all; and following the column, which had several long gaps in it, were some cattle and sheep, to provide food on their journey. On arriving at their destination, they collect together at nightfall for the attack, and in the early morn fall on their enemies, killing man, woman, and child; stabbing right and left with their long sharp spears.”

Such episodes abound in Mr. Vandeleur's pages. But through all runs the threads of political interest and purpose. Indeed, the last few chapters may be said to form an informal Blue Book on the Niger question. It need not be said that Mr. Vandeleur is severe on French pretensions, and especially upon their occupation of Bussa. The book is illustrated with photographs of great interest, and the maps are enlightening.

Traits and Confidences. By Emily Lawless. (Methuen.)

THIS medley begins with short stories and ends with some chapters of Irish history written in the delightfully bright and fresh manner of Miss Lawless's “Story of the Nations” volume. It is welcome, like everything which comes from the writer's pen. Miss Lawless's style is always distinctive, frank, straightforward, and picturesque, without any straining after effect or attempt at fine writing. More than any other, she has caught the very temper, the very atmosphere, of Connemara. “An Entomological Adventure” is somewhat in a new vein. It tells of a child who, bitten by the fascination of moth-collecting, escapes from the house by moonlight in search of a large dawn-flying species. Having captured her booty, she creeps wearily into the centre of a large haystack. Here she is nearly suffocated, and, which is worse, her moth is crushed in its chip-box. Another good story—pathetic in the way that only Irish stories can be—is that called “After the Famine.” Among fiction and history are wedged in two or three taking little poems, one of which we may quote:

“A SONG OF ‘VEILED REBELLION.’”

They say that grave perils surround me,
That foes are on every hand;
That to right, and to left, and around me,
Red murder is stalking the land.

Yet I sit, as you see,
'Neath the shade of a tree,
With my book on my knee.

I am one of the demons accursed,
Detested, denounced from of old;
For whose blood the whole land is athirst,
Or so I am credibly told.

Yet I sit, as you see,
'Neath the shade of a tree,
With my book on my knee.

My safety is guarded all day
By stalwart protectors in green,
Who roam with my maids thro' the hay,
And happily rarely are seen.

While I sit, as you see,
'Neath the shade of a tree,
With my book on my knee.”

If fault is to be found with Traits and Confidences, it must be on the score of a scrappiness of general effect. The miscellaneous character of the contents suggest an indiscriminate hunt through drawers an other receptacles of MSS. at the summon of a publisher. For all that, however as we said, the book is welcome.

The Diamond Fairy Book. Illustrated by H. R. Millar. (Hutchinson.)

THESE are modern imaginings, not folk-lore although many of them, as modern imaginings will, have absorbed folk-lore elements. Two or three of the stories are English most are borrowed from the French or German; one each from the Swedish, Persian and Breton. They make a varied entertaining volume, which will be a welcome Christmas present in any wise nursery. And when the children have gone to bed and left the book about, children of large growth will probably not feel disinclined to pick it up. You may observe a marked difference of character between the French and German contributions. The French fairy-tale, if not of Breton extraction, is thin, of meagre fancy, and tagged with moral. It is generally without humour. The German stories show a rich imagination, a keen sense of artistic fitness, and an abundant humour. Surely a curious inversion of the ordinary literary rôles of the two nations! Some of the German work here given has a charming abandon and a reckless wealth of invention, most notable in Witty-splinter and The Th

Talays, where the calm improbability of accident is delightful. Some of Mr. H. R. Miller's illustrations are dainty and humorous; others are lacking in inspiration and are ineffectively reproduced. His style does not lend itself well to reproduction.

Recollections of Thirty-nine Years in the Army.
By Sir Charles Alexander Gordon, K.C.B. (Sonnenschein.)

SIR CHARLES GORDON has seen more active service than has fallen to many a surgeon-general: his breast, in the portrait acting as frontispiece to this book, is gay with medals; but he does not wield a fascinating pen. That which has come under his eyes in his lengthy career—in India and Africa, China and Europe, during the Mutiny and the Siege of Paris—he can describe honestly enough, but without a hint of literary charm. Nor has he seen always the most interesting thing. One hundred and twenty thousand words by a writer so endowed may become wearisome, and hence it cannot be said that the stock of military recollection is appreciably strengthened by this book. Considering what opportunities any surgeon has of learning curious facts of human nature, coming as he does in the character of benefactor so closely into contact with brave men who are off their guard, it is disappointing to find so few series of eccentricity. One, however, is worth reproducing. A man was charged with an assault on an officer. Subsequently he confessed the motive:

"From the time when he first enlisted he had been haunted by visions of a murder committed by himself and his 'pal' on Wandsworth Common in 1845; he had made every endeavour to get killed while charging the Sibs in battle; he had committed offences so that he might be taken to the guard room, and thence made pretended attempts to escape, in the hope of being cut down by the sentry; but, being in all these, he had struck the officer, in order that for so doing he might be tried, condemned, and shot."

The odd thing is that a man so bent upon death should have shunned suicide with such persistence.

With Bat and Ball. By George Giffen. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

The success of K. S. Ranjitsinhji's book on cricket has naturally set other prominent players racking their brains for theories and reminiscences. The first to arrive is the champion cricketer of Australia, the Antipodean "W. G.," as he has been called, Mr. George Giffen. His book is a straightforward narrative of his career, with sketches of contemporaries in the field, and descriptions of historic matches thrown in. Mr. Giffen has taken cricket seriously from his earliest years. His first century was made in 1878, when he was seventeen, and it gained him his promotion to the Norwood Club.

"But I was quickly to discover that there is no royal road to cricket fame. In innings after innings I failed utterly and completely. My brothers and sisters who, when I had notched the century, had thought I was already a star cricketer, became sceptical regarding my ability, and were no longer their hero, and, as duck's egg after duck's egg fell to my lot, I could not face them with the news of my disgrace. Instead, therefore, of going in to tea on Saturday evenings, I would sit on the topmost rail of the fence of the park lands, brooding over my troubles until after dark, and then would steal on tip-toe into my room, and, supperless, stifle my worries in sleep."

Of such valiant stuff are champions made.

Welsh Ballads. By Ernest Rhys. (D. Nutt.)

BETWEEN the delicate covers of this book are legends of Wales, paraphrases from the Welsh, and original songs and poems embodying the Welsh spirit. Mr. Rhys is not a great poet; he is a zealous Welshman with a pretty knack of rhyme and a quick eye for romance and beauty. Here is a stanza from a lullaby conveyed or translated from the Welsh:

"The mother yields her babe to sleep
Upon her tender breast,
And sings a lullaby, to keep
Its little heart at rest;
O sleep in peace upon my bosom,
And sweetly may your small dreams blossom;
And from the fears that made me weep you,
And from all pains, as soft you sleep you,
The angels lightly guard and keep you
So safe and bless'd!"

Mr. Rhys, by beginning his dedication thus, "Dear Princess in Wales," has succeeded in giving at least one reader a shock.

A Handbook of Housekeeping for Small Incomes.
By Florence Stacpoole. (Walter Scott.)

THIS is a well-arranged and pleasantly written manual. Above her first chapter Mrs. Stacpoole places Dr. Johnson's saying: "Without economy none can be rich, and with it few can be poor." Mrs. Stacpoole works out a table of expenditure for the man whose income is £200 a year. It is stern reading; surely Mrs. Stacpoole errs in asking him to devote as much as £15 a year to insurance.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

AMERICAN WIVES AND HUSBANDS. BY GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

To publish three novels in a month is a feat, but the author of Patience Sparhawk will achieve it. His Fortunate Grace we read at a sitting last week, The Californians will be "ready shortly," and the third lies before us. American Wives, &c., like Patience Sparhawk, is a study of the American child, her development into an American woman, and her career as such. Miss Atherton has humour, and a distinct power of characterisation. Her American women (she is not over charitable to them) may not be typical, but they are amusing anyway:

"'Was papa perfectly perfect?' asks the heroine of her dying mother.

'Perfectly.'

'I heard the butler say once that he was as drunk as a lord.'

'Possibly, but he was perfect all the same. He got drunk like a gentleman—a Southern gentleman, I mean, of course. I always put him to bed and never alluded to it.'"

(Service & Paton. 388 pp. 6s.)

COLONEL THORNDYKE'S

SECRET.

BY G. A. HENTY.

With Mr. Henty the story's the thing; he butts into it straightway and turns aside never. Here he offers a variant of Wilkie Collins's Moonstone. We have the jewels stolen from an Indian temple, pursued silently and unswervingly by priests, who bring disaster on each successive possessor. Once begun, it is not easy to withstand Mr. Henty's story until the end is reached. (Chatto & Windus. 400 pp. 6s.)

MERESIA.

BY WINIFRED GRAHAM.

A story of Spaniards and English. José Serano is the hero, and in the first chapter he describes life in Madrid for the benefit of Bertie Heydon. "They were Eton boys—schoolfellows—pals," says the author. Subsequently José grows up, and Bertie grows up and wears a pink carnation, and Meresia comes upon the scene and is extensively loved. And here is a sentence concerning one of her lovers: "To check, to intercept, to repress Aladros! Why, as soon try to kill an eagle swooping down upon his prey, by tossing a handful of salt in the air." (Hurst & Blackett. 337 pp. 6s.)

WHEAT IN THE EAR.

BY "ALLEN."

A story of New Zealand by an admirer of Jean Ingelow and Tennyson. A quiet, earnest tale, depicting the rough course of the true love of a professor and a farmer for Joan. Joan began early to show her individuality, for being baptized by a deaf parson as John, and bidden manfully to fight, she was borne from the church yelling manfully that she wouldn't. The story ends tragically for the professor. (Hutchinson. 376 pp. 6s.)

PASQUINADO.

BY J. S. FLETCHER.

Here we have a novelette and four short stories by the author of The Wonderful Wapentake. In Pasquinado, the novelette, Mr. Fletcher plays the sentimentalist. The heroine is a little foreign waif nicknamed "Pollyvoosafronky," and is called by it in full every time. Subsequently her father is found and she becomes Agneta. A Dickensian story. The others are slight and sensational. (Ward, Lock & Co. 265 pp. 3s. 6d.)

MY FIRST PRISONER. BY "THE GOVERNOR."

The title-page is in green ink, by way, we suppose, of emphasising the story's Irish character, and the author, whose other name, or other pseudonym, is Bartle Teeling, calls the book a picture of Ireland and Rome of thirty years ago, and states that he himself was governor of an Irish prison and served in the Pontifical Zouaves. Hence we have Irish life and Garibaldian battles. And once an eagle carries off a baby in a cradle, and a peasant springs four feet into the air and breaks the eagle's back with his shillelagh; which is "good going." (Aberdeen: Moran & Co. 186 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE MERMAID OF IRISH-UIG.

By R. W. K. EDWARDS.

Her name was Black Kate and she dwelt among the seals off the coast of the north of Ireland. "And the thing came up half-way out of the water, and it had arms like a woman, and lifted the sale up off the mussel-bed, and the sale fa'ned on it, and they splashed into the water together"—such was old Doolie's story. A wild, uncanny little book. (Edward Arnold. 248 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE MUMMY'S DREAM. By H. B. PROCTOR.

The mummy was Oli-Mel. Dr. Schwartz, an occultist, induced Dick Mortimer to join hands with Oli-Mel and to live, in dream, the Egyptian's life over again. He is thus able to tell the story of the Exodus from the standpoint of an eye-witness, with many intimate particulars about Moses (who here figures as Mesu) not commonly known—one of which is the filial relationship of that patriarch to Pharaoh's daughter. A grotesque tale, which, thanks to the author's levity, no one can take seriously. (Sinupkin & Co. 257 pp. 2s.)

A REPUTATION FOR A SONG.

By MAUD OXENDEN.

Miss Oxenden prefaces her story by a little sermon on self-sacrifice, a virtue which, as she points out, is not always beautiful, and is often absurd or hysterical. This story tells how a man made a great sacrifice to a sick man's whim. "Perhaps," says the author, "in my heart I also think he was a fool; but I honour him in that I know how, through the years that have intervened, he has tried in his simple, unexalted way to live heroically in an unheroic age." (Edward Arnold. 342 pp. 6s.)

A SOLDIER OF MANHATTAN.

By JOSEPH A.
ALTSHELER.

This story is told in the first person by an American soldier of the old days, when the Canadian-French made themselves troublesome, and when the King's troops came over from England to the aid of his Transatlantic subjects. The taking of Quebec by Wolfe is a leading incident in a dashing tale of war, love, and adventure. (Smith, Elder, & Co. 369 pp. 6s.)

THREE WOMEN AND
MR. CARDWELL.

By W. PETT RIDGE.

Another of Mr. Pett Ridge's buoyant little novels, with plenty of bright dialogue, and an everyday plot that runs merrily. Upon the cover are stamped the portraits of Mr. Frank Cardwell and the three women who influenced his life. Mr. F. C. had catholic tastes. (C. A. Pearson. 250 pp. 3s. 6d.)

REVIEWS.

The Child who will Never Grow Old. By K. Douglas King. (John Lano.)

NEVER have we so cordially sympathised with Darwin's plea for a law compelling stories to end happily, as in reading this book. For of the eight tales between its covers, all, save perhaps one, end on a note of unnecessarily poignant pathos. Miss

King is a very Herod in the way she insists on the death of the children of her fancy. In the first story, a little boy dies of a broken back; in the second, two little boys are run over by a train; in the third, a boy, who is older than is common with Miss King's heroes, is killed by a drunken man; in the fourth, one little boy is shot with a gun fired deliberately by another little boy; in the fifth—but that is the exception; in the sixth, a suffering baby is left to die at the workhouse infirmary; in the seventh, a little boy falls over a cliff; in the eighth, a little boy is drowned. These calamities are in themselves sorrowful enough, but our misery is rendered more acute by the pains which Miss King lavishes to endear her heroes to us. Look, for example, at Tony-Baba, whose back was broken, and whose history gives the title to the book:

"Tony-Baba drew breath, and then resumed in his customary subdued conversational tones: 'He said to me, when I'd got over and we was looking at each other, "My name's Johnnie Jamieson—what's yours?"

'I said, "I'm Tony-Baba, this is my dog, Bibi, and my beauteous cat." And he frowned, did that Johnnie Jamieson, oh, most tremendous; and he said, quick as quick, "I can lick you all to fits!" Lick means beat you in fighting or racing, papa. "I can lick you all to fits," he said—just that. And I said, "I can lick you."

"I bet you can't," he said; "I bet I can just smash you all up."

'And I said, "Let us try."

A faint light sparkled in the depths of Tony-Baba's dreamily retrospective eyes.

'Did you try?' I asked.

'We did try. He jumped on me, and I jumped on him. Both together we jumped, and we got ourselves all mixed up. Then we began to fight; and we fought and tugged and jammed our fists in each other's eyes, and we couldn't smash each other nohow. We shouldn't have never left off fighting, I believe, and think, on'y Johnnie caught his foot in a rabbit hole and comed toppling over, and me on the top, 'cause all our arms and legs was mixed up together.'

'What happened next?'

Tony-Baba drew another long sigh of satisfaction. 'It was all quick as quick, papa,' he said, 'and Johnnie sort of pulled me down; but I remembered, just in time, that it wasn't no game, but that we was fighting on purpose to lick each other all to fits, so—I—'

Tony-Baba paused artistically.

'So you what?'

'I flumped on him with all my weightiest weight when he pulled me and I felled down. I just flumped kerrash on top of him as heavy as I could.'

'What did he do?'

'I'm awful heavy, I believe, when I fall like that. He didn't say nothink at all.'

'What happened then?'

'We just lay staring at each other, and his breathing was loud as loud, only he couldn't breathe as loud as he wished to, 'cause I was on t'p of him. And I was awful out of breath, too. Then he said, in a skrushed, inside-him sort of voice, "Well, anyhow, my papa is bigger and braver nor yours, I know."'

If, in these stories, Miss King had any gift of inevitability we should not mind. But she has none. Death is never the necessary termination of the tale; life would serve just as well. Hence our objection. And if she displayed signs of possessing unusual insight into child nature, or if there were valuable results of genuine observation, we should mind less. But again there are none. The stories are so obviously pure invention, and the endings are so obviously selected because of their nearness to the author's heart, that we have a right to protest in a way that we should not protest did the characters or incidents in the least convince us of reality. Miss King can write cleverly, and it is plain from the extracts given above that she has humour. We beg her to be as pleasing rather than as harrowing, as she can.

Carpet Courtship. By Thomas Cobb. (John Lane.)

WE do not remember to have seen the name of this writer upon the title-page of a book before; but this little volume has amused us so thoroughly that we shall look eagerly for anything he may write in the future. The story is light; it is built upon the slender foundation of a burnt letter; it deals with the tepid passions of people who have a position and appearances to keep up, and dare not marry whom they please; but the workmanship is so skilful and delicate that the book will be a delight to such as think the mode of presentation at least as important as the story itself.

Susannah Murchison sends for Everard Rothsay at half-past ten in the evening. She has a favour to ask of him:

"The fact is," she explained, "I—I had occasion to write to your cousin this afternoon."

'As well as to me?'

'Before I wrote to you,' she answered, 'and after I had sent the letter to the post I changed my mind.'

'Are you prone to that kind of thing?'

Everard asked.

'At all events,' she insisted, 'I changed my mind.'

'Then I suppose Frank will get a second letter!'

'On the contrary,' said Susannah, sitting suddenly upright, 'I don't want him to get the first.'

'But if it has been posted—'

'It will be delivered by the first post tomorrow morning.'

'So that it's too late to do anything,' he suggested.

'For me, yes—but not for you.'

With a woman's sophistries she persuaded him that he would be doing no wrong in intercepting and destroying the letter, and he undertakes to do so. From this follows a comedy of errors, a criss-cross of engagements made and broken, which, however, never drops into farce. The story is told for the most part in dialogue, which Mr. Cobb handles with surprising dexterity, having a keen eye for the flippancy and the peculiar brand of vulgarity which is the fashion of a West-end drawing-room. Mr. Cobb owes something undoubtedly to Mr. Anthony Hope—the earlier and better Anthony Hope of the Dolly Dialogues. But, then, every writer who succeeds in reproducing the conversation of the drawing-room, with its truncated sentences, in which the point consists in a pause, has learnt the trick from Mr. Hope. It must be said that Mr. Cobb has learnt it well, and adds a deftness in the weaving of a story from trifles which is quite his own.

THE ACADEMY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1898.

GEORGE ALLEN'S NEW BOOKS.

By JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D., D.C.L.
LECTURES ON LANDSCAPE
 given at OXFORD in JANUARY and FEBRUARY, 1871.
 With 20 Plates in Photogravure and 2 in Colour.
These lectures were originally illustrated by means of pictures chosen from the author's private collection, the University Galleries, &c. Twenty-two of them are now reproduced in this volume, including:—Seven unpublished Turners, Seven subjects from the "Liber Studiorum," Two studies by the Author, One Reynolds, One a Lippe Lippi, and One Burne-Jones.
 15 by 11 inches. Buckram, gilt top, £2 2s. net.

MODERN PAINTERS.

A New Cheap Edition, complete in small form. 6 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, £2 2s. net. With the 225 Woodcuts, the One Lithograph, and the 89 Full-Page Illustrations reproduced in Photogravure and Half-Tone. The Text is complete, and includes the "EPILOGUE," written by Mr. Ruskin in 1898.

LABOURERS CLAVIGERA:

Letters to the Labourers and Workmen of Great Britain. A New Cheap Edition, with all the Illustrations. In 4 vols., each with an Index. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. each; roan, gilt edges, 8s. 6d. each.

Roan 8vo, cloth, 5s. each net. Roan, gilt edges, 7s. 6d. each net. Half-parchment, gilt top, 6s. 6d. each net.

LOVE'S MEINIE:

Lectures on Greek and English Birds. With Index.

OUR FATHERS HAVE TOLD US.

Sketches of the History of Christendom. A Small Complete Edition of the Bible of Amiens, with the four Steel Engravings and Plan of the Western Perches of Amiens Cathedral. [Shortly.]

THE ART and the PLEASURES of ENGLAND.

The Course of Lectures delivered at Oxford during 1883 and 1884. A Small Complete Edition. In 1 vol., with Index. [Shortly.]

THE PRINCIPLES of CRITICISM:

An Introduction to the Study of Literature. By W. BASIL WORSFOLD, of University College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 300 pp., buckram, gilt top, 10s. 6d. net.

VOLUME III. of THE LIBRARY SERIES. Edited, with Introductions, by Dr. GARNETT.

LIBRARY ADMINISTRATION.

B. J. MACFARLANE, of the British Museum. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

WELLINGTON: HIS COMRADES and CONTEMPORARIES.

By Major ARTHUR GRIFFITHS. With 13 Photogravure Portraits from the originals in possession of His Grace the Duke of Wellington, 14 other Illustrations, Facsimiles of Letters and 2 Maps. Large imperial 16mo, cloth, gilt top, 12s. 6d. net. Also 100 Special Large Paper Copies, on Arnold paper, with India Proofs of the Plates. Demy 4to, £2 2s. net.

A BOOK of PSALMS.

Rendered into English Verse by the late ARTHUR TREVOR JEBB. With an Introduction by Prof. JEBB. Fcap. 8vo, 210 pages, cloth, 3s. 6d. Singularly pure, smooth, and finished. A valuable addition to my library.—WILLIAM BRAM HOW, late Bishop of Wakefield.

THE BIBLE REFERENCES of JOHN RUSKIN.

Selected (by permission of Mr. Ruskin) and arranged in Alphabetical Order by MARY and ELLEN GIBBS. Crown 8vo, 320 pages, cloth gilt, 6s. net.

THE LITERARY YEAR-BOOK, 1898.

Edited by JOSEPH JACOBS. In addition to the permanent matter brought up to date, this issue contains many new sections; and a Photogravure Frontispiece, the latest Portrait of JOHN RUSKIN, by HOLLYER.

LITERATURE in 1897: a comprehensive Review of the Year's Progress. By the EDITOR.
 SPORT and TRAVEL in 1897: a Review. By F. G. AFLALO.

CRITICISMS in 1897: appreciations of those who have just come to the front. With Portraits.
 BOOKS in 1897: a Selected and Classified List of the chief works published during 1897.

THE ENGLISH ACADEMY.
 LITERARY NEWSPAPERS.
 ANNUALS.
 SERIES.
 RECORD SEARCHERS.

MSS. COLLECTIONS.
 TRADE DISCOUNTS.
 LITERARY RECORDS.
 LITERARY REFERENCE BOOKS.
 NOMS DE PLUME, &c., &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth-designed cover, 352 pp., 3s. 6d.

GEORGE ALLEN, 156, CHANCERY CROSS ROAD, W.C.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: A Critical Study.
 By GEORGE BRANDES.

2 vols., Roxburghe gilt top or buckram uncut, demy 8vo, 24s. net.

THE OUTLOOK.—"Dr. Brandes's work exceeds the promises of its title, for he offers us much more than a critical study of his subject—he reconstitutes the entire social history of the age, sets the poet in his right atmosphere, and does both with remarkable learning and insight. His volumes are a perfect armoury of fact, suggestion, and criticism."

LITERATURES OF THE WORLD. Vol. IV. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A HISTORY OF ITALIAN LITERATURE.

By RICHARD GARNETT, C.B., LL.D.

THE DAILY MAIL.—"Breadth of view, culture, and thoroughness without pedantry characterise this history. We see Italian Literature not merely in its local proportions, but as an influence spreading wide over the literatures of other nations, and most conspicuously, perhaps, over our own."

THE INDIAN FRONTIER WAR.

Being an Account of the Mohmund and Tirah Expeditions, 1897.

By LIONEL JAMES. With 32 Full-page Illustrations from Drawings by the Author and Photographs, and 10 Maps and Plans. 1 vol., 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Monday.]

THE LIFE OF JUDGE JEFFREYS.

By H. B. IRVING, M.A. Oxon.

With 3 Portraits and a Facsimile Letter. 1 vol., 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Tuesday.]

THE WORKERS: An Experiment in Reality.

By WALTER A. WYCKOFF. With Illustrations. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

DREAMERS OF THE GHETTO.

By I. ZANGWILL.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Nearly all these scenes from the Ghetto take the form of stories, and few are examples of the imaginative short story, that fine method of art. The majority are dramatic scenes chosen from the actual life's history of the idealists of Jewry. Thus we have a portrait of Spinoza himself as he lived . . . of Heine on his mattress, of Lassalle, and of Beaconsfield."

THE WAR OF THE WORLDS.

By H. G. WELLS, Author of "The Time Machine."

THE SPECTATOR.—"As a writer of scientific romance, Mr. Wells has never been surpassed. Even when he is most awful there is always something human about his characters. Both Poe and Mr. Wells are followers of Swift, but Mr. Wells keeps nearest to the human side of the author of 'Gulliver.'"

THE MINISTER OF STATE.

By J. A. STEUART, Author of "In the Day of Battle."

THE WORLD.—"The working of character and the power of self-making have rarely been so finely delineated as in this novel, which is nothing that fiction ought not to be, while its qualities place it far above the novels we are accustomed to, even of the higher class. It is dramatic, romantic, and realistic."

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON.

By CHARLES BENHAM.

THE SATURDAY REVIEW.—"A definite attitude to life, the courage of his opinion of human nature, and a biting humour, have enabled Mr. Benham to write a very good novel indeed. The book is worked out thoroughly; the people in it are alive; they are interesting."

THE SCOURGE-STICK.

By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Undeniably powerful and interesting."

THE BROOM OF THE WAR-GOD.

By H. N. BRAILSFORD.

TRUTH.—"All go from the first to the last page. A singularly vivid narrative in the form of a novel of the Græco-Turkish war; every line bears the impress of absolute truthfulness."

ROBERT HICHENS'S NEW BOOK.

THE LONDONERS: An Absurdity.

By ROBERT HICHENS.

[March 29.]

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW EDITION OF W. M. THACKERAY'S WORKS.

To be Issued in Thirteen Monthly Volumes, large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s. each.

THE BIOGRAPHICAL EDITION
OF
W. M. THACKERAY'S
COMPLETE WORKS.

This New and Revised Edition comprises

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL AND HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED LETTERS, SKETCHES, AND DRAWINGS,

Derived from the Author's Original Manuscripts and Note-Books,

AND EACH VOLUME WILL INCLUDE A MEMOIR IN THE FORM OF AN INTRODUCTION, BY

MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE.

VOLUME I., containing "VANITY FAIR," with 20 Full-Page Illustrations, 11 Woodcuts, and Facsimile Letter, and a New Portrait,

WILL BE PUBLISHED ON APRIL 15th.

And a volume will be issued each subsequent month, so that the entire edition will be completed on April 15th, 1898.

** A Prospectus of the Edition, with Specimen Pages, will be sent post free, on application.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY."

On March 20. 15s. net, in cloth; or in half-morocco, marbled edges, 20s. net.
Volume 54 (STANHOPE-STOVIN) of the DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

Vol. 1. was published on January 1, 1885, and a further volume will be issued quarterly until the completion of the Work, which will be effected within two years from the present date.

NOTE.—A full prospectus of the "Dictionary of National Biography," with Specimen Pages, will be sent upon application.

With a Map, post 8vo, 6s.

EGYPT in the NINETEENTH CENTURY; or,

Mehemet Ali and his Successors until the British Occupation in 1882. By DONALD
A. CAMERON, H.B.M.'s Consul at Port Said.

The Saturday Review says: "This is a book which was distinctly wanted. As a book of reference it should prove invaluable to journalists, and as a lucid account of how Egypt became what she was when England took her in hand, it will be instructive to every intelligent reader."

THE CORRESPONDENCE OF A DISTINGUISHED IRISHMAN.

With a Portrait, demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

MR. GREGORY'S LETTER-BOX, 1813-30.

Edited by Lady GREGORY.

From the World.—"Lady Gregory's pages bristle with good stories. Indeed, the great difficulty of a reviewer in dealing with this fascinating book is the plethora of good things that clamour for quotation."

From the Times.—"A gallery of contemporary portraits, full of interest in themselves, and admirably illuminated by the bright comments of the Editor."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF GARDNER'S "HOUSEHOLD MEDICINE."

Now ready. THIRTEENTH EDITION. With numerous Illustrations.
Demy 8vo, 8s. 6d.

GARDNER'S HOUSEHOLD MEDICINE and

SICK-ROOM GUIDE: a Description of the Means of Preserving Health, and the Treatment of Diseases, Injuries, and Emergencies. Revised and expressly Adapted for the Use of Families, Missionaries, and Colonists. By W. H. C. STAVELEY, F.R.C.S. Eng.

NEW NOVEL.

This day is published, crown 8vo, 6s.

A SOLDIER of MANHATTAN, and his Adventures at Ticonderoga and Quebec. By J. A. ALTSHELER, Author of "The Sun of Saratoga."

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO, 15, Waterloo Place.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

NOTES from a DIARY, 1873-1881. By the Rt.

Hon. Sir MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I., Sometime Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, Governor of Madras, 1881-86. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

[Just out.]

"It is difficult to put this most entertaining book down when once the reader has dipped into its pages. For beguiling a dull hour, for reading at odd moments, it were hard to find a better book."—St. James's Budget.

LAW and POLITICS in the MIDDLE AGES.

By EDWARD JENKS, Reader in English Law in the University of Oxford.
Demy 8vo, 12s.

[Just out.]

"By far the most important and original book relating to jurisprudence published for some years in England is Mr. Jenks's 'Law and Politics in the Middle Ages.'"—Times.

"It would be scant praise to say that it is readable and interesting; to the reader who cares at all for the development of ideas, as distinguished from the bare calendar of events, it is brilliant."—Literature.

MEMOIRS of a HIGHLAND LADY (Miss Grant of Rothiemurchus, afterwards Mrs. Smith of Baltiboys, 1707-1885). Edited by Lady STRACHEY. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

[Just out.]

"No more delightful book, and none with the characteristic Highland atmosphere more strongly perceptible in it, has been published for many a long day than the autobiography of Elizabeth Grant....the book is altogether charming."—Glasgow Herald.

"One of the most delightful books that any reader could desire is to be found, somewhat unexpectedly, in the 'Memoirs of a Highland Lady.' As a picture of life in the Highlands at the beginning of the century, and of the way in which girls of good family were then educated, Mrs. Smith's Memoirs are invaluable."—World.

THE STUDENT'S HISTORY of FRANCE. From the Earliest Times to the Fall of the Second Empire in 1870. By W. H. JERVIS, M.A.

A NEW EDITION, thoroughly Revised and in great part Re-written. By ARTHUR HASSALL, Censor of Christ Church, Oxford. With many new Woodcuts, 700 pages, post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

[Just out.]

"At a time when France is the 'cynosure of neighbouring eyes,' this text-book may well find readers outside of schools and colleges."—Academy.

LATER GLEANINGS: Theological and Ecclesiastical. A New Series of Gleanings of Past Years. By the Right Hon. W. E.

GLADSTONE. Second Edition, royal 16mo, 3s. 6d.

[Just out.]

CONTENTS:—The Dawn of Creation and Worship—Proem to Genesis—Robert Eleasers:
the Battle of Belief—Ingersoll on Christianity—The Elizabethan Settlement—Queen Elizabeth and the Church of England—The Church under Henry—Professor Huxley and the Swine Miracle—The Place of Heresy and Schism—True and False Conceptions of the Atonement—The Lord's Day—Ancient Beliefs in a Future State—Soliloquium and Postscript on the Pope and Anglican Orders.

BY SEVERN SEA, and Other Poems. By

T. HERBERT WARREN, President of Magdalen College, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo
7s. 6d. net.

[Just out.]

"Mr. Warren's beautiful and scholarly verses."—Spectator.

"Marked by true poetic feeling."—Literature.

CANON GORE'S NEW WORK.

AN EXPOSITION of the EPISTLE to the

EPHESIANS. By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, Canon of Westminster. Crown 8vo 3s. 6d.

"A new work by Canon Gore is an ecclesiastical event. The book is a popular exposition in the best sense, conveying to the simplest understanding the results of the best modern knowledge of this epistle. The general effect of the book is bracing....Surely no one can read this book without a quickened desire to be a Christian."—Guardian.

"It is a brave and earnest book straight from the heart of an earnest and brave man."
Independent.

BIMETALLISM. A Summary and Examination of the Arguments For and Against a Bimetallic System of Currency. By Major LEONARD DARWIN. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

[Just out.]

"The book is the best contribution to the currency controversy of recent years. It may be read with advantage by the disputants on both sides."—Scotsman.

NEW EDITION (NINTH) of HANDBOOK to

SPAIN. By RICHARD FORD. Thoroughly Revised and Corrected and brought up to date. Index and Dictionary of Hotels, 4 Maps and 55 carefully drawn Plans of Towns and Buildings. 2 vols., 20s.

[Just out.]

NEW and THOROUGHLY REVISED EDITION of HANDBOOK to INDIA and CEYLON. Including BENGAL, BOMBAY, and MADRAS, the PANJAB, NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, RAJPUTANA, &c., the NATIVE STATES and ASSAM. With 55 Maps and Plans of Towns and Buildings (many new). 20s.

[Just out.]

"Of the general arrangement of the book, and the skill with which an immense mass of interesting and valuable material has been crowded into a small space, it would be difficult to speak too highly."—St. James's Gazette.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

Spring Announcements Supplement.

SATURDAY: MARCH 19, 1898.

THE SPRING SEASON.

WHY "SEASONS" AT ALL?

WE make this week a survey of the principal books which have been, or are shortly to be, issued as part of the business of the Publishers' Spring Season. The Spring Season is a period which is variously fixed and measured by different houses. When, after recovery from his Christmas lassitude, a publisher begins to launch another fleet of books—then begins his Spring Season. It may begin in February, March, or April. This year we should be inclined to describe the operations as early and scant. The tendency appears to be to hold over books until the autumn; a conclusion which is forced upon us not only by the lists of announcements we have received, but by direct admissions on the part of some firms. The postponement involved seems a long one. The autumn is far, far away; the skies of another summer are first to be enjoyed.

The question suggests itself: Why are there two definite and limited seasons within which books are issued? Why cannot there be a more equable flow of books all the year round? The disadvantages of the present system are numerous and obvious. To obtain light on this subject a representative of the ACADEMY called this week upon Mr. John Murray, whom he found very willing to express his views on the "season" system. Mr. Murray said:

"I think I can show you that the custom of publishing in the recognised 'seasons' has been brought about inevitably. The point is one which I have often had occasion to explain to authors. The reason is simple: it is a question of the weather."

"Of the weather!"

"Yes. Consider how the English climate has improved of late years, and what the effect has been. Times have utterly changed. The nation has learned to live out of doors, and loves doing so. What has been the effect of the succession of great summer exhibitions at Earl's Court and elsewhere—what has been the effect of bands in the parks—if it has not been to teach people to be less stay-at-home, and to take their pleasures in the open? Then consider the enormous new relish for out-door exercises: bicycling! The increase of locomotion of every kind! It all means that in the fine portions of the year people do not read."

"And, therefore, you do not publish?"

"Exactly. The fact is, the time in which publishing can be profitably done is extremely well defined. We begin, say, in the second week of September. We issue books rapidly up to three weeks before Christmas. There we stop; the children are at home; the shopping and skating and walking season has begun. After Christmas we begin to publish with the meeting of Parliament, and continue doing so until Easter. Easter makes a bad break; we recover a little between Easter and Whitsuntide; after Whitsuntide books languish—the summer has come, and no one reads anything but papers and magazines. In brief, we publish when people are reading, and when they stop reading we stop publishing."

"But you recognise the disadvantages of the system?"

"Oh, yes, and regret them. It can be no advantage to publishers to be issuing books all together; and as publishers increase so does the evil. As you know, it seriously affects reviewing; critics are too idle at one time and too driven at another; and space in papers which could be spared in the summer is not to be had in the autumn. But there is really no remedy. The publishing 'seasons' are the results of the whole manner of life of the nation."

Our representative mentioned the case of a well-known novel which was issued last year in August, and achieved a large commercial success.

"Yes; of course a book that for any reason can command public attention is superior to these laws. But such books are rare. And I may tell you that public events can extinguish temporarily the chances of the best conceivable book. I remember that when Livingstone's fame was at its highest we had printed an edition of 10,000 copies of one of his books: to print such an edition was a mere matter of course. The day for publication was fixed; and the rush of the public for the book was assured. Suddenly, a political crisis arose: a General Election became imminent, and we had to postpone issuing the book for months. Such was the effect of a single event. But the quietly-developed, out-door habits of the people which have declared themselves of late years are a far more potent factor. They delay many books: more, they dictate the seasons in which all—or nearly all—books shall be published."

Our representative called next at Mr. Heinemann's, where he had another conversation, and received confirmation of Mr. Murray's view. "Do you," he asked, "think that there is a tendency to make the Autumn Season swallow the Spring Season?"

"I think there is a certain tendency that way. But you must not suppose that the Spring Season has any right to claim equality with the Autumn Season. It is often only supplemental to the Autumn Season, which is, always has been, and always will be, the great book-buying season of the year."

"Then other things being the same, you think the Autumn is the best time to publish a book?"

"I won't say that without qualification. It is the best time to publish all kinds of more or less ornamental or ephemeral books; but I hold that where literature of value is concerned it is a sound principle to publish a book when it is ready. A book of literary importance will be as acceptable to the public at one time as another. For example, we had hoped, quite hoped, to publish Dr. George Brandes' Study of Shakespeare last October. But it was not ready, and we held it over. We have now just issued it."

"And you do not regret the delay?"

"So far as the sale of the books goes, certainly not; it comes to the same thing."

"But you would not publish even this book in, say, July?"

"No, not in July or August. Those months are impossible."

"But last year, did you not publish Mr. Hall Caine's Christian in August, quite out of any season, and with conspicuous success?"

"Yes; and two years ago we published The Manxman, in August too. But these books were fiction. The public can do with a good novel, you know, at the sea-side."

"Then, finally, you do not approve the minimisation of the Spring Season which is alleged to be going on?"

"Not if it means the postponement to the Autumn of books of serious literary value. For these the Spring Season is as good as the Autumn Season. It is a pity to crowd new books into one season, or to too closely define either season."

PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

JOHN MURRAY.

THE definitive edition of Byron's works and letters, so long promised, can at last be sighted on the literary horizon. The poetry is being edited by Mr. Ernest Hartley Coleridge, the letters by Mr. Rowland E. Prothero; and the Earl of Lovelace, the poet's grandson, co-operates in the arrangement of the work, which will be issued in twelve volumes. The first two volumes will shortly appear, and it is hoped that the other ten will follow at brief intervals. A limited édition de luxe, crown quarto, with a large number of illustrations, will also be published.

Another important work is Prof. William J. Knapp's Life, Writings, and Correspondence of George Borrow. This is to be the great biography of Borrow, and it will be welcomed. Prof. Knapp has spent many years in searching out and collecting correspondence, documents, and facts connected with the life of George Borrow, and in visiting the scenes and places described by him. The public will now have laid before them an authoritative account of the author of The Bible in Spain.

A literary biography of interest will be Mr. John A. Doyle's Memoir and Correspondence of Susan Ferrier, the author of Marriage, Destiny, and other novels. The work will be based on Miss Ferrier's private correspondence.

Mr. H. Warrington Smith will issue, through Mr. Murray, a travel book entitled Five Years in Siam. This will be a record of journeys up and down that curious country, and of life among its people from 1891 to 1896.

In the last few weeks Mr. Murray has published:

A Flower Hunter in Queensland. By Mrs. Rowan.

Korea and Her Neighbours. By Mrs. Bishop.

Law and Politics in the Middle Ages. By Edward Jenks.

Memoirs of a Highland Lady. By Lady Strachey.

The Student's History of France. By W. H. Jervis, M.A. This is a new edition, revised and partly re-written—as we explained in a note a fortnight ago—by Mr. Arthur Hassall.

MACMILLAN & CO.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN'S Spring list is not a long one. Still, books of importance are being issued by Messrs. Macmillan at all times of the year, and their present list contains volumes well worthy of mention.

In biography and history, Messrs. Macmillan will shortly issue the following:

History of the Society of Dilettanti. Compiled by Lionel Cust, M.A., Director of the National Portrait Gallery, and edited by Sidney Colvin, M.A.

The Emperor Hadrian. A picture of the Romano-Hellenic world in his time. By Ferdinand Gregorovius. Translated by Mary Robinson.

Britain's Naval Power. Part II. By Hamilton Williams, M.A. Mr. Williams is instructor in English literature to Naval Cadets on H.M.S. Britannia.

Henry of Guise and other Portraits. By H. C. Macdowall.

In general literature this house announces: Harry Druidale, Fisherman from Manxland to England. By Henry Cadman. Mr. Cadman is the late president of the Yorkshire Anglers' Association.

Early English Literature: To the Accession of King Alfred. By Stoughton A. Brooke.

Divine Immanence: An Essay on the Spiritual Significance of Matter. By J. R. Illingworth, M.A.

Some classical works are in Messrs. Macmillan's list:—Parnassus Library of Greek and Latin Texts: Aeschylus, edited by Prof. Lewis Campbell; and The Attitude of the Greek Tragedians toward Art, by John H. Huddleston.

A dozen scientific works are also announced, the most important being a reprint of The Scientific Papers of Thomas Henry Huxley. These papers, gathered from the journals of scientific societies, have been edited by Prof. Michael Foster and Prof. E. Ray Lankester. They will appear in four volumes, which will be sold in sets only. Messrs. Macmillan will also issue a second edition of Mrs. Bernard Bosanquet's Rich and Poor.

The issue of the volumes of "The Eversley Bible" goes on regularly. The seventh volume will be issued shortly.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

MESSRS. LONGMANS' most important enterprise at present is an edition of the works of the Rt. Hon. Prof. F. Max Müller. The issue of the volumes will begin at once, and they will appear monthly at a uniform price of five shillings. The first three will contain Prof. Müller's Gifford Lectures, delivered before the University of Glasgow in 1888, 1890, and 1891. These will be entitled: Natural Religion, Physical Religion, and Anthropological Religion.

Messrs. Longmans have also in preparation another book by Lady Newdigate, The Cheverels of Cheverel Manor, illustrated with family portraits.

For the rest, Messrs. Longmans are so far in advance of their list that we can only remark that it has been a good list. Since Christmas there have been issued from this house the following works:

Drake and the Tudor Navy. With a History of the Rise of England as a Maritime Power. By Julian Corbett.

The Life of Francis Place, 1771-1854. By Graham Wallas, M.A., Lecturer at the London School of Economics and Political Science.

Auld Lang Syne. By the Right Hon. Prof. F. Max Müller.

A Bibliography of British Municipal History, including Guilds and Parliamentary Representation. By Charles Goss.

A Memoir of Major-General Sir Henry Creswicke Rawlinson, Bart. By George Rawlinson.

Shrewsbury: a Romance. By Stanley J. Weyman.

The Sundering Flood: a Romance. By William Morris.

Weeping Ferry, and Other Stories. By Margaret L. Woods.

Allegories. By the Very Rev. Frederic W. Farrar, D.D., Dean of Canterbury.

Two military and two religious works are announced by Messrs. Longmans as "nearly ready":

The Story of the Malakand Field Force. By Lieut. Winston Spencer Churchill.

The Life of General Sir Richard Meade, K.C.S.I., C.I.E. By Thomas H. Thornton.

Some Words of St. Paul. By Henry Parry Liddon, D.D., late Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's.

"Behold the Man!" Addresses upon the Seven Words from the Cross. By the Rev. George Brett, M.A.

METHUEN & CO.

MESSRS. METHUEN have a strong list, particularly in books of travel which have also a political interest. In our present issue we notice, for example, Lieutenant S. Vandeleur's Campaigning on the Upper Nile and Niger, and Mr. Lionel Declé's Three Years in Savage Africa. These books are to be followed by The Niger Sources, from the pen of the man who is probably the best qualified in the world to deal with the subject, Colonel J. Trotter. Two other works of similar interest and importance, Prince Henri of Orleans' From Tonkin to India, and Mr. Michael Davitt's Life and

Progress in Australasia, have already been issued by Messrs. Methuen. They are also ahead of their list in respect of Mr. E. V. Zenker's Anarchism and Mr. Grinling's History of the Great Northern Railway—both works having recently appeared.

The most interesting of Messrs. Methuen's announcements which remains to be fulfilled is an edition of The Poems of Shakespeare, edited by Mr. George Wyndham, M.P., whose introduction to Mr. Nutt's edition of North's Plutarch will be remembered as a fine piece of work. This edition contains the "Venus," the "Lucrece," and the "Sonnets," and is prefaced with an elaborate introduction of over 140 pages. The text is founded on the first quartos, with an endeavour to retain the original reading. A set of notes deals with the problems of Date, the Rival Poets, Typography, and Punctuation; and the editor has commented on obscure passages in the light of contemporary works.

In fiction Messrs. Methuen have already done well: Simon Dale, by Anthony Hope, and The Vintage, by E. F. Benson, being to their credit on the bookstalls. They announce:

Bijli the Dancer. By J. B. Patton. The scenes are laid on the Ganges.

Cross Trails. By Victor Waite. A romance founded on a search for a lost Spanish treasure-ship.

Miss Erin. By M. E. Francis. The heroine is the penniless daughter of one of the leaders of the Irish rising in 1848. She becomes an heiress and is wooed by an English Conservative Member of Parliament; hence the story turns on the struggle of love and principle.

The Philanthropist. By Lucy Maynard, a new writer.

CLARENDON PRESS.

THE Clarendon Press has in store some works of great interest to students of English literature and the English language. Among these the following should be noted:

Dryden's Critical Essays. Edited by W. P. Ker, M.A.

The Works of Molière, in the series of "Oxford Texts," and in miniature.

A Summary Catalogue of Bodleian MSS. Vol. VI. By F. Madan, M.A.

Dictionary of Proper Names and Notable Matters in the Works of Dante. By Paget Toynbee, M.A.

A Catalogue of the Antiquities in the Cyprus Museum. By J. L. Myers, M.A., and M. Ohnefalsch Richter, Ph.D. With illustrations, &c.

Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, Supplement. By T. N. Toller, M.A.

A New English Dictionary, founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society. Portions of G, by Henry Bradley, M.A.; and of H, by James A. H. Murray, M.A., LL.D.

King Alfred's Old-English Translation of Boethius' "De Consolatione Philosophiae". By W. J. Sedgefield, M.A.

King Horn. Edited by Joseph Hall, M.A.

A New English Grammar, Logical and Historical. Vol. II.: Syntax. By Henry Sweet, M.A.

Among other books in active preparation at the Clarendon Press may be mentioned the following:

Nouum Testamentum Domini Nostri Iesu Christi Latine, secundum Editionem S. Hieronymi, ad Codd. MSS. fidem recensuit I. Wordsworth, S.T.P., Episcopus Sarisburiensis; in operis societatem adsumto H. I. White, A.M. Partis I. Fasc. V. (completing Vol. I.).

The Politics of Aristotle. Edited by W. L. Newman, M.A. Vols. III. and IV. (completing the work).

Thesaurus Syriacus. Edidit R. Payne Smith, S.T.P. Fasc. X., Pars II.

An Abridged Syriac Lexicon. By Mrs. Margoliouth. Part II.

A Dictionary of Vernacular Syriac. By A. J. Maclean, M.A.

A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament. Based on the Lexicon of Gesenius; as translated by E. Robinson. Edited by Francis Brown, D.D., S. R. Driver, D.D., and C. A. Briggs, D.D. Part VII.

Gesenius' Hebrew Grammar. As edited and enlarged by E. Kautzsch. Translated from the twenty-fifth German edition by the late Rev. G. W. Collins, M.A. The translation revised and adjusted to the twenty-sixth edition by A. E. Cowley, M.A.

Essays on Secondary Education. Edited by Christopher Cookson, M.A.

Sir G. C. Lewis's Use and Abuse of Political Terms. Edited by Thomas Raleigh, D.C.L.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THIS establishment has the following books in the press:

Borough and Township. Being the Ford Lectures delivered in the University of Oxford in the Michaelmas Term, 1897, by F. W. Maitland, LL.D.

The Syriac Version of the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius. Edited by William Wright, LL.D.

A Treatise on Universal Algebra. With applications by A. N. Whitehead, M.A.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES: An Essay on Western Civilisation in its Economic Aspects (Ancient Times). By W. Cunningham, D.D.

CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS (Biological Series)—Fossil Plants: A Manual for Students of Botany and Geology. By A. C. Seward, M.A., F.G.S.

Vertebrate Paleontology. By A. S. Woodward, M.A.

The Monroe Doctrine. By W. F. Redlaway, B.A.

Collected Mathematical Papers of the late Prof. Arthur Cayley, Sc.D., F.R.S. Index to the whole thirteen volumes.

WM. BLACKWOOD & SON.

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD'S Spring announcements consist chiefly of books of History, Biography, and Travel. Here are a few of the more striking items in a good list:

The Diary of a Sun Seeker. By G. W. Stevens.

Side Lights on Siberia. By J. Y. Simpson.

The Saving of Ireland. By Sir George Baden Powell.

Adventures of the Comte de la Muette during the Reign of Terror. By Bernard Capes.

Millais and His Works. By W. M. Spielmann.

The Invasion of the Crimea. (An abridgement.) By A. W. Kinglake.

A Popular Manual of Finance. By Sydney J. Murray.

Several of the above works have already been issued. Mr. Stevens's Diary of a Sun Seeker will be a reprint of the articles he is sending from Egypt to the Daily Mail. The Invasion of the Crimea is an abridgment of Kinglake's Crimea for military students, and covers the history of the war from its commencement down to the death of Lord Raglan.

WILLIAM HEINEMANN.

MR. HEINEMANN can be depended on for a strong list, be the season what it may. He announces the following works:

The Indian Frontier War. By Lionel James. This is an account of the Mohmund and Tirah Expeditions 1897. The book contains thirty-two full-page illustrations from drawings by the author and photographs, besides plans and maps. In one volume.

A translation of Histoire Politique de l'Europe Contemporaine. Evolution des partis et des formes politiques 1814-1896. By C. Seignobos.

A translation of Essai de Sémantique (Science des significations). By Michel Bréal.

The Life of Judge Jeffreys. By H. B. Irving, M.A., Oxon. With three portraits and facsimile of a letter.

The Palmy Days of Nance Oldfield. By Edward Robins. With twelve illustrations.

The Second Volume of Byron's Works. Edited by W. E. Henley. Being Poems, Vol. I. containing "Hours of Idleness," "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers" and "Childe Harold." With notes by the Editor.

In the "Literatures of the World" Series: Vol. IV., A Short History of Italian Literature, by Richard Garnett, C.B., LL.D.; and Vol. V., A Short History of Spanish Literature, by J. Fitzmaurice-Kelly.

In the "Great Educators" Series: Vol. VIII., Horace Mann and the Common School Revival in the United States. By B. A. Hinsdale, Ph.D., LL.D.

Catherine Sforza: a Study. By Count Pasolini. Adapted from the Italian by Paul Sylvester. With illustrations.

Robert, Earl Nugent: a Memoir. By Clauo Nugent. With portraits, &c.

A new and enlarged edition of Mr. Whistler's Gentle Art of Making Enemies. With portraits.

Lonely Lives: a Play. By Gerhart Hauptmann. Translated by Mary Morison.

A selection from the Poems of Wilfrid Seawen Blunt. With an introduction by W. E. Henley.

In Fiction Mr. Heinemann is issuing the following works:

Dreamers of the Ghetto. By I. Zangwill. This work was published on Wednesday.

The Londoners: an Absurdity. By Robert Hichens.

The House of Hidden Treasure. By Maxwell Gray.

King Circumstance. A Volume of Short Stories by Edwin Pugh. The promise shown by Mr. Pugh in his Man of Straw gives interest to this and the next announcement.

Tony Drum: a Cockney Boy. By Edwin Pugh.

The Dull Miss Archinard. By Anne D. Sedgwick.

The Open Boat. A Volume of Short Stories by Stephen Crane.

The Lake of Wine. By Bernard Capes.

A Champion in the Seventies. By Edith A. Barnett.

Ezekiel's Sin. By J. H. Pearce.

A translation of D'Annunzio's Il Piacere. By Georgina Harding. Several readers of Miss Harding's Triumph of Death expressed the hope that she would translate Il Piacere.

The Drones must Die. By Max Nordau.

A Romance of the First Consul. By Matilda Malling.

The Old Adam and the New Eve. By Rudolf Golm.

Absalom's Hair and A Painful Memory. By Björnstjerne Björnson.

Boule de Suif. Translated from the French of Guy de Maupassant. With fifty-eight illustrations by François Thévenot.

T. FISHER UNWIN.

MR. UNWIN'S Spring list is strong in Travel Books and Guides. The following will shortly be issued by him:

Through Unknown Tibet. By Captain M. S. Wellby, 18th Hussars. Prior to Captain Wellby and Lieutenant Malcolm no one had attempted the exploration of Northern Tibet. The explorers aimed at discovering the source of Chu Ma, and learning something of the weak administration of the Chinese Government. They accomplished their journey from Leh to Peking with success, after being about four months at an elevation of 16,000 feet above the level of the sea. Captain Wellby's book will contain over sixty full-page and smaller illustrations, besides maps, appendices, &c.

Across the Sub-Arctic of Canada: 3,200 Miles by Canoe and Snowshoe through the Barren Lands. By J. W. Tyrrell, C.E.

British Guiana; or, Work and Wanderings Among the Creoles and Coolies, the Africans and Indians of the Wild Country. By the Rev. L. Crookall.

Paris-Parisien: a Complete Guide to Paris, containing the following sections: I.—What to See. II.—What to Know. III.—Parisian Ways. IV.—Practical Paris.

Saunterings in Florence. By E. Grifi. This is a new handbook for English and American tourists.

All the above works, with the exception of the Paris guide, will be illustrated.

Among books of more purely literary interest Mr. Unwin announces:

Memorials of an Eighteenth Century Painter (James Northcote). By Stephen Gwynn. This work will be fully illustrated with photogravures, &c., and it may be expected to contain much pleasant literary gossip connected with Hazlitt and other writers.

Brunetière's Essays in French Literature. A selection, translated by D. Nichol Smith, with a preface by the author, specially written for this, the authorised English translation.

Proverbs, Maxims, and Phrases of all Ages. Classified subjectively, and arranged alphabetically.

Shelley: a Monograph. By Dr. Guido Biagi.

Mr. Unwin has joined the "Waverley" branch of publishing, for it is a branch in itself. Undeterred by the many new editions of Scott's novels now in the market, Mr. Unwin is about to launch his "Century Edition" of Scott's works. Each novel will be complete in one volume, and have a colotype frontispiece, a book-plate and ornamental title, and devices in red and black, but no editorial matter. The set will be completed in 25 vols., of which the first eight are now ready.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO.

Most of the books announced for the Spring by this firm have already been issued. This is the case with Mr. W. A. Lindsay's work on Her Majesty's Household, 1837-97, Miss Clara Bell's translation of Huysmans' novel, La Cathédrale, and the new edition of Mr. Austin Dobson's William Hogarth.

Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. give prominence to their new and completed edition of The Book of the Dead, edited by Mr. E. A. Wallis, Keeper of the Egyptian and Assyrian departments in the British Museum. The work will be divided into three volumes, of which the third only—containing the translation—will be sold separately. The contents of the volumes will be as follows:

Vol. I.—The Complete Egyptian Texts of the Theban Recension of The Book of the Dead, printed in hieroglyphic type.

Vol. II.—A Complete Vocabulary to The Book of the Dead, containing over 35,000 references.

Vol. III.—An English translation of the Theban Recension of The Book of the Dead, with an introduction containing chapters on the history, object and contents of the book; the Resurrection; the Judgment; the Elysian Fields; the Magic of The Book of the Dead, &c. This volume is illustrated by three large facsimiles of sections of papyri, printed in full colours, and eighteen plates illustrating the paleography of the various recensions of The Book of the Dead from B.C. 3,500 to A.D. 200.

Another work important to scholars, and even more closely connected with the British Museum, is being issued by this firm. It is An Index to the Early Printed Books in the British Museum. The work is divided into four parts, of which the first, dealing with early German books, has just been issued. In the succeeding parts the books of France, the Netherlands, England, and Spain will be catalogued.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS issue a good list. Lovers of Walt Whitman will welcome a series of letters written by the poet from the hospitals in Washington during the war of the Rebellion. These reveal a very tender and attractive side of Walt Whitman's character, and they will bear the title, The Wound-Dresser.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS announce that they have in preparation, and will shortly issue, the third volume in the series comprising the University Lectures on Religions delivered in America. This volume is to be entitled Jewish Religious Life after the Exile, and has been prepared by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, D.D., Canon of Rochester, and Oriel Professor at Oxford of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture. The volume will deal with the following subjects: "Religious Life in Judæa before the Arrival of Nehemiah"; "Nehemiah, Ezra, and Manasseh"; "Jewish Religious Ideals"; "Jewish Wisdom: its Meaning, its Object, and Varieties"; "Orthodox and Heretical Wisdom"; "The Power of Judaism in attracting Foreigners; its Higher Theology; its Relation to Greece, Persia, and Babylon."

The following works of fiction are in Messrs. Putnam's Sons' list:

Lorraine: A Romance. By Robert W. Chambers.

Beleaguered: A Story of the Uplands of Baden. By Herman T. Koerner.

Lost Man's Lane. By Anna Katherine Green.

Messrs. Putnam's list contains many works of American history and biography.

CASSELL & CO.

MESSRS. CASSELL announce, with particulars, three new novels by Mr. Max Pemberton, Mr. E. W. Hornung, and Mr. Headon Hill. A Woman of Kronstadt, Mr. Pemberton's novel, is a love story, and treats of the fortunes of an English girl, Marian Best, who was sometime governess to the children of General Stefanovitch in Kronstadt, and of her attempts to steal the plans of the fortress. Mr. E. W. Hornung's story, Young Blood, has to do with modern financial villainy, and a love element is not wanting. Mr. Headon Hill's story, Spectre Gold, is one of adventure in the wild North-West, with Klondike in the foreground. The story is dated in the year before the first rush down the Yukon.

Messrs. Cassell's "Century Science Series" will include Michael Faraday; His Life and Work. By Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.

WARD, LOCK & CO.

MESSRS. WARD, LOCK & CO. have an attractive list, chiefly composed of fiction.

Mr. George Giffen's cricket-book, With Bat and Ball, has already been issued, and is noticed in another column of our present issue.

Cryptography; or, the History, Principles, and Practice of Cypher Writing, by Mr. F. W. Hulme, will be issued by this firm immediately.

The following are Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.'s novels:

An Italian Fortune Hunter. By B. D. De Tassinari.

Countess Petrovski. By "Orme Agnus."

The Lust of Hate. By Guy Boothby.

Pasquinado. By J. S. Fletcher.

As a Man Lives. By E. Phillips-Oppenheim.

The Datchet Diamonds. By Richard Marsh.

For the Rebel Cause. By Archer P. Crouch.

A Stolen Life. By M. McDonnell Bodkin, Q.C.

Sir Tristram. By Thorold Ashley.

In addition to the above, Messrs. Ward Lock will have ready shortly a new book by Mr. Ernest E. Williams, the author of Made in Germany, entitled Marching Backward: a treatise on the question of the increased foreign competition from which certain of our home industries are suffering.

GEORGE REDWAY.

MR. GEORGE REDWAY announces three biographies for publication this Spring:

The Reminiscences of Miss M. E. Betham Edwards. This lady's novels have always been so popular, and who enjoyed the friendship of George Eliot, and of many others who have made a name during this century.

A Life of the late James Hain Friswell, author of The Gentle Life and other books which were widely read some few years ago.

A Memoir of John Herand, in which will appear a number of letters from Robert Southey, poet laureate, which have not previously been printed. Mr. Herand led the crusade against the Patent Theatres Act, which threatened to destroy the vitality of the drama in England.

The Rev. W. Connor Sydney has completed an important work, entitled The Early Days of the Nineteenth Century, dealing with the social condition of England, on the same lines as he adopted in his previous work, The Social Life of the Eighteenth Century.

GEORGE BELL & SONS.

MESSRS. BELL'S list is strong, as usual, in works dealing with Art. An interesting book should be Sir Wyke Bayliss's Rex Regum. This is a study of the likenesses of Christ from the time of the Apostles down to the present day. The book will, of course, owe much of its interest to its illustrations. These have been taken direct from the original paintings.

Another illustrated art book to be issued by this firm is The Royal Gallery at Hampton Court, by Mr. Ernest Law. It consists of an illustrated historical catalogue of the pictures in the Queen's collection in that Palace, with descriptive, biographical, and critical notes. The work is enlarged from the earlier edition, and will contain one hundred plates.

Interludes is the title under which Messrs. Bell will issue six popular lectures on musical subjects that were delivered by the late Mr. Henry C. Bannister. These have been collected and edited by Mr. Stewart

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW WORK BY MR. MACKENZIE BELL.

This is, in effect, the authorised Life of the Poetess, being based largely on information and letters supplied by her relatives and intimate friends.

A THIRD EDITION IS NOW READY.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles, extra cloth, price 12s.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI: a Biographical and Critical Study. By MACKENZIE BELL, Author of "Spring's Immortality, and other Poems," "Charles Whitehead: a Biographical and Critical Monograph," &c.

"It is natural there should be a demand for a life of so true a poet as the late Christina Rossetti, she was such a beautiful character and made so deep an impression upon her friends that any authentic record of her must be worth reading."—Times.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MAJESTY.

SIXTY-SEVENTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

Now ready, in 1 vol., royal 8vo, with the Arms beautifully engraved, extra cloth, gilt edges, price 31s. 6d.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1898. Corrected by the Nobility.

"This handsome volume, which is published under the patronage of the Queen, is profusely illustrated with coats of arms, it is well known and universally trusted, and we may add, well bound and well printed."—Times, January 6, 1898.

"No pains have been spared to make the work authentic and accurate in every detail."—Globe, January 11, 1898.

NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.

MERESIA. By Winifred Graham, Author of "A Strange Solution," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CAPRICE OF JULIA. By Lewis Sergeant. Now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"In reading 'The Caprice of Julia' one is especially struck by the excellence of the style; it is at once easy, flowing, and, in phrase and tone, eminently characteristic of the supposed autobiographer, the admiring young gentleman who is made to feel most keenly the caprices of Julia." Altogether the novel, being freshly and agreeably written, is sure to find admirers."—Globe.

A STORM-RENT SKY. Scenes of Love and Revolution. By M. BETHAM-EDWARDS, Author of "Kitty," "Dr. Jacob," "Brother Gabriel," &c. Second Edition now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This a story of the woodlanders of the Champagne country of France in the days of the great Revolution. 'A Storm-Rent Sky' is an interesting novel."—Glasgow Herald.

"The humours of Prudent help to brighten a tale which will rank among Miss Betham-Edwards's most successful creations."—Globe.

A LOW-BORN LASS. By Mrs. Herbert Martin, Author of "Gentleman George," "Britomart," &c. Now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"The story is realistic perhaps, but its realism is none the less true in that it eschews crackling."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The story is written with a vigour and go which make it well worth reading."—Black and White.

YOUNG NIN. By F. W. Robinson, Author of "Grandmother's Money," &c. Third Edition now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

UNSET. By Beatrice Whitby, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," &c. Fourth Edition now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

MISS BETTY'S MISTAKE. By Adeline Sergeant. Author of "The Claim of Anthony Lockhart," "Cespar Brooke's Daughter," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready next week.]

HURST & BLACKETT'S

HALF-CROWN SERIES IN RED CLOTH. NEW ADDITIONS.

THE LIFE OF MARIE ANTOINETTE. By Charles DUKE YONGE.

THE CRESCENT AND THE CROSS. By Eliot Warburton

THE OLD COURT SUBURB. By Leigh Hunt.

DELE. By Julia Kavanagh.

ATHALIE. By Julia Kavanagh.

T. OLAVE'S. By the Author of "Janita's Cross."

IN THE SCENT. By Lady Margaret Majendie.

RANDMOTHER'S MONEY. By F. W. Robinson.

DAM GRAEME OF MOSSGRAY. By Mrs. Oliphant.

BARBARA'S HISTORY. By Amelia B. Edwards.

THE LAIRD OF NORLAW. By Mrs. Oliphant.

HE WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS. By Mrs. Oliphant.

GNES. By Mrs. Oliphant.

O CHURCH. By F. W. Robinson.

ORD BRACKENBURY. By Amelia B. Edwards, LL.D.

ROSE IN JUNE. By Mrs. Oliphant.

HOEBE, JUNIOR. By Mrs. Oliphant.

THROUGH THE LONG NIGHT. By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.

LIFE OF THE REV. EDWARD IRVING. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

MARGARET AND HER BRIDESMAIDS. By the Author of "The Valley of a Hundred Fires."

THE VALLEY OF A HUNDRED FIRES. By the Author of "Margaret and Her Bridesmaids."

HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.

SIR CHARLES A. GORDON, K.C.B.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THIRTY-NINE YEARS IN THE ARMY:

Gwailor and the Battle of Maberajpore, 1843. The Gold Coast Africa, 1847-48. The Indian Mutiny, 1857-58. The Expedition in China, 1860-61. The Siege of Paris, 1870-71, &c.

By SIR CHARLES A. GORDON, K.C.B. 12s.

BROWN MEN AND WOMEN;

Or, the South Sea Islands in 1895 and 1896.

By EDWARD REEVES.

With Map, Music, and 60 fine Illustrations from new Photographs, 10s. 6d.

A bright and graphic account of Polynesia as it is to-day. The Islands visited were: The Friendly Islands—Tonga—Samoa—The Fijian Group—The Cook Group—The Society Islands. A Special Chapter on Missionaries.

NEW NOVELS.

THE ROMANCE of a NAUTCH GIRL. By Mrs. Frank PENNY, Author of "Caste and Creed," 6s.

The scene is laid in Southern India, and the book depicts native and European life and character. The plot turns upon the disappearance of an Englishman who has mixed himself up with a devil-dancing function.

FOR the LIFE of OTHERS. By G. Cardella. Second Edition, 6s.

"For a long time there has issued from the Press nothing in our creative literature more perfect in its way."—Birmingham Post. "Essentially a masterpiece. The best novel that has appeared since the spring."—Book Gazette. "Of absorbing interest throughout."—Glasgow Herald. "One of the most notable novels we have lately met."—Bookseller. "Deeply interesting and stimulating."—Pall Mall Gazette.

ST. KEVIN, and other IRISH TALES. By R. D. ROGERS, 6s.

"For a simple, old-fashioned fun there is plenty in the book."—Times. "Irish stories of the good old, trusted kind, of which Priests and Peasantry, Potatoes and Purgatory are the chief ingredients."—Birmingham Post.

DEAD MEN'S TALES. By Charles Junor. Picture Boards, 2s. A Collection of powerful Australian Stories.

"There is life, strong and insistent, but there is no morality in his pages, and the hunt for gold out in the wastes, and the contrivances for it in the cities, afford ample scope for the author's peculiar talents."—Literary World.

DICTIONARY OF QUOTATIONS. In 2 Parts.

(1.) ENGLISH. By Colonel P. H. Dalbiac, M.P. Second Edition, pp. 516, 7s. 6d.

(2.) CLASSICAL (Latin and Greek), with English Translations. By T. B. HARBOTTLE. Pp. 656, 7s. 6d.

Both fully Indexed under Catchwords, Subjects, and Authors.

"It is the highest commendation to say that Mr. Harbottle has produced a volume in every way worthy to follow the English one. Its range over the Greek and Latin authors is remarkably complete; accuracy has been well studied, and the English translation is always given, where possible, from some standard work."—Pall Mall Gazette. "Equal to its predecessor in fulness, accuracy, thoughtful arrangement, and general convenience."—Birmingham Post.

By PROFESSOR HENRY SIDGWICK.

PRACTICAL ETHICS. By H. Sidgwick, Lit.D., Knights-bridge Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Cambridge. 4s. 6d.

"His treatment is, as usual, able, thorough, and extremely fair. Practical enough to be intensely interesting."—Pall Mall Gazette.

ETHICAL SYSTEMS (Ethics, Vol. II). By Professor W. WUNDT, 6s.

The First Volume, THE FACTS of the MORAL LIFE (7s. 6d.), has already been published; and the Third and Concluding Volume, THE PRINCIPLES of MORALITY and of the SPHERE of their VALIDITY (7s. 6d.), will be published this year.

"We strongly recommend all students of ethics to study this able and luminous sketch of the development of the science."—University Correspondent.

INTRODUCTION to PHILOSOPHY: a Handbook for Students of Psychology, Logic, Ethics, Aesthetics, and General Philosophy. By Professor KULPE. Translated by W. P. PILLSBURY and Professor E. B. TITCHENER. 6s.

THE APPLICATION of PSYCHOLOGY to the SCIENCE of EDUCATION. By J. F. HERBERT. Translated, with Notes and an Introduction to the Study of Herbert (125 pp.), by BEATRICE C. MULLINER, B.A. Lond., Lecturer at the Ladies' College, Cheltenham. Preface by DOROTHEA BEALE; and a Glossary, Index, Diagrams, and 5 Plates. 4s. 6d.

PORT-ROYAL EDUCATION: Saint-Cyran, Arnauld, Lancelot, Nicole, De Sacy, Guyot, Constel, Fontaine, Jacqueline Pascal. Extracts, with an Introduction, by FELIX CADET, Inspector-General of Public Instruction. Translated by A. D. JONES. 4s. 6d.

WHIST of the FUTURE: a Forecast submitting Defects in existing Whist Laws. Containing Arguments against the American Leads being applicable to Strong Hands and Weak Hands alike. By Lieut.-Col. LOWSLEY, R.E. 3s. 6d.

By DR. ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE.

VACCINATION a DELUSION: its Penal Enforcement a Crime, proved from the Evidence of the Royal Commission. With 12 folding Diagrams, 1s.

MARBERT: a Drama without Stage or Scenery, Wrought out through Song in many Metres, mostly Lyrical. By WILLIAM MARSHALL. Pp. vi.-359, 5s.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO, LIMITED, London.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF WILLIAM JOHN BUTLER,

Late Dean of Lincoln, and sometime Vicar of Wantage.

With Portraits.

Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

GUARDIAN.—"In this book we are brought into contact with a good man, and are enabled to realise something of one of the most effective influences that have moulded the practical life of the Church in our time. . . . The book is not too long for the importance of its subject, nor too short for interest, and it will form a valuable 'document' for future historians of the English Church in the latter part of the nineteenth century."

FRAZERS' PAUSANIAS:

DESCRIPTION of GREECE. Translated, with Commentary, by J. G. FRAZER, M.A., LL.D. Illustrated. 6 vols., 8vo, Six Guineas net.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"It is practically an encyclopaedia of all that has been done by the pen, the pick-axe, and the spade to illuminate the religion, the topography, and the history of Greece. To every classical library it is simply indispensable."

RE-ISSUE IN TEN MONTHLY PARTS.
PART I. NOW READY.

CAMBRIDGE DESCRIBED and

ILLUSTRATED. Being a Short History of the Town and University. By THOMAS DINHAM ATKINSON, and an Introduction by JOHN WILLIS CLARK, M.A., F.S.A., Registrar of the University. 8vo, sewed, 2s. net each Part. (Subscriptions received only for the whole work.)

Foreign Statesmen Series.

Edited by Professor BURY, Trinity College,
Dublin.

MIRABEAU. By P. F. Willert,

M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Exeter College,
Oxford. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

REASON and FAITH: a Reverie. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVEL BY ROLF BOLDREWOOD.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

PLAIN LIVING: a Bush Idyll.

By ROLF BOLDREWOOD, Author of "Robbery under Arms," "The Miner's Right," &c.

WORLD.—"Once more the leading Australian novelist proves himself a prince of story-tellers."

ACADEMY.—"A hearty story deriving charm from the odours of the bush, and the blessing of incalculable sheep."

DAILY MAIL.—"One of the lightest, brightest, and most social of stories."

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "PALLADIA."

A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

By Mrs. HUGH FRASER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"An amusing, a laughable story, told in the highest of high spirits, almost boisterously. . . . The story abounds with humour. . . . We can safely promise a pleasant hour or two to the readers of 'A Chapter of Accidents.'"

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

JOHN LANE'S LIST.

NOW READY.

FOUR LETTERS to FRANCE. By EMILE ZOLA. With an Introduction by L. F. AUSTIN. CONTENTS:—I. To the Youth of France—II. To France—III. To M. Felix Faure, the President—IV. To the Minister of War. Fcap. 8vo, with Portrait, 1s. net.

THE CHILD WHO WILL NEVER GROW OLD. By K. DOUGLAS KING, Author of "Father Hilarion," "The Scripture Reader of St. Mark's," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE SPANISH WINE: a Novel. By FRANK MATHEW, Author of "The Wood of the Brambles," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"A beautiful novel. So fascinating, so faultless. One is delighted and disposed to sit down and write to everybody one knows to buy and read it. It is a masterpiece, and should not only give Mr. Mathew his position as chief of the Irish authors, but as one of the most careful and finely gifted in the Empire. It is the only book written in many months worthy to rank with 'What Maisie Knew.'"—Vanity Fair.

A MAN from the NORTH: a Novel. By E. A. BENNETT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Mr. Bennett has written a book that will come to the jaded novel-reader as a splendid surprise.—Black & White.

GODEFROI and YOLANDE: a Play. By LAURENCE IRVING. Small 4to, 3s. 6d. net.

SUMMER MOTHS: a Play in Four Acts. By WILLIAM HEINEMANN. Small 4to, 3s. 6d. net.

JOURNALISM for WOMEN: a Practical Guide. By E. A. BENNETT, Editor of Woman. Square 16mo, 2s. 6d. net.

CARPET COURTSHIP: a Novel. By THOMAS COBB. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"A society story told mainly in dialogue—clever dialogue.—Academy.

FOURTH EDITION NOW READY.

POEMS. With which is incorporated "CHRIST in HADES." By STEPHEN PHILLIPS. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Phillips, while endowing his personages with a complexity of feeling which is modern, has at the same time given to his work a chaste simplicity of structure which in the noblest sense is antique."

Mr. WILLIAM WATSON in Fortnightly Review. "No such remarkable book of verse as this has appeared for several years. Mr. Phillips boldly challenges comparison, in style and subject, with the work of great masters; the writers whom he makes you think of range up to Milton and do not fall below Landor. He attempts nothing small, and his poetry brings with it that sensation of novelty and that suffusion of a strongly marked personality which stamps a genuine poet. His blank verse is entirely his own, everywhere dignified, sonorous, and musical. No man in our generation, and few in any generation, have written better than this.—Literature.

"The man who, with a few graphic touches, can call up for us images like these, in such decisive and masterly fashion, is not one to be rated with the common herd, but rather as a man from whom we have the right to expect hereafter some of the great things which will endure."—Mr. W. L. COURTNEY in Daily Telegraph.

"We may pay Mr. Phillips the distinguished compliment of saying that his blank verse is finer than his work in rhymes. . . . Almost the whole of this book is concerned with life and death, largely and liberally contemplated; it is precisely that kind of contemplation which our recent poetry lacks. . . . We praise Mr. Phillips for many excellences, but chiefly for the great air and ardour of his poetry, its persistent loftiness."—Daily Chronicle.

MARRIAGE QUESTIONS in MODERN FICTION. By ELIZABETH RACHEL CHAPMAN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"It is a book to possess, especially for young people who would arrive at the highest ideal of marriage, parenthood, and citizenship; for teachers; and for open-minded people who would know the trend of the times, and see for themselves in what direction our much-maligned modern women are steering."

Madam SARAH GRAND in Fortnightly Review.

LULLABY LAND: Songs of Childhood. By EUGENE FIELD. Edited, with Introduction, by KENNETH GRAHAME. With 200 Illustrations by Charles Robinson. Uncut, or gilt edges, crown 8vo, 6s.

"A book of exceeding sweetness and beauty. No more original and no sweeter singer of childhood ever breathed. Mr. Robinson's drawings are more exquisite, if possible, in execution, and as abounding as ever in humour and phantasy. Any child who gets this book now will love it as long as he lives."—Daily Chronicle.

THE MAKING of a PRIG: a Novel. By EVELYN SHARP. 6s.

"The splendid portrait of the potential prig raises the book above the commonplace. The author's style has great merit, it is always neat, crisp, and unaffected, and shows the author's keen sense of humour. 'The Making of a Prig' is undoubtedly a strong book, unconventional and fresh without being either overdrawn or fantastic."—Fall Mail Gazette.

THE TREE of LIFE: a Novel. By NETTA SYRETT. Crown 8vo, 6s. [SPECIAL EDITION.]

"The best novel of its kind that has appeared for a long time."—Academy.

DERELICTS: a Novel. By W. J. LOCKE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Locke tells us his story in a very true, a very moving, and a very noble book. If anyone can read the last chapter with dry eyes we shall be surprised. 'Derelicts' is an impressive, an important book. . . . Yvonne is a creation that any artist might be proud of."—Daily Chronicle.

READY SHORTLY.

COMEDIES and ERRORS. By HENRY HARLAND, Author of "Grey Roses." Crown 8vo, 6s.

JOHN LANE, THE BODLEY HEAD, Vigo Street, London, W.

Macpherson, Fellow and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music.

The Bohn Libraries will receive the following additions: The third volume of Mr. Temple Scott's edition of Swift's works, a new edition of Burton's Pilgrimage to Al-Fadinah and Meccah, and a new edition of John Payne Collier's Annals of the Stage to the Restoration. The excellent "Cathedral Series" of this firm will be continued; and Hereford, Lincoln, Wells, Durham, and Southwell will be added to the published volumes.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD.

Harrow School is the subject of a sumptuous work to be issued in June by Mr. Arnold. The editors will be Mr. E. W. Lawson and Mr. G. Townsend Warner; and the volume will contain contributions by more than a dozen old Harrovians. These will deal with the origin and history of the school and its buildings, and its connexion with the town, embodying much information hitherto unpublished. Other subjects treated will be: the Headmasters of the school, Harrovian Statesmen, Harrovian Men of Letters, the Benefactions, Reminiscences of School Life in Old Days, Cricket, Football, and other branches of School Sports, School Songs and Music, and the Social Life of the School.

In Mr. Arnold's "Sportsman's Library" we shall see The Chase, The Turf, and The Lad, by "Nimrod." This edition is based on the first edition of Apperley's work, and Aken's plates will be reproduced in their original size.

The Letters of Mary Sibylla Holland were written, we are told, "with no thought but to please, convey affection, help or console, by a person gifted with sympathy, and of a nature of rare distinction."

Mr. S. H. Reynold's Studies on Many Subjects has already been issued by Mr. Arnold.

CHAPMAN & HALL.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL'S Spring list is mainly composed of technical works. The two standard editions, however, of Dickens and Carlyle which this firm is issuing will be forwarded. Our Mutual Friend, with 40 illustrations by Mr. Marcus Stone, forming vols. xxiii. and xxiv. of the Gadshill edition of the novelist's works, will be issued; and in the "Centenary Edition" of the works of Carlyle the Life of Frederick the Great will be continued in three new volumes. Among the other works announced by this house we note books dealing with Shoemaking, Miers' Arithmetic, British Columbia (for sellers), Chinese Porcelain, Physics, Mineralogy, and—in odd contrast—"The Song of Solomon," illustrated by 12 full-page colotype plates and numerous head and tailpieces by H. Granville Fell.

HUTCHINSON & CO.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON give prominence to an important new work by the late Captain Sir Richard F. Burton, entitled The Jew, the Gypsy, and El Islam. This posthumous work has been edited, with an introduction and brief notes, by Mr. W. H. Wilkins. It will contain summaries of the history of the Jewish race, of the gipsy and his distribution over Europe, and of Mohammedanism, subjects over which Sir Richard Burton spent many years of his life in collecting evidence, &c.

Among other books to be issued by this firm we note:

The Modern Marriage Market. By Lady Jeune, Marie Corelli, the Countess of Malmesbury, and Flora Annie Steel. This is a discussion of the prevailing system of arranging marriages in the world which calls itself "society."

The Women of the Nineteenth Century. Edited by Alfred H. Mills. Another book of female biography. Joanna Baillie is selected as the first woman in order of time, and Mathilde Blind as the last.

Kings of the Hunting Field. By "Thormanby."

Memoirs of a French Sergeant. By "The Man who Shot Nelson."

In Fiction Messrs. Hutchinson have a varied list. Not a few of the volumes it contains have already been issued; but the following have yet to appear:

The Millionaires. By Frankfort Moore.

The Vicar. By Joseph Hatton.

Adrienne. By Rita.

The Admiral. By Douglas Sladen.

The Honourable Peter Stirling. By Paul Leicester Ford. This American novel has enjoyed great popularity.

A. D. INNES & CO.

This firm announces the following publications:

Ireland, '98 to '98. By Judge O'Connor Morris.

Through the Famine Districts of India. By F. H. S. Merewether. Being an account, by Reuter's Special Correspondent, of his experiences in travelling through the Famine Districts of India.

Through Persia on a Side Saddle. By Ella C. Sykes. Illustrated with numerous photographs and a map.

The Successors of Homer. By Prof. W. C. Lawton. This is an account of the Greek poets who followed from Homer down to the time of Aeschylus.

Among new novels Messrs. Innes will publish:

A Woman's Privilege. By Marguerite Bryant.

The Island of Seven Shadows. By Roma White.

The St. Cadix Case. By Esther Miller.

The Indiscretions of Lady Asenath. By Basil Thomson.

The following new volumes of this firm's Isthmian Library will be issued this Spring:

Rowing. By R. C. Lehmann. With chapters by Guy Nickalls and C. M. Pitman. Vol. IV.

Sailing Boats and Small Yachts. By E. F. Knight.

Figure Skating. By M. S. Monier Williams.

The World of Golf. By Garden Smith.

A book of travel, entitled Through the High Pyrenees, will be issued by Messrs. Innes in April. It will include a narrative of two holidays in the high mountains of the Pyrenees, written by Mr. Harold Spender, besides a number of supplementary lectures of a scientific and historical character written by Mr. Llewellyn Smith. This book will be richly illustrated with sketches and photographs, and supplied with maps. Mr. Spender and Mr. Smith have climbed all the highest mountains in the range and traversed the central and least-known portion, camping in the mountains.

GRANT RICHARDS.

MR. GRANT RICHARDS is not afraid to publish poetry. He announces, or has already issued, the following books for the Spring season:

Hernani: a Drama. By Victor Hugo. Translated into English Verse by R. Farquharson Sharp.

Hannibal: a Drama. By Louisa Shore. With photogravure portrait of the author.

Porphyron, and Other Poems. By Laurence Binyon.

Versions from Hafiz: an Essay in Persian Metre. By Walter Leaf.

In fiction Mr. Richards promises the following varied fare:

The Wheel of God. By George Egerton.

The Cattle Man. By G. B. Burgin.

The Actor-Manager. By Leonard Merrick.

The Wooings of Jezebel Pettyfer. Being the Personal History of Jehu Sennacherib Dyle.

The Ape, the Idiot, and Other People. By W. C. Morrow.

The Yellow Terror. By M. P. Shiel.

Convict 99: a True Story of Penal Servitude. By Marie and Robert Leighton. With eight full-page illustrations by Stanley L. Wood.

A Bibliography of Omar Khayyam. By Temple Scott. With prefatory note by Edward Clodd.

C. ARTHUR PEARSON, LTD.

MR. PEARSON began book-publishing a little more than a year ago; but his list is already long and interesting. The most considerable announcement from the point of view of expense and enterprise is that of an illustrated edition of The Pilgrim's Progress. This will be issued in twelve monthly parts at the price of sixpence a part—thus aiming at a popular sale. The feature of such an edition must of course be its illustrations. These, in the present instance, are from drawings of Frederick A. Rhoad and Louis Read, who have been engaged for the last three years in preparing illustrations to Bunyan's work. The drawings themselves have been exhibited in London, Paris, and New York. They are in line with occasional wash.

Mr. Pearson also announces the following works:

With Peary Near the Pole. By Eivind Astrup. Illustrated with sketches and photographs by the author

Scientific Aspects of Christian Evidences. By G. F. Wright, D.D. This volume is another attempt to show that science is not in opposition to the evidences of Christianity.

Mad Humanity. By Dr. Forbes Winslow. In this book Dr. Winslow, the celebrated "mad" doctor, deals largely with his personal reminiscences. Separate chapters are devoted to insanity in relation to genius, in relation to crime, and in relation to sex.

In fiction Mr. Pearson is making the rather daring experiment of a series of half-crown novels by good writers. He announces:

Miss Betty. By Bram Stoker. This and the next novel are already published.

Van Wagener's Ways. By W. L. Alden.
An Egyptian Coquette. By Clive Hollaud.
In Male Attire. By Joseph Hatton.
An Episode in Arcady. By Halliwell Sutcliffe.

Trincolor. By Douglas Sladen.
A Romance of a Grouse Moor. By M. E. Stevenson.

A Russian Fagabond. By Fred. Whishaw.
Tammer's Duel. By E. and H. Heron.
From Veld and Mine. By George Griffith.
The Shadow of Life. By Marten Strong.

CHATTO & WINDUS.

Most of the books in Messrs. Chatto & Windus's list are already in the hands of the public. Mark Twain's More Tramps Abroad has been out more than a month, and has been followed by the welcome news of the author's triumph over financial difficulties. Mr. Vizetelly's translation of Paris and Mr. Harry de Windt's Through the Goldfields of Alaska to Bering Straits have already been reviewed in our columns. Nor must it be forgotten that Mr. Archibald Forbes's Life of Napoleon III. is one of this firm's recent publications.

Of novels just published, or on the eve of publishing, Messrs. Chatto & Windus have the following:

The Disaster. By Paul and Victor Marguerite. Translated by Frederic Lees.

A Woman Tempted Him. By William Westall.

Miss Balmaine's Past. By B. M. Croker.

Was She Justified? By Frank Barrett.

Colonel Thorndyke's Secret. By G. A. Henty.

A Woman Worth Winning. By Geo. Manville Fenn.

Fortune's Gate. By Alan St. Aubyn.
The Heritage of Eve. By H. H. Spettigue.

J. M. DENT & CO.

MR. DENT'S announcements include an important book of travel—With Ski and Sledge over Spitzbergen Glaciers, by Sir William Martin Conway. A Book of Cats, by Mrs. W. Chance, is already issued. Three more volumes of Mr. Dent's dainty edition of the Spectator will be issued, completing the set.

The "Temple Classics" will receive the following additional volumes:

Milton's Paradise Lost. Edited by W. H. D. Rouse.

The High History of the Holy Grail. Translated for the first time from the French by Dr. Sebastian Evans. With frontispiece and titles by Sir Edward Burne-Jones. This work will be in two volumes.

The Little Flowers of St. Francis. Newly translated from the Italian by Prof. T. W. Arnold.

Law's Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life. Edited by Dr. Horton.

Boswell's Tour to the Hebrides. With notes by Arnold Glover.

To the "Temple Dramatists" will be added:

Greene's Tragical Reign of Selimus (already published).

Fletcher's Knight of the Burning Pestle.
Ben Jonson's Alchemist.

ELKIN MATHEWS.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS makes the following Spring announcements:

Some Welsh Children. By the author of Fraternity. The cover and title-page are designed by the author. Impressionist studies of child-life in Wales—a Welsh Golden Age.

The Adventures of a Goldsmith: a Historical Romance. By the author of The C Major of Life, a story that touches on the famous plot of Georges Cadoudal, a conspiracy which occupied Napoleon's mind at the time he had determined to seat himself on an Imperial throne.

Indian Elegies and Love Songs. By Manmohan Ghose. ("Shilling Garland Series"). No. IX. In the press.

Admirals All. By Henry Newbolt (same series). 11th edition in the press.

Another Sheaf. With a photogravure frontispiece. By R. T. Warwick Bond.

The Wind Among the Reeds. By W. B. Yeats. With portrait and cover design.

MR. JOHN LANE.

MR. JOHN LANE'S Spring announcements are not very numerous, but they are interesting. To begin with, there is a new novel by Miss Gertrude Atherton, called The Californians. Mr. Le Gallienne's The Romance of Zion Chapel is also in the list. Mr. John Buchan has a six-shilling novel impending, called John Burnet of Barns. Nor are these all Mr. Lane's plums of fiction. Those who read Father Hilarion will be glad to read another story by Miss K. Douglas King, entitled The Child who will Never Grow Old. Mr. H. B. Marriott Watson's public—too long neglected—will know him again as the author of The Heart of Miranda. Lastly, Mr. Henry Harland will be represented by a volume entitled Comedies and Errors.

Two plays figure in Mr. Lane's list: Mr. Laurence Irving's Godefroi and Yolande, already published, and Godfrida, by Mr. John Davidson, to be issued shortly.

We are also to have the Tompkin's Verses, "edited" by Mr. Barry Pain. These are, of course, gleaned from the Saturday columns of the Daily Chronicle.

NISBET & CO.

THIS firm announce a number of religious works, from which we select the following:

The Mystery of the True Vine: Meditations for a Month. By the Rev. Andrew Murray.

Science, Miracle, and Prayer. By the Rev. Chancellor Leas.

On the Resurrection Body. By the Ven. Archdeacon Hugh-Games.

The Message and the Messengers: Lesson from the History of Preaching. By the Rev. Fleming James.

Brief Sermons for Busy Men. By the Rev. R. F. Horton.

The King's Own: Words of Counsel to Young Christians. By the Rev. G. A. Sowtor.

The Problems of the Book of Job. By the Rev. G. V. Garland.

The Elector King and Priest. By A. S. Lamb.

Regent Square: Eighty Years of a London Congregation. By John Ffair.

HARPER BROTHERS.

MESSRS. HARPER BROTHERS inform us that they have arranged for the following new novels:

Behind a Mask. By Theo. Douglas.
Sowing the Seed. By Mrs. Florence Henniker.

Meg o' the Scarlet Foot. By Wm. Tirebuck.

Silence—Short Stories. By Miss M. F. Wilkins.

Robin Hood. By Barry Pain.
Flaunting Moll. By R. A. J. Walling.

The Adventurers. By Marriott Watson.
The Luck of Parco. By John Maclair.

THACKER & CO.

THIS firm is closely identified with India it has already published Lockhart's Advance through Tirah by Capt. L. J. Shadwell, P.S.C. (Suffolk Regiment). Capt. Shadwell was special correspondent in the recent expedition of The Pioneer and the London Daily News.

The same firm announce a volume of Hunting Reminiscences, by Alfred E. Pease, M.P. Mr. Pease's book is largely one of reminiscence; and is by no means confined in its scope to the persecution of Reynard-Hare-hunting and Badger-hunting being duly treated. "The Greatest Run I ever Saw" is the subject of a chapter.

Messrs. Thacker & Co. will also issue: Whyte Melville's Riding Recollections and Inside the Bar (complete in 1 vol.), in New Edition, illustrated by Mr. Hugh Thomson.

A History of China. By D. C. Boulger. This work, by the author of Chinese Gordon, Sir Stamford Raffles, &c., has been re-written and brought up to date.

A Galaxy Girl. A new novel by M. Lincoln Springfield, dealing with London theatrical and sporting life.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.

THIS firm's Spring list contains the following announcements:

The Wonderful Century: its Successes and its Failures. By Alfred Russel Wallace. The object of this volume is to give a short descriptive sketch of all the more important mechanical inventions and scientific discoveries of the century.

ies of the nineteenth century, and to le those who have lived only in the r half of it to realise its full significance e history of human progress. The d part of the work discusses the e actual and moral failures of the ry.

Foundations of England: a History of und to the Death of Stephen. By Sir s Ramsay, Bart.

Studies in Little-known Subjects. By C. umpstre.

Collections of Thirty-nine Years in the . By Sir Charles Alexander Gordon, B. Including Gwalior, and the Battle aharaipore, 1843; the Gold Coasts of a, 1847-8; the Indian Mutiny, 1857-8; a, 1860-1; the Siege of Paris, 1870-1. work has already appeared.

Græco-Turkish War, 1897. By a an Staff Officer. Translated by rica Bolton.

IAL ENGLAND SERIES. Edited by m D. Cotes. Life in an Old English By M. Dormer Harris.

LAURENCE & BULLEN.

s firm's sporting publications grow in ce. The "Anglers' Library" is edited r Herbert Maxwell, and volumes on Fish, Sea Fish, and Pike and Perch eadly been issued. To these will be

Trout and Sea-Trout. By Right Hon. rbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.

Out, Char, &c. By T. D. Croft.

se publishers also announce "The man's Pocket Series" of small books hilling a volume. The first item in ries will be Robert Surtees' Handley s with Leech's illustrations, in two es.

SAMPSON LOW.

LSERS. SAMPSON LOW are just issuing the Miniature Painters and their Works J. J. Foster. This work is dedicated, by sion, to the Queen. It will be illus- e by over 120 examples from the Royal ay, Windsor, and from the collections H. Grace the Duchess of Devonshire, ronesse Burdett-Coutts, the Dukes hmond and Gordon, Rutland, and urt, the Earl Spencer, &c.

h second volume of The Life of Our d Jesus Christ, edited by James Tissot, eparation. This work is also appear- in monthly parts.

h third volume of Mr. William Laird e's work, The Royal Navy from the lie Times to the Present, is nearly ready; e second edition of Mr. Fred. T. Jane's World's Fighting Ships, has been e called for, and is now in the press.

Henry M. Stanley's new book, Through the Africa, has already been issued by this

JAMES BOWDEN.

LE BOWDEN sends us the following list of coming novels:

Paul Carah, Cornishman. By Charles Lee.

Vadurers. By Sidney Pickering.

The Last Lemurian: a Westralian Romance. G. Firth Scott.

Tom Ossington's Ghost. By Richard Marsh.

Dead Selves. By Julia Macgruder.

At Friendly Point. By G. Firth Scott.

The Adventures of an Engineer. By Wetherby Chessney.

The Intervention of the Duke. By L. Allen Harker.

Mr. Bowden will publish Reminiscences of Cricket and Sport, by Dr. W. G. Grace. Of cricketing books there is no end just now; but, then, there is no end to the demand for them. Dr. Grace's book will be illustrated with numerous photographs.

Also, Mr. Bowden proposes to issue a shilling edition of White Slaves of England, by Robert H. Sherard, and, uniform with the above, The Cry of the Children. This work, by Frank Hird, gives a picture of certain British industries in which child labour is employed. It will be illustrated.

DUCKWORTH & CO.

MESSRS. DUCKWORTH & Co. are the newest firm of publishers, and their first list contains among other announcements:

Studies in Biography. By Leslie Stephen. Tom Tit Tot; or, Savage Philosophy in Folk-Tale. By Edward Clodd.

Cricket. By the Hon. R. H. Lyttelton.

Imperialism. By C. de Thierry. With an introduction by W. E. Henley.

War and Policy on the Indian Frontier. By Stephen Wheeler.

A History of Rugby School. By W. H. D. Rouse.

The Saints. A new series of "Lives of the Saints" in separate volumes, translated from the French. The series will be edited by the Rev. G. Tyrell, S.J., and the first volume will be an introductory one, entitled The Psychology of the Saints, by Henri Joly. It will be followed by one-volume biographies of St. Augustine, St. Vincent de Paul, St. Clotilda, and others.

In fiction this firm announces: The Unknown Sea: a Romance. By Miss Clemence Housman.

The Fire of Life. By Charles Kennett Burrow.

Jocelyn. By John Sinjohn.

New novels by Mrs. W. K. Clifford, and Edward H. Cooper.

Only one poet figures in this list. Miss Margaret Armour, whose Thames Sonnets and Semblances appeared last autumn, will put forth a volume entitled The Shadow of Love. This is described as a lyric sequence, and, like the author's previous volume, it will be illustrated by Mr. W. R. Macdougall.

SEELEY & CO.

THIS firm's Spring List is not so characteristically concerned with Art as is usually the case; indeed, three of the following works are religious:

The Hope of Immortality. By the Rev. J. E. C. Weldon, Head Master of Harrow School. This book is mainly addressed to persons who are not theologians, though with thoughts and feelings about religion, who are ready to consider an argument conscientiously addressed to them. Technical terms are as far as possible avoided, and quotations from classical and foreign writers are translated.

The Young Queen of Hearts: a Story of the Princess Elizabeth and her Brother Henry, Prince of Wales. By Mrs. Marshall.

Short Chapters on the Prayer Book. By the Rev. H. C. G. Moule, D.D.

The Cross and the Spirit: Studies in the Epistles to the Galatians. By the Rev. H. C. G. Moule, D.D.

Brook Silvertone and The Lost Lilies. Two Stories for Children. By Mrs. Marshall. New edition with eight coloured illustrations.

The Portfolio for April will be a monograph on "Greek Bronzes" by Mr. Alexander Stuart Murray, Keeper of the Greek and Roman Antiquities.

DOWNEY & CO.

MESSRS. DOWNEY & Co. have this Spring issued, in conjunction with a Boston firm, an illustrated limited edition of Balzac's works.

We observe that "Downey's Sixpenny Library" now numbers more than twenty volumes.

The same firm will begin in the near future the publication of a series of volumes prepared by Moses Coit Tyler, Professor of History in Cornell University, which will be issued under the following subject-title: A Century of American Statesmen: a Biographical Survey of American Politics from the Inauguration of Jefferson to the Close of the Nineteenth Century. As will be inferred from the title, the work, which is to be in several volumes, is based on the idea of affording a rapid survey of the great events of American history during the century now drawing to a close, by presenting in vivid outline the lives and characteristics of the chief statesmen who, whether for good or for ill, have influenced American political life since March 4, 1801. To each statesman included in the plan will be devoted a single chapter, wherein the scale and method of the portrait will be somewhat like that of the same author's work in his little book called Three Men of Letters.

Prof. Tyler has also in preparation a volume which will present the Literary History of the American Republic during the First Half-Century of their Independence, 1783-1833. This work will form a continuation of the volumes previously published on the literature of the Colonial and the Revolutionary periods.

BLISS, SANDS & CO.

A PIQUANT item in this firm's Spring list is the following: Editing à la Mode; or, an Examination of Dr. George Birkbeck Hall's Johnsonian Editions. By Percy Fitzgerald.

The following novels are in Messrs. Bliss, Sands & Co.'s list:

Mrs. de la Rue Smythe. By Riccardo Stephens, M.B., C.M.

Second Lieutenant Celia. By L. C. Davidson. Both these novels will be illustrated.

The Spirit is Willing. By Percival Pickering.

A Departure from Tradition, and Other Stories. By Rosaline Masson.

One Crowded Hour. By A. Beresford Ryley.

A Branch of Laurel. By A. B. Louis.

His Fortunate Grace. By Gertrude Atherton.

Tales of the Klondyke. By T. Mullett Ellis.

This firm issues the following list of "Books Bearing on the Present State of Public Affairs":

Lord Cromer: a Biography. By H. D. Traill.

Don Emilio Castelar. By David Hannay.

The Ameer Abdur Rahman. By Stephen Wheeler.

The German Emperor William II. By Charles Lowe, M.A.

A History of the United States Navy from 1775 to 1893. By Edgar Stanton Maclay, A.M.

President Cleveland. By James Lowry Whittle.

The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain. By S. H. Jeyes.

Li Hung Chang. By Professor Robert K. Douglas.

Housewives may add to their knowledge by consulting Meyer's Practical Dictionary of Cookery. This work will contain 1,200 tested recipes. Most authors write to eat; a few eat to write!

GAY & BIRD.

MESSRS. GAY & BIRD issue the following list of books for the Spring:

Points of View, and Other Poems. By G. Colmore.

Essays at Eventide. By Thos. Newbigging.

In the Days of King James; or, Romances of London in the Olden Time. By S. H. Burchell.

Gondola Days. Illustrated and written by F. Hopkinson Smith.

The Hand of the Spoiler: a Novel of the Time of Henry VIII. By R. H. Forster.

Street Cleaning and the Disposal of a City's Wastes. By G. E. Waring, Junr., Commissioner of Street Cleaning in the City of New York.

Scotch Experiences. By Kate Douglas Wiggin.

The Children of the Future. By N. A. Smith (sister and joint author with K. D. Wiggin of "The Republic of Childhood," &c.).

Health, Grace, and Beauty: Illustrated Exercises for Developing the Female Figure. By Mabel Jenners.

The Juggler. By Charles Egbert Craddock.

King Arthur and the Table Round: Tales Chiefly after the Old French of Crestien of Troyes. With an account of Arthurian Romance, and Notes by William Wells Newell. In two volumes.

What all the World's a-Seeking. By R. W. Trine.

Tales from McClures: Romance—Adventure—Humour—The West.

The Revenge of Lucas Helm. By Mons. Blondel.

A Dust with Destiny. By E. T. Everett.

JOHN LONG.

MR. JOHN LONG, formerly of Messrs. Digby & Long, who is embarking on a publishing business, announces a new novel by Mr. Coulson Kernahan, entitled Trewinnot of Guy's. Also the following:

The Story of Lois. By Katharine S. Macquoid.

A Difficult Matter. By Mrs. Lovett Cameron.

Youth at the Prow. By E. Rentoul Esler.

His Little Bill of Sale. By Ellis J. Davis.

With Bought Swords. By Harry Towler.

The Sea of Love. By Walter Phelps Dodge.

Nightshade and Poppies. Verses of a Country Doctor.

The Classics for the Millions. By Henry Gray.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, March 17.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

ROMAN LEGENDS ABOUT THE APOSTLES PAUL AND PETER. By Victor Rydberg. Elliot Stock.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE STORY OF THE PALATINES: AN EPISODE IN COLONIAL HISTORY. By Sandford H. Cobb. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

NULLIFICATION AND SECESSION IN THE UNITED STATES. By Edward Payson Powell. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF THOMAS KILBY SMITH, 1820—1887. By Walter George Smith. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 12s. 6d.

AUDUBON AND HIS JOURNALS. By Maria R. Audubon. With Zoological and other Notes by Elliott Coues. John C. Nimmo.

MIRABEAU. By P. F. Willert, M.A. Macmillan & Co.

A HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH POOR LAW. By Sir George Nicholls. New edition, with a Biography by H. G. Willink. P. S. King & Co.

SIR HUDSON LOWE AND NAPOLEON. By R. C. Seaton. David Nutt.

ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS:—CHEAPER RE-ISSUE: THUCYDIDES, DEMOSTHENES, ARISTOTLE, CATULLUS, TIBULLUS, AND PROPERTIUS. Wm. Blackwood & Sons.

THE GROWTH AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE BRITISH COLONIES, 1837—1897. By Rev. William Parr Greswell, M.A. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

MODERN ENGLISH PROSE WRITERS. By Frank Preston Stearns. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 12s. 6d.

FROM CLIFF AND SCAUR: A COLLECTION OF VERSE. By Benjamin Sledd. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 5s.

AMERICAN IDEALS, AND OTHER ESSAYS, SOCIAL AND POLITICAL. By Theodore Roosevelt. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 5s.

ANOTHER SHEAF. By R. Warwick Bond. Elkin Mathews. 2s. 6d.

STUDIES ON MANY SUBJECTS. By Samuel Harvey Reynolds. With a Preface by George Saintsbury. Edward Arnold 10s. 6d.

CLAVIGO: A TRAGEDY. By Goethe. Translated into English by Members of the Goethe Society. David Nutt. 3s. 6d.

WALTER GRAEME; OR, A HOME AMONG THE HILLS, AND OTHER POEMS. By Thomas Fergusson. J. & R. Parlane (Paisley).

TEMPLE CLASSICS: PARADISE LOST. By John Milton. J. M. Dent & Co. 1s. 6d.

A DREAM OF PARADISE: A POEM. By Robert Thomson. Elliot Stock.

SOME WELSH CHILDREN. By the Author "Fraternity." Elkin Mathews. 3s. 6d.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

SPORT IN THE HIGHLANDS OF KASHMIR. 1 Henry Zouch Darrah. Rowland Ward.

ON BLUE WATER. By Edmond de Amic. Translated by Jacob B. Brown. G. Putnam's Sons. 7s. 6d.

ISLANDERS OF THE SOUTHERN SEAS. 1 Michael Myers Shoemaker. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE ENGLISH ANGLER IN FLORIDA. 1 Rowland Ward, F.Z.S. Rowland Ward.

EDUCATIONAL.

ARITHMETIC, WITH NUMEROUS EXAMPLE EXERCISES, AND EXAMINATION PAPERS Arranged by A. E. Layng, M.A. Black & Son. 4s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES: AN ESSAY ON WESTERN CIVILISATION IN ITS ECONOMIC ASPECTS. By W. Cunningham D.D. Cambridge University Press.

THE AMERICAN COLLEGE IN AMERICAN LIFE. By Charles Franklin Thwing, D.D. G. Putnam's Sons.

A SCHOOL HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. By Elizabeth Lee. Vol. II: SHAKESPEARE TO DRYDEN. Blackie & Son.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND: THE ASSEMBLIES OF AL HARIRI. Translated with Notes, by Dr. F. Steingass. Vol. 1 The Royal Asiatic Society.

SOME INCIDENTS IN GENERAL PRACTICE. 1 Augustin Prichard. J. W. Arrowsmith.

THE BARGAIN THEORY OF WAGES. By Job Davidson, M.A. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

SOCIAL FACTS AND FORCES. By Washington Gladden. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 3s. 6d.

THE STORY OF LIFE IN THE SEAS. By Sydney J. Hickson, D.Sc. George Newnes, Ltd. 1

THE LIBRARY SERIES: LIBRARY ADMINISTRATION. By John Macfarlane. George Allen. 6s.

CASELL'S FAMILY LAWYER: BEING A POPULAR EXPOSITION OF THE CIVIL LAW OF GREAT BRITAIN. By a Barrister-at-Law. Cassell & Co.

GARDNER'S HOUSEHOLD MEDICINE AND SICK ROOM GUIDE. Thirteenth edition. E. W. H. C. Staveley. Smith, Elder & Co.

CANADA'S METALS. By Prof. Roberts-Austen. Macmillan & Co.

P. PUTNAM'S SONS'

New and Forthcoming Books.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE RED REPUBLIC."
MORRAINE: a Romance.

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS, Author of "Maker of Moons," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [In a few days.]

BY REV. T. K. CHEYNE.

WISH RELIGIOUS LIFE AFTER

THE EXILE. By Rev. T. K. CHEYNE, M.A., D.D. (American Lectures on the History of Religions—Third Series.) 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Shortly.]

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

ST MAN'S LANE.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [In preparation.]

BY WALT WHITMAN.

THE WOUND DRESSER: a Series of

Letters Written from the Hospitals in Washington During the War of the Rebellion. Edited by RICHARD MAURICE BUCKE, M.D., one of Whitman's Literary Executors. With 2 Photogravure Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BY WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

SPECIAL FACTS and FORCES. The Factory—The Labour Union—The Corporation—The Railway—The City—The Church. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

NEW EDITION OF WHITMAN'S POEMS,

Containing hitherto Unpublished Matter.

SAVES OF GRASS. Including "Sands

of Seventy," "Good Bye, My Fancy," "Old Age Echoes," and "A Backward Glance o'er Travel'd Roads." By WALT WHITMAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, extra, gilt top, 9s.

PPUR; or, Explorations and Adven- tures on the Euphrates. The Narrative of the University of Pennsylvania Expedition to Babylonia in the Years 1889-90. By JOHN PUNNETT PETERS, M.D., D.Sc., D.D., Director of the Expedition. With about 100 Illustrations and Plans, and with new Maps of the Euphrates Valley and the Ruin Sites of Babylonia. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s. 6d. each.

ABROISE PARÉ and his TIMES,

1510-1560. By STEPHEN PAGET. Fully illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

THE DUNGEONS of OLD PARIS:

telling the Story and Romance of the most celebrated prisons of the Monarchy and the Revolution. By RICHARD HOPKINS. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

THE CENTRAL ITALIAN PAINTERS

of the RENAISSANCE. By BERNHARD BERENSON, Author of "Venetian Painters," "Florentine Painters," &c. Fcap. 8vo, cloth extra, 4s. 6d.

THE BLUE WATER. By Edmondo

DE AMICIS, Author of "Constantinople," "Holland and its People," &c. Translated from the Italian by B. BROWN. Illustrated. 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

NEW CATALOGUE FREE ON APPLICATION.

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S

NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVELS.

A REPUTATION FOR A SONG.

By MAUD OXENDEN, Author of "Interludes." Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MERMAID OF INISH-UIG.

By R. W. K. EDWARDS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SIXTH EDITION NOW READY.

THE KING WITH TWO FACES.

By M. E. COLERIDGE. Cloth, 6s.

TIMES.—"Miss Coleridge's quality is that of perfectly original brilliancy in romantic narration. Her style is at once placid and spirited, full of colour without heaviness and luxury, correct, rapid, adequate, with no tedious research of 'the word,' or preciosity. Her imagination is wonderfully vivid; for scenes and moments, colour, form, atmosphere, are all felt and conveyed in her pictures, which are not too numerous, and are never tedious."

SPECTATOR.—"A brilliant novel."
PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A work of remarkable ability."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"One of the most remarkable stories that we have read for many a day."
SATURDAY REVIEW.—"It stands prominently forward as one of the best historical novels of the year."

THE KING WITH TWO FACES.

COUNT GLEICHEN'S IMPORTANT WORK ON ABYSSINIA.

WITH THE BRITISH MISSION TO MENELIK, 1897.

By COUNT GLEICHEN.

Captain Grenadier Guards, Intelligence Officer to the Mission.

With numerous Illustrations by the Author and a Map. Demy 8vo, 16s.

TIMES.—"Count Gleichen has produced a book which deserves to be read by every one who cares for good tales of travel, for the record of a considerable English achievement, and for a first-hand account of an almost unknown and very interesting country."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"A thoroughly entertaining book. Count Gleichen's book will be read by all who are interested in the greater affairs of the British Empire and the world."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"To predict that the flashlight photograph of Abyssinia produced by Count Gleichen's instructive text and lively sketches will be as popular as it deserves is not faint praise."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Full of humorous incident and picturesque description."

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

MANY MEMORIES OF MANY PEOPLE.

By Mrs. M. C. SIMPSON (née NASSAU-SENIOR). 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

STANDARD.—"Mrs. Simpson's work should appeal with success to a wide circle of readers. It is charmingly written and pleasant to read."

DAILY NEWS.—"A delightful volume."
ATHENÆUM.—"Mrs. Simpson has something interesting to say about nearly every woman of note in the middle portion of the century. The whole book is good reading."

GUARDIAN.—"This is a delightful book. A long succession of familiar names fit across Mrs. Simpson's pages, and she has something interesting or amusing to tell us about all of them."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"There is not a dull page in it from first to last, and the present generation will have no excuse for ignorance of all that was best and most brilliant in the society of the middle of this century as long as a copy of 'Many Memories' remains accessible."

STUDIES ON MANY SUBJECTS.

By S. H. REYNOLDS. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 10s. 8d.

London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, Bedford Street.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S LIST.

ROBERT BURNS AND
MRS. DUNLOP.

Correspondence now Published in Full for the First Time, with Elucidations.

By WILLIAM WALLACE.

With Portrait of Mrs. Dunlop and Facsimiles. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [March 21.]

The correspondence between Burns and Mrs. Dunlop was one of the most important of his life. Hitherto the lady's representatives have prevented the publication of many of Burns's letters to Mrs. Dunlop, and of all her letters to him. The collection has been gone over and carefully edited by Mr. William Wallace, the well-known editor of the new issue of Chambers's "Burns," and perhaps the chief authority on the subject. Many poems are reprinted with new readings from Burns's manuscripts sent to Mrs. Dunlop. The book will be found of interest, and probably it will be the last substantial contribution to our knowledge of Burns.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

COMPANIONS OF THE SORROWFUL WAY.

By the Rev. JOHN WATSON, D.D. (IAN MACLAREN). [In a few days.]

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF

THE BOOK OF THE
TWELVE PROPHETS,
COMMONLY CALLED THE MINOR.

Containing: Zephaniah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Obadiah, Haggai, Zechariah I.-VIII., "Malachi," Joel, "Zechariah" IX.-XIV., and Jonah.

With Historical and Critical Introductions.

By GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis, Free Church College, Glasgow.

COMPLETING THE

EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE.

In Forty-nine Volumes.

Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

A complete List of the Volumes in the Expositor's Bible will be forwarded post free on application.

"In his two volumes on Isaiah and that preceding the present one of the Prophets, Professor Smith gave abundant evidence both of his Hebrew scholarship and his capacity as an expositor of Scripture... and he has now put us under fresh obligations by publishing this volume, which in no respects falls behind its predecessors."— Scotsman

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE BOOK OF ISAIAH. In Two

Volumes, crown 8vo, 7s. 6s. each. Vol. I.—Chapters I. to XXXIX. Vol. II.—Chapters XL. to LXVI.

"A work of no ordinary merit; indeed, it is but rare that such exceptional power and mature scholarship are united with an ease of style and a fertility of modern illustration that leave but little to desire."—Speaker.

THE HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the HOLY LAND. With Six specially prepared Maps. Fifth Edition. Eighth Thousand, 8vo, cloth, 15s. With Additions, Corrections, and New Index of Scripture References.

"A very noteworthy contribution to the study of sacred history, based upon the three indispensable conditions of personal acquaintance with the land, a study of the explorations, discoveries, and decipherments... and the employment of the results of Biblical criticism."—Times.

ST. PAUL the TRAVELLER and the ROMAN CITIZEN. By W. M. RAMSAY, D.C.L., LL.D., Professor in Aberdeen University. Third Edition, with New Preface. 8vo, cloth, with Map, 4s. 6d.

"Professor Ramsay brings not only his own great experience as a traveller and archaeologist, but the resources of an ingenious mind and a lively style. The book is, like everything Professor Ramsay does, extraordinarily alive. It shows everywhere personal learning, personal impression; it has the sharp touch of the traveller and the eye-witness."—Times.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE CHURCH in the ROMAN EM-

PIRE. Fifth Edition, with Maps and Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"This volume is the most important contributor to the study of early Church history which has been published in this country since the great work of Bishop Lightfoot on the Apostolic Fathers. It is, too, unless our memory fails us, without a rival in any foreign country."—Guardian.

THE PLACE of CHRIST in MODERN

THEOLOGY. By A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Principal of Mausfield College, Oxford. Sixth Edition. 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"His work without doubt, one of the most important and comprehensive contributions to theology that has been made during this generation."—Spectator.

SOME LESSONS of the REVISED

VERSION of the NEW TESTAMENT. By the Right Rev

BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, LL.D., Lord Bishop of Durham.

Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The work is marked on every page by the same sympathetic and scholarly insight to which we are accustomed in Dr. Westcott's great commentaries... Anything which Dr. Westcott has to say needs no recommendation to secure it a wide and respectful hearing. The present work should be, in the immediate effects of its influence, as important as any that has appeared from him."—Guardian.

THE IDEAL LIFE, and other Un- published Addresses. By HENRY DRUMMOND. With Introductory Sketches by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL and IAN

MACLAREN. Thirteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"These addresses are written in a singularly beautiful style, and contain much beautiful thinking, showing that the writer had pondered deeply on some of the most spiritual aspects of religion. They will, we are sure, be much prized by the many admirers of their author."—Glasgow Herald.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

HARPER & BROTHERS'

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MAXWELL GRAY'S NEW BOOK.

RIBSTONE PIPPINS. By MAXWELL GRAY,
Author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland." Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

"The book has a charm that will secure its instant and eager reading by every reader who takes it up."—Scotsman.

THE STORY of HAWAII. By JEAN A. OWEN
(Mrs. Visger). Editor of the Books signed "A Son of the Marshes."
Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

"A delightful hook. All her chapters are interesting and enlivened with illustration or anecdote."—Globe.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS'S NEW BOOK.

A YEAR from a CORRESPONDENT'S NOTE-BOOK. By the Author of "Gallegher," "Soldiers of Fortune," "Van Bibber," &c. With about Forty Full-Page Illustrations by R. CATON WOODVILLE and Others. 8vo, cloth ornamental, 6s.

"Written with the vigour and raciness which one expects from a man who has already made a mark in literature."—Scotsman.

NOTICE.—Large Reprints are NOW READY of the following NEW NOVELS:—

THE GREAT STONE of SARDIS. By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Illustrated by PETER NEWELL. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Far more entertaining than the average novel."—Morning Post.

JEROME. A Poor Man. By MARY E. WILKINS,
Author of "A New England Nun," "Madelon," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Jerome" is a book to read; more, it is a book to buy, to read again and again."
Pall Mall Gazette.

MAIME o' the CORNER. By M. E. FRANCIS (Miss Francis Blundell), Author of "In a North Country Village," "A Daughter of the Soil." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"It could hardly be prettier, more charming, or more touching than it is."
Saturday Review.

PROHIBITED IN RUSSIA.

THE SON of the CZAR (Peter the Great). By JAMES M. GRAHAM. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Those who do not know the history of Alexis and his mistress Euphrosyne will learn a good deal of the history of Russia while enjoying Mr. Graham's well-written tale."
Publishers' Circular.

SPANISH JOHN. A Romance of the '45. By WILLIAM McLENNAN. Illustrated by MYRBACH. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"The people in the Highlands gave to the hero of this delightful book the name of Spanish John."—Scotsman.

"Mr. McLennan has added another portrait to the gallery of brave soldiers who win our hearts by brave deeds."—Black and White.

FATHER and SON. By ARTHUR PATERSON, Author of "For Freedom's Sake." No. V. of "The Times" Novels. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"A book that should be read."—Athenæum.

BROKEN ARCS. A West Country Chronicle. By CHRISTOPHER HARE, Author of "Down the Village Street," "As We Sow," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"A pretty story, quiet and restful as the sleepy, undulating country on the Somersetshire border."—Manchester Guardian.

THE KENTUCKIANS. By JOHN FOX, Junior, Author of "A Cumberland Vendetta." Illustrated by W. T. SMEDLEY. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

"It is interesting to note that fine novel, 'The Kentuckians,' is in high favour in the States."—Academy.

"A story so strong and finely told that it gives a startling kind of pleasure by its vigour and its novelty."—World.

"In 'The Kentuckians,' if we mistake not, will be found one of the few real successes of the literary harvest which has been reaped during the past few months. . . . A story of such intense vitality, force, and fine literary workmanship that it is impossible to doubt the claim of 'The Kentuckians' upon our serious attention."—Speaker.

HARPER & BROTHERS, LONDON AND NEW YORK.

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON'S

NEW NOVELS.

THE INCIDENTAL BISHOP. By GRANT ALLEN
Author of "What's Bred in the Bone," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"In 'The Incidental Bishop' Mr. Grant Allen has achieved a distinct success. . . . He has, in fact, given us a novel that contains originality, humour, tragedy, and pathos."—Morning Post.

THE REV. ANNABEL LEE. By ROBERT BUCHANAN, Author of "God and the Man." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The author's object in writing this novel is to show that, if all religions were destroyed, and perfect material prosperity arrived at, Humanity would reach not perfection, but stagnation. The story starts with the Twentieth Century, and deals with the efforts of a charming and beautiful maiden, the Rev. Annabel Lee, to lead back her race to the precepts of a forgotten Christianity.

THE VIRGIN of the SUN: a Tale of the Conquest of Peru. By GEORGE GRIFFITH, Author of "The Angel of Revolution," "Valdar the Oft-Born," "Men who have Made an Empire," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Frontispiece by Stanley Wood, 6s.

THE KEEPERS of the PEOPLE. By EDGAR JEPSON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [April]

Mr. Edgar Jepson's new novel tells the story of the ruling of a kingdom in the East by an English family, who make the maxim, 'It is expedient that one man die for the people,' the first principle of their government, and follow it to its extreme logical conclusions.

THREE WOMEN and MR. FRANK CARDWELL. By W. PETT RIDGE, Author of "A Clever Life." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"To anyone who delights in a piece of thoroughly sound literary workmanship Mr. Pett Ridge's book will always be welcome."—Sheffield Independent.

LUCKY BARGEE. By HARRY LANDER, Author of "Weighed in the Balance," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [April]

"Lucky Bargee" takes to the river, and his life there is depicted with marvellous realism; later on he is educated as a gentleman, and ultimately ceases to be a mere polished savage by the gentle influence of one of the most charming heroines of modern fiction.

THE MARQUIS of VALROSE. From the French of CHARLES FOLEY. Translated by Alys Hallard. 3s. 6d.

This is a stirring story, taken from one of the most touching episodes of the Civil War of La Vendée. Since Balzac, there has been no more vivid and interesting story of the savage internecine warfare waged between the triumphant republicans and the militant aristocrats who had survived the Revolution.

"LATTER-DAY STORIES." Crown 8vo, cloth, with Portrait, 2s. 6d. each VOLUME I.

MISS BETTY. By BRAM STOKER, Author of "Dracula."

"A very charming story. Miss Betty is a figure in fiction to be remembered."—World.

"One of the tenderest, most beautiful love stories we have read for some time."—Sheffield Telegraph.

"Many will consider this the strongest story the author has yet written."—Scotsman.

VOLUME II.

VAN WAGENER'S WAYS. By W. L. ALDEN, Author of "His Daughter," &c.

"Mr. Alden's humour is permanent. It is not made for the moment, it does not write broad farce. His fun is of a kind which the most determined pessimist will find it hard to withstand. Such a book as his is something of a godsend, and the man who can excite a hearty laugh as he does is really a benefactor to the race."—Dundee Advertiser.

VOLUME III. Ready April 1.

AN EGYPTIAN COQUETTE. By CLIVE HOLLAND, Author of "My Japanese Wife," &c.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE will be sent on receipt of Post Card to "Book Department."

London: C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, Henrietta Street,

SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1898.

No. 1350, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| obtained of a Newsvendor or a Railway Station . . . . .                     | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . . . .               | 0 15 3  | 6 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

THE EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

Business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

COUNT ALBERT DE MUN'S formal reception into the French Academy, Thursday of last week, made an unusually brilliant occasion. The Papal Nuncio was present, and so was a Russian grand duke and the Russian Ambassador. M. Jules Saon supplied the new Academician with an inspiring theme; and he himself was the subject of an oration from Count d'Hausville.

THE great-grandson of Helvetius, Count Albert de Mun is also a nephew of Mrs. Augustus Craven, and has, therefore, like many modern Frenchmen, close alliances with England. Her best known book, Le Vint d'une Sœur, has passed through forty French editions, and has been crowned by the Academy itself; so that, in a sense, the fact may be said to have done homage to the mother before they received the son. In England The Sister's Story, as translated by Miss Emily Bowles, has made a large circle of friends, some of them in unexpected quarters. Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff, for instance, has exhausted the vocabulary of admiration in speaking of this record of the fascinating de la Ferronnays girls, one of whom bore Mme. de Mun; another—Olga—died in her maidenly teens; while Pauline herself, after her marriage with Mr. Augustus Craven, told the "story" with a tenderness of sentiment hardly to be met with in England, the supposed favoured land of the family and the home. Other literary works were hers, including a life of her friend, Lily Georgiana Fullerton, Earl Granville's sister, and a writer of novels much admired by Mr. Gladstone in their now distant day. Count Albert de Mun is his aunt's literary executor; and there is always a sort of understood promise of a biography of her from his hand.

THE mind of the Count de Mun is written largely across the sketch of Breton life in Mr. Bodley's book on "France." No better guide could the English writer have had; for all doors, including those of the convent cells, were open to the intrepid defender of religion in the Chamber of Deputies. A Royalist by tradition, and by family connexion an aristocrat, he yet accepted the new order, when Leo XIII. expressed the wish that internal divisions should cease, and that all Frenchmen should unite under the Republic. Particularly cordial, therefore, was his reception last spring in Rome, when his hotel was besieged each afternoon by all that was fair among the Papalini, and where his fine military figure in the streets recalled to old inhabitants that of his grandfather, who was the Ambassador of France there when this century was young.

THE death of Aubrey Boardsley at the age of 24, at Mentone, is sad, but not unexpected. The present writer met him first soon after he had given up his work in the Guardian Fire Office. He came into the room—a frail, slight figure, with pale, luminous face, and a manner volatilo and enthusiastic—with a portfolio of drawings under his arm. One inclines to think that first harvest of his perverse, corrupt genius represented his best work. Two or three of us bought specimens there and then, and one of the results of that evening was his introduction to The Studio, which was in the throes of its first number. Mr. Pennell was asked to write the article, and it was The Studio that gave him his first acknowledgment.

He did interesting work for the Pall Mall Budget, illustrating the Lyceum production of "Becket" in his own weird way—a way, let it be said, that never was and never could be popular. Later he drew for the Yellow Book—in fact, he was the Yellow Book—and when he ceased to draw for that interesting quarterly, it died gallantly, but surely. Aubrey Beardsley's imitators were many, but none possessed his strong, virile line, or his grotesque and fantastic imagination. His recognition was swift and complete within its own bounds; he was appreciated from the first by a small enthusiastic circle. He had a new thing to say, he said it with a wonderful dexterity, for he had precocious power over his material from the first. And he died at 24. A career, indeed!

Now that the "regulation" length of the novel has become so abridged, is it to become a fashion with writers who find the "regulation" length not long enough to revive the three-volume form in a new guise? M. Zola has just published the third part of his trilogy, "Lourdes—Rome—Paris"; an eminent novelist recently issued a volume, which, though "complete in itself" (to use a publishing phrase), is expected to form the first part of a trilogy; and now we hear of a third triological arrangement. Mr. Mac-laren Cobban has planned a kind of epical trilogy on the subject of the Marquis of Montrose—"The Great Marquis." The first part, "complete in itself," upon which

Mr. Cobban has been more or less engaged for about three years, and which treats of Montrose's youth and his connexion with the Covenant, will be published in the autumn by Messrs. Methuen.

J. K. HUYSMANS' new novel, The Cathedral, of which the French edition was reviewed in our issue of February 19, has now been published by Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. in an English translation from the pen of Miss Clara Bell. Ill-health prevented Mr. C. Kegan Paul from continuing the work of translation begun by him in En Route, but he contributes a prefatory note which may deter some Protestant readers from the book. Here is an example of the tone of the preface (Mr. Kegan Paul, by the by, was not always a Catholic): "The general view of the matter may be summed up in the words of the hotel-keeper in a Burgundian town: 'Ah, sir, I hope you are not a Protestant; there are only three Protestants in this town, and they are all persons of indifferent lives.'"

MR. R. MAYNARD LEONARD writes: "You quote with approval the article on "Dogs in Poetry" contributed by the Rev. J. Hudson to the current issue of The Westminster Review. Will you allow me to say that almost every page of the article bears evidence that this gentleman has consulted the volume on The Dog in British Poetry, edited by me for Mr. Nutt, and has assimilated the notes in a manner that excites my admiration. I write this as Mr. Hudson has omitted to acknowledge his indebtedness to my work in the slightest form. One thing, however, is Mr. Hudson's own contribution to the subject—the suggestion that Mrs. Browning in her poem on Flush (Mr. Hudson prints Plush) had vivisection in mind, teste:

"Whiskered cats anointed flec,
Sturdy stoppers keep from thee
Cologne distillations!"

THE proposal to issue a Robert Louis Stevenson "Reader" for use in schools has been approved by the family of the author. Mr. Lloyd Osborne will make the selection, and the volume will be issued by Messrs. Chatto & Windus.

MR. W. E. HENLEY has almost completed the MS. of his annotations to the second volume (second in order of publication) of his edition of Byron. It contains the first instalment of the Poems: that is to say, "Hours of Idleness," "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers," and Cantos 1 and 2 of "Childe Harold." The volume will be ready in April.

It may save trouble to the bibliographer of Mr. W. E. Henley's works, if we point out a slight inaccuracy in the preface to his Poems. Mr. Henley states there that the "Hospital Sketches" which he reprints in his new volume were contributed to "Voluntaries for an East London Hospital"

(David Stott) and published in 1888. Whereas the volume was actually published in July, 1887, and bears the date of 1887 on the title-page. It is now quite out of print, and copies are rarely met with.

WE are glad to hear that Mr. F. C. Burnand, the editor of Punch, is recovering from the sharp attack of illness which has confined him to his house at Ramsgate. Mr. Burnand expects to be at work again shortly.

M. LÉON DAUDET has begun in the Revue de Paris the biography of his father, the late Alphonse Daudet. The first instalment has many interesting things in it. He never, says his son, became callous or rigid minded. Even in his last years he retained his flexibility and impressionableness. He gave of his nature very readily. No one coming with a tale of distress was turned away. Although Daudet was not to be imposed upon, yet he could forgive even fraud. The fact that a man was driven to lie was in itself pitiable to him, and he pitied accordingly. His eye saw everything and his memory retained everything. Once he met in after life a schoolfellow whom he had not seen for thirty years. "Have you still that little red mark on your thumb-nail?" he asked. M. Léon Daudet has begun well; his biography, if it continues as it starts, should make a fascinating book.

In the following passage we gather the effects of the Franco-German War on Daudet's mind:

"The war of 1870 was a revelation to Alphonse Daudet. It made a man of him. He said that one night, as he was in the snow on outpost duty, he had his first attack of pains in the body, and fits of remorse for his indolence that let him write light verse or glib prose without a thought of a serious or a durable task. He respected display. A regimental band intoxicated him. The title of officer was a passport to his house and his heart. One of the few questions on which he was never open to compromise was that of patriotism. The Terrible Year, in his mind, was a date that marked not only his own change, but a change in the nation, its customs, its prejudices, its culture. I think no father loved his sons more, but he would have given us both for the sake of the flag without the slightest hesitation. I asked him why he did not write an account of his impressions of 1870. He shook his head: 'Such an account would not ennoble souls. A warlike country like France requires that victory should be heralded to it.'

In his Literary London Mr. W. P. Ryan endeavours to make a book do the work of the newspaper. It is a collection of sketches and skits on some writers of the moment, so ephemeral in its nature that already many passages are out of date. Mr. Ryan is quick and fearless, but he has very little to say. There is always room for a literary satirist, but such work should be well considered and as good as it can be, not a réchauffé of hasty newspaper articles. Mr. Ryan might with advantage take the finish of the Rejected Addresses as an ideal. He has a rapid eye for absurdities and a fund of audacity. Some of Mr. Ryan's titles will show his scope: "The Flight from the Caine-yard," "The New Doom of Narcissus (sometimes styled Richard)," "Authors I Cannot Take Seriously," "The Great Macleod Mystery," "A Lunar Elopement: the Key to Allen Gaunt's Defection." Hardly a writer of poetry or fiction now at all in the public eye, excepting always those of the first rank, escapes Mr. Ryan's notice. Some of them, it is true, may be undesirable—we agree with Mr. Ryan cordially in many of his opinions—but it is questionable if they should be served up in this manner.

SYNCHRONOUSLY with Literary London comes Literary Landmarks of Glasgow, by Mr. James A. Kilpatrick. Mr. Kilpatrick is the antithesis of Mr. Ryan: he chronicles genially and modestly, and is out of love with no one. His pages are a panorama of literary men who have association with the Scotch city: Burns and Campbell, Carlyle and Christopher North, Smollett and Tannahill, Edmund Kean and Edward Irving, Adam Smith and Scott; Mr. Barrie and Bret Harte; Mr. William Black and Mr. Buchanan. Mr. Black was born in Glasgow. "I am sorry," he writes to the author, "I cannot give you the number in the Trongate, but certain I am I was not born 'in the top flat.' That would have been altogether too poetic." Afterwards he studied at the Art School in the city, but "I was a complete failure, so qualified myself for a time in after life as an art critic."

WE meet also with a Glaswegian named Andrew Park, a song-writer and a fellow of great assurance, who used to rail in no measured terms at the mention of a new poem of Tennyson. "Tennyson!" he would exclaim. "Pshaw! I could reel off Tennyson by the yard." It was noticeable, however, that he never did.

SOME weeks ago we printed a criticism on the work of the Italian poet Signor Arturo Graf, in which his achievement was highly praised. Mr. R. McLintock now writes to say that he was led thereby to buy Signor Graf's new volume, La Danaida, and he sends us English renderings of two of the sonnets. Here is one—"Girls Dancing":

"On flowery turf that high woods girdle round
With leafy rustle and shadows dark and dim,
Lo! maidens dancing—young, short-trussed,
and slim,
And each fair brow with bright-leaved laurel crowned.

They dance to rhythm of some quaint old-world hymn;

Their soft feet barely press the enamelled ground;

Zephyr and sun make free with golden hair unbound,

And play on bosom white and twinkling limb—

Bosoms untouched else—child-like, pleasure-fraught,

As parted lips and blush-rose cheeks declare,
And lighted eyes, serenely void of thought.

And holy light pervades the spacious air
That sea and mountain breathe, and, unbesought,

The shady grove makes music, sweet and rare."

MR. FISHER UNWIN sends us the following note: "Mr. Chamberlain has been reading Hugh Wynne, a novel which, in his constituency, has created something like a furor. It should gratify Mr. Fisher Unwin, the publisher, and Dr. Weir Mitchell, the author, to know that Mr. Chamberlain agrees entirely in the high praise given to it by the Birmingham press. In his opinion it is a remarkable study of character and history."

A LETTER from Lewis Carroll to a child in America contains a reference of his own to the Snark's significance, on which we have already collected some opinions: "As to the meaning of the Snark? I'm very much afraid I didn't mean anything but nonsense! Still, you know, words mean more than we mean to express when we use them: so a whole book ought to mean a great deal more than the writer meant. So, whatever good meanings are in the book, I'm very glad to accept as the meaning of the book. The best that I've seen is by a lady (she published it in a letter to a newspaper)—that the whole book is an allegory on the search after happiness. I think this fits in beautifully in many ways—particularly about the bathing machines: when the people get weary of life, and can't find happiness in town or in books, then they rush off to the seaside, to see what bathing-machines will do for them."

THE New York Critic gives an amusing account of the realistic methods resorted to by book agents in America:

"A Yale College professor in his study, hearing his doorbell ring two or three times, unanswered, finally went to the door himself. On the steps outside he found a man doubled up and convulsed and collapsed in a fit of laughter, who at sight of the Professor made a great effort to regain his composure, and speak, but in vain. Finally, after waiting awhile, the Professor demanded, 'What ails you?' To whom, at length, the man, though gasping for breath, and able to get out only a word or two at a time, replied: 'Mark Twain's new book!—I'm selling it—waiting for—your door to open—I just took a look into it—myself—and oh! oh!—and off he went into another paroxysm. Whether or not on this proof of its quality the Professor bought the book, the story does not tell. But when the canvasser left, he followed him stealthily, and, to his intense amusement, saw him go through the same performance at the next house where he called."

The device is, we suppose, capable of variation. With a pathetic book the sobbing agent would deluge the doorstep with tears.

CONCERNING the private letters of M. Zola to Mr. George Moore, which the Chronicle discovered for sale in a second-hand bookseller's, Mr. Moore has written to the editor of our contemporary:

"That I did not sell the letters, and that they are being offered for sale without my authorisation, goes without saying. When I return to London I shall ask the bookseller (whose name you will give me) to explain how he came into possession of these letters. At present I can only say that I remember having been asked for M. Zola's autograph, by whom I cannot say; I vaguely remember having given away letter, remarking that it would be more interesting than a bare signature. To do such a thing may seem scandalous to you; you are evidently a severe moralist, but I hope that there are some who will find my conduct excusable. . . . M. Zola is more careful with his papers than I am with mine, but should he lose what have stolen from him a packet of my letters, and should I afterwards hear of these letters being offered for sale, I should not feel angry even aggrieved."

APPROPOS of the Daily Chronicle, we find in an interesting little pamphlet, entitled The Local Press of London, by Mr. Walter Wellsman, the following story of its rise. A well-known printer in Clerkenwell being often called upon to print "Wanted" bills, and "Lost" bills, and notices generally, started a small demy sheet, four pages, called the Cherkecell News. At first it was entirely advertisements. Time passed on, little bits of news were put in the paper, which was published twice a week at a halfpenny. Later on it was published three times a week, ultimately coming out as a penny daily, with, probably, five out of its eight pages full of "Wants," and other interesting local advertisements. The paper blossomed into a full-grown daily under the title of the London Daily Chronicle, and my firm had the pleasure of selling it to Mr. Edward Lloyd. It is now the Daily Chronicle, one of the greatest and, probably, one of the most successful of all London dailies."

THE little organ of the English and American art students in Paris, The Quartier Latin, prints this month the following neat train by Mr. William Francis Barnard:

"ART.

The tree of life had grown through time untold, and branch and leaf had each fulfilled its part; there came a perfect spring with sun of gold—the tree burst forth in bloom; and that was Art."

A SIXPENNY copy of The Deemster, one of Mr. Hall Caine's best stories, has been sent out by Messrs. Chatto & Windus. A glance at the last page arouses in our mind a fugitive thought: Do all Mr. Caine's books end on the word "Amen"? The author, with gladness in his eyes, greets us on the cover.

CORRESPONDENT—C. S. F.—writes in connexion with our paragraph last week on Dean Farrar's wealth of quotation: "I attended—stood through—Dean, then Archdeacon, Farrar's Bampton Lectures at Oxford some twelve years ago. In the first lecture I was gratified to notice that all the quotations which I recognised to be such as were also found in the lecturer's little book Greek Syntax—a thrifty prodigality!"

In giving "Dear Heart" as the title of Mr. Breton's forthcoming story we were guilty of a slip. His title is True Heart; or, Early Passages in the Life of Eberhard Treuherz, Scholar and Craftsman, telling of his Wanderings and Adventures, his Intercourse with the People of Consequence to their Age, and how he came Scatheless through a Time of Strife.

It is odd that so good a title as True Heart should be available at this late stage.

ONLY a few days after Mr. J. G. Frazer's gigantic edition of Pausanias comes also from Messrs. Macmillan Mrs. J. G. Frazer's Scenes of Child Life in Colloquial French, one of the most alluring stepping-stones to a knowledge of the French language that we have seen. Mrs. Frazer becomes the entertaining historian of a little naughty French child, whose wilfulness and adventures are told in easy dialogue form, illustrated by Mr. H. M. Brock. In the course of her preface Mrs. Frazer says: "This age is the golden age of childhood everywhere, but more so in France than anywhere else. The child has been enthroned by two of our greatest writers. With Rousseau and the fall of Monarchism Sa Majesté Bébé became a power. With Victor Hugo he has become an idol." Parents wishing to teach French attractively could hardly have a better ally than Mrs. Frazer.

IF Mr. J. M. Dent is susceptible to flattery, he should wear a pleased smile when he takes in his hand the first volume of the "Library of Devotion," which Messrs. Methuen are beginning to issue. It is a very attractive little book—The Confessions of St. Augustine, edited by Dr. Bigg—but it is impossible to believe it would wear quite such an air had Mr. Dent's "Temple Classics" never appeared.

MR. DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY, who was the prime mover in the scheme for sending an appeal on behalf of M. Zola to the French Government, has written to explain its withdrawal. "The promoters," he says, "of the movement have been persuaded that, in the present sensitive condition of the national mind in France, their intended appeal might rather harm than aid the object of their sympathy. . . . Mr. Max O'Rell, who may be supposed to know his countrymen, is of opinion that our voluntary self-effacement would have a more favourable effect upon French feeling than our perseverance. Hundreds of prominent Englishmen share that belief. We efface ourselves, therefore, not because of any lack of numbers or of influence, but in loyalty to the cause we have at heart. One of the purposes we had in mind was to disabuse the French Press of the idea that English feeling is inimical to France. In retiring, we may at least be allowed to reiterate that truth."

ON the presumption that "the ACADEMY is not in the Stevensonian conspiracy," a correspondent in Boston, U.S.A., favours us with a long, long letter concerning Stevenson's famous open letter to Dr. Hyde of Honolulu on the subject of Father Damien. Our correspondent's contention is, that Dr. Hyde was as good a man as Stevenson, if not a better, and that Father Damien was not what Stevenson believed him to be. Furthermore, he states that at the time of the appearance of Stevenson's open letter he and others wrote to the papers in vindication of Dr. Hyde, but, with the exception of Mr. Arthur Gilman, were given no hearing. Mr. Gilman, however, was attacked from all sides. This being so, says our correspondent, it was unfair on our part to make the comment, as we did a few weeks ago, that any attack on Stevenson's attitude should have been made at the time, during his life. Had we known then what we now learn we should not have said that; but, all the same, we see no advantage in re-opening the question now. There is no need to belong to a Stevensonian conspiracy to come to such a decision.

A Boston publishing firm has made known the fact that of 543 MSS. which it received in the past year 212 were fiction, and 69 poetry. Out of this statement a controversy has risen. One journal maintains that such a proportion of poetry to fiction is a respectable one; another thinks that sixty-nine poetical MSS. in more than 500 are a poor show, indicating that poetry has come to be looked upon as a mere "minor ramification of literature" instead of one of its chief fundaments." But a third journal justly points out that the arithmetical comparison is not a fair one. Prose requires more space than poetry, and the complete works of almost any poet might be packed into one volume. Poetry, the most difficult of all forms of writing, is gaily selected by beginners as the first field for their conquering pen. Fortunately thousands of these writers never get further: they perish like flies stuck in treacle.

WE may remind our readers that Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. have their biographical edition of Thackeray's complete works in active preparation. This edition will comprise additional material and hitherto unpublished letters, sketches, and drawings. Thackeray's desire that no biography of him should be written has always been respected by his literary executors, but the present edition is not styled "biographical" without cause. The works will be arranged as far as possible in chronological order, and memoirs, forming Introductions to each volume, have been written by the novelist's surviving daughter, Mrs. Richmond Ritchie.

A STORY of a scholar who has seen better days is told by the Birmingham Post. An inmate of a workhouse, out on leave, called at a bookseller's and propounded the following question: "Our chaplain last Sunday spoke of the mother of Achilles dipping him in the river Lethe. Now, if my memory does not fail me, the chaplain was wrong, for it was not the Lethe, but the Styx into which Achilles was dipped, making all but the heel of him invulnerable." The bookseller corroborated his visitor's suspicion, and sent him away in the best of spirits.

THERE is an excellent portrait of Mr. George Gissing, by Mr. Will Rothenstein, in the new number of English Portraits (Grant Richards). Meanwhile we observe that in an American review Mr. Gissing is styled the "Good Gray Novelist," which, as a descriptive epithet, might endure.

TO ENGLAND.

ENGLAND, that barest me, whose limbs are of thine earth!
Suckled'st me with thine air, milk of heroic worth!
What is this thing I hear? What is this thing they tell?
That save the fallow-visaged gold, thou lovest nothing well:
If thy first-born, Renown, cry: "Mother,
help, I bleed!"
Thou falterest thrifty saws of counsel, fear,
and heed;
That thou hast put from thee Honour, thy plumèd spouse,
To whom in armèd steel thou took'st the glancing vows;
Wisdom nor wrath can strip thy sword against the strong,
And what once stirred thy blood, now
stirreth but thy tongue.
Only thou summonest heart when merchants
cry to thee,
And plainly tell'st thy foes—they act uncivilly.
Say that the tale is false, a lie as deep as hell!
How is it not much more than false—impossible?

O England, O my mother, Lady of the Earth,
I thank thee for thy breasts, and thank thee for my birth!
The coward born of thee lacks courage to be cowed,
For thou art proud, and mak'st thy children to be proud.
And with thy great approach, whose steps are called Créci,
Poitiers, Azincour, Seringapatam, Delhi,
Trafalgar, Waterloo—each an heroic sound—
Thy halo has prevailed to the earth's utmost bound;
And as beneath the tread o' the sun red blossoms rise,
Whereso thy foot was set it printed victories.
All things thy hand has wrought to which thy hand was put;
In every clime and soil thy flag has stricken root,
The bannered stars behold thy flickering banners stand;
The leashes of the earth are gathered in thy hand.
Babylon did not know the regions thou dost tame,
Ears that were deaf to Rome are deafened with thy name.
Magnificent is thy state, and august is thy rule,
Thy hand is on the East, thou sett'st the West to school;
Thine awe is in their heart, thy law is in their soul,
All of thy ways found upright, equal thy control.
They whom her shaken locks have held in terror, they
Suck from the lioness's dugs the milk of sway.
They who their ancient kings adored with whitened lips,

They that were scourged with scorpions,
thou dost correct with whips;
Therefore do all the seas groan scarrèd with thy ships,
The riches of the nations flow to thee like sand;
Thou givest them thy peace, their price is in thy hand.
Thy garners are made full, thy glories heaped and pressed,
Wherefore thou sayest to thy soul: "Come,
eat, and rest!"
Thy soul desireth peace, and may desire it well;
In shadow of thy peace all they that buy and sell,
The merchants of the four-nooked world their chaffer hold;
But what was won by iron, thou shalt not keep by gold.

If the world's wheels should slack, the heavens would part in war,
Sun march its battle against sun, star
mounded upon star.
No less would be the ruin, if thou shouldst
shirk thy fate,
Shouldst thou neglect, forget, the gods have made thee great.
O England, slothful, blind! too confident and high,
Who stookest in thyself, and bad'st the world go by:
Saidst—"Go thy ways in peace, and leave my ways to me";
Know'st thou not no man's friend is all men's enemy?
One friend is thine in the East—what! dost thou count her cost?
Dost hesitate, falter? Whilst thou falterest
she is lost!
Count, if it please thee count, count what thy navies can,
Poised against Russia, France, Germany—and Japan!
O England, palterer, falterer! again I say to thee:
"Whoso is no man's friend is all men's enemy."
Thou sayst: "The nations hate me; how have I earned their hate?"
Thy sin is heavy, England; thou hast been too great,
The nations hate thee not for these or for those faults;
Nay, thou hast ruled the world, the world it is revolts.
Smitten on either cheek, from one to other hurled,
It is the world 'gainst England, England
'gainst the world.

On other marts than those where the hoarse trader yells,
There are things bought and sold which not the merchant sells.
The shares thereon are honour, and the investment blood,
And honour's shares must rise at length,
though all the world withstood.
A rich estate thou hold'st which thy forefathers got;
It is not thine to barter, thine to let it rot.

Thou guard'st it for thy sons, this regal-fair estate,
No jot of land or honour is thine to alienate:
Wilt thou, for present grant of despicable
peace,
Mortgage the greatness, England, held in trust for these?
O keep thou chained the watch-dog War,
'tis well, in truth;
But let it not grow old, sluggard, and gapped of tooth.
For in a cause approved and virile, we do hold
The gun's rough lips plead nobler than the voice of gold.
Our England, show 'tis false, thou stoop'st unto the vice
Of palsied years in persons and in peoples—avarice!
Yea, though if thou shouldst fall, it were such thunder-clap,
Have the heavens spatial silence to fill the after-gap?
Though over all the earth thy ruin would be
hurled,
And desolate and unguided stand a motherless world;
Sooner than this, O fall with banner lifted high!
If mightily thou canst not live, take mighty ways to die;
If thou no more canst greatly live, choose—thou canst greatly die!

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

STEVENSON'S FABLES.

THE fable with Stevenson was an early love. "Will-o'-the-Mill" and "Markheim" are instances of one type of the form. In the collection which he called "Fables," however, he keeps nearer to the normal type. About the year 1888 the idea of publishing them in a little book was strong with him; later a crowd of new interests drove the thing from his mind, and his death left the project uncompleted. There are only a score of them altogether, and many of them scarcely fill half a page. But they are so perfect in their way, finished with so sure a touch, their language so jewelled and chosen, that the mere exquisiteness of the manner must give them claim to life, wholly apart from the acuteness and insight in the thought.

The mise-en-scène of the fables—and it plays as important a part in this form of literature as in others—is curiously varied.
In some the background has a sort of legendary and mystical quality akin to that of Celtic folk-tales. The use of certain archaic words, the perpetual appending of the epithet, the recondite imagery, and a half-epic form of narration, all combine to reproduce much of the flavour of a Gaelic legend. In others the names and conventions of Norse poetry are borrowed with some success; and in others, again—and these are chiefly the shorter and earlier ones—we have the ordinary mixed background that is familiar in Æsop. In one sense the best atmosphere for the fable is that most remote from common life; but certain precautions must be taken. Granted the first fantastic supposition, the details must be bona fide and convincing. An eccentric fidelity to itself is the most necessary characteristic, for in this way alone can the problem be made to have the flavour of drama and some unity preserved in the emotional effect. In this one respect I cannot think that Stevenson ever seriously fails. An artist to his finger-tips, he could feel the slightest clouding of the mirror. He never elaborates the problem to the weakening of the drama, nor lets a purely optional interest obscure the inner framework of thought. If the fables fall short at all, it is because of an over-elaboration in the dancing of the two interests, so that we begin to watch for the author's skill and regret the rest.

Roughly speaking, the fables fall into three classes: those which, for want of a better name, one might call gnomic, which deal with the little moralities, the inconsistencies of speech and conduct, and the sufficiency of proverbs and pocket maxims; those which one might call cosmic fables, the circular counterparts of an essay like Pulvis et Umbra, which regard the world from a great distance, and embody the best comic reflections of an alien; and, lastly, those which treat of conventional problems in ethics and metaphysics, erucis old as theory. To the first class all the shorter belong. "The Sinking Ship" suggests a word-puzzle of Lewis Carroll's; and, save for a hint somewhere of a moral, does not this smack of "A Mad Tea-party"?

"I beg pardon, sir," said Mr. Spoker, "but what is precisely the difference between shaving in a sinking ship and smoking in a powder magazine?"

"Or doing anything at all in any conceivable circumstance?" cried the Captain.

"Perfectly conclusive. Give me a cigar!"
"Two minutes afterwards the ship blew up with a glorious detonation."

Of course, the heroic is always just on the verge of farce, but could it have been put more neatly? Most of such fables have for their moral a sort of inversion of the copy-book rule. If we can imagine small boys in some future day spelling over some sixth truth as "Punishment should be proportioned to deserts," we find the inversion in "The Devil and the Innkeeper." Or take the wholesome tale of "The Penitent":

A man met a lad weeping. "What do you weep for?" he asked.

"I am weeping for my sins," said the lad.
"You must have little to do," said the man.
The next day they met again. Once more the lad was weeping:

"Why do you weep now?" asked the man.
"I am weeping because I have nothing to do," said the lad.

"I thought it would come to that," said the man.

In the second class there is more fancy and more riot, more choice of imagery. The first of all, "The Song of the Morrow," is more fairy-tale than fable, for it is the poetry of it which most impresses—the king's daughter of Duntrine, the fairest between two seas, whose hair was like spun gold and whose eyes were like pools in a river; the "beach of the sea, where it was autumn and the wind blew from the place of rains." "The Distinguished Stranger" is a sort of earlier version of Mr. Wells's Wonderful Visit, and "The Poor Thing" is a queer, subtle little apologue on the doctrine of heredity. This is how the wandering soul speaks to "the man in the islands who fished for his bare bellyful, who was bitter poor in goods and bitter ugly of countenance, and had no wife":

"My name is not yet named, and my nature not yet sure. For I am part of a man; and I was a part of your fathers, and went out to fish and fight with them in the ancient days. But now is my turn not yet come; and I wait until you have a wife, and then shall I be in your son, and have part of him, rejoicing manfully to launch the boat into the surf, skilful to direct the helm, and a man of might where the ring closes and the blows are going."

But most remarkable is the last class of tales. Stevenson at no time professed an interest in metaphysics, but I have heard an authority of some significance call this book the best work in metaphysics published for many years. The old stale formulæ of the schools, the easy solutions which are associated with special creeds, are re-stated and transformed and quickened into life. "The House of Eld" is a very subtle sermon on the worth of convention and, at the same time, on the folly of its defenders. It is the old lesson, again, of "Pulvis et Umbra," how that theories pass but the life remains, a pin-point of truth for the perplexed seeker. In "Something In It," the missionary, who is snatched to the abodes of Akainga, finds every shred lost to him except his honesty. In "Faith, Half-Faith, and No Faith At All," the priest and the virtuous person are found wanting; it is only the uncritical old rover with the axe who is willing to die with Odin. "The sticks may break, the stones crumble, the eternal altars tilt and tumble," but the pin-point remains in the man's plain fidelity to himself. So, too, is the best of them all, the fable of "The Touchstone," which is a sort of Appearance and Reality in a nutshell. The Younger Son (it is gratifying to find the much-praised younger son at last shown up) brings a piece of mirror as the touchstone, confirms the old king in the belief of a lifetime, and marries the princess. But the elder goes roaming the world and finds many touchstones which somehow spoil each other, till at last he finds a clear pebble which gives him truth.

"Now in the light of each other, all the touchstones lost their hue and fire, and withered like stars at morning; but in the light of the pebble their beauty remained, only the pebble was the most bright. 'How if this be the truth?' he cried, 'that all are a little true?' And he took it and turned its light upon the heavens, and they deepened about him like the pit; and he turned it on the hills, and the hills were cold and rugged, but life ran in their sides so that his own life bounded; and he turned it on the dust, and he beheld the dust with joy and terror; and he turned it on himself, and knelt down and prayed."

So he returned with the touchstone, only to find that the girl had married his brother and he was left in the cold.

"'Methinks you have a cruel tongue,' said the elder; and he pulled out the clear pebble and turned its light on his brother; and behold the man was lying, his soul was shrunk into the smallness of a pea, and his heart was a bag of little fears like scorpions, and love was dead in his bosom. And at that the elder cried out aloud, and turned the light of the pebble on the maid, and lo! she was but a mask of a woman, and withinside she was quite dead, and she smiled as a clock ticks and knew not wherefore, 'Oh, well,' said the elder brother, 'I perceive there is both good and bad. So fare ye all as well as ye may in the sun; but I will go forth into the world with my pebble in my pocket.'"

A PLEA FOR PURER ENGLISH.

A CORRESPONDENT of the ACADEMY, criticising some recent remarks of mine on the subject of "Newspaper English," expressed the opinion that the living speech of the English people would continue its natural development unwarped by the narrow ideas of the newspaper pedant, whose existence he admitted. I am afraid he underrated the influence of the slipshod or ignorantly pretentious newspaper scribe in moulding popular speech. The extension of newspaper reading in these days creates, it seems to me, a wholly new set of conditions with regard to grammar and idiom, just as the invention of printing itself, in the first instance, checked the natural fluidity of language. As a rule, the newspaper reader is just sufficiently acquainted with the principles of grammar to know that he must keep a guard upon his tongue and his pen, and he naturally takes as his model the printed English which is supplied him with his rolls at breakfast. This would be a happy circumstance if the model English were written by some one whose discretion could be trusted, but unfortunately the bulk of the best newspapers is the work of men who have no sense of style, no acquaintance with philology—in fact, no literary culture whatever. I am not speaking of the leader-writers, the art or book reviewers, or even the special correspondent. Perhaps one requires to know the inside of a newspaper office to appreciate the true dimensions of the evil. The real arbiter of style in a London newspaper is the outside reporter, the "liner," as he is technically called, from his being paid so much a line, whose "copy" is, to some extent, licked into shape by the sub-editor. Few liners can be trusted to write a single sentence grammatically. The sub-editor corrects the grosser inaccuracies of the copy, but he has no time, even if he had the ability, to recast in good English the reports of fires, burglaries, murders, School Board and County Council proceedings, &c., which accordingly go into circulation with all their inherent vices unmodified. A very strange sort of English is that coming into vogue—an English where the interdependence of tenses, the use of the subjunctive, and all the other subtleties of idiom, are played havoc with. Perhaps if the "liner" were left to himself we should not fare so badly; he might be trusted to give us at least the "living English of the people." The real enemy is the sub-editor, whose ideas of style prompt him to cut out every idiomatic expression, every turn of phrase which gives spirit or colour to the language. For the sub-editor himself is by no means a cultured person; he knows just enough of the rules of grammar to misapply them, as when he makes persons talk "loudly," or flowers smell "sweetly," or say "last week I intended to have written," instead of "to write." He is the newspaper pedant that I have in my eye, and the worst of all pedants is the ignorant one. In newspaper sub-editors, above all, a little knowledge is a dangerous thing.

It is to this enemy of the English language that we probably owe such a monstrosity as "an university," "an usage," where the "an" is inserted before a vowel to gratify the eye, and in ignorance of the fact that it is the ear that has to be consulted; "an university" being, in fact, no more tolerable than "an young man." "Very disappointed," "very pleased," "very obliged," are also pet expressions of the newspaper scribe who does not know that the words here qualified are not adjectives but participles, and that the proper qualificative is "much." If he came across the fine old English idiom "Father wants the door shutting," he would change the last word into "shut." He it is, too, who fails to distinguish between the proper and the improper use of the word "party." Of course, one can be a "party" to a law-suit, but there is no excuse for speaking of a "party in black" if a single person is meant, or for calling a bishop a "party in a shovel hat." The printer's reader has faults of his own, but it is the "liner" and the newspaper sub-editor who are responsible for much of the vulgarity and the platitudes of current newspaper English. Have they, either of them, ever heard of the "double genitive"—that construction so peculiarly English? "A speech of Mr. Gladstone" is journalese; but, of course, it is incorrect—it should be "Mr. Gladstone's." "A picture of the king" is not the same thing as a "picture of the king's"; the former being a portrait of the king while the latter is his majesty's property. In the inflections of the pronouns, the existence of this possessive becomes apparent. We say "a book of mine." Not even a newspaper sub-editor would say "a book of me"; but he continues fatuously to repeat—I came across the phrase the other day, and there are few issues of a newspaper where its equivalent is not to be found—"a remark of Mr. Chamberlain." I pass over the vulgarities of style with which nearly every newspaper is disfigured. In journalese a policeman never goes to an appointed spot; he "proceeds" to it. The picturesque reporter seldom talks of a horse, it is a steed or a charger. The sky is the welkin; the valley is the vale; fire is the devouring element. One often wonders how magistrates and other public men stand the bad grammar which is set down for them.

It is much to be wished that a purer style of English were adopted in the daily press; but so long as the newspaper continues to be produced under its present conditions there is little hope of amendment. Meanwhile it is the duty of all English writers who know something of the history of their own language to combat the evil tendencies of the time, to cultivate idiom, to eschew the foolish Latinisms, which are the newspaper scribe's ideal of style, and to keep to the pith and marrow of our English tongue. Out of the immense store of provincialisms still current in England the literary language might be indefinitely enriched. Many of these provincialisms are unquestionably more graphic and vigorous than their literary equivalents, even when such exist, which is not always the case. "Roky" and "thongy" are expressive terms applied to the weather in the Norfolk dialect, the former meaning thick or foggy, the latter close and oppressive. "Roky" has clearly some affinity with the Scotch "reek" and the German "Rauch"; "thongy" comes from the Swedish. And surely we could do very well with "traping" as applied to a dragging skirt; "winnock," in the sense of to cry or to weep (how is it, by the way, that we have no good word for an act so common?); likewise "fosey," over-ripe or soft (this, too, is Scotch); "cop" in the sense of to catch (the Scotch "kep"), which would at once make "copper," a policeman, respectable. "To hull," again, is a useful East Anglian term evidently related to our "haul," but having a much wider application. A man "hulls" on his coat, a woman her bonnet, and you may even take something to "hull" you into a sweat. Consider how weak is our equivalent word "put." Examples could be indefinitely multiplied. There is not a provincial dialect in England which could not be advantageously drawn upon for words or phrases, and I can suggest no better way of bringing such neglected or despised chips of the old Anglo-Saxon into general use than that good writers should use them discreetly in their compositions. Surely there need be no fear of the reading public resenting it, when we remember how much they have patiently borne at the hands of the "Kailyarders." And the continuous use of dialect in fiction is one thing; the occasional importation into literary English of a happy word like "hull" or "winnock" is another. The need for some such action is the more necessary that the Board School is everywhere killing the local dialect, which, in its way, is just as respectable a growth as the literary language, and sometimes superior to it in graphic power. Already very little remains of some local dialects except accent and intonation.

An inexplicable shamefacedness prevails with regard to the use of provincialisms. They are thought to be vulgar, not to say discreditable. This is unjust, besides being unphilological, because it was only by a fluke that one of the many dialects once current in this country was raised to the dignity of the literary language. It was, I believe, the accident of Chaucer's writing in the South Midland dialect which determined the development of our English speech. But for Chaucer the literary English of to-day might have been the dialect of Lancashire or Devonshire. The Chaucerian dialect was fortunate enough to become the recognised literary medium, by which lucky chance it dwarfed all its kin into insignificance, even the dialect of Lowland Scotch, which, thanks to Burns and other native poets, still boasts a life of its own. It is not, however, for sentimental reasons that I am making this appeal for a purer style of English. I take my stand on the broad ground of utility. The fact that the provincial dialects have lost caste is no reason why we should not recognise, and, if possible, preserve what is best in them. At present the great source of "new words" in English is Cockney slang, which cannot, like the provincial dialects, be regarded as a well of English undefiled. We are also too fond of going to the French for a new term, or coining it out of Greek or Latin. The Germans are wiser in their generation; their new words even in science, being mostly home-made and, therefore, understood of the people. From our provincial dialects there are scores and hundreds of useful words to cul—words which seem to carry their own meaning with them, and writers of English ought, in my opinion, to draw more freely than they do from these humble sources. In every genuine provincialism you are sure to find the old Scandinavian sap which in another form has made the English race what it is.

J. F. NISBET.

ZOLA'S PARIS.

[M. ZOLA's new novel has aroused so much interest in London and on the Continent that we make no apology for printing a second article on this subject by our French correspondent.]

As a study of Paris, the book is without any value whatever. The Paris of M. Zola as little resembles real Paris as his naturalism resembles life. Paris—the city of pleasure; light, brilliant, witty, with the she is; luminous, charming, the eternal fascinatrice, is here merely a dull and squalid centre of corruption. We are used to the strange obliquity of M. Zola's glance which, falling on Rome, sees only hideousness; dwelling on Paris, discovers nothing but ulcers, leprosy, a monstrous conglomeration of filth and suffering. It was not such a pen as his that led us to nourish any hope of finding something of the radiance, of the vivid individuality, of the elusive, capricious soul, the delicate sadness, the distinction of the grace—in a word, the supreme and indefinable charm of the "Ville Lumière." If only the instrument he wields were a little lighter, could he be induced to mingle a thimbleful of water with his unconpromising ink, something might have been hoped from his interpretation of his perversity. The arts and graces are excluded from the ruthless literature of M. Zola while sin itself, from grotesque exaggeration ceases to have any intelligent connexion with poor outraged humanity.

Not that Paris is obscene—far from it. It contains not a single objectionable scene hardly an i is dotted. The long, intolerably long, volume is a justification of anarchy. A rich man himself, Zola professes the most impassioned execration of the rich—an nearly weeps over the mildness, the virtue and heroism of Salvat, the anarchist, who attempts to blow up the banker's hotel. The essential quality of the book is pity and this is finely shown in all its frankness.

l excess. But it misses its effect owing to the writer's defective vision, his lack of any and humour. The poorest devil that ever drew breath has his hours of gaiety. It is not more consistent in his misery than the prosperous in his fortune. All are guided by the April moods of life; sometimes—not often enough, alas!—surprised by joy, oftener crushed by sorrow. Rich or poor, the implacable hand of fate weighs with a like remorseless weight upon all, and we are all alike the inevitable victims of our own temperament, taste and temper, far more even than are we the victims of environment. A gay-hearted cavalier is as often met with along the high-road of life as a morose and melancholy millionaire.

But it is the way of fanatics to lack humour and interpret the universe by the severity of their own convictions. There can no longer be any doubt that M. Zola is a fanatic after Justice. He makes his conviction of faith in Paris, and he nobly offers himself in its interest for immolation on the altar of national prejudice. His hero is "fitted for justice." Might not his words be fittingly placed as a motto before the résumé of the procès Zola: "There is no humanity, there is only justice." What is just is just, in spite of everything, should even the world be divided into pieces. Here the fanatic's cry is reasonable enough, but we are less disposed to accept the development of the idea that condemns the world to the destructive retribution of the bomb in expiation of universal injustice. It is nothing less than insanity to place in the mouth of a virtuous and upright man of science—a man who carries the weight of a long existence filled with labour and accomplished duties, a man of unblemished past, a mingling of sage and layman in easy circumstances, the centre and maintenance of a warm domestic circle—such words as those with which Guillaume declares his intention of blowing up the arch of Montmartre at the hour of retribution, when ten thousand pilgrims are congregated there. Gravely Zola tells us that he had first thought of the Opera, but he relinquished the idea lest it should be regarded as an explosion of socialist envy without any "high significance." Then he thought of the Bourses, to strike at corrupt-gold, and lay in ruins the seat of the capitalists. This he found still too special and insignificant compared with his vast project of renovation and expiation. The Palace of Justice, the Chamber of Assizes, haunted him—it is not at all incredible that we shall have that Chamber of Assizes in all its moral obliquity and devoid of justice, in its recent full glare of public visibility, its monstrous indecency of a packed audience and presidential partiality, a volume that will for long connect its portentous name with that of its latest victim, the man of unflinching pen, for whose candour has no terrors and facts have no evil.

"What a temptation," he exclaims, "to make justice of our German justice, to sweep away the criminal and witnesses, the attorney general who charges, the lawyer who defends, the magistrates who judge, the sightseers who come to look on as if it were a serial novel!

And what a savage irony this summary and superior justice of the volcano sweeping all away without any respect for detail!"

It will be seen that Paris is written with all Zola's ferocious sincerity and earnestness. If he sees everything awry, everything through smoked glasses, and marches through experience with an emphatic fist for ever sharing condemnation in the face of Providence, he possesses one virtue his enemies must ever acknowledge—courage. His courage may be a pose, but there it is flagrantly evident, essentially the courage we have been taught to admire in the martyrs. He dares everything—contumely, poverty—for his convictions; and, if money has flowed plentifully into his coffers in his long campaign against reticence and rose haze in literature, it cannot be denied that no writer has ever had a greater load of abuse and hostility to bear. Of course he earned it as the acknowledged prince of pornography; but it needed all the same an uncommon courage to court it: and this lesson of courage he preaches more eagerly now than ever. This new book, the precursor of his splendid sacrifice to principle, is a sermon on the theme that comes straight from the man's heart, the cry of a laborious and indomitable nature. It is the glorification of honest labour in contrast with the iniquitous traffic in money, which sows ruin, discontent, luxury, or corruption. It is a significant fact that this fierce onslaught against the "haute finance," otherwise Jewish bankers, should immediately precede the writer's battle with his entire country on behalf of a Jew. It suffices to establish the perfect disinterestedness, the absolute impartiality of Zola's cause.

But the animosity of the most prejudiced and envenomed press of the world will not be diminished by the severity of his attacks upon its morals. It would indeed be difficult for the average English mind to fathom the astounding and cynical corruption of the Parisian press. There is no attempt to cloak its venality. Every eulogistic article is paid for according to the position of the newspaper. Reviewing is either a question of camaraderie or bribe, with the result that not a single new book is ever criticised. Prompted by friendship or money, it is safe to be a masterpiece anyhow. Not so long ago the Figaro furnished us with a glaring example of unscrupulousness. The first to condemn, and that in no measured way, Major Esterhazy, when the shares depreciated, it tranquilly and cynically changed its opinion, and glided to the opposite side. This striking absence of moral conviction, of average honesty or honour in the Parisian press Zola exposes mercilessly, along with that of ministers and deputies. It is possibly an exaggeration to offer us the spectacle of one ministry reversed and another chosen for its greater susceptibility to the charms of a certain courtesan, who, desiring to enter the Comédie Française, and having no other qualification than a virginal profile, was naturally inadmissible. The new minister forces the doors of Molière's house, all Paris applauds the courtesan's début, the austere critics, bribed with shares or banquets, delicately hymn her praises in the most literary papers.

If M. Zola only had some notion of style, and did not weigh too disastrously upon his pen, we might be permitted to carry away a pleasing picture of the family of Guillaume Marie, the healthy and good-humoured young woman—Mère Grandes, the wise and silent domestic sovereign, and the three big sons, all affectionate, simple and laborious. But unhappily the writer mars the impression he designs to make. He repeats too frequently the word that designates each one, till it becomes a kind of tie, and consequently in a measure ridiculous and irritating. But, taken broadly, not judged by the narrower limitations of art, the picture is a fine and sensitive one. M. Zola has as little fear of ridicule as of anything else. So he does not hesitate to assure us that the bicycle is one of the instruments of social redemption. He is convinced that women who ride a bicycle can never go wrong or make fools of themselves. If sense and virtue are the result of bicycling, then in heaven's name let every maid and lad wheel to satiety. There can be no doubt that Zola has adequately accomplished his purpose as advocate of the instrument by his contrast of Marie, the brave bicyclist, whom the ex-abbé, Pierre Froment, wins and wears, with the mother and daughter in execrable rivalry below upon the fashionable boulevards, the one vicious, hard, and cruel, the other yielding, voluptuous, and stupid—intelligence of an evil kind in the one counterbalancing beauty in the other, the mother hating the daughter who has robbed her of her lover, the daughter ready to murder the mother who has been the mistress of the man she marries. This delightful family circle is completed by a son, a creature of nameless and insignificant infamy, and a father, a kind of Baron Reinach, who corrupts everybody round him—ministers, nobles, deputies, and journalists—with gold, buys consciences in sheaves, and who knocks down one ministry and builds up another simply to have a Daughter of Joy accepted by the Comédie Française, because it is her last caprice. To achieve this noble end, he buys critics, editors, ministers, and deputies. The President of the Republic alone is not brought into the matter. But in the face of the Panama scandal, in the face of the inexplicable irregularities of the affaire Esterhazy and the procès Zola, who shall say that this is an overcharged picture of latter-day Paris? We are constrained to admit that such things can be; that Parisian ministers, deputies, critics, and journalists are unhappily all purchasable; that such an abstract thing as honour has scant recognition in public life under the third Republic. As Edmond Rostand, the author of that delicious play, "Cyrano of Bergerac," says with the simplicity of genius, what is needed is a panache. To worship something, and be ready to die for it—above gold and sordid success and shabby social recognition! This is the word of comfort, the word of hope, the nation's cure! A nation needs an ideal, just as the human heart needs love. Zola's panache is—audacity, courage; no mean one.

THE WEEK.

NOT a productive week. The issue of a bulky two-volume biography of Audubon, the naturalist, may seem superfluous at this date; but the author of Audubon and his Journals must be allowed the privileges of a grand-daughter. Moreover, Miss Audubon writes her biography because she thinks it is needed to counteract the existing one edited by Mr. Robert Buchanan. She writes in her Preface:

"The Life of Audubon, the Naturalist, edited by Mr. Robert Buchanan from material supplied by his widow, covers, or is supposed to cover, the same ground I have gone over; that the same journals were used is obvious; and, besides these, others, destroyed by fire in Shelbyville, Ky., were at my grandmother's command, and more than all, her own recollections and voluminous diaries. Her MS., which I never saw, was sent to the English publishers, and was not returned to the author by them or by Mr. Buchanan. How much of it was valuable, it is impossible to say; but the fact remains that Mr. Buchanan's book is so mixed up, so interspersed with anecdotes and episodes, and so interlarded with derogatory remarks of his own, as to be practically useless to the world, and very unpleasant to the Audubon family. Moreover, with few exceptions, everything about birds has been left out. Many errors in dates and names are apparent, especially the date of the Missouri River journey, which is ten years later than he states. However, if Mr. Buchanan had done his work better, there would have been no need for mine; so I forgive him, even though he dwells at unnecessary length on Audubon's vanity and selfishness, of which I find no traces."

The biography which Miss Audubon has put forth may claim to have received the imprimatur of the Audubon family; but doubtless Mr. Buchanan will have something to say in defence of his own work.

Another biography of the week is inspired by a feeling somewhat similar to Miss Audubon's—the desire to do justice to a character which the author thinks has been misrepresented. In the opening chapter of his book, Sir Hudson Lowe and Napoleon, Mr. R. C. Seaton says:

"No apology . . . is necessary for an attempt to clear the character of one whose name is indissolubly connected with the closing scenes of the Emperor's life, of one who has been so maligned and calumniated that his name has become a byword for peevishness of temper, coarseness of language, and petty persecution. It is scarcely necessary to say that I refer to Sir Hudson Lowe, the Governor of St. Helena during Napoleon's captivity. French national pride has made it a point of patriotism to cling to charges long after they have been disproved; but something different might have been expected from themselves. Sir Hudson Lowe makes no demand on our generosity; he claims only justice, and it is hard that now that he has been more than half a century in his grave this claim should not be accorded to his memory."

Mr. Seaton's pages, which do not greatly exceed two hundred, contain some matter hitherto unpublished, this having been supplied by Sir Hudson Lowe's only surviving daughter, Miss C. M. S. Lowe.

The late Mr. Samuel Harvey Reynolds has not left a name familiar to the public. Yet the public has often been directly influenced by him in the last twenty years. Mr. Reynolds wrote some 2,000 leaders in the Times, between 1873 and 1896; and it was his creed that a journalist ought to be content to be personally unknown. The volume before us is largely composed of Mr. Reynolds's Times contributions; but there are longer essays, contributed thirty years ago to the Westminster Review. Prof. George Saintsbury has written an introduction to the volume, and he is careful to point out the dates attaching to the various papers. Thus the essay on "Dante and his English Translators" "was written long before the flood of studies in Dante and Dante handbooks, and so forth, which the last quarter of a century has seen." Among these essays we have "The Fathers of Greek Philosophy" (1862), "The Critical Character" (1863), "Thoughts on Homer" (1870), "Smokiana" (1890). The last-named essay is the single paper which represents the lighter side of Mr. Reynolds's talent. Its presence in the volume leads Prof. Saintsbury to remark that Mr. Reynolds was "the only man I ever knew who could play whist holding his cards in both hands, and yet managing to sustain a long 'Broseley straw' in his mouth without breaking or dropping it."

The third volume of the "Library Series" is Library Administration by Mr. John Macfarlane. In this book Mr. Macfarlane touches on the salient points of a librarian's duties. In five chapters he deals with: "The Library and its Staff," "The Acquisition of Books," "Cataloguing," "Arrangement," and "Access and Preservation."

D R A M A.

EVERY now and again the old question arises whether the play makes the actor or the actor the play. Riding on the crest of a success, the actor is prone to believe that it is to himself rather than to the author that credit is due. And examples are not wanting in support of this view. Notoriously, the "Private Secretary," one of the most successful farces of modern times, was only rescued from the limbo of failure by Mr. Penley's appearance in the title-part. On the other hand, "Charley's Aunt," after being successfully launched by the same quaint comedian, was successfully played by scores of actors all over the United Kingdom, the Colonies, and even the continent of Europe. In that case it must have been the play which lifted the actor. The popularity of "Our Boys," again, which ran four years at the Vaudeville, was generally attributed to Mr. Thomas Thorne and the late David James, its principal exponents; but those actors both before and after their historical achievement were associated with failures. Yet he would be a bold man who would assert that it is not Mr. Wyndham who has raised "David Garrick," a comparatively worthless adaptation from the French into one of the most notable plays of the day. The truth is, that the author and the actor act and react upon each other so intimately that it is often impossible to apportion praise or blame with any approach to certainty. In "The Sea Flower," which occupies the bill of the Comedy Theatre, the acting does something to disguise or atone for the shortcomings of authorship. On the other hand, it was powerless at the Garrick to save "22A, Curzon Street" from disaster.

IN connexion with "22A, Curzon Street" there is also this curious fact to be noted that while unquestionably one of the most ineffective, unworkmanlike, and worthless plays ever written, it came from the same hand that wrote "Charley's Aunt," which, a thing considered, is probably entitled to rank as the most successful play of the Victoria era. That the stage was a lottery we have long been aware, but it has been reserved for Mr. Brandon Thomas to show that the extremes of success and failure may be combined in one person. Unlike most plays that receive an emphatic first night condemnation, "22A, Curzon Street" contained a distinctly workable idea.

A NEW and plausible variant of the one famous "Box and Cox" story, and treated lightly and frivolously, it might have formed the groundwork of an excellent one-act farce. Unfortunately it was thought desirable to amplify it into four acts with the criminal element brought into prominence; so that it became a curious compound of melodrama, farce, and burlesque. Such inconsistency of purpose in a dramatist is fatal: the audience never knows how to take him. They are perplexed and disconcerted, and end by "damning" the piece in the forcible language of our forefathers, out of hand. That so experienced a playwright and actor as Mr. Brandon Thomas should have fallen into this error is passing strange. This on broad lines! But inconsistency was not the only fault of "22A, Curzon Street." It exhibited worse—obscurity. "Ce qui n'est pas clair—our Gallic neighbours are fond of saying—"n'est pas français." With equal truth it may be said that what is not clear is not dramatic. The first duty of the dramatist, as of the writer of every kind and degree, is clearness. If that fails, nothing else matters much, unless he happens to be a Meredith or a Browning.

MR. BRANDON THOMAS'S ill-starred play recalls a famous example of comic melodrama on the French stage. "L'Auberge de Adrets" was first presented as a serious play by Frederick Lemaitre. The author's ineptitude amused the public, and the curtain fell amid roars of laughter. The famous actor lost no time in turning the situation to account. At the second performance he frankly accentuated the comic note, and finally turned a stupid drama into a first-class burlesque, which still survives under the title of "Robert Macaire." It is not so many years ago since "Robert Macaire" was revived at the Lyceum by Sir Henry Irving though whether the eminent actor would now dare to enact that colossal ruffian and picture que tattered malion, with his battered hat, long-tailed coat, his patched breeches, and his creaking snuff-box, which always attended his faithful henchman, Jacques Pop, of the rattling of the gibbet-chains, I do not know. The best chance for "22A, Arzon Street" is, that it should suffer the fate of "L'Anberge des Adrets," and be turned into a burlesque.

To a totally different order of drama belongs "The Sea Flower," an ultra-sensuous play by Mr. Arthur Law, who has won his reputation in farce. "The Sea Flower" bears the same relation to real life or ordinary human motive as the "twopence coloured" fiction of thirty or five and thirty years ago. The play opens in India, where a military officer, one Captain Sherwood, is about to be tried by court-martial for having given the order in the field that savoured of cowardice. He never gave the order, which emanated from his second in command, Lieutenant Trafford. This he could prove. He loves Mrs. Trafford, whom he had married through a misunderstanding, and lest the exposure of her husband's villany should increase her pain, he declines to offer any evidence to his judges, and being found guilty of the charge of cowardice is expelled from the army. This is the sort of motive which makes one despair of the British drama. Has anything even distantly resembling it ever been met with in real life?

For fourteen years the quixotic hero is a wanderer upon the face of the earth under an assumed name. But at length all the characters turn up in a remote fishing village in Cornwall. Que voulez-vous? The world is so small. Here Captain Sherwood is in with his daughter, whom he had supposed to be drowned at sea fourteen years before, but who has been picked up nameless waif by an honest fisherman and adopted by him as his daughter. What is more, this daughter has become engaged to the son of Sherwood's old enemy, Trafford, the squire of the neighbourhood; and at the same time, Trafford dying of apoplexy, she becomes the mistress of Trevenna Hall. In the long arm of coincidence has not fate had to exert itself in Captain Sherwood's favour; for, after all these years, that the filial's innocence is duly established by the evidence of a soldier who has been the faithful servant of the deceased squire, and, what is more, he eventually marries his daughter's widow. This, truly, is a case of the whirligig of time bringing round its revenges. Here, too, surely, are all the elements of a capital burlesque. Yet "The Sea Flower" is so well acted by a company of all-round excellence—comprising Mr. Dechamps and Mr. Lovell as Sherwood and Trafford, Mr. Arthur Playfair as the older-servant, Miss Lena Ashwell as the heroine, Miss Eva Moore as the rescued girl (whose pet name forms the title of the play), and Mr. Charles Groves and Miss Laws Homfrey as fisher-folk—that it almost earns conviction with it. The scenes in the fishing village are good, Miss Homfrey, in particular, having the part of a regular Mrs. Pop to play.

J. F. N.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DANTE ROSSETTI AND CHLORAL.

SIR,—In the volume of letters from Dante Rossetti to Mr. Allingham, recently published, there occurs a statement, made less circumstantially once before in William Rossetti's book, to the effect that Dante was led into the habit of taking chloral by me. As the statement thus made is incorrect, and it seems to have some importance in William Rossetti's mind, and may have in those of other friends of Dante, it is worth while to state the facts. They are as follows: During the first year of my intimacy with Dante (1870), and when I was a good deal at Cheyne Walk, he was greatly troubled by insomnia, to such an extent indeed that he had then suspended work, and had fallen into a morbid and despondent mood, with delusions. The efforts of his family to induce him to go into the country, or take any change, were ineffective, and finding him in a really dangerous state of mind, I advised trying chloral, which I had been using under the advice of my physician, and I gave him, of my own supply, twenty grains dissolved in three ounces of water, a tablespoonful to be taken three nights in succession, and then no more until three days had elapsed, when if it had the effect desired I would have repeated the supply. He forgot it until the third day, and then took the three doses at once. The effect was not satisfactory, and he reported that he did not care to repeat it, as it gave him a short fit of profound stupor after which his sleeplessness was worse than before, and he refused to try it again. At that juncture Mme. Bodichon, who was a dear friend of both Dante and myself, had offered me her cottage at Sealands for a few weeks' residence, and with her consent I invited Dante to make me a visit there. He accepted, and we stayed, I think, three months, in which time he entirely recovered his sleep and power of working, making some of his best drawings there, but during the whole time he thought no more of chloral, nor did he need any soporific. I left him, with Mme. Bodichon's consent, at Sealands, and returned to America. At a later date I learned that he had taken to chloral and had fallen into the morbid state in which I had found him in 1870, with delusions still more distressing, intensified by some of the criticisms on his book, which he had finished and published while we were at Sealands. He had taken the chloral by the advice of a physician, whose prescription he had made up at several druggists' simultaneously, as the amount did not satisfy his craving. Between my prescription and his acquiring the habit of misuse of the drug there was no connexion whatever, for a considerable time had elapsed between the two events. Of this fact William Rossetti must have been aware at the time, for I have heard him since deny even that it was I who made Dante acquainted with chloral. It was at some time when I was away from London that the habit began, for the intimacy between us when I was in London was such that he could not have taken it up without my knowledge, and I was unaware that he had done so till the misuse had become very grave. In any case, I declare in the most positive manner that my recommendation of the drug had only produced peremptory rejection of it as a remedy for his insomnia.—I am, &c., W. J. STILLMAN.

Rome: March 7.

A QUESTION OF CRITICISM.

SIR,—Your review of my Songs of Love and Empire raises an interesting point in criticism. I do not desire to discuss your reviewer's estimate of my poems; indeed, his praise afforded me pleasure, and his blame was not given to the quality of my verse; but I am compelled to quote from his review in order to put plainly the point which I desire to bring forward.

Your reviewer, then, remarks that he "begins to doubt the author's sincerity." "Has she a point of view?" he asks. "Has she a personality?" "Miss Nesbit," says he, "is probably too much in the thrall of sentiment, too little disposed to fight against difficulties." How does the reviewer come to this conclusion? He pleads that "the author says so many conflicting things, offers so many changes of mood that he is confused." The very facts that should have guided have confused him. Why? Because he is determined to take all lyrics as the direct revelation of the author's personality. He will pin his author down to one definite point of view, and by the rendering of varied emotions he is bewildered. He shrinks, very properly, from the ill-balanced person who should experience all the sensations which such a book as this seeks to indicate. But the idea that the poems may be dramatic eludes him: he will have it that all and sundry are the expression of the writer's own sentiments.

The effort to build up from an author's work an image of his personality is inadmissible. The assumption that the author is himself the subject of all the emotions portrayed in his work is an impertinence. For this assumption denies to your author two of the chief elements of poetry—imagination and the power of dramatic conception. There are not, I submit, dramatic crises enough in any life to occasion the writing of a dozen personal lyrics: but is the poet to express only his own emotions? Have the majority of our lyrics been written to commemorate the experiences of the author? Is not each lyric, rather, the author's idea of the emotions which might be felt by a certain imaginary person in certain imagined surroundings? Does your reviewer really suppose that lyrics must reflect the author's mood—that you cannot write a love-song unless you be in love, or a dirge unless your hat have a black band? that that fascinating adventure in the gondola really happened to Robert Browning, and that he got over the stab, and turned it all into poetry? or that the young men who write hymns to the Blessed Virgin, and sing songs of the White Rose, are, in fact, ready to die bravely for the divine rights of the Stuarts, or to live cleanly for the honour of Our Lady?

It is the lack of the dramatic sense which makes the poetry of most living women so wearisome. They either cannot or dare not attempt to express any emotions but their own, necessarily limited. But the aim of the artist should be to get beyond his own emotions, to leave the narrow range of feeling incident to his own happy life; to get the dramatic point of view—the point of view of other men—and to express this in the best way possible to his art.

It is quite true that a revelation of personality should be found in an author's work, but not always the crude poster-advertisement of it. Now and then, of course, one finds a man who will write, and publish, elegies on his dead baby before the little coffin has been carried out of the house of mourning—and certainly the personality of such a father is very definitely revealed. But in most cases the real man is shown not in the matter, but by the manner of his work. Despairing lyrics might be written by those whose own happiness kept them trembling and afraid, and many a song of roses and wine has been set down by a man starving in a garret, sick with a desperate longing for twopence to spend in gin.

The question is not at all whether an author really did kiss the dairy-maid in the orchard, actually laid flowers and tears upon the tomb of the beloved, but with what measure of skill he conveys his conception of the feelings of the man to whom life brought this pleasure—this pain. The mass of mankind cannot be expected to understand. But critics surely should see that these things are so.

No one human being could have been in the circumstances and experienced the sensations expressed in the poems of Robert Browning, and I fear, even, that any man who should have known half the simpler moods which I have tried to convey in my own five volumes must have been an actor in far more dramas than could be for his soul's health. Can this not be perceived? Must we label our verse dramatic? Will the critics let us off at no less price than explanatory titles: "Sonnet Expressing the Sentiments of James on Beholding Jane in an Omnibus"; or, "Lines Supposed to be Spoken by Miss Smith on Hearing of the Marriage of Mr. Robinson, who formerly Aspired to her Hand"?—I am, &c., E. NESBIT.

Grove Park: March 13.

MR. GEORGE GISSING AT HOME.

SIR,—In the ACADEMY of March 5 appeared an article headed "Mr. George Gissing at Home," consisting for the most part of quotations from an article on the same subject in "the American Bookbuyer." Will you permit me to say that the tone adopted by this American writer is not a little offensive to me, that many of his so-called facts are not facts at all, and that he puts into my mouth words that I never uttered, and never could have uttered.

The Bookbuyer article is evidently based upon certain autobiographical brevities supplied by me, two years or more ago, to an American journalist. Where the supplementary details came from (unless they are purely imaginary) I know not. I am not so happy as to have "mastered" five languages, and never led anyone to suppose that I had. I never "spent a year among the peasants of Italy." I produce anything but "a tremendous amount of copy each year." I am not working "on a new novel of London life"; and I never "tried my hand at biography." Worse than all this is the long passage you quote in conclusion, a sort of general confession, which the American writer says that I made "one day, after a conversation on the methods of literary production." Every line of this is distasteful to me, and in no conversation, at any time of my life, did I so express myself. It is monstrous that one should be made to pule about one's "little happiness," about "toiling millions who never see the blue sky," about "toil for Weib und Kind," and so on.—I am, &c.,

GEORGE GISSING.

Rome: March 8.

THE SHAVING OF SHAGPAT.

SIR,—Is it true that Mr. Meredith's popularity dates from 1885 and the publication of Diana? Richard Feverel was reprinted by Tauchnitz before 1875; and the Baron counted upon a fair measure of popularity for the works he included in the collection of British authors.

Apocryphal of the comparative neglect of the Shaving of Shagpat, I may mention that, reviewing, some eleven years ago, a book by the most versatile and omniscient of living writers in English, I introduced a chance reference to Noorna and Shibli Bagarag. By the next post I got a letter asking what on earth I meant. That the Shaving of Shagpat is the most perfect English prose masterpiece of the century is a fair contention. One merit it has to which the writer in your last issue does not allude—a merit to be thoroughly appreciated, perhaps, only by a student of popular tales like myself, but none the less a merit in the eyes of the critic. As I wrote in 1890, "Of all modern, consciously-invented fairy tales I know but one which conforms fully to the folk-tale convention—the Shaving of Shagpat. It follows the formula as closely and accurately as the best of Grimm's or of Campbell's tales. To divine the nature of a convention, and to use its capabilities to the utmost, is a special mark of genius." The other excellences of Shagpat—the richness, the flexibility, the irony, the abiding humanity alike of subject-matter and style—must be apparent to all who have any feeling for the art of words. The capacity to bow to a discipline framed by countless generations of unknown artists, to triumph not in spite of, but because of the willingly donned fetters, is less likely to be recognised.

ALFRED NUTT.

270, Strand: March 12.

MARCUS AURELIUS.

SIR,—I read with interest your review of Dr. Rendall's translation of the immortal Meditations. In the course of the review reference is made to the work of earlier translators. Perhaps you will permit me to draw attention to a translation, published in 1792, which, so far as I can discover, has been unaccountably passed over by student of the wise Emperor—"the noblest of pagan teachers," as you fitly say. This translation is entitled "A New Translation from the Greek Original, with a Life, Notes, &c., by R. Graves, M.A., Rector of Claverton, Somerset, late Fellow of All Souls College, Oxon, and Chaplain to the Countess Dowager of Chatham." The work is dedicated to the Honourable Edward James Elliot. The preface gives what is called "a slight view of the Stoic philosophy," and is rather quaint and lively bit of writing. In a postscript, reference is made to the translation printed at Glasgow in 1747, and to that of Jeremy Collier at the beginning of the century, which, says Mr. Graves, "abounds with so many vulgarisms, anilities, and even ludicrous expressions; and is in so many places so unlike the original, that one cannot read it with any patience. . . . In short [continues Mr. Graves], I have endeavoured to steer between the loose translation of Collier, who often loses sight of his author, and the dry manner of the Glasgow translator, who generally sticks too close to him. So far as I can judge, comparing Mr. Graves' work with latter-day translators, he did his labour of love carefully and well. Can any of your readers throw light on the personality of this "Rector of Claverton," or say if his translation of the Meditations is esteemed worthy one?—I am, &c., D. STEWART.

Dennistoun, Glasgow: March 8.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

In the criticisms of Mr. Wells' story that we have seen there is evidence of the critic's excitement, of the spell not unmingled with terror which this story has produced in minds more apt to alarm novelists than to be alarmed by them. The Saturday Review's critic has evidently enjoyed the book thoroughly. It is one of the very few modern books, he thinks, which might with advantage have been extended:

"For instance, after the very spirited battle off Clacton, when the torpedo-boat succeeds in destroying no fewer than three fighting machines, there comes a complete hiatus, as though Mr. Wells's imagination had at this point given out, and he could propose no form not the least idea what would happen next. Nor can we; but then we make pretence to private knowledge of this amazing history."

The same critic points out that in The War of the Worlds Mr. Wells has transcended his other efforts in marvellous fiction, inasmuch as he does not exact, at the outset, the reader's acceptance of some wild proposition—a man-eating cephalopod or a tin machine:

"In The War of the Worlds he has had the astonishing good fortune to hit upon a subject as far removed from experience, and as completely outside common expectation, as any which he has ever treated, and yet possible. No astronomer, no physicist, can take upon himself to declare that it is absolutely certain that this planet will never be invaded from a foreign world. The zoologist and the geographer assert of other dreams of Mr. Wells that, interesting and curious as they are as speculations, they cannot have happened, and never will happen. But that no Martians will ever invade this globe is more than the wisest of us can be sure of. It seems excessively improbable—that is the most that we can say. We think this element of remote possibility adds very considerably to the thrilling effect of Mr. Wells's new romance, in which none of those sober and exact details are wanting with which he always knows how to heighten a tale of horror."

The Daily Chronicle's critic develops the thought in the last sentence of the above:

"Mr. Wells succeeds in impressing most vividly upon the imagination the idea that man is not, after all, the supreme product of a cooling universe. In another world all the sciences may have attained a perfection inconceivable to us. We have patronised Mars, and taken it for granted that, could inter-stellar communication be opened, we should astonish the Martians by our moral virtues and our material potency. Mr. Wells has reversed the current, and shown how the Martians might astonish the 'human ants.'"

The Speaker's critic says:

"The War of the Worlds strikes us as being the best story Mr. Wells has yet produced. It cannot be described as pleasant reading, for it abounds in horrors of the most gruesome kind, and they are recorded with a vividness which impresses them almost painfully upon the reader's imagination. But the consistency with which the plot is worked out is admirable, and the force with which the story is told maintains the reader's interest at the highest point from first to last."

The Scotsman thinks the story is perhaps too fantastic: "It reads like a sort of nightmare."

THE critics do not like Mr. Weyman's hero. Says the Athenæum:

Of course it is possible to be interested in a coward and a coward in fiction; but when there would have been just as much point in making the man tolerable as the persistence of his meanness hurts the story."

The same critic says that the "one really dramatic scene—the accusation of the Duke of Shrewsbury] by Sir John Fenwick and Sir Smith, and their confutation by the appearance of the Duke's double . . . does not save the book from dullness."

But the Speaker has only one cause of quarrel with the author:

Hitherto he has given us as the leading figures in his delightful romances men of courage and of chivalrous feeling. For some reason known to himself on this occasion he has made the principal actor and narrator of the story a despicable coward, against whom the reader's gorge rises almost constantly. Apart from this flaw, Shrewsbury will hold its own beside any of its brilliant predecessors."

Literature complains bitterly of the hero's character:

"When a sabreur of noble birth takes us into his confidence and narrates his career, we can listen with sympathy and satisfaction, but to be buttonholed by a miserable baseborn clerk, who has no object in life but to save his own skin, who is the butt of women and the tool of knaves, is a sore trial to our knightly spirit."

The Daily News and Scotsman's critics take different views of the book as compared with Mr. Stanley Weyman's other works. Says the first:

"Certainly a more stirring narrative, a story fuller of life, or richer in dramatic colour, has not yet come from the same pen."

The Scotsman, on the other hand, says:

"This is not by any means the best story that Mr. Weyman has given us, but perhaps there is hardly another living writer of romance whose reputation would not have been enhanced by it."

And now behold how critics may disagree! The Daily Chronicle's critic, emphasising all the foregoing criticisms of Shrewsbury, says:

"If Mr. Weyman had wished to draw the true picture of a coward, well and good. We should not say him nay. Scott has done this in The Fair Maid of Perth, but his masterly sketch is affectingly human. But this sneaking, grovelling cur of an usher, Master Richard Preece; this paltry, eringing slave, this thing of ass's milk, who sets down every proof of his cowardice in his long and tedious story without shame or demerit, is utterly monstrous, unbelievable, and denaturalised. The meanest cur that ever took a kicking would not have thus proclaimed his nature. The thing is incredible. Humour, and humour only, could have carried the thing off, and made the self-revelation acceptable. But there is no touch of humour in Richard Preece's persistent and monotonous record of his cowardice. The effort is deadening, and irritating too, while never for a moment do we feel the least interest in him. His 'legs tremble under him' (p. 60). He is in a 'dreadful pain' (p. 64). Threatened with a beating he 'screams' and falls on his knees (p. 66), or he is scared at shadows (p. 86). He develops 'an aversion to women that amounted almost to a fear of them' (p. 103). We do not wonder at this, for women mock at him, and the sting of their tongues fails to move him."

Against this view of the book Mr. Weyman can cheerfully put that of the Spectator, whose critic finds merit and interest in the very circumstances which arride his brother reviewers.

"Mr. Weyman styles his new book simply a romance, but it is in reality a historical novel, and an uncommonly able and interesting piece of work into the bargain. The author's success is all the more significant because he deliberately discards at the outset all the cut-and-dried passports to popularity familiar to the workers in this domain of fiction. The hero of the story is not brought on the scene until the eighth chapter, and then disappears for another hundred pages, while the central figure and narrator is a social cipher, destitute of personal charm, alternately the dupe and tool of the stormy petrels of that seething age of intrigue—the last decade of the seventeenth century. . . . But the great triumph of the book is really the self-revelation of the narrator. The psychology of cowardice has seldom been more elaborately set forth in a work of fiction, while Preece's supreme and redeeming exhibition of moral courage, at the prompting of his sweetheart, is not only in keeping with the man's true instincts, but it is led up to and narrated in a manner which carries conviction."

Mr. JOHN LONG'S LIST.

MR. COULSON KERNAHAN'S NEW NOVEL.

TREWINNOT OF GUYS.

Decorative cover, price 6s. [March 17.]

TO BE PUBLISHED IMMEDIATELY.

THE STORY OF LOIS. By KATHARINE S. MACQUOID. 6s.

ALL THEY WENT THROUGH. By F. W. ROBINSON.

A DIFFICULT MATTER. By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON. 6s.

YOUTH AT THE PROW. By E. RENTOUL ESLER. 3s. 6d.

HIS LITTLE BILL OF SALE. By ELLIS J. DAVIS. 3s. 6d.

WITH BOUGHT SWORDS. By HARRY FOWLER. 3s. 6d.

THE SEA OF LOVE. By WALTER PHELPS DODGE. 1s. 6d.

NIGHTSHADE AND POPPIES. Verses of a Country Doctor. 3s. 6d. net.

THE CLASSICS FOR THE MILLION. Being an Epitome in English of the Works of the Principal Greek and Latin Authors. By HENRY GREY, Author of "A Key to the Waverley Novels," &c. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. Sixteenth Thousand. [March 18.]

London: JOHN LONG, 6, Chandos Street, Strand.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

The following have appeared, and the numbers containing them can still be obtained:—

|                                    | 1896.       |
|------------------------------------|-------------|
| BEN JONSON ... ..                  | November 14 |
| JOHN KEATS ... ..                  | " 21        |
| SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... ..           | " 28        |
| TOM HOOD ... ..                    | December 5  |
| THOMAS GRAY ... ..                 | " 12        |
| ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON ... ..      | " 19        |
| SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..            | " 26        |
|                                    | 1897.       |
| SAMUEL RICHARDSON ... ..           | January 2   |
| THOMAS DE QUINCEY ... ..           | " 9         |
| LEIGH HUNT ... ..                  | " 16        |
| LORD MACAULAY ... ..               | " 23        |
| ROBERT SOUTHEY ... ..              | " 30        |
| S. T. COLERIDGE ... ..             | February 6  |
| CHARLES LAMB ... ..                | " 13        |
| MICHAEL DRAYTON ... ..             | " 20        |
| WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ... ..        | " 27        |
| SAMUEL PEPYS ... ..                | March 6     |
| EDMUND WALLER ... ..               | " 13        |
| WILKIE COLLINS ... ..              | " 20        |
| JOHN MILTON ... ..                 | " 27        |
| WILLIAM COWPER ... ..              | April 3     |
| CHARLES DARWIN ... ..              | " 10        |
| ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ... ..       | " 17        |
| HENRY WADSWORTH LONG-FELLOW ... .. | " 24        |
| ANDREW MARVELL ... ..              | May 1       |
| ROBERT BROWNING ... ..             | " 8         |
| THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..              | " 15        |
| PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... ..        | " 22        |
| CHARLES DICKENS ... ..             | " 29        |
| JONATHAN SWIFT ... ..              | June 5      |
| WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY ... .. | " 12        |
| WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..               | " 19        |
| SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..          | " 26        |
| ALEXANDER POPE ... ..              | July 3      |
| DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..             | " 10        |
| FRANCIS BACON ... ..               | " 17        |

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S*ANNOUNCEMENTS.

WILL BE READY NEXT WEEK, REVISED AND PARTLY RE-WRITTEN.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 430 pp., price 7s. 6d.

A Study of the Saviour in the Newer Light;

OR,

A PRESENT-DAY STUDY OF JESUS CHRIST.

By ALEXANDER ROBINSON, B.D.,
Formerly Minister of the Parish of Kilmun, Argyleshire.

JUST PUBLISHED. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

Semitic Influence in Hellenic Mythology.

With special Reference to the Recent Mythological Works of Professor Max Müller and Mr. Andrew Lang.

By ROBERT BROWN, Junior, F.S.A., M.R.A.S., &c.

"Deserves attention on its merit as a substantial contribution to mythological study.—Glasgow Herald."

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London;
20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

J. M. DENT & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

WITH SKI and SLEDGE over SPITZBERGEN GLACIERS. By Sir WILLIAM MARTIN CONWAY, M.A., F.S.A., F.R.G.S. With Illustrations from Photographs by E. J. Garwood. Crown 8vo, 6s. net. [Immediately.]

THE THIRTY DAYS' WAR. By HENRY W. NEVINSON, War Correspondent to the Daily Chronicle. With Illustrations from Photographs, and Maps. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MEDIEVAL TOWN SERIES. FIRST VOLUME.

PERUGIA. By Margaret Symonds and LUNA DUFF-GORDON. With Illustrations by Miss Helen James, and a Plan. Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

AMONG the MEADOW PEOPLE By CLARA DILLINGHAM PIERSON. Illustrated by F. C. Gordon. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

A BOOK of CATS. Drawn and Written by Mrs. W. CHANCE, containing between 30 and 40 reproductions of that lady's Pencil Drawings. Small crown 4to, 2s. 6d. net.

"Contains many very clever sketches..... This book may be recommended to those heartless beings who look upon cats as vermin to be exterminated."—Dundee Advertiser.

ATLAS of CLASSICAL PORTRAITS. With Brief Descriptive Commentary by W. H. D. ROUSE, M.A. 2 vols.: Greek Section, Roman Section. In Use at University College, Nottingham. Demy 8vo, 1s. 6d. net per volume.

"A very happy idea, which ought to have a great access in the public schools and universities."—Times.

THE IDLER: a High-Class Illustrated Magazine. Price One Shilling Monthly.

J. M. DENT & Co., 29 and 30, Bedford Street, W.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

BERTRAM MITFORD'S NEW ROMANCE.
In cloth gilt, 3s. 6d., with Illustrations by
A. D. M'COEMICK.

THE INDUNA'S WIFE. By the AUTHOR of "THE KING'S ASSEGAI," &c.

POPULAR NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

At all Libraries, Booksellers', and Bookstalls.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF

"THE BEETLE."
Ready this day, in 1 vol., 6s.

THE HOUSE of MYSTERY. By RICHARD MARSH.

"It is a clever tale, and deserving of many readers."
Scoteman.

BY ESME STUART.

THE STRENGTH of TWO. By the AUTHOR of "ARRESTED," "A WOMAN of FORTY," &c.

JEAN MIDDLEMASS'S NEW NOVEL.

BLANCHE CONINGHAM'S SUR-
RENDER. By the AUTHOR of "DANDY."

MRS. LOVETT-CAMERON'S NEW NOVEL.

DEVIL'S APPLES. By the Author of
"IN A GRASS COUNTRY."

AT the TAIL of the HOUNDS. By Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD.

".....A lively and well-managed sporting story."
Literary World.

New and Cheaper Edition, in picture boards, 2s.

A LADY in BLACK. By Florence
WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh."

In Illustrated paper cover, price 1s.

THE BLUE DIAMONDS: a Tale of Ceylon. By LEILA BOUSTEAD.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 14, Bedford Street, Strand.

LORD CHARLES BEREFOON writes of the "Naval Pocket Book": "It is one of the most useful and handy works of reference on naval matters that I know of, and invaluable to all who take an interest in naval matters."

A WORK OF IMMENSE IMPORTANCE AT THE PRESENT MOMENT.

THE NAVAL POCKET-BOOK

FOR 1898.

(THIRD YEAR OF ISSUE.)

By W. LAIRD CLOWES

AND

L. G. CARR LAUGHTON.

The most valuable Work of reference now available containing a full list of Battle-ships, Ironclads, Gunboats, Cruisers, Torpedo Boats, a list of Dry Docks, and other valuable information, concerning

ALL THE NAVIES OF THE WORLD,

Corrected to February, 1898.

WITH NUMEROUS PLANS and ILLUSTRATIONS:
503 pp., 5s. net.

W. THACKER & CO., Publishers, Creed Lane, London.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

GAY & BIRD'S LIST.

Fcap., pp. 208, deckled edge, cloth, gilt top, 3s. 6d. net.

POINTS of VIEW, and Other Poems.

By G. COLMORE,

Author of "Poems of Love and Life," "A Conspiracy of Silence," "A Daughter of Music," &c.

Contents.

POINTS of VIEW.

OUTCAST—

On the Pavement.
In a Workhouse.
In a Cell.

IN SOCIETY—

In a Boudoir: First Style.
In a Boudoir: Fifteen Years After.
In a Boudoir: Second Style.

WITHIN THE PALE—

On a Pinnacle.
In a Respectable Position.
In a Garden.
In a Smoking-room.
In a Madhouse.
In a Coffin.

A BALLAD OF LOVE AND DEATH.

LYRICS—

The Closed Heart.
Despair and Hope.
Love's Vision.
Why?
Dead.
The Only Way.
Strange Sorro.
H. D. L.
Remembrance.

London: GAY & BIRD, 22, Bedford Street, Strand.

*MR. JAMES BOWDEN begs to announce that a SECOND and REVISED EDITION of Mr. CLEMENT
SHORTER'S VICTORIAN LITERATURE: Sixty Years of Books and Bookmen, is NOW READY, price 2s. 6d.*

London: 10, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

THREE CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Large cr. 8vo, nearly 800 pp., cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY

OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Farnival St., London, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1351.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,

Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.O., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favorable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast binding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence new Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

BOOKBINDING.—LIBRARIES or SINGLE VOLUMES RE-BOUND and REPAIRED, and high-class work of every description undertaken by skilled workmen. Magazines and Periodicals carefully bound in any style.—Write for prices to AVIES & GODDARD, Bookbinders, 3, Clerkenwell Road, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, Ital. per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. Special attention given to orders by post. Address GARRON & PROSEY, 36, Dasinghall Street, E.C., and 115, Strand, W.C.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS OF ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilized world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. His work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition. Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Sadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or English.—Apply, by letter, to D. O. DALLAS, 5, Farnival Street, London, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS payable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums of deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

As BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCOIS RAYENSCROFT, Manager.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTER-ETCHERS and ENGRAVERS.—ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the Society NOW OPEN at the SOCIETY'S GALLERY, No. 5A, Pall Mall East, from 10 to 6. Admission, 1s. A. STEWART, Secretary.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

Just published, crown 8vo, 258 pages, picture cover, 2s. net.

THE MUMMY'S DREAM: an Egyptian Story of the Exodus. Written and Illustrated by H. B. PROCTOR. "Mr. Proctor's book is not an ordinary book; faults fade away before the singular brightness of his imagination. One feels that he must have lived in his story with an absorption and a realism that few authors can command."—Liverpool Daily Post.

London: SIMPSON, MARSHALL, & Co., Ltd. Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL.

Just issued. 300 pp., 7s. 6d.

THE PROCESS OF CREATION DISCOVERED: or, the Self-Evolution of the Earth and Universe by Natural Causes. By JAMES DUNBAR.

The publishers would particularly direct the attention of scientists and the learned to the salient points of the new theory of Evolution of which this work treats. In regard to the evolution, mechanism, and phenomena presented by the sun the author argues that his theory is infinitely superior to that of the nebular hypothesis, and that in its application to the earth it is capable of absolute demonstration.

London: WATTS & Co., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G. PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP of LONDON, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.

TAUSTRES—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBERRY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 4. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HEER HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.,

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTIONS of FAMOUS WORKS of ART.

AUTOTYPES of the OLD MASTERS in the GREAT CONTINENTAL GALLERIES.

AUTOTYPES of MODERN BRITISH ART.

AUTOTYPES of WORKS by ARTISTS of the PRE-RAPHAELITE SCHOOL.

AUTOTYPES of PICTURES in the NATIONAL GALLERY.

AUTOTYPES of DRAWINGS by OLD MASTERS.

AUTOTYPES of SELECTED WORKS from the PARIS SALONS.

Those interested in Art, and in the recent developments of the Photographic Reproduction of Pictures, are invited to inspect the Company's extensive Collection of Autotypes and Autogravures of all Schools, now on view at their Gallery, 74, New Oxford Street, where may also be seen a series of examples framed in mouldings of specially designed patterns, made in oak, walnut, and other hard woods. Framed Autotypes form acceptable artistic gifts, and are eminently suited for the adornment of the Home.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE.

Now ready, New Edition of 160 pages. With upwards of One Hundred Miniature Photographs of Notable Autotypes, and Twenty-three Tint Block Illustrations. For convenience of Reference the Publications are arranged Alphabetically under Artists' Names. Post free, ONE SHILLING.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

Now Offered at

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.;

43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BANTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

FROM WALTER SCOTT'S LIST.

IBSEN'S PROSE DRAMAS

Edited by WILLIAM ARCHER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. per volume.

VOL. I.

With Portrait of the Author and Biographical Introduction.

A DOLL'S HOUSE,
THE LEAGUE OF YOUTH
(never before translated), and
THE PILLARS OF SOCIETY.

VOL. II.

GHOSTS, AN ENEMY of the PEOPLE, and THE WILD DUCK.

With an Introductory Note.

VOL. III.

LADY INGER OF OSTRAT,
THE VIKINGS AT HELGELAND,
THE PRETENDERS.

With an Introductory Note and Portrait of Ibsen.

VOL. IV.

EMPEROR AND GALILEAN.

A World-Historic Drama.

VOL. V.

ROSMERSHOLM,
THE LADY FROM THE SEA,
HEDDA GABLER.

Cloth, crown 8vo, New Edition, reduced to 3s. 6d.

PEER GYNT: a Dramatic Poem. By HENRIK IBSEN. Translated by WILLIAM and CHARLES ARCHER.

London: WALTER SCOTT, LTD., Paternoster Square

ELLIOT STOCK'S

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

In fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

ROMAN LEGENDS about the APOSTLES

ST. PAUL and ST. PETER.

By VIKTOR RYDBERG

(Professor of Aesthetics and History of Arts at Stockholm).Translated from the Swedish by BARONESS OTTILIA VON DÜBEN.

A NEW NOVEL.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

LUTES AND RIFTS.

By LOUISA SAHN.

A NEW VOLUME OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

A DREAM of PARADISE.

A POEM.

By ROBERT THOMSON.

"Mr. Thomson has the gift of imagination, and he gives expression to many thoughts that are both beautiful and comforting. His measure is pleasing, and his choice of language and metaphor extensive."—Dundee Advertiser.

In crown 8vo, price 1s.

DEATH'S MICROBE.

By HAMILTON ORTON,

Author of "Through One Man's Sin."

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW,
LONDON, E.C.

NOW READY.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTION

A Study of the Rights, the Origin, and the Social Functions of the Wealthier Classes.

BY

W. H. MALLOCK,

Author of "Labour and the Popular Welfare,"
"Classes and Masses," &c."Here we have a noteworthy contribution to current thought, and the more so because a point of view is set forward which is entirely opposed to most of the contemporary ideas as to the proper constitution of society."
Daily Chronicle.

HIS GRACE o' the GUNNE. By

I. HOOPER, Author of "A Singer of Marly." Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s."The author writes of the seventeenth century as though he had lived in it, and had not merely tried to copy the tone of the time. Lurline Kirke is no stage hero, and we trace his career with equal interest and satisfaction. 'His Grace,' to give him his nickname, is in the mire but not of it, and no one can fail to admire the fine young fellow.....
There can be no question as to the ability displayed throughout this book."—World.

WHO'S WHO, 1898. An Annual Bio-

graphical Dictionary. Fiftieth Year of Issue. Containing 1,143 New Biographies. In crown 8vo, 8½ pages, bound in cloth gilt, with gilt edges and rounded corners, price 3s. 6d. net."Who's Who' is an invaluable annual. It is the handiest and best compiled book of reference of its kind that is issued from the press, and is quite indispensable to all classes of people who take any interest in public life."—Review of Reviews.

THE VITALITY of CHRISTIAN

DOGMAS, and THEIR POWER of EVOLUTION.
By A. SABATIER, D.D., Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Translated by Mrs.
EM. CHRISTEN. With Preface by the Very Reverend
the Hon. W. H. FREMANTLE, D.D., Dean of Ripon.
Crown 8vo, 96 pages, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net."Has rendered a good and timely service, alike to theology and to religion, by discussing, as he does here, the relation in which dogma stands to the realities of religious feeling and experience. He writes with the clearness and limpidity of expression that are characteristically French."
Glasgow Herald.

THE STORY of GLADSTONE'S LIFE.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Containing 45 Illustrations, mostly Page Portraits, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods. In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d."A brilliantly written monograph... One merit is conspicuous—the book is everywhere readable."—Record."This is a charmingly written sketch of Mr. Gladstone's public career, with some interesting glimpses at the same time into his private life."—Observer.

PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL

ECONOMY. Book III. Vol. II. By Prof. J. SHIELD
NICHOLSON. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d."The new volume is marked by the same robust practicality and independence of judgment that gave value to its predecessor. ....The book is one to be heartily commended to the student, the business man, and the politician."—Literary World.

ROME, HANDBOOK to CHRISTIAN

and ECCLESIASTICAL. By H. M. and M. A. R. T.
Part II.—The Liturgy in Rome. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s."This guide-book is in its department very complete, and it is crammed full of curious learning."—Literary World.

O'SHEA'S GUIDE to SPAIN and

PORTUGAL. Tenth Edition. Edited by JOHN LOMAS. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 15s.

A. &amp; C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.A NEW VOLUME OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."THE FRANKS: from their Origin a Confederacy to the Establishment of the Kingdom of France and the German Empire. By LEWIS
SERGEANT, Author of "The Caprice of Julia," &
Maps, Illustrations, and Index. Cloth, 6s.

THIRD EDITION.

Nearly 50,000 Copies of this Book have been sold.

HUGH WYNNE: Free Quaker, sometime B.-Lieut.-Colonel on the Staff of General Washington. By Dr. S. WEIR MITCHELL. Illustrations Cloth, 6s.Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, in a letter to the Publishers, says: "In my opinion it [Hugh Wynne] is a remarkable study of character and history.""This is one of the finest romances founded on a grand theme which it has been our privilege to notice for many years.
depth of feeling, in dramatic power, in its thorough naturalness, purity of thought, and, not least, in its refined and vigorous style calling very much to mind the famous story of 'Esmond,' it is to a somewhat hackneyed phrase, quite 'beyond criticism.' Mr. Mitchell may be congratulated on having enriched our literature with a new piece which those who read it once will in after years have pleasure reading again and again."—Birmingham Daily Post.CHEAPER EDITION OF OLIVE SCHREINER'S GREAT WORK.

TROOPER PETER HALKET

MASHONALAND. By OLIVE SCHREINER, Author of "Dreams," "The Story of an African Farm," & Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.M. ENOCH RON, speaking of Olive Schreiner in a recent interview said: "I am convinced that her last work, 'Peter Halket,' is the b-thing she has done. Indeed, it is one of the greatest productions of the age."

MATHILDE BLIND'S POEMS.

A SELECTION FROM THE POEMS OF MATHILDE BLIND

With Portrait.

Edited by ARTHUR SYMONS.

Parchment gilt, 7s. 6d.

Edition de Luxe, on Japan paper, in vellum, 10s. 6d. net."Mathilde Blind was one of the three or four women her generation who possessed the divine spark of poetry...
The little book before us will preserve what is best worth preserving."—Times.

POEMS AND SONGS.

By W. E. BROCKBANK.

Cloth gilt, 5s.

"He can be tender and pathetic. Equally does he kn-something of the joy and happiness of song."—*Graphic*THE VISION, And Other Poems.

By J. A. OSBORNE.

With Portrait. Cloth, 5s.

"This volume of poetry is well worth reading."
Aberdeen Free Press

REVERIES OF A PARAGRAPHE

By M. W. L.

Cloth gilt, 6s.

"Distinctly good and epigrammatic.....Afford agree-reading."—Belfast Northern Whig.RAPARA; or the Right of the I dividual in the State. By ARCHIBALD FORSYTH

Cloth gilt, 6s.

"There is abundant food for the thought of politieconomists and all serious citizens in Mr. Archibald Forsyth's book."—Daily Mail.CATALOGUES and PROSPECTUSES sent post free application.

London:

T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS :                                    | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| A New Study of Shakespeare ... ..            | 339     |
| A Highland Lady ... ..                       | 340     |
| Gossip of the Great ... ..                   | 341     |
| A Notable Book ... ..                        | 342     |
| Plays, Actable and Otherwise ... ..          | 343     |
| War Correspondence ... ..                    | 344     |
| BRIEFER MENTION ... ..                       | 345     |
| THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT ... ..                | 347-350 |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..                        | 351     |
| IBSEN'S BIRTHDAY FUND ... ..                 | 352     |
| GABRIELLE D'ANNUNZIO ... ..                  | 353     |
| THE RECREATIONS OF THE SELF-CONSCIOUS ... .. | 354     |
| THE NEW COPYRIGHT ACT ... ..                 | 355     |
| THE WEEK ... ..                              | 355     |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..                       | 356     |
| CORRESPONDENCE .. ..                         | 356     |
| BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..                        | 358     |

REVIEWS.

A NEW STUDY OF SHAKESPEARE.

William Shakespeare: A Critical Study. By George Brandes. 2 vols. (Heinemann.)

HERR GEORGE BRANDES is a Danish scholar of repute, and this book, published a year or two ago in Denmark and in Germany, has already won high praise from continental critics. The English translation is issued under the superintendence of Mr. William Archer, to whose critical ability and facile pen readers in this country already owe some of what is best in Scandinavian literature. The work was thoroughly well worth translating. It is an admirable and exhaustive survey of its subject, carried out in accordance with modern method, and on a level of modern information. Writing, as we may suppose, for professed students rather than for general readers, Herr Brandes does not as a rule burden his pages with detailed references to the sources from which his facts are drawn; but he is for the most part extremely accurate, and whose would go further may supplement him with Mr. Sney Lee's excellent article in the Actionary of National Biography.

Herr Brandes begins with the usual lament as to our ignorance of the details of Shakespeare's life; a lament, by the way, which is, as he is careful to point out, a little in excess of what the facts warrant. After all, we probably know as much about Shakespeare as we do about any of his contemporaries who was not, like Bacon, something besides a mere man of letters. Nevertheless, the numerous records and documents which an indefatigable antiquarianism has disinterred do leave us still very much in the dark.

We do not know for certain either when he left Stratford or when he returned to Stratford from London. We do not know for certain whether he ever went abroad, ever visited Italy. We do not know the name of a single woman whom he loved during all his years in London. We do not know for certain to whom his sonnets are addressed. We can see that as he advanced in life his prevailing mood became gloomier, but we do not know the reason. Later on, his temper seems to grow more serene, but we cannot tell why. We can form but tentative conjectures as to the order in which his works were produced, and can only with the greatest difficulty determine their approximate dates. We do not know what made him so careless of his fame as he seems to have been. We only know that he himself did not publish his dramatic works, and that he does not even mention them in his will."

Like other recent biographers of Shakespeare, Herr Brandes attempts to piece out the meagre records from the internal evidence of the plays themselves, and to reconstruct the history of the poet's "mind and art" as it is reflected in these. The task, only rendered possible at all by the labour of Malone, and of a century of scholars since Malone, in establishing the chronological order in which the plays were written, is a delicate one. The personal and the dramatic in Shakespeare's work are so curiously and subtly interwoven and entangled. Occasionally Herr Brandes seems to us to overstep the limits of permissible conjecture. But as a rule he is discreet, and exercises judgment as well as knowledge in his undertaking. And his wealth of illustrative reading enables him to reproduce very vividly and convincingly the historical and social surroundings in which the plays were written. The excursions on Shakespeare's great contemporaries, Ben Jonson and Beaumont and Fletcher, the accounts of the Essex rebellion and of the unpleasant career of Frances Howard, Countess of Essex, are admirable examples of concise incidental narrative.

Probably the fairest way of estimating the character and value of the book will be briefly to follow Herr Brandes' survey. The facts, ascertained and conjectured, of Shakespeare's parentage and boyhood are somewhat cursorily narrated, and one feels that hardly sufficient justice has been done to the importance of the Warwickshire county life as a factor, an early and vital factor, in the poet's development. Mr. D. H. Madden's delightful Diary of Mr. William Silence must be a corrective to Herr Brandes here. There follows a good account of Shakespeare's early years in London, of his journeyman-work at the tinkering up of old plays, of the marked influence upon him of Marlowe and of Lyly, of his first experimental essays in comedy. The period that follows is less satisfactorily treated. Herr Brandes recognises the probability that Shakespeare went to Italy and the influence which Italy exercised upon his impressionable genius; but he does not succeed in bringing out the full importance of this crisis or in giving anything like a reasonably intelligible account of the growth of Shakespeare's art between 1592 and 1596: and this is simply because he has got some of his dates wrong. "The first plays," he says, "in which we seem to find traces of Italian travel are 'The Taming of the Shrew' and 'The Merchant of Venice,' the former written at latest in 1596, the latter almost certainly in that or the following year." Now there can be little doubt that if the Italian journey took place at all, it must have been during the closing of the theatres for the plague in 1592-3. Is it likely that the Italian influence would wait a couple of years to declare itself in the plays? We venture to think that a careful analysis of all the evidence will show that, with the exception of "The Comedy of Errors," all the early plays in which Shakespeare is not simply re-handling or continuing other men's work are properly dated after and not before this journey. This is not the place to work out this theory in detail; but it may be pointed out that Herr Brandes would make "Venus and Adonis," "Romeo and Juliet," and "A Midsummer Night's Dream" all as early as 1591. Now modern scholars are practically unanimous in dating "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in 1594 or 1595; and to suppose that either of the other two can possibly have been written before Shakespeare's work on "Henry VI.," which the testimony of Greene and Nash enables us to fix pretty definitely in 1592, is surely to give up the problem of Shakespeare's style altogether. The real difficulty lies in "Love's Labour's Lost," but the supposed reasons for putting this in 1589 are quite unconvincing; we feel sure that 1593-4 will turn out to be more nearly the proper date. There are many admirable passages in Herr Brandes' account of Shakespeare's early work, but he seems to us to have failed in getting the proper perspective and unity of the whole period.

With the historical plays he comes into the light again, and all the rest of the book is extremely good and suggestive. Like most critics, Herr Brandes finds in the great group of comedies with which the century closes Shakespeare's time of completest spiritual harmony:

"If the reader would picture to himself Shakespeare's mood during this short space of time at the end of the old century and beginning of the new, let him recall some morning when he has awakened with the sensation of complete physical well-being, not only feeling no definite or indefinite pain or uneasiness, but with a positive consciousness of happy activity in all his organs; when he drew his breath lightly, his head was clear and free, his heart beat peacefully; when the mere act of living was a delight; when the soul dwelt on happy moments in the past and dreamed of joys to come. Recall such a moment, and then conceive it intensified a hundredfold—conceive your memory, imagination, observation, acuteness, and power of expression a hundred times multiplied—and you may divine Shakespeare's prevailing mood in those days, when the brighter and happier sides of his nature were turned to the sun."

Again, speaking of the incomparable types of womanhood which fill these comedies, Herr Brandes says:

"He was doubtless in love at the time—as he had probably been all his life through—but his love was not an overmastering passion like Romeo's, nor did it depress him with that half-despairing feeling of the unworthiness of its object which he betrays in his Sonnets; nor, again, was it the airy ecstasy of youthful imagination that ran riot in 'A Midsummer Night's Dream.' No, it was a happy love, which filled his head as well as his heart, accompanied with joyous admiration for the wit and vivacity of the beloved one, for her graciousness and distinction. Her coquetry is gay, her heart is excellent, and her intelligence so quick that she seems to be wit incarnate in the form of a woman."

Herr Brandes then proceeds to study the gradual overshadowing of this large Shakespearean serenity, the intrusion of the note of bitterness and disillusion, the slow unrolling of the long line of tragedies and mirthless comedies, through which the pessimism swells and intensifies itself, until it finally bursts into the tempestuous denunciations of "Timon of Athens." Herr Brandes finds one source of the tragic mood in the fall of Essex and of Shakespeare's earliest patron, Southampton, with whose interests he conceives Shakespeare to have been closely bound up; another in the moral corruption of the English Court under James the First; yet another in the drama of the poet's own life darkly shadowed forth in the Sonnets. Herr Brandes does not, however, suppose that the Sonnets in any way relate to Southampton. On the contrary, as Mr. Tyler has already pointed out in the ACADEMY, he is a warm supporter of the Pembroke-Fitton theory. The value of his adhesion is, however, rather discounted by the fact that he appears to take his version of the evidence wholesale from Mr. Tyler, borrowing, for instance, the mistaken ascription of a copy of Donne's verses to Lord Pembroke. And, of course, the book was written before Lady Newdegate-Newdigate's evidence that Mary Fitton was not "black" was made public.

Finally, Herr Brandes gives an excellent account of Shakespeare's return to Stratford, and of the renewed optimism which characterises his later plays. He concludes with a declaration that, after all, we do know something of the poet's individuality:

"The William Shakespeare who was born at Stratford-on-Avon in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who lived and wrote in her reign and that of James, who ascended into heaven in his comedies and descended into hell in his tragedies, and died at the age of fifty-two in his native town, rises a wonderful personality in grand and distinct outlines, with all the vivid colouring of life, from the pages of his books, before the eyes of all who read them with an open, receptive mind, with sanity of judgment and simple susceptibility to the power of genius."

We have only been able to follow the main outline of Herr Brandes' book. Upon his copious and interesting digressions into contemporary history, or his penetrating criticisms of individual plays, we have no room to touch. The book is a valuable contribution to Shakespearean literature, and essential to every reader who is competent to distinguish what in it is fact from what is merely a legitimate exercise of reconstructive conjecture. For those not so competent it would, perhaps, be dangerous. The style is capital, full of colour and of life. And a word of praise is due to the fine translation, in which Mr. Archer has been assisted by Miss Diana White and Miss Mary Morison.

A HIGHLAND LADY.

Memoirs of a Highland Lady: the Autobiography of Elizabeth Grant, of Rothiemurchus, 1797 - 1830. Edited by Lady Strachey. (John Murray.)

THE Grants of Rothiemurchus are a younger branch of that great house of Grant which, by judicious obedience to the powers that were, succeeded in keeping their lands in the North at times when more hot-headed clans were disinherited. Rothiemurchus itself is a beautiful place among pine woods, and the stock which dwelt there has always been a vigorous one, giving many honest soldiers and less conspicuously honest lawyers to history. This book is the autobiography of a lady of the house, written many years later—a sort of chronicle of youth and childhood and the doings of Highland gentle-folk in England and at home in the far-off days of the early century.

The extraordinary thing about the chronicle is its entire simplicity. One might compare it with the gossip of Dorothy Osborne or the memoirs of another Highland lady of the same clan, Mrs. Grant of Laggan, who told the story of the Prince's arrival at Gortuleg after Culloden; but it would be hard to parallel the unadorned veracity. Miss Grant of Rothiemurchus has no care for the figure she cuts in the reader's eye. She confesses to naive tastes in literature with absolute frankness; she never affects interest or knowledge she does not possess; and she is quite open with her dislikes. In its way the chronicle is a very intimate one, for it tells the whole inner history of a respectably important family, tells it, too, with no omission of darker scenes, till one is fairly forced into a lively interest in the whole kin. We hear of the early days in Lincoln's Inn Fields and of the holidays at watering-places; then of the long years in the Highlands, varied with seasons in Edinburgh and occasional jaunts further south; and then, at the last, of the money troubles, consequent upon an injudicious union of Highland hospitality with political ambition, of the Indian judgeship for the father, and of the marriage of the diarist, when "Eliza Grant" takes final leave of us. It is not easy to separate the purely literary qualities of the book from the extraneous interest of the matter. The style is without art, but direct, vivid, and at times fired with a genuine emotion. Parts might have been left out without hurting the book; but, as it was originally published for the family, there is reason for its completeness. But even as it stands there is a certain rough unity of effect in each part of the memoirs, which is the product not of art but of a faithful memory.

By far the best are the Rothiemurchus chapters; but the early days in England were not without interest. The children were brought up on a Spartan plan—up at six, cold water summer and winter, and a breakfast of porridge. But they were a set of little madeaps even in those prim days, and were none the worse for the training. The long journeys between the Highlands and London gave food for child's fancy. What impressed the small Elizabeth in Edinburgh was the "size and brightness and cleanliness of the houses, and the quantity of gooseberries to be bought for a penny." Nowadays the houses are not particularly bright and clean, and the present writer never found gooseberries cheaper there than elsewhere. She meets Lord Lovat, is much impressed, and little wonder, for he was the good man who persisted in believing himself a hen, and sat hatching eggs by the hour in a nest which he had made in his carriage. In 1810, she went with her sister to Oxford to stay with the Master of University, and a dreary place she found it. "Two facts struck me, young as I was, during our residence in Oxford," she writes, "the ultra-Tory politics and the stupidity and frivolity of the society." She carried on a child's flirtation with a young gentleman who played the French horn; and she was much shocked by young Mr. Shelley:

"The ringleader in every species of mischief within our grave walls was Mr. Shelley, afterwards so celebrated, though I should think to the end half-crazy. He was very insubordinate at University, always infringing some rule, the breaking of which he knew would not be overlooked. He was slovenly in his dress, and when spoken to about these and other irregularities, he was in the habit of making such extraordinary gestures, expressive of his humility under reproof, as to overset first the gravity and then the temper of the tutor."

Soon after, the whole family retired to the Highlands for good, and the next few chapters give a very pleasant account of life at Rothiemurchus, where civilisation had not yet wholly driven away old customs. On the way to the North the father read Childe Harold (then newly out) to the children:

"I was not given to poetry generally," says the chronicler; "then, as now, it required 'thoughts that rouse and words that burn' to affect me with aught but weariness; but, when, after a second reading of this passage my father closed the pamphlet for a moment, saying, 'This is poetry!' I felt that he was right and resolved to look the whole poem over some day at leisure."

The whole tale of the journey is excellently and freshly done; and so, too, the account of the simple household and its retainers, among them

"old John Mackintosh who brought in all the wood and peat for the fires, pumped the water, turned the mangle, lighted the oven, brewed the beer, bottled the whiskey, kept the yard tidy, and stood enraptured listening to us playing on the harp 'like Daavid'!"

The Grants were a remarkable clan, for the cotters' and foresters' sons had a queer habit of suddenly leaving home, and generally getting somehow or other to India, whence they returned Generals and Baronets and men of fortune. Nothing, indeed, in the whole book is so extraordinary as the impression given of the vigour of these Highland adventurers, who rarely returned from the great world beyond the hills without some very substantial prize. Distinctions between classes, too, were not rigid in the North. Miss Grant has a deep scorn of the English lower and middle classes, but in Scotland all are gentlefolk—a belief which probably originated in the clan feeling which bound the humblest Grant to his chief. And certainly, we find barefooted Highland girls making great marriages, and every social barrier turned topsy-turvy.

There are many vivid little descriptions of scene and life in these pages, for Miss Grant had a seeing eye and some skill in words. Take this of the Highland kirk:

"The girls had a custom in the spring of washing their beautiful hair with a decoction of the young buds of the birch trees. I do not know if it improved or hurt the hair, but it agreeably scented the kirk, which at other times was wont to be overpowered by the combined odours of snuff and peat-reek, for the men snuffed immensely during the delivery of the English sermon; they fed their noses with quills fastened by strings to the lids of their mulls; spooning up the snuff in quantities and without waste. The old women snuffed too, and groaned a great deal to express their mental sufferings, their grief for all the blackslidings supposed to be thundered at from the pulpit; lapses from faith was their grand self-accusation, lapses from virtue were, alas! little commented on; temperance and chastity were not in the Highland code of morality."

Both in the Highlands and in Edinburgh, where the family went in the season, there was no lack of great folk to be seen. Across the river at Kinrara the famous Duchess of Gordon—the friend of Burns—entertained large house parties. The writer's comments on people are forcible and plain-spoken. She objected to Lord Tweeddale because "he had that flat Maitland face, which when it once gets into a family, never can be got out of it." The account of the old Edinburgh society is entertaining. She classifies it into sets—the exclusive, the card-playing, the quiet country-gentleman, the fashionable, and the literary. She met all varieties—the Jeffreys; Sir David Brewster; the crazy Lord Buchan, who collected such relics as a tooth of Queen Mary's and the bone of James the Fifth; Harry Erskine; John Clerk of Eldin (about whom she has many stories to tell); and Sir Walter himself. There is also a well-drawn portrait of Ganning, whom she met in Holland. She is most fearless in confessing her opinions. She confesses that she found Waverley tolerably dull. Peter the Great she thought only a "lunatic barbarian"; Coleridge, whom she met at Highgate, is "a poor, mad poet, who never held his tongue, but stood pouring out a deluge of words meaning nothing, with eyes on fire and his silver hair streaming down to his waist." The chief thing that impressed her about Edward Irving was that he was "very dirty." She is severe on the two Sobieski quarrels, and is highly scornful about their pedigree; but one might say something on the other side. Her sister Jane goes to Abotsford on a visit:

"Jane was in an ecstasy the whole time. Walter Scott took to her, as who would not? They rode together on two rough ponies with the Ettrick Shepherd and all the dogs, and Sir Walter gave her all the Border legends, and she corrected his mistakes about the Highlands."

We have left ourselves little space to quote any of Miss Grant's stories. The book is not all comedy, for the account of the final parting from Rothermurchus has a pathetic simplicity which cannot fail to give the most casual reader. But the prevailing tone is a cheerful one, and we would take leave of the pleasant company by setting down two out of the many excellent tales:

A coach was started by some enterprising person to run from the "Duke's Arms" at Dalkeld to Blair during the summer season. The announcement read as follows: "Pleasing intelligence. The Duchess of Athol starts every morning from the "Duke's Arms" at eight o'clock."

The other is told of Lord Eldin:

"Some one having died, a man of birth and fortune in the West Country, celebrated in his life for drawing pretty freely with the long-bow, it was remarked that the heir had buried him with much pomp, and had ordered for his remains a handsome monument; 'wi' an epitaph,' said John Clerk, in his broadest Border dialect; 'he must hae an epitaph, an' appropriate epitaph, an' we'll change the exordium out o' respect. Instead o' the usual Here lies, we'll begin his epitaph wi' Here continues to lie.'"

GOSSIP OF THE GREAT.

Auld Lang Syne. By the Right Hon. Prof. F. Max Müller. (Longmans, Green, & Co.)

Notes from a Diary—1873-1881. By the Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff. 2 vols. (John Murray.)

THE Professor and the Politician of these title-pages are new comrades, but old friends. They have met in social life with frequency, and they have played the part of guest and of host to each other. One wrote his "Recollections" during a time of convalescence; the other kept a "Diary"; and at the end, strange to say, there is nothing in the matter of actuality to choose between the two books. The Diarist's notes are deliberate and set, so far as they go; you have no tension in reading them; no pause, no delay leading to a dramatic climax. It often happens, indeed, that something is set down of which you are not given the bare fact of the sequel. That is the pitfall of the current historian: dealing with familiar things, he is discouraged by the fact of their familiarity, and treats them merely fragmentarily where, if he were an artist, he would treat them sketchily.

Prof. Max Müller's method gives him the chance of appearing as a more or less complete story teller. There is plenty of entertainment to be got out of his book by the casual reader, not always, indeed, consciously provided by the Professor. A man so eminent in his own department of learning has a certain borrowed interest, even when he is telling the story of a sixpence won from the Prince of Wales (a sixpence still carefully preserved), and of the thrilling moment when the Prince laughed, at an Academy banquet, while the Professor was speaking, and, for the moment, put him out of countenance. That pause seems to have been less awful than the Professor feared, and may even rank in history with Macaulay's "flashes of silence," since Browning is quoted for the assurance that it gave life to the speech. The reader who can accustom himself to a large tolerance for a German's attitude towards Royalty, may yet lose patience when music is discussed with a cock-sureness of which one specimen is more than enough. The Professor could "never learn to enjoy Wagner, except now and then in one of his lucid intervals." But he is not content with the mere confession. "Would Mendelssohn have admired Wagner? Would Beethoven have listened to his music, would Bach have tolerated it? Yet these were musicians too." Of all futilities, that kind of vacant surmise is surely the greatest. The Professor boldly prints the mutt-on-chop story, which has secured for his name a severe omission from the pages of Lord Tennyson's biography; and elsewhere in the book is a candour—sometimes a candour of partisanship—which keeps the Tennyson reminiscences company. The note of "I told you so" prevails; and such interviews as that which he had with Darwin leave the reader's sympathy with the evolutionist, whose blunders about origins of speech the Professor was no doubt fully competent to discover and declare. For one must not forget, however tempted at times, that a serious reputation has been earned by the writer of these Reminiscences. They are readable enough; they deal with men of repute; they range over wide fields; but they have their limitations in the writer's own temperament. His are eyes that do not see below the surface of things, and ears that hear but do not overhear.

Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff has a more understanding heart than his friend the Professor, but perhaps not quite so cool a head. All gentle things in men and women are particularly dear to him. The sentiment of Mrs. Craven's "Sister's Story" has entered his bones: the allusions to it are frequent and are charged with feeling. Sir Mountstuart's literary tastes are given with some iteration—and the critic may wish he was as certain about anything as his Diarist is about everything. At one time he is lamenting that he meets no really good poetry; and one at once recalls what was being done at the time by Tennyson, Browning, and Rossetti. If these did not suffice for the Diarist he had, however, his consolations. He quotes a good deal of the verse of the Earl of Lytton, whose house at Knebworth he hired. Also, one day, he met the Archbishop of Dublin, who "was quite full of a little gipsy song." Archbishops ought to know; and Sir Mountstuart got the song "which deserves," he says, "all that the Archbishop says of it":

"If I were your little baby
And you were my mother old,
Would you give me a kiss, my darling?
'Oh, sir, you are much too bold!'
'But as you are not my mother,
And as I am not your son,'—
'Oh, that is a different matter;
Maybe I'll give you one.'"

Another glimpse into the poetical preferences of Governors of Madras. "Someone of Tory opinions" read one day the following acrostic:

"G was the great man—mountain of mind,
L a logician expert and refined;
A was an adept in rhetoric's art,
D was the dark spot he had in his heart;
S was the subtlety led him astray,
T was the truth which he bartered away;
O was the cypher his conscience became;
N the new light which enlightened the same;
E was the evil one shouting with joy:
At it, and down with it, Gladstone, my boy!"

A young lady, of Liberal opinions, who heard these lines "went to a table" and wrote a counter-blast:

"G is the genius that governs the nation,
L is the lords that require education,
A is the animus raised by the great,
D is the donkeys who fear for the State,
S is the standard that Liberals raise;
T is the Tories who howl in dispraise;
O's Opposition wanting a head,
N is the nation, not driven, but led;
E is old England shouting for joy:
Stick to the Government, Gladstone, my boy!"

It is this last version, puerile and irrelevant of its own class, that the excellent Liberal Privy Councillor stamps with his approval—"an extremely clever acrostic."

Of another poet the Diarist makes mention at this time, but in his capacity as a journalist. "Among others with us today at Hampden was Edwin Arnold, who told us that the Daily Telegraph is at this moment negotiating to buy Babylon." "What next?" asked the amazed Diarist, needlessly as it now seems. That was twenty-five years ago, and the negotiations are not yet completed.

Disraeli not only looked a sphinx, but became one to observers of the Diarist's order. Nevertheless, Sir Mountstuart manages to give a good many anecdotes, though mostly old ones, about "the Chief." Some of the stories currently told are here further authenticated by the naming of the authorities for them. It was to Lord Aberdare that the new Lord Beaconsfield said he felt that he was dead, but in the Elysian fields. Once Sir Mountstuart met Sir William Harcourt on his way to Hughenden, whither Disraeli had invited him, desiring, as he said, to have the countenance of the staunchest Protestant of his acquaintance at the re-opening of his church—with its ritualistic rector. Our Diarist should have seen Sir William after, not before, the visit, about which he told his friends some most excellent stories, some of which we hope may have been taken down; but that is the luck of this Diarist again and again. Plunket, once Solicitor-General for Ireland, sat next Disraeli when Mr. Biggar first rose to address the House. "What is that creature?" asked the Chief, and, on being told, replied: "Oh, I thought it was a Leprehaun, one of the things that come out in the moonlight to dance with the fairies." The old story of Disraeli's early saying that he meant to be Prime Minister of England is given here by Sir Mountstuart on the authority of Venables, who had it from Mrs. Norton, who herself introduced Disraeli to Lord Melbourne, whose query, "What's your ambition?" called forth the reply prophetic. "A political finishing-governess," was Disraeli's first impression of John Stuart Mill. On another page we seem to have the shadow of Robert Orange:

"Dined at the Athenæum with Butler Johnstone. We talked much of Ralph Earle; his joining the Roman Communion upon his death-bed, among other things. Ralph Earle, my sail with whom in his caïque from Therapia to the Simplegades remains among my most poetical recollections, was one of the most interesting Englishmen I have known in public life. He passed into the Diplomatic service under circumstances peculiarly creditable to himself. He left to become Private Secretary to Disraeli, who had completely fascinated his boyish imagination. Later he came into Parliament, and was made secretary to the Poor Law Board. The year after he quarrelled with Disraeli, under circumstances of which I heard an intelligible account this evening for the first time, and left the Government with Lord Salisbury and Lord Carnarvon. He then took to Financial Diplomacy, by which he made a considerable sum of money. He had statesmanlike abilities of a higher order than almost any man on his side of politics, but he was born in the wrong century; he ought to have been the secretary, the confidential agent, and at length, perhaps, the successful rival of Alberoni."

The real nature of the quarrel between the Chief and his former devotee is, oddly, but characteristically enough, withheld.

Sir Mountstuart's Indian reminiscences are not included in these volumes. But he has notes on various Continental tours, including a stay in Paris, where Mr. John Morley presented him to Gambetta; and he met many Americans and had an apt ear for their good sayings. Lowell, for instance, speaking of English cathedrals at a breakfast party, happily said: "Ely is like a monster which has crawled out of the fens and is sunning itself on the edge. Lichfield is like a swan." It was a Swedish minister, who, when there was gossip about a marriage between the old Duchess of Sutherland and Garibaldi, and when someone said: "Impossible, he has a wife already," retorted, "Put up Gladstone to explain her away." The Diarist had a large acquaintance, not merely among Parliament men, but among authors, ecclesiastics, and particularly botanists, whose business was his pleasure. His acquaintance with royalties is as large as Prof. Max Müller's, but is touched upon more lightly. He should, however, pay the Count de Flandre the compliment of spelling his name correctly in a new edition; where also Schumann's name, instead of Schubert's, should be printed as the composer of music for Heine's "Beiden Grenadiere"; and where a French gender, on p. 272 of the same volume, should have revision.

A NOTABLE BOOK.

Dreamers of the Ghetto. By Israel Zangwill.
(William Heinemann.)

So long as the engine of international finance remains under Jewish control; so long as public opinion is medicated by Jewish influence exerted over the Press of Europe; so long as the Ghetto of Poland and the Pale contain the saddest millions on the earth's surface; so long will the Jews continue to be the most interesting race among men. A people who baffled the Pharaohs, foiled Nebuchadnezzar, thwarted Rome, defeated feudalism, circumvented the Romanoffs, financed Columbus in his discovery of America, baulked the Kaiser, and undermined the third French Republic, supplies ample reason for curiosity. Exposed to constant social persecution and to proselytisation at the hands of opulent fanatics who have not the humour to perceive that the spread of Christianity among Christians would be the more appropriate object for their missionary activities, the Jews are more often brought before the notice of the public by painful incidents than by the charm of a Hebrew personality, or the achievements of a Jewish genius.

Mr. Zangwill has given us an exception to this rule. In a weekly paper he recently informed us that he was the son of an East End Jew. Readers of the Dreamers of the Ghetto will become acquainted with a new attraction belonging to the destitute alien and his descendants. How many destitute immigrants from Warsaw or Berdicheff may be set off against Mr. Zangwill's latest contribution to the delight of the reading world, I cannot undertake to say. No one can rise from reading the Dreamers of the Ghetto without perceiving that he has been in the presence of a master.

The majority of Mr. Zangwill's fifteen stories are based on history. He has worked the mine of Graetz, the historian of the Jews, to good effect. He has sunk shafts into the bed rock of that dull and industrious writer; and, without changing the material extracted, has imparted to it an element peculiar to himself alone. Mr. Zangwill is the prose poet of atmosphere. He lifts the air from the seventeenth century; he enables us to breathe it. The blue skies of Smyrna, the waters of Venice, the colour and form of mediæval Rome, the aroma of Poland, of Portugal, and of the Hague are reproduced, not by a painstaking and conscientious artist, but with the pencil of one touched with the divine afflatus. How he does it, and under what rules he produces his effects, I do not know, but it is there. Still, the genius is Oriental: Semitic, not Aryan. The fires are lambent; they illuminate, but do not warm. Perhaps one reason is an inexplicable prolixity. In one of the best of these stories, "A Child of the Ghetto," is a paragraph of 252 lines of solid print; but it is a paragraph that the school-boys of 1898 would do well to learn by heart.

The virtue of prosperity is temperance; the virtue of adversity is fortitude. The Jew has always borne adversity with distinction. Prosperity, coupled with his passionate desire to shine and the greed and ignorance of Christians, is his curse, and may yet be his ruin. Prosperity to the Hebrew race seems to have a hereditary and baleful effect in killing spiritual life. The prosperous Jews of England and the Continent look down, for the most part, with contempt upon the yearning of their poorer and persecuted members of their race for the fulfilment of the Messianic prophecies and the return to the Holy Land.

Whenever prosperity is alleged against the Jews, the invariable rejoinder is to point out the extreme poverty of the majority of the race. In France the Jews are one eight-hundredth of the population. They own one quarter of the wealth of the land. In England agricultural decay, imported food, industrial inflation, congested cities, and a democracy impotent to provide its own means of subsistence, form the soil upon which the Jews flourish, and constitute an irresistible attraction to the persecuted Hebrews of other lands. The Huguenot immigrants of 1685 were completely absorbed in the population at the end of the second generation. As much cannot be said of the bulk of the English Jews. A few families, as remarkable for public spirit and refinement as for wealth, have given to Englishmen some idea of what the Jew may become when rooted in the country no less by affection and patriotism than by interest. In Austria-Hungary the Jew, like his brethren all the world over, is an adept in the art of "getting on." An Austrian friend said the other day, "They have certainly all the money and most of the brains." Mr. Sidney Whitman says that were it not for the kindly assistance of Jewish bankers most of the noble manufacturers could not carry on their business at all. The Jews are all powerfully represented in every walk of life that leads to influence and fortune. The great business houses, the banks, such railways as are in private hands, are all controlled by them. Mr. Zangwill himself asked the editor of the Buda-Pesth newspaper, the Pesther Lloyd, "Have you any Christians on your staff?" "I think we have one," was the editor's reply.

In Russia and Poland the condition of the Jewish race presents a vivid contrast to the plethoric prosperity they have attained in freer lands. Within the last few days a deputation of Russian Jews have submitted to the Minister of the Interior a memorandum in which it is demonstrated that the present situation cannot be allowed to last much longer. Over five millions of Jews, who are increasing at four times the rate of the Russians—themselves the most prolific of civilised nations—are submerged in hopeless misery from the sheer pressure of existence. Seven years ago the conduct of Russia was arraigned before the public opinion of Europe in terms since applied to Turkey for her treatment of the Armenians. Russia has not altered her ways by a hair's breadth, but there is a conspiracy to suppress the actual state of misery suffered by the Jewish millions imprisoned in the big Ghetto of Central Europe, perhaps because when Russia needed money she obtained it from the Jews—£16,000,000 sterling were guaranteed by Jewish firms. Excellent excuses are advanced why the Jews supply subsidies to the Russian persecutor; but the fact remains that the Jews in Eastern Europe are in a calamitous state of destitution and misery, that their agony attracts no attention, and that they are degenerating morally, physically, and intellectually. Prosperous Jews make no sign.

Under these circumstances the appearance of such a book as the Dreamers of the Ghetto is of service, not only to English literature, but also to the suffering majority of a race destined to become predominant in the counsels of the world. Anything that attracts attention to the Jews indirectly a benefit to the suffering millions of the Pale. The silent tragedy that continues year after year is approaching its end, and it cannot be long before Russia herself will be compelled to deal with the Jewish question on statesmanlike lines. Mr. Zangwill, though a chronicler of dreamers, is too much an artist to be himself the victim of sterile speculation. The Jew hatred of the Russian Government is fructifying: its harvest is at hand. That the ripening process will be assisted by the sunshine of Mr. Zangwill's genius is perhaps the strongest tribute to the value of his Dreamers of the Ghetto.

ARNOLD WHITE.

PLAYS, ACTABLE AND OTHERWISE.

The Princess and the Butterfly. By Arthur Wing Pinero. (Heinemann.)

Macaire. By W. E. Henley and R. L. Stevenson. (Heinemann.)

Godefroi and Yolande. By Laurence Irving. (Lane.)

Hernani. By Victor Hugo. Translated into English Verse by R. Farquharson Sharp. (Richards.)

THE accidents of the publishing season have brought it about that four plays, representing widely different dramatic methods and schools, have reached us more or less at the same moment. Two of them—Mr. Pinero's The Princess and the Butterfly, and Mr. Laurence Irving's Godefroi and Yolande—are now published for the first time. Of the others, Messrs. Henley and Stevenson's Macaire is already known to those who are interested in what is called "Literary Drama," while Victor Hugo's Hernani, which Mr. R. F. Sharp has attempted to render into English blank verse, is well known alike on the stage and in the study, and must always retain its interest for students of literature, if only as the first-fruits of "1830," and the Romantic movement in French drama.

All who are interested in the revival of dramatic art in England must rejoice at the modern fashion of publishing plays which is now in vogue among our leading playwrights. For almost any dramatist would hesitate to publish a confessedly ill-written play. Time was when very slipshod writing was held to be good enough for the English stage. A harrowing situation or two, or a certain amount of spirited horse-play, were supposed to be all that was required to hold a London audience, and all the more delicate qualities of dramatic work were neglected. In the last few years there has been an undeniable improvement in this respect. Plays are written with greater care, if not always with greater skill. Characters are studied from the life, and delineated with some approach to fidelity, instead of merely following traditional lines, and serving simply as pegs on which to hang well-worn situations. In dialogue a certain literary quality is at least aimed at, though no doubt seldom completely attained; and in general the standard of play-writing in these and similar matters has certainly risen. Even the modern farce is not always the wholly contemptible thing from the literary standpoint that it was a dozen years ago.

But dramatic critics have not been slow to point out the danger which lies in this modern tendency. In a play, after all, the essential thing is "action," and it is only in so far as it ministers to "action" that dialogue is effective on the stage. If its literary quality is allowed to interfere with this the play fails, and the dialogue, from the dramatic point of view, fails also.

To cast all convention whatsoever to the winds, and try to write dialogue and construct situations without reference to the special needs of the stage must lead to disaster. Mere beauty or profundity or wit of dialogue, or mere fidelity to life, may be effective in a novel. It may be read for its own sake irrespective of its precise bearing on the plot. But on the stage other factors must be taken into account which are not present in the writing of a novel, and none of them can be safely disregarded. What the writer of modern comedy, therefore, has to find, if he takes his art and the stage seriously, and desires to be acted as well as to be read, is a style which shall produce the illusion of ordinary spoken speech to the audience while, at the same time, it retains a certain literary finish which, in actual conversation, is rarely if ever found.

Very often a kind of dialogue which is delightful in a novel—Mr. Henry James's, for example—is quite lost on the stage. There are some people who, realising this, and realising also how effective mere fustian and declamation often are in the theatre, despair altogether of the drama as a literary form, and declare that literary excellence is incompatible with modern theatrical effectiveness; but it by no means follows, because merely literary dialogue is ineffective on the stage, that the dramatist for stage purposes must throw all literary quality to the winds and fall back upon artificial or conventional rant.

Mr. Pinero has realised this, and in many of his plays, most of all, perhaps, in The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith, his dialogue, while unquestionably effective on the stage, has also a real literary quality. And in The Princess and the Butterfly, though it is neither the most dramatic nor the most literary of his dramas, there is still to be found a good deal of writing which combines these qualities. Mr. Pinero, in fact, has hit upon the secret of that via media between purely literary and purely theatrical dialogue which satisfies at once the audience in the theatre and the reader in the study. In other respects his most recently published play is hardly so satisfactory. The plot, as he works it out, is not in itself dramatic, and there is next to no action. The construction, for so practised a dramatist, is curiously weak. Moreover, if it be true that the first duty of a comedy is to excite emotion, The Princess and the Butterfly must be held to fail, for it calls forth neither laughter nor tears. Its interest is purely intellectual, while it is not sufficiently fantastic to amuse by the mere humour of character and situation, as another of Mr. Pinero's plays, The Amazons, succeeded in doing.

Of the Henley-Stevenson Macaire it may be said that it has more dramatic possibilities in it than any other play which these two men of letters produced. Indeed, it has more than one scene which even the most practised playwright could not improve upon. But, unhappily, for theatrical purposes, only certain classes of play can be produced with any hope of success, and a "melodramatic farce" is not one of these. Laughter and blood do not combine happily on the stage, and at the theatre death at least must be always serious. The death of Macaire at the end of the third act is a very effective stage climax; but it is lead up to by extravaganzas as farcical as even Mr. Gilbert could conceive, and is out of tune with the rest of the play. Much of the dialogue is admirably written, and the character of Macaire is conceived in so masterly a fashion that we believe a melodrama might yet be written round him if the surviving author would consent to eliminate the farcical element in his drama.

Mr. Laurence Irving is an interesting figure among the younger dramatists, and his "Medieval Drama in One Act," Godefroi and Yolande, though it is by no means a finished work of art, is worth reading. The plot is founded on a story which must be familiar to all English lovers of poetry, from Mr. Swinburne's poem "The Leper." The play is written after the manner of M. Maeterlinck, and is more in the nature of a literary exercise than an original dramatic effort. Mr. Irving has evidently felt the fascination of M. Maeterlinck's dialogue, and he has studied with some success the methods—we may even say the tricks—by which he produces his effects; but that, after all, is not very difficult to do, and though imitation is the sincerest flattery, it is by no means the highest form of art. From a literary point of view, his style is distinctly curious. It is printed as prose, and apparently Mr. Irving means it to be considered as prose, but a considerable part of it might just as well have been printed as blank verse. Here is one passage of many which might be so treated without the alteration of a single word:

"GODEFROI:                   What am I here?
I am Sir Delorous! Sir Long-visage!
MEGARDE: Thy father poor he was, but he was proud!
GODEFROI: Sad am I here; sadder were I elsewhere.
I am one made to suffer and eat out
My heart in hopeless hope.
MEGARDE:                   Come hence, come hence!
GODEFROI: No; leave me, mother, here!
MEGARDE:                   Son, leave thee here?
Thou wouldst not stay here. Then—
GODEFROI:                   I cannot hence.
MEGARDE: What can thus keep you here?
                  You love this life?
GODEFROI: Not I—I hate this life!
MEGARDE:                   What is it then?
GODEFROI: Oh, leave me, ask me not!
MEGARDE:                   I charge thee speak.
My son, I am thy mother."

One can with difficulty suppose that this is accidental, though it is of course possible that Mr. Irving did not realise how closely his prose followed the rhythm of blank verse, and that his marked preference for the iambic foot was merely an unconscious echo of Shakespeare's verse structure. But Mr. Irving's prose has other and more serious faults than this tendency to become verse. Its grammar and syntax are not always faultless and its mannerism is apt to lead to very serious obscurity of diction. But the play shows a grasp of dramatic method and a knowledge of how to work up to an effective situation.

Of Mr. Sharp's Hernani one can only say that it is a straightforward, fairly competent piece of work. The difficulty of translating Hugo's lines into English blank verse can hardly be exaggerated, and the result cannot be called poetry. When this is said it can be easily understood that the beauty of the original has mainly disappeared in the translation.

WAR CORRESPONDENCE.

The Indian Frontier War: being an Account of the Mohmund and Tirah Expeditions, 1897.
By Lienel James. (Heinemann.)

MR. JAMES was Reuter's special war correspondent in the recent Mohmund and Tirah expeditions, and apparently the contents of this book are founded on, if they are not verbal repetitions of, the despatches he sent home in that capacity. We have here, therefore, a very matter-of-fact account of the recent frontier fighting. Mr. James tells the story without subjecting it to any literary process that might enhance its effect. We do not complain of this; the book admirably fulfils its purpose, that of recording in daily detail the events and movements of these expeditions to quell the revolt. But the technicalities which the ordinary man is content to swallow in the newspaper are apt to tire him in a book; and we think that Mr. James's work will be fully appreciated only by soldiers and men with Indian experience. The public wearied of the war while it was yet in progress. In truth, the thrilling story of Dargai was the one event that relieved a daily dribble of small actions and short disheartening death-lists. Instinctively one turns to Mr. James's account of that red rush up hill. Here is part of it:

"The signal was given, the guns boomed out their salvos, and the cliff was crowned with a semi-circle of bursting shrapnel; then the final order came—a momentary pause—and the officers of the Gordons rushed over the nullah. The pipes rolled out the slogan, and with tight-clenched teeth the Highlanders burst into the open. It was an awful two minutes. The length of the exposed zone was swept with a leaden stream, and the dust of the striking bullets half hid the advancing men. The head of the upper column melted away, but a few struggled on, and there were more to take the places of the fallen. Out over the cover came the kilted soldiers, the Sikhs, Dorsets, Derbys, Gurkhas, in spasmodic rushes as the fire slackened, and the cover halfway was won. A moment for breath, and the men were up again. Another terrible rush, another medley of struggling men and writhing figures, and the three companies of Gurkhas were reached."

Mr. James warmly protests against the charge of incapacity which has been brought against the officers of the Tirah field force. "Inefficient transport," he asserts, was the cause of the weakness, and the blame—the Indian Government's. We cannot say that he proves this; but he demonstrates the enormous difficulties which beset any transport arrangements on the frontier. At one time General Lockhart had a train of no fewer than 71,800 animals under his control! Mr. James elsewhere remarks that in this class of warfare

"it is the wounded who are the cause of disaster. A wounded man at once means six men out of the fighting line, four to carry the casualty, and one to carry the rifles of the carrying party. Five casualties at once reduce a company to so small a number that they become insufficient to keep the enemy's fire down, and then follows one of these deplorable incidents in which our frontier fighting is so prolific."

By the way, Mr. James's use of the word "casualty" in the above passage indicates the rather frozen style in which his book is written. It is Reuter between covers.

The Story of the Malakand Field Force: an Episode of Frontier War. By Winston L. Spencer Churchill, Lieut. 4th Queen's Own Hussars. (Longmans.)

THERE is but one fault to find with Lieut. Spencer Churchill's book, and since that is both small and singular it shall be kept till the end. It will be remembered that last July, when the news was flashed abroad that Malakand and Chakdara were invested by the fanatical tribesmen of the Swat Valley, the Indian Government ordered the preparation of a Field Force, under the command of Sir Bindon Blood, for the relief of these posts. Lieut. Churchill was attached to that force—as a non-combatant, it is to be supposed—and wrote letters home to the Daily Telegraph, descriptive of the marching and the fighting. These letters have been shuffled, redacted, and added to, and the result is before us, and a very admirable and inspiring result it is. It is plain that Lieut. Churchill has inherited much of the dash and intellectual quality of his father, the late Lord Randolph Churchill. He may not be a speaker, as his father was, but he is a writer of more than promise—in fact, of excellent performance. He has manifestly a clear eye in his head, which can observe very swiftly and closely, and a great gift of language with which to express what he sees. From the very first paragraph one is delighted with the exercise of his faculty:

"All along the north and north-west frontiers of India lie the Himalayas, the greatest disturbance of the earth's surface that the convulsions of chaotic periods have produced. . . . The Himalayas are not a line, but a great country of mountains. Standing on some lofty pass or commanding point in Dir, Swat, or Bajaur, range after range is seen as the long surges of an Atlantic swell, and in the distance some glittering snow-peak suggests a white-crested roller yet higher than the rest. . . ."

And so on. That is as good an impressionistic picture in words as need be asked for of one who is not a professional scribe and it renders the effect of the Himalayas better than any description we can remember. It is little to the point to say (as a querulous purist may) that, in the last sentence quoted, "standing" ought to have another subject than "range" to agree with. Lieut. Churchill is a soldier, not a schoolmaster, and we know what he means; if the present participle "standing" ventures to demand another subject of the sentence than the one given it, then all the worse for the present participle. But it is not over participles and subjects that Lieut. Churchill is so frequently coming to grief, but—of all small things in writing—over the use of commas. Why is he so madly generous in bestowing them? Here is a short sentence, which will serve as well as a long one to illustrate what we mean:

"Here the weapons of the nineteenth century, are in the hands of the savages, of the Stone Age."

In that sentence no commas are needed at all. Can it be that Lieut. Churchill has punctuated with an ear for reading aloud, rather than with an eye for sense and structure? Or, does he think that commas do not matter, and so the more the merrier?

BRIEFER MENTION.

The Story of Perugia. By Margaret Symonds and Lina Duff Gordon. Illustrated by M. Helen James. (J. M. Dent & Co.)

HERE is a dainty book to lure you to Italy. It comes, the first of a series of "Mediæval Towns." Lavender and gold for the cover. The thin paper is tender to the finger, and the drawings imprison the sunshine of last year. It is written, too, this book; who could, who dare, mar a theme like Perugia? Infinite memories of art and war brood in her streets, caress her torrid walls, and calm the faces of her women. Perched on the limit of a long ridge, Perugia is hardly a city of this world:

All the winds and airs of heaven play and rush round her walls in summer and winter. The sun beats down upon her roofs; one seems to see more stars at night, above her ramparts than one sees in any other town one knows of."

place to grow well, after London. The Umbrian plain, green with corn and "pink with sainfoin flowers," lies below; and far away, each in its setting of verdure, white-walled Assisi, white-walled Spello, white-walled Foligno, twinkle with their own uprightness. At night, the moon on the Tiber draws your fancy down to Rome." And tell may the writer fill the strange silence of this adorable eyrie with the questions:

"Where are the Beccherni, and where are the Raspanti? Are the Baglioni really dead, and the Oddi, where are they? And the Bagellants and the Penitenti—have even their hosts departed? Will not a pope ride in at the gates with his nephews and his cardinals and take up peaceful quarters in the grim Quonica? Will not some war-like Abbot come and batter down the church towers to build himself a palace? Will no procession pass us with a banner of Bonfigli, and women wailing that the plague should be removed?"

Never, save in the dreams of those who are dreamers born. But for ourselves, we hope soon again to cross the Piazza of Saint Lorenzo, and drink from that fountain that was "ever dear as the apple of their eye to the people of Perugia."

Triologues. By William Griffiths. (Kansas: Hudson-Kimberley Publishing Co.)

NOTHING that can give distinction to a book has been omitted by the publishers of this little work. The edition is limited to 250 copies, of which ours is 100; there are more blank end-papers than any volume ought to have; the covers are of warehouse paper; the design thereon has no relation to the contents; and the prefatory note is an exercise in fantastic printing. In it the author speaks of his work as an attempt to introduce the old form of Elizabethan dialogue into America. He might probably more accurately have substituted John Davidsonian for Elizabethan, because Triologues instantly strikes one as an American adaptation of the Fleet-street Eclogues. Mr. Griffiths, however, has thoughts of his own, and considerable rhyming skill, and his is a pleasant little book, with now and then a really invigorating line. Here is a brisk little snatch:

"The city holds for some, mayhap,
A jolly life, but O,
As early Spring forefeels the sap
Awaken through the snow,
Give me the sturdy roving foot,
Then with a shouldered load,
When Hope brings in an easy boot,
I sing the open road."

Cycling. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

THIS slender volume is a reprint, with some modifications, of the article on "Cycling" in The Encyclopædia of Sport. Three authors are concerned in the work: Mr. H. Graves, who takes the general and mechanical section; Mr. Lacy Hillier, who discusses racing; and the Countess of Malmesbury, who has views on cycling for women. Together they make a very practical and informing trio. The story of the first bicycle ride from London to Brighton hath now an antiquated ring, though it occurred less than thirty years ago. Mr. Mayall was hero. He started one morning early in January, 1869, but on reaching Redhill—a distance of 17¾ miles—he had to give up, completely exhausted. "After more practice, he, in company with Rowley Turner and Charles Spencer, made a second attempt in the following February; and though his companions fell by the way, he succeeded in reaching Brighton alone in about sixteen hours. The feat was the subject of some public comment at the time, but as some three weeks later the brothers Chinnery walked to Brighton in eleven hours and twenty-five minutes, the advantages of the new steed, as demonstrated by Mr. Mayall's heroic efforts, were considerably discounted." And to-day the ride is within the compass even of rural deans!

The Royal Household. By W. A. Lindsay, Q.C., "Windsor Herald." (Kegan Paul & Co.)

THIS sumptuous quarto deals with the sixty years of the present reign, and forms a chronicle, not of the whole of what is technically known as the Royal Household, but of those more intimate members of it who, in the words of the dedication, "have had the honour to wait upon Her Majesty's person." The bulk of the volume consists of biographical notices, alphabetically arranged, of lords, grooms, and equerries-in-waiting, ladies and women of the bed-chamber, maids and pages of honour, and similar Court functionaries. These are preceded by a brief introduction, by a classified list of the successive holders of each office, and by a table showing the tenure of the Parliamentary posts during the various administrations of the reign. The work is done with great elaboration and, on the whole, commendable accuracy. But surely Mr. Arthur Lyttelton cannot have taken orders "on leaving Her Majesty's Household," if, as the compiler states, the pages of honour resign their posts at the age of sixteen years and a half. In the introduction, "Windsor Herald" points out how desirable a thing a complete history of the Royal Household would be. We are almost tempted to wish that his knowledge and industry had been devoted to such a task instead of the present catalogue. A similar account of the succession of Court officials during the reign, say, of Elizabeth would be invaluable to the student of history; whereas much of this treatise merely repeats matter already available in the pages of G. E. C.'s great peerage and the London Gazette. From the Gazette "Windsor Herald" reprints in an appendix complete accounts of a number of Royal ceremonials, beginning with the Coronation and ending with the wedding of the Duke of York. It is loyal reading.

Historic New York. Edited by Maud Wilder Goodwin, Alice Carrington Royce, and Ruth Putnam. (Putnam's.)

THIS is not a continuous treatise, but a series of monographs, originally published month by month under the title of the "Half-Moon Papers," for the students of that flourishing New York institution—the City History Club. The object of the editors has been to throw light upon the early stages of their City's famous story, upon the period now almost passing into the legendary, the pioneer settlements upon the Manhattan Island, the struggles which preceded the conversion of New Amsterdam into New York. Their method is to isolate individual aspects of that forgotten life, or to trace in detail the fortunes of some particular building or locality now absorbed in the vast parallelograms of the modern metropolis. The writers appear thoroughly competent to their task; they have spared no pains in the unearthing of historic records, and they tell their tales with sympathy and taste. Buncombe is conspicuous by its absence. Where all are good, we have been particularly interested by Miss Alice Morse Earle's study of "The Stadt Huys of New Amsterdam," with its picture of the choleric overbearing Dutch governor—Peter Stuyvesant. Very excellent, too, is Mr. Durand's narrative of the contest for the supremacy over city finance between Stuyvesant and the burgomasters, in his paper on "The City Chest of New Amsterdam." Other notable contributions are those by Miss Ruth Putnam on "Annetje Jan's Farm," and by Mr. and Mrs. Hewitt on "The Bowery." This savoury quarter was originally the site of a number of Dutch "houweries," or arms, whence the name. The volume is adorned with a number of particularly well reproduced illustrations, most of them showing quaint specimens of Dutch architecture, with fascinating "crow-step" gables. A second series of the "Half-Moon Papers," is promised by the editors, and we shall await it with interest.

Goldfields and Chrysanthemums. By Catherine Bond. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

THESE notes of travel in Australia and Japan are the outcome of a diary, the wish of friends for its publication, and a consciousness on the part of the writer that an unprinted journal is a violation of the laws of nature. The book is in no sense literature, but its descriptions of journeyings in Western Australia, and its pictures of life in Japan will serve "to while away an hour or so," and thus fulfil the modest ambition of the writer. It is attractively bound, beautifully printed, and well illustrated. The reader is gently led through the monotonous scenery of Western Australia; camps in the Bush; introduced to Coolgardie and the goldfields; meets trains of camels on the march; and suffers the shock of encountering a man on a bicycle in regions sacred to desolation and lack of water. The authoress has an extraordinary partiality for the word "so." It is worked from the beginning to the end of the book with inexorable pertinacity. Thus:

"Our pace is so slow, and the sun so near the horizon, that when we arrive at the Gardens we decide only to take a hurried look round, not staying to see the curator; so we soon turn to jog back again, feeling very disappointed. . . . They are so erect . . . It does not signify so much, . . . so we dismiss the machine."

These extracts are culled from one page.

Thomas Best Jervis. By W. P. Jervis. (Eliot Stock.)

This book is "A Centenary Tribute," edited by a son of the subject of the memoir.

"Thomas Best Jervis's estimate of the vital importance of geography to mankind in every possible walk of human activity was one which it would be difficult, if not impossible, to surpass. . . . He viewed geology, botany, ethnography, statistics, and numerous other sciences, as transformed into adjective forms subservient to geography, so as to become geological, botanical, ethnographical, statistical geography."

To a reader consumed by a like passion this book will possess elements of interest. Having passed a brilliant examination at Addiscombe Military College, young Jervis was enrolled as ensign in the Bombay Engineer Corps on June 1, 1813, and from that time to his death, in 1857, the interests of India—geographical, spiritual, moral, and educational—possessed him. He began his geographical surveys in Southern Konkan in 1823, and the results of his labours met with unstinted praise from his superior officers. In addition to the accounts of the geographic and lithographic undertakings, which constituted his life work, extracts are given from his speeches at Bible Society meetings, and at Exeter Hall gatherings, together with a voluminous correspondence, addressed to Government officials, private friends, and members of his own family. Eminent as Lieutenant-Colonel Jervis was in ability and sterling piety, he was singularly lacking in humour and sense of proportion, as witnessed by his letters to his children. They are indeed didactic! The only humour in the book is unintentional.

The Fern World. (New Edition.) By Francis George Heath. (The Imperial Press, Ltd.)

THIS bounteous volume is a storehouse of information on the habits and habitats of each member of the British fern family. It does not come before the reader seeking recognition. It has already "been sold in every English-speaking country in the world." For some time out of print, it is now reissued in an eighth edition at "a popular price." The volume is divided into five parts: "The Fern World"; "Fern Culture," under which head suggestions and practical instruction are given; "Fern Hunting"; "Some Rambles through Fern Land"; and "British Ferns: their Description, Distribution, and Culture." This last division, which comprises the greater part of the book, is illustrated by delicately coloured plates, and the fern collector and would-be cultivator will find herein every assistance. Under the heading of "Rambles through Fern Land," the reader is led through the coombes and over the downs of Devon, the home of so many beautiful specimens of fern life. For the casual student, as well as for the specialist, the book will be found invaluable.

The History of the Great Northern Railway, 1845-1895. By Charles H. Grinling. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. GRINLING'S book tells us in almost too minute detail of the early struggles of the London and York Railway (the nucleus of the Great Northern) before Parliamentary Committees. The broad fact is, that owing to the attempts of "King" Hudson and his fellow-monarchs to strangle the infant at its birth, and the seventy days' fight in "one of the smallest of the wooden sheds in which, pending the completion of the new Houses of Parliament, Private Bill Committees were condemned to meet," nearly half a million of money was sunk in preliminary expenses. Fortunately, most of the original shareholders were substantial people, and not mere "stags," like a certain "poor brother of the Charterhouse," who, though his yearly income, derived from pensions, was under £100 a year, had contracted for (and disposed of at a premium) a large quantity of stock.

The obstructiveness of rival companies did not end in the Parliamentary Committee-rooms, but was exhibited in ways of almost incredible pettiness. The station authorities at Retford refused to supply water there to the Great Northern engines, so as to hamper the through service between Peterborough and Leeds; and at Grimsby blocks were placed across the rails to prevent the Great Northern using the running powers to which it was entitled. On one occasion the Great Northern passengers reached the Humber ferry only to find that the last boat had been purposely sent away without them, and had to spend the night in the railway carriages or on sofas at the station; on another a Great Northern engine which had dared to show its buffers in Nottingham was hunted by a posse of Midland engines, as if it had been a wild elephant, and after a desperate struggle captured, and interned in a disused shed, whence it was not released for seven months. At Manchester the North-Western and Sheffield companies had a station in common. Nevertheless,

"the North-Western authorities began to take people into custody for coming by the Sheffield trains into the Manchester station; they frightened an old lady out of her wits and distracted several feeble people; but at last they got hold of a lawyer, who showed them they had 'caught a tartar'; and so after that no more passengers were apprehended."

It is difficult to realise that these incidents, which might have come out of one of Mr. Gilbert's comic operas, should have taken place in connexion with such a prosaic business as railway-management seems to us nowadays. Fortunately for the Great Northern, it had in these troublous times an exceptionally strong chairman in Mr. Edmund Denison, who, like his son after him (the present Lord Grimthorpe), was a "bonny fighter." The biggest storm he ever weathered was at the half yearly meeting in August, 1857, after the discovery that Leopold Redpath, the registrar of the company, had robbed it of over £200,000 by creating fictitious stock.

After that the most noteworthy occurrences in the life of the Company have been a few bad accidents—notably that at Abbot's Ripton in 1876, when three trains collided and thirteen people were killed, and that at Canonbury in 1881, when no fewer than four trains were in collision in a tunnel and six people were killed; and the races to Edinburgh and Aberdeen, in 1888 and 1895 respectively, which are still fresh in the public memory. The Great Northern has not of late years been the most financially prosperous of railway companies, but it has remained one of the most enterprising. Its history deserved to be written, and it has lost nothing in Mr. Grinling's able hands. Everyone who is interested in railways should read his book.

An Eton Bibliography. By L. V. Harcourt. (Swan Sonnenschien.)

THIS has few claims to be considered a scientific bibliography. It is rather a hand-list of Etoniana, mainly drawn from the author's own collection. The majority of the items directly concern the college; a few are works of general literature of Eton masters, and should have been omitted.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE POTENTATE. BY FRANCES FORBES ROBERTSON.

A steel-bright romance of the Middle Ages. The hero, Everard al Dernement, is introduced as a pretty boy, with a girl's face and man's spirit. A murdered father is ever before his eyes. The overthrow of his murderer, the tyrant Duke of Bresali, is the objective; and this comes by way of postern doors, and flashing blades, and passages of love and adventure, and all the paraphernalia of romance, marshalled by a skilled hand. (A. Constable & Co. 312 pp. 6s.)

THE STRENGTH OF TWO. BY ESMÉ STUART.

Miss Stuart's stories are popular favourites, and this should disappoint none of her admirers. It belongs to the temperately sensational class, and is told with the maximum of dialogue. Here are a gambler, and his daughter Joy, and a young squire, and Ivor, and a dwarf, and an eccentric and rich old aunt, and—well, there are all the characters convention can demand. The story is full of spirit. (F. V. White. 296 pp. 6s.)

THE CATTLE MAN. BY G. B. BURGIN.

The adventures of an artist brought up to active misogyny by a Canadian priest. On crossing to England in a cattle-boat he forges his creed. A blending of serious sentiment and humour of the school to which Mr. Burgin belongs. Of Piccadilly Circus at night it is said: "The whole scene required a Whistler to paint it—the Christ to sweep it away." Of a cattle-drover who has been thrown overboard: "It was evident that his system had received a speck, owing to the quantity, and quality, of the unfamiliar beverage which he had just swallowed." A very good-humoured tale. (Grant Richards. 246 pp. 6s.)

BUNTHORNE. BY CHARLES H. EDEN.

Mr. Eden describes his novel as the "Story of a Fool." Bunthorne is certainly a fool as the world judges; but then he is not far from being one of "God's fools." Moreover, he becomes blind, and the author's underlying purpose is to hint at the gratitude which the blind feel towards all who help them in little ways. A sincere piece of work. (Skeffington & Son. 279 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE INDUNA'S WIFE. BY BERTRAM MITFORD.

This tale is told to Nkose, by Untúswa, after a strong dose of tyala. Untúswa is an induna who took for principal wife Lalusini, the sorceress, in whose veins ran the full blood of the House of Sezangakona. The consequences of this marriage make the book; which we recommend to all who like excitement wedded to Zulu words, and to none who do not. Mr. Quiller-Couch, who loves dialect, should enjoy it. (F. V. White. 300 pp. 6s.)

THE WIDOW OF GUY'S. BY MRS. COULSON KERNAHAN.

A medical novel. Mrs. Kernahan, who is the author of The House of Rimmon and A Laggard in Love, brings Bob Sawyer and Ben Aln up to date. Now and then, indeed, the book is not a little Dickensian, especially in the character of Mrs. Pippin. "They're pidlin' Spanishers," says this lady, "and many a time that Saul has sat down to eat them, and rolled them around his lyn' tongue, a-lyn' to me as there was no one like me for getting things into a pickle sharp." (Bowden. 325 pp. 6s.)

DEEPER THAN HONOUR. BY E. LIVINGSTON PRESCOTT.

The author of Scarlet and Steel, having done with flogging in the army, now turns his attention to prisons. This is the story of a well-bred man who, with some reason, becomes a thief, and is imprisoned. It is a sad, unrelieved tragedy. Here is the hero's description: "Ord's head, covered with close, crisp rings of flaxen hair, was big like his body, and solidly set on a solid throat. His features were passably regular, but uninteresting, though a pent-house of yellow moustache, hanging low, softened the stubborn outlines of a long upper lip and square chin," and so on. (Hutchinson & Co. 367 pp. 6s.)

CHIEFLY CONCERNING TWO. BY ALAN SCOTT.

This is the story of a Harley-street doctor who, feeling convinced that there are beneath the surface of society manifold social grades of whose nature and peculiarities he is ignorant, settles down in a village as Robert Crispin, cobbler; and then come love and frustration. The doctor found love a pleasant interlude to a dissertation on the evolution of the streptococci. A quite readable tale. (Digby, Long & Co. 200 pp. 3s. 6d.)

HUMPHRY: A TRADITION. BY E. MENDHAM.

This story is woven out of ignorant beliefs, some of which linger in attenuated forms in remote country districts of England. The hero, Humphry Stoly, is regarded as a wizard with malefic influence. Much of the story turns upon the search by credulous villagers, and a credulous parson, for a fairy hoard of treasure. A clever dramatisation of exploded rural superstitions. (Hutchinson & Co. 368 pp. 6s.)

THE MARQUIS OF VALROSE. BY CHARLES FOLEY.

The story is translated from the French, and it is a thoroughly readable, though not remarkable, romance of the revolutionary times in France. Opens in the little town of Sauges, in La Vendée, in 1799; and lovers, gendarmes, marchionesses, and the like keep the ball rolling. (C. A. Pearson Ltd. 283 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE VIRGIN OF THE SUN. BY GEORGE GRIFFITH.

A good tale of the conquest of Peru. Mr. Griffith urges that it is curious no historical novelist has done for the Conquest of Peru what Mr. Lew Wallace, in America, and Mr. Rider Haggard, in England, have done for the Conquest of Mexico. To obtain local colour Mr. Griffith went to Peru, and nearly all the characters in his story are historical. A stirring romance in which the marvellous hardly exceeds Prescott. (C. Arthur Pearson Ltd. 306 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

His Fortunate Grace. By Gertrude Atherton.
(Bliss, Sands & Co.)

THIS is a strong, well-knit piece of work. It is simple and direct in its full-blooded thoroughly American vitality, just saved from exuberance by the artistic sense. The early chapters, indeed, seem to an European ear somewhat lavishly supplied with extravagant and slangy expression, somewhat strident in tone. But as the story unfolds, the roughnesses and crudities disappear, and the action becomes more tense and living. The centre of it is the family of a millionaire, himself, his wife, and his daughter, all vigorously and effectively characterised. There comes to New York a decrepit English duke, in search of a million to recruit his impoverished acres. With him the millionaire's daughter falls in love; a little incredibly you think, but Mrs. Atherton's point is that the disease is epidemic. Then follows a struggle. The father, a man of sense and character, refuses his consent, furious at the idea of selling his daughter for a title to a pluck-eyed, undersized debauchee. On the other side are the infatuated Augusta and her beautiful mother, acknowledged queen of society in New York, and ambitious for the new laurels to be won by an assured position in London. The result is a crash to the millionaire's belief in his passionately adored wife. Neither will can bend. He declines to give a dowry, and his wife takes flight to England with her daughter and the duke, sells her personal houses and jewels to provide the price of a coronet, and sets her husband at defiance, trusting to his love for her to bring him round. It does not, and Mrs. Atherton has recourse to a somewhat comical way out of the dilemma. Mrs. Forbes suddenly discovers that she is about, after twenty years, to have a second child. She cables frantically, and her husband comes out by the next mail. There is a reconciliation; Augusta gets her duke, and the duke his dowry. But Mrs. Forbes has lost her husband's, not to speak of the reader's, respect.

"'Tell me,' she said imperiously, 'have you really forgiven me? I have almost been sure at times that you had. I have felt it. But you have not been quite your dear old self. I want to hear you say again that you forgive me, and it is the last time that I shall refer to the subject.'

'Yes,' he said, 'adjusting a lock that had fallen over her ear, 'I have forgiven you, of course. We are to live the rest of our lives together. I am not so unwise, I hope, as to nurse offended pride and resentment.'

The colour left her face. She came closer. 'Tell me,' she said, her voice vibrating, 'won't it ever be quite the same again? Is that what you mean?'

He took her in his arms, and laid his cheek against hers. 'Oh, I don't know,' he said, 'I don't know.'

The story verges perilously at moments on the burlesque, but in the main it is a strong satire on certain developments of American society, which have now for some time been much in evidence. The feeblest specimens of humanity who can boast a title and a line of ancestors may take their pick, if you believe the author, among the wealth, beauty, and intellect of the States. Mrs. Atherton writes with keen insight and a brilliant command of natural dialogue.

* * * *

The Minister of State. By John A. Steuart.
(Heinemann.)

In his very pretty dedication Mr. Steuart calls his story "a drama of romance in reality." The description is something clumsy and pleonastic. To call it "a modern fairy tale" might describe it more clearly and more simply; for all forms of fiction must have their roots in reality, just as all plants, from the cabbage (or kail) to the cactus, must be rooted in the earth. Every romance must be a romance in reality, or be nothing; The Arabian Nights are as much indebted to reality, in their own way, as are the Rougon-Macquart studies of Emile Zola in theirs. Mr. Steuart's fairy tale appears to have been suggested—or rather provoked—in some degree by the performances of the Kailyardists. He may even be said to have invaded the very domain of "Ian Maclaren," and to have dared (a mere mortal!) to steal some fire from the sacred altar tended by the high priest of the Kailyard. Let us declare at once that we prefer the stolen fire (if it be stolen) to the original flame. We are introduced to a glen and a people not unlike those of Drumtochty, and in the very same shire of Perth; we meet farmers and ploughmen, kirk elders and ministers, and even a notable doctor, and a still more notable dominie. They are like unto those of Drumtochty, but yet how different—how differently observed, and how differently rendered. The mind of the true Kailyardist is that of the sentimentalist. When he does not turn his eyes away from facts altogether, he so gloses them that the effect is false both to fact and sentiment. Mr. Steuart, though he has invaded the Kailyard, is no Kailyardist. The creator of Peter Proudfoot, Neil MacGregor, David Kinloch, and the drunken fiddler, Lauchie, has shrewdly observed and lovingly meditated; and his work is truly laid both in fact and sentiment. From this ground of reality he has caused to grow a very agreeable story; and if it be but a fairy tale—why, a fairy tale can be a very delightful, a very suggestive, and a very stimulating kind of literary art, even to adults. This fairy tale concerns a marvellous herd-boy, who was, of course, a prince—that is to say, a Minister of State—in embryo. When a boy he tamed wild bulls, and attempted to tame wild horses. He became a Double First at Edinburgh, and a Double First at Oxford, and he rowed stroke in a winning race for the Dark Blues (his creator wishes him to appear to be "the full, round man of Plato"); he read for the Bar, became a great pleader (with an income of £20,000 a year), a great orator in the Commons, a Judge, and a Minister of State. But he did not marry the lady of his love; and there the fairy tale defies the rules of the game. Last of all, on a visit to his native strath, he fell into talk with a herd-boy who was ignorant of his identity:

"'And would you like to do what Evan Kinloch has done?'

'Yes, sir, awful much,' was the prompt response.

'And if you were to ask him, do you think he'd advise you to go away South, and get all that he has got?'

'I don't know, sir, but it's likely he would.'

'I don't think he'd be so unkind,' said the gentleman, in a tone of uncalled-for sadness. 'No, I'm sure he wouldn't. I think he would advise you to stay among the hills and woods and green fields, and work with the plough and the scythe.'

'Well! he didn't do that himself, sir,' replied the boy, with an astute shake of the head.

'Ah, but he may be wiser now!' remarked the gentleman in that plaintive tone for which the boy could discover no reason."

And thus, with an impression of Vanitas vanitatum! Omnia vanitas! the story sadly ends; which, we submit, is to make a very modern version of the fairy tale. Mr. Steuart writes with vigour and alertness, and occasionally with brilliance, though at the outset he sets a pace and style which he does not well maintain.

* * * *

A Man from the North. By E. A. Bennett.
(John Lane.)

SHE took up the book, opened it, read a little, and presently laid it down. Anon she was asked what she thought of it. "There is some pretty phrasing," was the answer. "'Chirruped a phrase ending in chéri' is good, don't you think?" The quotation was given from memory; when we came to read the book the phrase was discovered to run, "... twittered a phrase ending in chéri." The difference between "chirruped" and "twittered" is significant of the whole book. "Twittered" is not bad, but "chirruped" is the one, the inevitable word in that connexion. So, throughout, the writing is good—exceedingly good, compared with most that is written—but it is not good enough, considering the standard Mr. Bennett has manifestly set himself:

"An inconstant, unrefreshing breeze, sluggish with accumulated impurity, stirred the curtains, and every urban sound—high-pitched voices of children playing, roll of wheels, and rhythmic trot of horses, shouts of newsboys, and querulous barking of dogs—came through the open windows touched with a certain languorous quality that suggested a city fatigued, a city yearning for the moist recesses of woods, the disinfectant breath of mountain tops, and the cleansing sea."

Now that reads well enough; but it is not at once convincingly true. And such writing is worthless, when it does not immediately convince of its truth. Moreover, the passage quoted pleases little upon examination. It is plainly untrue, for instance, to describe the "breeze" as "sluggish with accumulated impurity"; it may be "sluggish," but not for that reason; to say "with impurity," and that "accumulated," is to declare that one has less a perception of the truth of nature and fact than a taste for the elaborate falsehood of M. Zola. But, not to insist too much on such detail, we repeat, the writing is good—irritatingly good—so good that we wish it much better.

The story of A Man from the North (surely an awkward and misleading title) is of the kind that M. Zola has set the fashion of calling a "human document." A young man, a shorthand clerk, comes to London from a small Lancashire town, and leads the narrow, harmless, sordid life of such a person—a life which, in this case, is faintly and spasmodically touched with literary ambition. We conceive that the details have been observed quite accurately, and they are quite accurately set down, with that absence of passion or palpitation which that kind of story affects, but which makes it singularly dull and wearisome. The one person in the story who is really well rendered is Jenkins:

"Jenkins was a cockney and the descendant of cockneys: he conversed always volubly in the dialect of Camberwell; but just as he was subject to attacks of modishness, so at times he attempted to rid himself of his accent, of course without success. He swore habitually, and used no reticence whatever. . . . In quick and effective retort he was the peer of cabmen, and nothing could abash him. His favourite subjects of discussion were restaurants, billiards, the turf, and women, whom he usually described as 'tarts.'"

A Man from the North, in fine, is the kind of worthlessly clever work which neither touches nor moves the reader, neither interests nor persuades. It has, therefore, little claim to be considered literature; for to produce literature it is as necessary to choose a subject well as it is to write well, and the subject of A Man from the North is not well chosen. But Mr. Bennett, it is manifest, has style enough and faculty enough of observation to do admirable work, if he will forego bad models and choose a subject that may worthily engage his best art.

* * * * *

Gloria Victis. By J. A. Mitchell.
(D. Nutt.)

MR. MITCHELL'S story is too trivial to bear so sounding a title. But it is very readable and it amuses, and three, at least, of the characters are interesting additions to the inhabitants of the world of fiction. The story briefly shows how a boy, Steven Wadsworth, predestined to crime, overcomes his fate and substitutes for the profession of thief that of honest acrobat. But the change convinces no one, for he is described entirely from without. Psychological analysis is not to be beyond Mr. Mitchell's power. In the course of his career the hero—the son of a housebreaking father and a mother possessed of a cataclysmic temper—steals, lies, murders, and attempts murder, without consciousness of evil. He preserves, indeed, throughout the worst deflections from morality, honest grey eyes and a clean heart. When first embarked as a highway robber he encounters Dr. Thorne, an amiable clergyman, and bids him throw up his hands. The doctor does so, but by a strategic movement defeats the assailant. The following scene is then recorded:

'If I let you go will you promise to behave better, and not play with loaded pistols in the future?'

'Yes, I promise.'

'You give me your word of honour?'

'Yes, sir.'

As he released his grip and took a backward step, the boy sprang forward and the pistol, snatched it from the grass, cocked it, and levelled it in toward the figure before him.

'Now, who's ahead?' he exclaimed. 'This time you throw up your hands, or I'll fire it!'

But the hands were not thrown up. The massive head drooped heavily forward, and two calm brown eyes rested mournfully upon the trigger. Reproachfully and without anger he looked into the triumphant face.

'So your promise goes for nothing! You should have been a sneak thief or a pickpocket; not an open robber. I have always understood that famous robbers had some self-respect, some regard for their word of honour.'

Over the villain's face came a flush of colour. Shame and indignation shone in the place of triumph, and the eyes wavered. There was an inward struggle, as easily read by the man before him as from an open book. Holding the revolver, he turned it about, holding the muzzle toward himself, then stepped forward and presented it to his towering rival. In an uneven voice, and with a strong effort to repress the quivering of a lip, he murmured hurriedly—

'I'm not a sneak thief! Take it yourself! I don't want it!'

Dr. Thorne took the weapon and carefully pointed it in another direction as he lowered the trigger, then returned it to the owner, saying—

'As we both are men of honour, it doesn't matter who keeps the pistol.'

* * * * *

Rough Justice. By M. E. Braddon.
(Simpkin & Co.)

Rough Justice is a story which is constructed with the deftness and told with the brightness that we have been taught to expect from Miss Braddon. Murder and mystery are provided; but there is also a problem in ethics to be solved—are you justified in killing a woman to get money wherewith to benefit your fellow creatures? Oliver Greswold is a philanthropist, with big schemes that require money. He discovers that one life stands between him and the fortune he has been led to expect—the life of an obscure woman, whom he believes to be a worthless woman.

"He told himself that there was nothing sordid or selfish in his aspirations. Were the fortune his thousands would share in its benefits. Every sovereign in the yearly income would mean something of comfort for some sufferer—some lightening of the burden under which the weary shoulders and weak knees were daily bending. . . . And how would this woman use the wealth that was to be flung into her lap? Without experience of decent life, without one reputable acquaintance, how could she be expected to deal with a great estate? She would eat it, and drink it, and fling it to the loose company that would gather about her, swift as vultures sighting carrion. . . .

He had often debated that question which modern thought has discussed as bold as ever it was argued by antique philosophy—Is life worth living? And here, he argued, was a case in which the answer was easy and decisive.

Here, in the person of Lisa Rayner, was a life not worth living—a life worthless to its possessor; a life that could only exercise evil influences upon others; a life which for him, Oliver Greswold, meant ruin and despair.

Long days, long nights of harrying thought resulted in a plan of action, which began with daily practice in his grandfather's grounds, and an occasional hour at a shooting-gallery in Soho."

So he shoots Lisa Rayner; and Wildover, her former lover, who has just come back from South Africa and wants to marry someone else, is arrested and tried for the crime. Wildover is acquitted for lack of evidence, but devotes himself to discovering the real criminal. The scene in which he forces a written confession from Greswold is dramatic. We cannot help being rather glad that Greswold is not brought to justice, for he really did good with his money, and, to quote the closing words of the book, "Everywhere, among the people who try to leave the world better than they found it, the name of Oliver Greswold commands admiration and respect."

A SKETCH OF IBSEN.

HE is a man of striking personality [we quote from an article by Mr. F. O. Achorn in the New England Magazine], his hair is long and gray, and he wears it combed straight up from his forehead. The forehead itself is high, broad, and prominent. His whiskers are gray and bushy; and he wears large gold-bowed spectacles. The lower part of his face sinks into insignificance beside these more marked characteristics. I can scarcely see his eyes under the beetling brows and behind his spectacles; I make them out to be small and blue, and I have the sensation of being peered at instead of looked at. His nose is small and irregular; his mouth small, firm, and straight. He was dressed in a black broadcloth coat, double-breasted, long and closely buttoned, a white satin tie and dark trousers, while a silk hat, a walking-stick, a pair of brown cotton gloves and his spectacle-case lay near him. He was sipping a glass of Scotch whisky and soda.

He spoke very slowly and with a reserve that was little less than coldness. He drew a long black comb from his inside pocket, and proceeded to set his hair more on end, if possible, than it already was. The feeling took possession of me that, himself so given to studying others, he was the kind of man who would give one very little insight into his own thoughts and feelings unless he chose to.

If one were to ask me of my personal impressions of Ibsen, I should say that the first glance at his mighty forehead, his shaggy hair, his sharp eye, his firm mouth, his ruddy complexion, his compact build, made me feel that there was a tremendous power behind it all, and that Henrik Ibsen was a man of intense thought and passion. Ibsen's facial expression is remarkable. Under intense feeling his face hardens, colour deepens, and his eyes blaze. Instinctively one looks for shelter, feeling that the storm is about to burst. Quickly the skies clear, the face softens, the eyes twinkle merrily, there is a suggestion of dimples at the corners of the mouth, and an expression at once very droll and very winning plays upon the features. He is a man of moods. If you catch him at one time, or if you "hit him right," he will do what no persuasion would induce him to do at another. Friends to whom I spoke of my own pleasant meetings with him told me that he is often unapproachable.

He lives a methodical life. He is found at work in his study in the forenoon. At one o'clock he turns up at the Grand Hotel, which he calls his second home, for lunch. Wherever he has lived, Ibsen has always selected some café or place of public resort to which he has betaken himself daily, where, free from molestation, he could observe all that was going on about him.

In the window of the hotel over my head it is his wont to sit and study the people, until this watch tower has come by common consent to be recognised as his, and is known as 'Ibsen's window.'

From his vantage ground at the hotel window, a sweep of the eye presents to the poet nearly every phase of human life; royalty, the statesman, the soldier, the actor, the student, the reveller, the traveller from foreign parts, the high and low, the rich and poor—all are included.

Ibsen on the street moves along with his head well thrown back, a favourite attitude being one in which his hands are clasped behind him. Everybody knows him, and he receives the salutations of his acquaintances by raising his hat with a courtliness and dignity which mark the gentleman of the old school.

MISS MARY E. WILKINS AT HOME.

THERE is a curious delusion current about Miss Wilkins, says Mr. Chamberlin in the course of an article on "Miss Mary E. Wilkins at Randolph, Mass"—one of the readable series of "Authors at Home" The Critic is publishing—which undoubtedly grows out of the determination of most people to make all writers as much as possible like their books. I have heard people who really knew better insist that Miss Wilkins must be a countrified little person, looking and acting as if she had just stepped out of her own stories. This notion may claim to derive some colour, perhaps, from the fact that she lives in the village where she was born, and in an old house of vernacular New England architecture, with its side toward the road and its front door in the middle of this side, with a north parlour and a south parlour, and a flower-garden in front of the house.

On the high mantelshelf in the chimney are Scott's novels, and not another book! I asked Miss Wilkins why she kept them there, and she said it was partly because they filled out the middle of the shelf nicely, and partly because she liked to read them often.

If Miss Wilkins reads Scott, she also reads Hardy, Tolstoi, and even Dostoevsky. She said to me of Dostoevsky's Crime and Punishment: "I am at odds with the whole thing, but it is a wonderful book. He writes with more concentrated force than Tolstoi. This book seemed to me like one of my own nightmares, and told on my nerves. It belongs to the Laocöon school of literature." So too, she thinks, does Jude the Obscure. No one feels more than she the power of such a book as the latter, but she is not inspired to write in the same way.

Miss Wilkins' way of writing is not, usually, to re-write anything once fully written out, but to elaborate a good deal as she goes along, throwing away a great many closely-written sheets which are her trial-lines. And, indeed, though Miss Wilkins says of herself that she does not seem to "compose," but to write out something which she already knows, or else which comes to her from some source outside or inside of her—she scarcely knows which—she nevertheless does work out passages or portions of her stories with great pains.

She does not go about at all looking for "material" for her stories. She never puts Randolph people into them; though she has, indeed, put into them dead and gone people. Barnabas, in Pembroke, with the awful will, was a man who had lived. Her creations are mainly drawn purely out of her imagination, and squared to Nature and reality by the exercise of a keen and omnivorous faculty of observation which has grown instinctive, and is as unconscious as it is accurate—like the minutely true eye-measurements with which the Japanese carpenters astonished us at the World's Fair. And for her nature-settings and decorations she depends rather on the sharp recollections of childhood than on more recent observations. She never had a bit of the spirit of the naturalist.

This work of Miss Wilkins' goes on placidly enough, but not in any way that is systematic enough to distress us. She speaks of a stint of a thousand words a day, but she has the artist's susceptibility to times and moods, and her work is really done by spurts. She is not one of those fortunate ones who can say, "Go to! I will sleep from ten until six, and then be fresh for my work." Sleep with her has to be wooed with subtle arts, and will follow no programme.

Naturally, Miss Wilkins is almost as much at home in Boston as she is in Randolph; I think she feels more at home there. Some people may find that hard to believe, because at Boston she goes in neither for Browning nor Ibsen, and she is without a fad; but it is nevertheless true. You cannot discover about Miss Wilkins' home a vestige of the influence of any hobby—unless it is possibly her chafing-dish; she has a beautiful time with that, and so do her friends. "Views" she has none, in the strenuous Bostonian sense though good, solid principles she has in plenty. As between Boston and Randolph, I am sure that one thing that makes her prefer the latter as a place of residence is the possibility of living there in a way to one side of her literary reputation. She is not at all fond of the strong light that beats upon authorship; but when she is in Boston she is continually getting into it, as a matter of course. In Randolph she lives with a family of excellent people who have known her since she was a child, and to whom, though they rejoice with perfect happiness over her success, she is always the girl whom they knew before she had made that success. She is more like a daughter and a sister in this household than anything else, and she accepts the relation with the completest loyalty and devotion. She has retirement here without solitude, and, with what people call "literary society" well within her reach if she feels the want of it, it certainly need not be too much with her at Randolph.

"REALLY A MELODRAMA."

WHEN the cynic was told, says a writer in Harper's Magazine, that Quo Vadis was the most popular and had sold the best in this country (America) of all the books of the Polish novelist Sienkiewicz, he said, "That is what I should have predicted, for it is his poorest." This judgment needs explanation and qualification. The implication is that the Roman novel was popular because it is poor, and that its popularity implies a want of public discrimination. It is true that Quo Vadis, in the view of literary criticism, is the poorest work of this brilliant author, but there are other reasons why it was more popular than the Polish trilogy of great romances. Some of these reasons are found in its subject. Any story about the early Christians and about their persecution is sure to attract wide and alert attention. The public also know about Nero, and like additional reasons for hating that violin-playing monster, who is believed to have sat on a terrace and played on some sort of a musical instrument after he had set Rome on fire. These matters are familiar, and they occurred in our historic line. But the other great romances of the author are on ground unfamiliar to us, and foreign to our sympathies. It was difficult for us to imagine the great wilderness of the Steppes, and to feel the whirlwind of barbaric and semi-Oriental passion that swept over them in the sixteenth century. The author, however, was on his own ground there by inheritance and tradition. He created his world out of materials native to him, and wrote without self-consciousness. In Rome he was under the disadvantage of being in a field foreign to himself; his work smells of the laboratory and the study—in a word, it necessarily becomes somewhat archaeological. That is the common fault of classic novels generally, written by modern novelists. Ebers's Egyptian stories are an extreme illustration of this: they all smelt of bitumen and mummy-wrappings. In order to reproduce his Roman world the writer has to explain too much. We can fancy how encumbered and uninteresting (except to the archaeological student of a later age) a novel about New York would be if the writer were compelled to stop and explain and describe every house, room by room, with all the furniture, every vehicle, every utensil of use or pleasure, every dress and ornament.

Sienkiewicz was under this disadvantage in attempting to reproduce, by books and monuments, the Rome of Nero. But there is something more to be said. He is a genius, and a short story by him, called Let us Follow Him, showing the effect of the crucifixion upon the pagan mind, is evidence of his ability to throw himself into the past without committing the fault he has fallen into in Quo Vadis. It would seem as if the great novelist had been affected by the modern wave of sensationalism that has swept from their moorings so many writers, and had yielded to it. This is not saying that there are not powerful scenes in Quo Vadis, scenes that make the reader hold his breath. It is not saying that the author has abandoned his power of creation—witness the character of Petronius. But Quo Vadis is really a melodrama, and not to be compared as a work of art—that means an enduring work—with Fire and Sword, The Deluge, and Pan Michael, nor with that intense study, Without Dogma.

ATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1898.

No. 1351, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| ned of a Newsvendor orrailway Station . . . . .                   | 0 13 0  | 0 0 6        | 0 3 3      |
| ng Postage to any partof the United Kingdom.                      | 0 15 3  | 0 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| ng Postage to any partof France, Germany, India,, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

ACADEMY is published every Friday morn-Advertisements should reach the office later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

EDITOR will make every effort to return edited contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Original contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

Business letters regarding the supply of paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Series of the literary week have been of Ibsen, and the manner of honouring. In another column we print a May Diary, and between our pages a table portrait of the author of Ghosts
been allowed to stalk.

EDOUARD ROD, the French novelist, and on the Novelist's Art on Wednes-afternoon at Stafford House. M. Rod his address from MS. in the French age. In an interview this week with representative of the Daily Chronicle, M. red off a few of his literary pre-
ms. Here they are:

Ed has read Mr. Thomas Hardy's with pleasure:

The best of his works, in my opinion, is the Obscure Tess, again, is a masterpiece, it betrays, perhaps too clearly, Zolaesque here."

Concerning Mr. Kipling:

It strikes me as an entirely fresh and in mind. The comparison that is so often drawn between him and Maupassant seems to be fetched. Each writer deals with altogether different themes, and it is indeed very difficult to establish any parallel between them."

Mr. Humphry Ward has captivated M.

I must mention Robert Elsmere. The noble simplicity with which the spiritual tribulations of a scrupulous and intellectual man are treated by the authoress cannot be overpraised."

Another English woman writer has M.
her share of the homage:

The Story of an African Farm will always be read eagerly to everyone who can think of it, but I am convinced that her last work, After Halket, is the best thing she has done. Indeed, it is one of the greatest productions of the present generation."

And—more compliments:

"How can I forget to mention the name of Vernon Lee, whom I had the pleasure of seeing only a few weeks ago at Florence, and whose charming conversation at once reminded me of the subtle, delicate, and penetrating literary art of the authoress of Euphorion? And Mme. James Darmesteter, whose lyrics have afforded me such keen delight, not to speak of her prose works. Few things in my opinion can equal the magical delicacy with which she has recalled in her End of the Middle Ages the fascinating personality of Beatrice d'Este."

ONE of Aubrey Beardsley's last drawings
—"The Death of Pierrot"—bore this legend:
"As the dawn broke, Pierrot fell into his last sleep. Then, upon tip-toe, noiselessly up the stair, silently into the room, came the comedians, Arlechino, Pantaleone, Colombina, and Il Dottoro; who, with much love, lifted in their arms and bore away upon their shoulders the white-froaked clown of Bergamo. Whither we know not." There can, the Saturday Review thinks, be no doubt that the Pierrot of this drawing and this fascinating passage was meant by the artist to be himself.

THE next volume of the Dictionary of National Biography will contain a memoir of R. L. Stevenson by Mr. Colvin. Meanwhile the Outlook prints this communication from
"L. O.," whom we take to be Mr. Lloyd Osbourne, in America: "Stevenson has a stronger position here amongst teachers, &c., than he has in Britain. On this side of the water the Edinburgh edition is unobtainable at any price, and it is pleasant to think that it has in general been bought by really poor men—men who really stinted themselves to obtain it." Our contemporary adds that the Edinburgh edition was selling in San Francisco for £4 a volume in 1895; and the price has since risen!

THE literary preferences of the great are always interesting. We have just seen M.
Edouard Rod's. Here are Ian MacLaren's, or, rather, they may be found in the British Weekly, filling three and a half columns.
The considerate editor prints the following synthesis at the top of the first column:
"The Scottish novelist, clergyman, and lecturer picks from the foremost shelf of his library of fiction two standard classics—
Esmond and The Heart of Midlothian—and contrasts them as the highest types of the literary art."

THE first number of The Modern Quarterly of Language and Literature lies before us.
The editor is Mr. Frank Heath, and among his contributors are Dr. Furnivall, Prof.
Dowden, Prof. York Powell, Prof. Ker, and Prof. Herford. The prefatory note by the editor is modest and concise:

"Very few words are called for by way of prologue to the Modern Quarterly of Language and Literature. It is hoped that it will speak for itself to all those who are interested in literature and scholarship, and that in its catholicity will be found the best warrant for its success. To the smaller circle of students who welcomed the Modern Language Quarterly of last year, this publication will wear a familiar face, but it will be recognised as being better proportioned and more carefully arranged than its prototype. Its aims will be the same in spirit, though wider in range, and with the added definiteness which is born of experience.

It will remain broad in sympathy and earnest in its endeavour to offer an increasingly efficient means of bringing before all who care for the study of modern literature and tongues, and see their supreme value for our very existence as a nation, the best work which is being done in this fruitful field of research."

Opposite, we are confronted by the bland smile of Dr. Furnivall, beautiful in imperishable photogravure.

So far all is simple. But on the second page we are offered a hard nut to crack in the shape of the following sonnet:

"To the Onlie Begetter of
This insuing Sonnet
Mr. G. J.
All Happinesse Wisheth
The Well-Wishing Adventurer
In Setting Type. —J. M. D."

Whoever ill may wish, I set thy Will,
No Chapman-pedar, cheapening wares in Hall,
But sharp-Toothed watchdog, that forewarn thee still,

When critic envy on thy rear would fall.
No more be Lamb, but as a valiant Knight
Fitt on thy arms, and with a Harry's state,
Bruising the Herbage, put thy foes to flight,
That from their Knoll's assail the Temple Gate,
Ithuriel, let once more thy Gol-den Lance,
Like Will's, the Will of Archers to defy,
Be brandished in the face of ignorance
Against those arrows that Fortnightly fly.
So doubt shall ne'er prevail my faith to kill;
No Thomas I, although I publish Will."

It will need the combined intelligence of Mr.
Sidney Lee, Mr. William Archer, Mr. Tyler, and the various other authorities on Shakespeare's Sonnets to elucidate this nightmare.
Mr. Dent, the Temple Shakespeare, Mr.
Gollancz—we see glimmerings of all these,
but the rest is fog.

THOSE, says the New York Critic, who know Henryk Sienkiewicz say that he would rather go shooting or tramping over the mountains, any day, than write. He writes his serials from week to week, and sometimes in the middle of one, when the most exciting situation is reached, he takes his gun and disappears. His publishers tear their hair, but his readers have to constrain their curiosity till he returns; when he takes up the thread of his narrative and carries it on to the end, unless another fit of restlessness seizes him. Before Quo Vadis was written, Sienkiewicz was supposed to have made 500,000 dols. by his pen. As that book has sold into the hundreds of thousands, after running as a serial, he must be a good many thousands of dollars richer to-day.

MR. W. J. STILLMAN has resigned his position of Rome correspondent of the Times.
He intends in future to devote himself to literature and eschew politics, making his home in England. Meanwhile, Mr. Stillman is busy on his autobiography.

A LADY who for many years was on close terms of intimacy with George Eliot has sent to the Westminster Gazette the following interesting description of her, in reply to a very unfavourable account published in the British Weekly:

"How anyone—himself looking out of refined eyes—could call George Eliot's features 'coarse' I cannot for a moment understand. Massive they were, and reminded one in their power of Savonarola; in their sweetness and thought, of Dante. I have seen her face look perfectly beautiful; and once I remember—can I forget?—while talking to me with great earnestness and feeling, there was a light and glory on her face that made me think of the transfigured faces on the Mount, and that held me so spellbound with wonder and admiration, that I was never able to recall one word of what she had been saying. I have grieved over this, for she was speaking of what had been nearest her heart in writing her books.

So very far from being conceited or 'pedantic,' I never knew one more heartily modest, less self-assertive. Self-knowledge, naturally, she had, and great diffidence—very surprising to me in her. Her wide, kindly tolerance, her lovingness, her maternal compassion for the world's sufferings and wrongs, her readiness to be pleased and amused, were to me most helpful and altogether lovely."

AN American critic has been at pains to "place" Miss Corelli accurately. He does it thus: "Miss Corelli, in our judgment, comes a little below Ouida in the scale of authors, and considerably above Miss Julia Edwards." He also says of the Beauties recently culled from Miss Corelli's writings: "We think that Corelli students will be glad to have the book lying on the marble-topped tables of their pensive citadels, and that Corelli lovers will give it a prominent place on the buhl étagères of their luxurious boudoirs."

THE Sette of Odde Volumes' dainty opuscula are well known to collectors of modern rarities. Before us lies an elaborate parody of one of these tiny pamphlets—an obfusculum, as the author calls it—entitled Tudor Writers on Husbandrie. And thereby hangs a tale, which runs as follows: Some four years ago Sir Ernest Clarke, the yeoman to the Sette, read a paper with the above title, and promised, in accordance with the Sette's rules, to present it to them in an opusculum. Time passed, however, and no opusculum appeared. Hence the preparations of this dummy, which consists of notes flanked by chaff of the dilatory yeoman.

HERE, for example, is a stanza from "The Ballade of Impatience":

"Where, where the Book we waited for so long—
The Book our Yeoman-brother vowed to write?
Weary we wait, and weary, wail our song
Yearning an-hungered for the Promised Sight,
Sad watchers counting, hour by hour, the night,
And all but hopeless, weeping in the dark—(Children who look all-sobbing for the light,
Where is that Book, that Promised Book, by Clarke?"

The jest has had the desired effect.

THE next performance of the Elizabethan Stage Society will take place at St. George's Hall on Tuesday evening, April 5, when Middleton and Rowley's romantic comedy, The Spanish Gipsy, will be revived after the manner of the sixteenth century. The music will be under the direction of Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch. This comedy was last acted at Whitehall on November 5, 1623.

HERE are the titles of a few of the lectures to be delivered at the Royal Institution after Easter:

April 19, 26, at 3, Mr. T. C. Gotch on "Phases of Art; Past and Present."
April 29, at 9, Mr. W. H. M. Christie, Astronomer Royal, on "The Recent Eclipse."
May 20, at 9, Mr. D. H. Madden on "The Early Life and Work of Shakespeare."
May 31, June 7, at 3, Prof. S. H. Butcher on "Literary Criticism in Greece."
June 3, at 9, Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie on "The Development of the Tomb in Egypt."

To the announcements which we printed last week under the name of Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. the following should be added: a new work on Japan, by Mrs. Hugh Fraser, wife of the late English minister to Japan; a posthumous work by the late Sir Benjamin Richardson, with about fifty full-page illustrations; and an important ethnological book by the Rev. H. N. Hutchinson, entitled The Human Race, profusely illustrated.

THIS month Messrs. Cassell & Company again add the word New York to their imprint; which henceforth stands as London, Paris, New York, and Melbourne. It will be remembered that some years ago the company disposed of their business in America to a separate concern, known as the Cassell Publishing Company. The agreement under which this arrangement was made has now lapsed, and Messrs. Cassell & Company have appointed to take charge of the branch Mr. W. T. Belding, who held an important position under Messrs. Cassell & Company at New York prior to the transfer to the American Company.

IN view of Dr. Parker's pulpit jubilee, Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son are publishing six volumes of his Sermons, Outlines, and Suggestions, under the general title of Studies in Texts.

HERETICAL books are no longer burned; but their writers are still occasionally deposed from their pulpits by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. This was the fate of Mr. Alexander Robinson, formerly minister of Kilmun. The book which cost him his ministerial position was entitled A Study of the Saviour in the Newer Light. Persecuted books live long, and Messrs. Williams & Norgate are about to issue a revised and partially re-written edition of Mr. Robinson's work.

IT has hitherto been found impossible to trace the birthplace of Ralph Waldo Emerson's English ancestors. This discovery has just been made by Mr. W. Brigg and Dr. P. H. Emerson. Full particulars concerning it will appear in the elaborate work which the latter has devoted to the genealogical history of the English Emersons, and which will be published in the spring by Mr. David Nutt.

THE MARQUIS OF BUTE proposes to issue second edition of his Roman Breviary. It was first published in 1879, and has long been out of print. Copies can only be procured now at a price enhanced to about forty times that at which it was published.

LORD BUTE has also compiled an edition of The Service for Palm Sunday, which will be published by the Art and Book Company. Should the experiment be received with sufficient favour, Lord Bute proposes to issue in a similar form the services for every day in Holy Week and Easter Week.

MR. W. CECIL WADE, who has been making a close study of heraldry, finds that other writers have singularly overlooked the symbolical significance which lies at the origin of heraldic arms. In his forthcoming work The Symbolisms of Heraldry which Mr. George Redway is to issue, he inquires into the derivation and meanings of armor bearings. The text will be illustrated by numerous cuts.

LAST week, by an inadvertence, we gave Mrs. Atherton's latest story the title "American Wives and Husbands": should have been American Wives and English Husbands. We understand that I Fortunate Grace, which we review this week, was issued in "paper form" last year.

IBSEN'S SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY

A DIARY OF PROGRESS.

Some time in winter.—Mr. Gosse remembers that Ibsen's seventieth birthday is imminent, and makes a note of it in his Birthday Presentation memorandum book.

Later.—Mr. Gosse and Mr. Archer prepare plans for birthday present to the playwright.

Later.—A chosen few are permitted the privilege of subscribing a guinea to the birthday fund.

Later.—An order is given for a silver ciborium—an acsimile of one made for George II.—a silver ladle, and a silver cup.

Tuesday, March 15.—Appearance of the Jubilee Chronological Edition of Ibsen's works at Copenhagen. Introduction by Ibsen, in which he says, very naturally, "Only by studying and mastering the collected works as a connected, unbroken whole, will the reader receive the intended and right impression. In a word, I would affectionately beg my readers not to temporarily lay aside or skip any single piece, but to master the works—to read and live through them—in the order in which they are composed." Readers begin, without skipping, to master the works.

Saturday, March 19.—Publication in Chronicle of letter to subscribers, and letter to Mr. Archer and Mr. Gosse, and list of subscribers. In the first letter Ibsen is complimented on his executive skill and intellectual intrepidity. "Some of us," it continues, "recognised your force and your distinction a quarter of a century ago; some of us have but lately come into the range of your genius; but we all alike rejoice in its vital power, and hope for many fresh manifestations of your versatility." General opinion being that the only English recogniser of Ibsen's force and distinction a quarter of a century ago was Mr. Gosse, readers are disturbed to find the use of the plural.

Sunday, March 20.—Ibsen's birthday in Christiania. Arrival of letter from Mr. Archer and Mr. Gosse, accompanied by their gifts. Ibsen is grateful, but has not the slightest notion what to do with them. Reads letter. Is pleased. Reads list of twenty-one admirers. Is puzzled. Reads that only £53 11s. could be amassed for him. Amused, but feels gratitude to Mr. Gosse for discovering him. Receives hundreds of telegrams and letters from, among others, King Oscar, Queen Sophie, the Norwegian Crown Prince, and Mr. Justin McCarthy. Christiania, Berlin, and other cities en fête. Special performances of Ibsen's plays on the Continent. None in London. Christiania Tidning announces that Ibsen's next work will be a philosophical review of his writings and life. Fireworks.

Monday, March 21.—Continuation of Ibsen's play in Norway. The Chronicle prints a poem of 238 lines, addressed to Dr. Ibsen by Mr. Archer. Ibsen is promised that in the futile fray that surges round his name he has died away, Time, the unerring judge, shall arbitrate and hail him Poet first among the great. Ibsen is also called the Baker, the Diviner, the Seer, and the Archmage. The last word supposed to be a misprint for Archmage.)

The Chronicle also prints a letter from Miss Dorothy Leighton regretting that the Independent Theatre was not asked to subscribe; and another from the Rev. Percy Dermer laughing at the gift of silver, and offering that a company of vestrymen, giving a presentation to a local politician—a Jubilee commemoration committee—would have done better.

Elsewhere, the Chronicle states that great disappointment is felt among devoted admirers of Ibsen in England that they were not afforded an opportunity of subscribing to the bulk of present.

No performance of Ibsen play in London. No letter from Mr. G. B. Shaw.

Tuesday, March 22.—Conclusion of Ibsen's celebrations in Christiania. Gala performance of "The Master Builder" in presence of the author. Students are refused permission to unhorse and drag Ibsen's carriage. Forming torchlight procession, they call at Ibsen's house. He addresses them from the balcony: "Bilder Solness feared youth, but I do not fear youth. I never feared to think that you would come and knock at my door. Come, I salute you with the greatest delight. Thanks! A thousand thanks!" No performance of Ibsen play in London.

Appearance, in a letter to the Chronicle, of the name of Miss Frances Lord, an early translator of Ibsen. Kindred attempt to win recognition for Mr. William Wilson, translator of Brand. The choice of George II.'s ciborium supported by another correspondent. No letter from Mr. G. B. Shaw.

Wednesday, March 23.—Article by Mr. Gosse in the Sketch on the "Great Norwegian Master." Reproductions of Ibsen's portrait and Mr. Gosse's autograph. Mr. Gosse tells how, on a burning summer's day in July, 1871, he entered the principal bookshop in Trondhjem and asked the assistant: "Have you got such a thing as a living poet in Norway?" In reply he received a copy of Ibsen's Digte. He read it, and was deeply moved; it seemed to him that this was a new planet. Hence he became the apostle of Ibsen. In 1873, Mr. Archer succeeded him.

The Daily News prints extracts from the Copenhagen Politiken. Herein Mr. Pinero expresses the wish that the great poet and dramatist may continue long in the enjoyment of health and strength, for his own happiness and in the interest of the readers and playgoers of the civilised world. Mr. J. K. Jerome, though friendly to the Archmage, insists that he falls into the error of assuming that beauty is of necessity a cloak, hiding the truth, whereas, in the hands of stronger thinkers, it serves rather as a graceful garment, enhancing her charms. Mr. Walter Crane recalls staying in the same house with the Diviner in Rome in 1882-3. Mr. Zangwill declares that if the function of writers is to stimulate thought, to kindle emotion, and to inspire action, then must Henrik Ibsen be ever counted among the highest; and Mr. Stead pronounces that the Seer has broken for ever with the tradition which denies woman the right to independent existence, and treats her as the mere ancillary of man. Thereby he has made humanity his debtor.

No performance of Ibsen play in London. Threat uttered in the Chronicle by Miss Janet Achurch and Mr. Charles Charrington to write some day the history of the Ibsen want of movement in England. The same writers are scornful of the Philistinism, inadequacy, and irrelevance of the gifts and letters to Ibsen.

Letter (in the same paper) from Miss Frances Lord, adding the name of Arthur Clifton to the list of Ibsen's discoverers, and asking the Chronicle to start a rival fund for the Archmage. Refusal of Chronicle to do any such thing. No letter from Mr. G. B. Shaw.

Reflection 1. Presentations should either be very public or quite private. Reflection 2. Signatures to such presentations should not wander into the daily papers. Reflection 3. Persons prevented from joining in concerted schemes should not write to the papers, but send a private present by parcels post. Reflection 4. Bitter are the abuses of advertisement.

GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO.

A SKETCH.

THE author of The Triumph of Death was not fortunate enough to be born with a name so euphonious and befitting a poet as "Gabriele d'Annunzio." This is a pseudonym, and the novelist's real name is Rapagnetta. The biographical dictionaries give the date of his birth as 1864, but at first sight it is impossible to believe d'Annunzio to be more than twenty-five, so extremely youthful is his appearance. He has a slender, well-built figure, a pale oval face, large dreamy eyes, and a moustache the ends of which are curled and twisted aggressively skywards after the fashion of the Emperor William's.

He has been said to resemble a fair Pierre Loti, and to have all the nonchalance of bearing, and marked originality in conversation, peculiar to the sailor-Academician. Till last summer, when d'Annunzio came forward as a candidate for the Chamber of Deputies, he was living in great retirement either in his Florentine villa or at Francavilla—his birthplace—on the shores of the blue Adriatic, far away from engine-whistles and Americans, his pet aversions. Here, when he was writing L'Innocente, he worked in peace and sunshine without interruption—often for sixteen hours at a stretch. D'Annunzio's hermit-like tastes have hitherto made him the despair of interviewers; but in 1895 his admirer, M. Ojetti, visited him at Francavilla al Mare, and was allowed to report to the world afterwards some interesting details of his life there. D'Annunzio showed M. Ojetti his study in the ruins of a deserted monastery, where his friend the painter, Paolo Michetti, had also established his studio.

D'Annunzio is a keen sportsman. The sight of "the wheel" in the streets of Florence is as offensive to his artistic eye as are the great blocks of new buildings which for hygienic reasons have replaced the picturesque but unsanitary ghettos in most of the Italian towns. When in Florence, he has given his coachman orders always to take a circuitous route rather than drive him anywhere near the hideous utilitarian Piazza Victor Emmanuel.

A few years ago, when "The Triumph of Death" was running through the Revue des Deux Mondes, in M. Herelle's superb translation, and the other two novels—L'Innocente and Piacere—which compose the "Trilogy of the Rose," were being devoured in Germany and exciting enthusiasm even in the unemotional Teutonic breast, Italians of culture still ignored their existence. Even now many eminent critics on the Roman press decline to recognise d'Annunzio as a power in the literature of modern Italy. D'Annunzio himself attributes this coldness of attitude on the part of his compatriots to the fact that he bounded into fame too easily and at too early an age.

He was only sixteen, and still at college in Tuscany, training for the diplomatic service, when he showed his father a copy-book of verses written in his spare time. This exceptional parent was so impressed by their merit that he paid for their publication, and the boy awoke one morning to find himself famous. All the papers discussed, criticised, and admired Primo Vere, and prophesied a great future for the poetic prodigy. On the wave of this early success he went as a student to Rome. Then he became the victim of a reaction, and was as unreasonably abused as before he had been extravagantly praised. But abuse made him happy and proud, for, according to d'Annunzio, there is no stimulus to artistic production like hate. "Implacable hate," in his own words, "compels a man to produce if only to exasperate."

It was not in Italy, however, but in adoring Paris that d'Annunzio was arraigned as a plagiarist, and convicted of "lifting" whole passages from De Maupassant, Zola, and others of the naturalist school. Yet he somehow managed to emerge from even this ordeal unscathed and with increased rather than diminished popularity. As a mark of his appreciation of the favour in which the Parisians hold him, he elected to have his tragedy, La Ville Morte, performed for the first time at the Renaissance, with Sarah Bernhardt instead of Eleonora Duse in the part of the heroine. Of contemporary Italian authors d'Annunzio has a poor opinion. His favourites among modern Gallic authors are Paul Bourget and Anatole France. He declares that he has never yet achieved the feat of getting through a book of Zola's, having been bored to extinction by the minute and lengthy chronicles of the Rougon Macquarts.

Of the trilogy of the Lily, destined to follow that of the Rose, only Le Vergini delle Rocce ("The Maidens of the Rock") has as yet appeared; La Grazia and L'Annunziazione have probably not yet been written, at any rate, they remain unpublished. D'Annunzio in his last novel, Le Vergini delle Rocce, has ceased to be obscenely erotic, but it cannot be said he has become more interesting. Even the sustained musical cadence of his prose, which here reaches its highest pitch of perfection, begins to pall, and the gorgeous word-pictures weary the mental eye with their lusciousness and their frequency.

What d'Annunzio's career as a politician will be is a subject for interesting speculation. The audaciously unconventional oration in which he appealed to the rustics of his birthplace to give him their votes was well calculated to inflame the wrath of the novelist's enemies, for it contained no allusion whatever to any of the vital questions of the hour. It was simply a harangue on the joys of existence, as exemplified in the speaker's own works. It was delivered in a hall decorated with banners, on which, instead of the names of the heroes of Italian Unity, were emblazoned the titles of the eight or ten volumes that d'Annunzio has contributed to the literature of his country. Here is an example of d'Annunzio's electioneering rhetoric:

"Men of my own land, to you I may boast and praise myself. . . . In the solemn stillness of a Sabbath afternoon, I would place in the hands, the gnarled and sun-burnt hands of the peasant sitting beneath the oak tree's shade, instead of his scriptural texts, that one of my books in which I have depicted with ruthless and unsparring art, the slow death of a human creature unworthy of the gifts of love and life (The Triumph of Death). And if the written word could be changed into the tangible thing of which it is symbolical, the man would be bound to feel as if he held in the hollow of his palm the full weight of his country, as in old prints the Kaiser bears the globe. His cottage of clay, his bread and water, the reaping songs of his daughters, all these would be bound to appear more sacred in his eyes than before. And one evening, should I cross his threshold, he would rise with reverence, not as in the presence of his master, but as in the presence of one who had been a great power in his life for good. He would say: 'This man knows me well, and has shown me what is best in me.'"

From this passage one naturally gathers that Signor Rapagnetta dreams of legislating for the needs of the bucolic mind rather than for the necessities of the bucolic stomach. But it is difficult to realise his picture of the Francavilla rustic who lives on bread and water, learning moral lessons from the pages of The Triumph of Death, almost as difficult as to imagine a plough boy of Hind Head grappling with the wonders of The Egoist.

THE RECREATIONS OF THE SELF-CONSCIOUS.

THE new edition of Who's Who contains 7,000 biographies of more or less eminent people, and of this number 6,000 favoured the editor with the names of their favourite relaxations. Here is an attempt to reduce these recreations of the self-conscious to a statistical form, in order to obtain some indication of the main tendencies of the cultured in their moments of leisure. First, a general summary:

|                                   |       |
|-----------------------------------|-------|
| Exercises of locomotion . . . . . | 1,951 |
| The chase . . . . .               | 1,162 |
| Outdoor ball games . . . . .      | 1,102 |
| Indoor: Games . . . . .           | 176   |
| Handiwork . . . . .               | 295   |
| Fine arts . . . . .               | 633   |
|                                   | <hr/> |
|                                   | 1,104 |
| Agriculture . . . . .             | 254   |
| Science . . . . .                 | 228   |
| Racing . . . . .                  | 43    |
| Antagonistic games . . . . .      | 42    |
| Marksmanship . . . . .            | 29    |
|                                   | <hr/> |
|                                   | 5915  |
|                                   | <hr/> |

In this summary no account is taken of 119 people who profess a general interest in field sports. A specific analysis of each of these general classes will afford food for no little reflection.

| LOCOMOTION.            | INDOOR GAMES.          |
|------------------------|------------------------|
| Cycling . . . . . 690  | Chess . . . . . 79     |
| Rowing . . . . . 232   | Billiards . . . . . 50 |
| Travel . . . . . 224   | Whist . . . . . 38     |
| Yachting . . . . . 187 | Cards . . . . . 7      |
| Riding . . . . . 178   | Dominoes . . . . . 1   |
| Walking . . . . . 149  | Draughts . . . . . 1   |
| Climbing . . . . . 100 |                        |
| Swimming . . . . . 55  |                        |
| Driving . . . . . 53   |                        |
|                        | <hr/>                  |
|                        | 176                    |

| LOCOMOTION.—(Cont.)     | HANDIWORK.               |
|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| Gymnastics . . . . . 39 | Painting . . . . . 26    |
| Skating . . . . . 37    | Photography . . . . . 17 |
| Dancing . . . . . 4     | Engineering . . . . . 11 |
| Ballooning . . . . . 2  | Carpentering . . . . . 5 |
| Kiteflying . . . . . 1  | Turning . . . . . 8      |
|                         | Carving . . . . . 6      |
|                         | <hr/>                    |
|                         | 1951                     |
|                         | <hr/>                    |

THE CHASE.

|                       |       |
|-----------------------|-------|
| Shooting . . . . .    | 503   |
| Angling . . . . .     | 370   |
| Hunting . . . . .     | 252   |
| Stalking . . . . .    | 23    |
| Coursing . . . . .    | 8     |
| Hawking . . . . .     | 4     |
| Pigsticking . . . . . | 2     |
|                       | <hr/> |
|                       | 1162  |

OUTDOOR BALL GAMES.

|                       |       |
|-----------------------|-------|
| Golf . . . . .        | 473   |
| Cricket . . . . .     | 255   |
| Lawn Tennis . . . . . | 184   |
| Football . . . . .    | 51    |
| Racquets . . . . .    | 40    |
| Curling . . . . .     | 23    |
| Polo . . . . .        | 19    |
| Bowls . . . . .       | 15    |
| Fives . . . . .       | 13    |
| Croquet . . . . .     | 12    |
| Hockey . . . . .      | 7     |
| Badminton . . . . .   | 3     |
| Shuttlecock . . . . . | 3     |
| Quoits . . . . .      | 2     |
| Baseball . . . . .    | 1     |
| Lacrosse . . . . .    | 1     |
|                       | <hr/> |
|                       | 1102  |

ANTAGONISTIC GAMES.

|                   |       |
|-------------------|-------|
| Fencing . . . . . | 31    |
| Boxing . . . . .  | 11    |
|                   | <hr/> |
|                   | 42    |

MARKSMANSHIP.

|                              |       |
|------------------------------|-------|
| Volunteering . . . . .       | 21    |
| Archery . . . . .            | 7     |
| Boomerang throwing . . . . . | 1     |
|                              | <hr/> |
|                              | 29    |

Taking the most popular twenty of the recreations in the order of their numerical importance the following table is formed

|                       |     |                           |    |
|-----------------------|-----|---------------------------|----|
| Cycling . . . . .     | 690 | Yachting . . . . .        | 17 |
| Shooting . . . . .    | 503 | Lawn Tennis . . . . .     | 14 |
| Golf . . . . .        | 473 | Riding . . . . .          | 8  |
| Angling . . . . .     | 370 | Music . . . . .           | 8  |
| Hunting . . . . .     | 289 | Natural History . . . . . | 5  |
| Cricket . . . . .     | 255 | Walking . . . . .         | 9  |
| Rowing . . . . .      | 232 | Painting . . . . .        | 6  |
| Travel . . . . .      | 224 | Art Collecting . . . . .  | 3  |
| Agriculture . . . . . | 218 | Climbing . . . . .        | 0  |
| Reading . . . . .     | 211 | Photography . . . . .     | 17 |

The significance of these figures lie in the proof they afford that the brain-work of the land still rely in the main on their relaxation upon physical sports rather on upon other forms of intellectual activity. A Sir Walter Besant may be said to spend his leisure in "looking" a Bishop of Oxford in "making out figures and correcting proof sheets." It is the typical man of cultivated employment is he who springs into his saddle, picks up his fowling-piece, or shoulders his sticks, after his work is done. In the smaller numbers the comparative sincerity of these self-conscious revelations renders them useless for any purpose of historical study. The composer of "Luxuriant" is not the only kiteflyer in England, there are others besides Mr. James Welch who play lacrosse, Mr. W. B. Tegetmeier is alone in the practice of dominoes, nor is Mrs. Sarah Grand the only amateur biologist in our midst. That Mr. Witley Stokes is the only boomerang power in the land might perhaps be exceeded, and the fact that alone among modern women Dorothea Gerard is brave enough to confess to a fondness for poker is not without its instructiveness. Indeed, the revelation that there are no fewer than fifteen Englishwomen of distinction who still not only occasionally practise with a needle but are willing to admit it, is at the least encouraging of the results of inquiry.

THE NEW COPYRIGHT ACT.

PROF. HERSCHELL'S "Act to Consolidate and amend the Law Relating to Copyright" has been read a second time in the House of Commons, and is now before a Select Committee. The Act is a particularly important one, and will probably become law before the close of the year. The following is a short summary of a few of the more important clauses of the Bill. We have purposely omitted all reference to colonial and international copyright. The sections dealing with these questions are particularly ambiguous, and will probably be materially amended in Committee.

Duration of Copyright.—For works published during the lifetime of the author, copyright endures until thirty years after his death. For posthumous works, until thirty years after publication. Anonymous works, or works published under a pseudonym, are treated as posthumous works, and as the duration of copyright is confined, unless a declaration of the true author can be made to the Registrar of Copyrights.

Translation and Dramatised Versions.—The owner of the copyright has the exclusive right of translating or dramatising.

Abridgments.—If an author still retain a proprietary interest in his work—either by reserving royalty or part profits—no abridgment may be made without his consent. If the work is parted with the entire copyright, he cannot prevent abridgment.

Extracts.—"Fair and moderate" extracts are allowed for review purposes.

Articles, &c., in Encyclopaedias, Dictionaries, &c.—The copyright belongs to the author of the encyclopaedia or dictionary, not to the writer of the article.

(6) Articles, &c., in Periodicals.—The copyright belongs to the author. The articles must not be reprinted without the consent of the owner of the periodical until three years after first publication.

(7) Newspapers.—The copyright only applies to original contributions and news independently obtained.

(8) Lectures.—The first public delivery is publication, and if the lecture be published in book-form the copyright dates from the public delivery. A report of a lecture is an infringement of copyright only when such a report is publicly prohibited by the lecturer. There is no copyright whatever in lectures delivered at universities, public schools, or public foundations, or "by any person in virtue of, or according to, any gift, endowment or foundation."

(9) Registration.—Registration at Stationers' Hall is necessary to establish proprietorship of copyright, and no action for infringement can be brought unless the copyright is so registered.

(10) Delivery of Copies to the British Museum, &c.—A copy of the best edition of every work published must be delivered at the British Museum. A copy of the ordinary edition must be delivered to the Libraries at Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburgh or Dublin.

THE WEEK.

PROF. MAX MÜLLER is superintending the issue of a collected edition of his writings—the work of more than fifty years. We give an extract from the preface with which Prof. Müller now sends forth his collected works. He writes:

"I hope that this Collected Edition of my principal works, besides being convenient to the student, will also serve to place the chief object of all my literary labours in a clearer light. At first sight books on Language, books on Mythology, books on Religion, and books on the Science of Thought, may seem to have little in common, and yet they were all inspired and directed by one and the same purpose. During the last fifty years I believe I have never lost sight of the pole-star that guided my course from the first, and I hope it will be seen by the attentive reader that I have steered throughout towards one beacon with its revolving light. I wanted to show that with the new materials placed at our disposal during the present century by the discoveries of ancient monuments, both architectural and literary, by the brilliant decipherment of unknown languages and the patient interpretation of ancient literatures, whether in Egypt, Babylonia, India, or Persia, it has become possible to discover what may be called historical evolution, in the earliest history of mankind. This could be done and was done by introducing historical method where formerly we had to be satisfied with mere theories or postulates, so that at the present moment it may truly be said that what is meant by evolution or continuous development has now been proved to exist in the historical growth of the human mind quite as clearly as in any of the realms of objective nature which Darwin chose for the special field of his brilliant labour. Language, mythology, religion—nay, even philosophy can now be proved to be the outcome of a natural growth or development, rather than of intentional efforts or individual genius.

In the early history of mankind, the influence of the many on the few can be shown to have balanced, nay, to have outweighed the influence of the few on the many. Even the founders of the great religions and philosophies of the ancient world have now been recognised as the children rather than as the makers of their time. The so-called Zeitgeist is no longer an unmeaning name, but a very solid body of historical facts, leaving their impress on every succeeding generation. There never was a break in the history of the human mind."

An important new book is Mr. W. H. Mallock's Aristocracy and Evolution: a Study of the Rights, the Origin, and the Social Functions of the Wealthier Classes. This work is a reply to those who ignore natural inequalities among men in propounding theories of social progress. Mr. Mallock insists on the greatness of great men, and argues that they are the indispensable members of society. Mr. Mallock places on his title-page the following lines of Byron's:

"'Tis thus the spirit of a single mind
Makes that of multitudes take one direction,
As roll the waters to the breathing wind,
Or roams the herd beneath the bull's protection,
Or as a little dog will lead the blind,
Or a bell-wether form the flock's connection
By tinkling sounds, when they go forth to victual,
Such is the sway of our great men o'er little.

There was not now a luggage-boy but sought
Danger and spoil with ardour much increased;
And why? Because a little—odd—old man,
Strip to his shirt, was come to lead the van."

THE series of "Tudor Translations" now includes Geoffrey Fenton's rendering in English of Bandello's Tragicall Discourses. These fill two volumes of the series, and they are bound in the familiar dark red buckram with the portcullis design on the back. In common with the other volumes in the series they are admirably light in the hand. The translation is edited by Mr. Robert Langton Douglas, who points out that Bandello's novels are typical products of the Renaissance, a movement which sent men not only to antiquity, but to an eager study of the life around them. He writes:

"Full of the inspiration of new ideas, with new senses opened to them, painters and poets, historians and diarists, physiologists and philosophers, dramatists and novelists sought to express what they saw and felt, and to satisfy in some measure the cravings of their fellow-countrymen. Of all these classes of workers, none appealed to a larger audience than the novellieri. In every town in Italy there sprang up writers who professed to relate stories of real life; and everywhere their works were eagerly read by the people. . . . Amongst the novellieri of the cinque-cento, Matteo Bandello stands pre-eminent. No other Italian writer of that age had a wider influence outside his own country; none was more popular amongst Englishmen. All the best stories in the second tome of Painter's Palace of Pleasure were taken from him; whilst Fenton's Tragicall Discourses is entirely composed of translations of his tales. These 'forreine reapportes' were soon known to all classes of our countrymen. Everyone had heard the tragical histories of Rhomeo and Guiletta, of the Countess of Celant, and of the Duchess of Malfi."

MR. WILLIAM WALLACE, the editor of the new Robert Chambers's Life and Works of Robert Burns, has collected and edited the entire existing correspondence between the poet and Mrs. Dunlop. This volume is entitled Robert Burns and Mrs. Dunlop, and it includes all the previously published collections of this correspondence. But it also includes what Mr. Wallace calls the Lochryan MSS. These are letters which have been preserved at Lochryan, the estate which Mrs. Dunlop left at her death to her grandson, General Sir John Wallace. In the Dunlop-Wallace family these letters have remained ever since. They number thirty-eight letters and parts of letters from the poet to Mrs. Dunlop, and ninety-seven letters from Mrs. Dunlop to the poet. The new letters throw direct light upon the estrangement between Burns and his friend in the last eighteen months of his life.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE WHITECHAPEL BARROWS.

OUR recent articles on the absence of booksellers' shops in the East End of London appear to have attracted a good deal of attention. The East London Observer is needlessly angry with us for having made statements which were instantly corroborated by seven East London clergymen and a lay correspondent. It will be remembered that our representative explored the great artery which stretches from Aldgate to Stratford, and took an inventory of the book-shops. He made it clear that his search was for shops in which new books are sold; and finding none to speak of, he carefully stated the fact, giving chapter and verse as he proceeded. But our representative did not suggest, as the East End Observer seems to think, that good books are not read in the East End. On the contrary, it was precisely his conviction that they are read which caused him to exclaim in astonishment on the absence of book-shops. The question he propounded was not whether East London reads books, but where it buys them. He expressly referred to the Free Libraries which are dotted along the route; and the largest of these libraries, that of the People's Palace, had already been the subject of an appreciative article in these columns.

A representative of the ACADEMY writes: "I have just spent a pleasant hour among the book-barrows which line the pavement in High-street, Whitechapel. This spot has an incorrigible cheerfulness. The barrow booksellers are kind to students and tasters; they know that the greater the crowd the higher will be its percentage of buyers. For, indeed, many who come to look remain to purchase. I did not mean buying, yet I bought four books. How resist? These barrows seem to be prolific in the books one ought to have, that one has always meant to have, but which have somehow never been acquired. Hence I was pleased to pick up the best single-volume edition of Crabbe's complete poetical works for three shillings. It was a clean copy in half-calf, and cheap at the price. A good copy of Lord Braybrooke's Pepys in one volume was marked eighteenpence; but the seller, ignoring his own mark, asked, and received, a shilling. For Percy's Reliques of Old English Poetry—a book one ought to have, yet may easily be without—I paid another shilling. The edition was the fourth, issued by Templeman in 1839. On a barrow entirely consecrated to fourpenny volumes I chanced on Bulwer Lytton's Poems in two volumes. I remembered the descriptions of London in the "New Timon," and for their sake paid my eightpence. All these volumes were in good condition. Indeed, if I wanted to dissipate any unfavourable idea which the reader, untravelling in Whitechapel, might have regarding the condition of the books so cheaply obtainable on the book-seller's barrows, I might instance two volumes of the poems of Mr. John Taylor—not the water-poet, but a theatrical celebrity whose topical poems proclaim him to have been the friend of actors and worldlings in the twenties of this century. His effusions, filling two well-printed volumes, dated 1827, had taken seventy-one years to reach my friend's barrow, yet they were immaculately clean and entirely uncut. The poetry of vanity had but illustrated the vanity of (some) poetry!

The barrow bookseller from whom I bought Bulwer Lytton's Poems was very willing to talk. "Are fourpenny volumes your speciality," I said, "or is this a chance lot that you are clearing at the price?"

"Just a fourpenny lot. Next week I shall have a better stock. It is just as it happens."

"And where do you buy, if it is a fair question?"

"Everywhere. Chancery-lane Sale Rooms, of course; but everywhere, wherever books are going cheap."

"Provided the price is right, I suppose you buy whatever books are to be had. Your stock seems to be thoroughly miscellaneous."

"Yes; I can sell all sorts of books, and I like a good mixture."

"Still, there are books on your barrow which I should have supposed were quite hopeless. Take this old botanical work, and these volumes of sermons, and this obsolete dictionary of science; who wants obsolete botany, Blair's sermons, or science-teaching which was rife sixty years before the electric light?"

"Well, people do want them. A book may be on my barrow a day, or it may be on it three months—but the customer for it always seems to come along."

"And who, may I ask, are your best customers?"

"Difficult to say. We are well-known and people come from all over London. West End booksellers often look us up, for they can buy at our prices and sell at profit. City clerks stroll along here in the luncheon hour, and have a look round and, of course, some of them are regular buyers."

"And what about East End people. Do the East End workman buy from you on his way home?"

"Yes, he does; and many and many time has a man said to me, when he was counting out his coppers: 'Well; I shall lose by this, for I shan't go to the public house to-night.' Aye, hundreds of times I've heard it."

"Do you ever have a bit of good luck buying books?"

"No; at least, nothing to speak of. Once had a bit of real bad luck, though. I found in one of my books an old Fleet Prison twopenny bank-note, and I sold it the Guildhall Museum for half-a-crown. I found afterwards that I might have had nearer ten pounds for that bit of paper I'd held on to it."

"Well, in the ordinary way, what affects your business the most?"

"The weather, to be sure. When rains we cover up the books and wait till stops, and if it doesn't look like stopping we go home and lose a day's trade. It's a much of a living."

"Still, taking good and bad together—"

"Oh, yes, I get along."

CORRESPONDENCE.

ROUND TOWERS.

SIR,—As coming from one who has had great experience of books, Mr. Dav Stott's letter in your issue of Mar 12 is disappointing. No disrespect to Mr Stott is implied in reminding him that what he happens to think upon the subject of Round Towers is not of nearly so much importance as his reasons for thinking it, yet that he confines his remarks to mere egomet dixi, unsupported by anything in the nature of argument. He begins by stating that O'Brien's work on the Round Towers is "a discredited volume. If by this he means that O'Brien's theory is by general consent rejected, I may point out that it has powerful supporters. If he means that it is questioned by some then it only shares the lot of all theories without exception; whilst if he means that it is utterly undeserving of belief, he is simply begging the question. Next, he takes exception to your reviewer's "suggestions as to the probable need for the towers," on the ground that, as he expresses it, "a close examination of the towers would show that in every case your suggestions are somewhat out of date. Here, again, he is simply postulating. He does he know that close examination of the towers would lead to such a result? If he examined them himself? If not, he is scarcely qualified to speak with su-confidence; but if, instead, he is relying on inferences drawn by Dr. Petrie or others, then he is assuming the very point in dispute—viz., whether Dr. Petrie and his followers are right. Mr. Marcus Keane, so devoted much care and skill to minute examination of these towers, came to exactly opposite conclusions; the Rev. Canon Burke, on more widely archaeological grounds, has done the same; and does Mr. David Stott consider himself qualified to decide the issue between all these rival authorities? In saying that your reviewer's suggestions are "out of date," Mr. Stott seems to be under the impression that Dr. Petrie and his school represent a more modern view of the case than does O'Brien and those who side with him. If so, he is mistaken. The works of Petrie and of O'Brien appeared simultaneously, both in the form of competitive essays for a prize awarded by the Royal Irish Academy in 1832. Mr. Keane's work on The Towers and Temples of Ancient Ireland appeared in 1867, and Canon Burke's Pre-Christian Ireland in 1887—both ought to be sufficiently "up to date" to satisfy even Mr. David Stott. Mr. Stott's next statement is, I confess, one that puzzles me sorely. He assures your readers that the researches of Dr. Petrie and Mr. Joseph Anderson have shown very conclusively that, taking into consideration the form of these towers, their isolation, and their internal arrangements, as well as by numerous references in the early annals [sic], they were solely intended to afford an asylum for the ecclesiastics in a place of security for the relics, such as books, bells, croziers, and shrines under their guardianship. These things were regarded with extraordinary veneration by the Celtic tribes, and they took remarkable care in providing a place for them. The substantial character of the building attests that these towers were not built for any temporary purpose, but to resist the ravages of the Northmen—a constant source of terror."

One more, let me remind Mr. Stott that the conclusiveness of Dr. Petrie's inferences (I say nothing of Mr. Joseph Anderson) is precisely the point at issue; which answers to the following questions might help in leading:

1. Have any relics in the shape of "books, croziers, and shrines" been discovered inside those towers? Or if not, how are the towers conclusively proved to have been used as depositories for the same?

2. If "the ravages of the Northmen" were not confined to Ireland, as we know is the case, why is it that Round Towers are found in Ireland alone, of all places in Western Europe? (N.B.—Mr. Stott must surely be aware that the two which exist in Scotland were built by Irish refugees from the Scythian invasion, and that England does not possess a single authenticated specimen of such towers.)

3. If Mr. Stott wished to hide himself or his valuables from expected marauders, would he elect to do so in a conspicuous tower, 100 feet high, which would be better adapted to invite than to baffle intrusion?

4. Seeing that "the ravages of the Northmen" were necessarily confined to localities near the sea-coast and the banks of tidal rivers, how does he account for the existence of Round Towers in the remote "hinterland" of central Ireland?

INQUIRER.

March 12, 1898.

SIR,—There is another need for the existence of the tower, round or other form—the architectural or æsthetic one.

The correlative of the round tower exists in all systems of architecture. A spire is a necessity in a building; it gives the aspect of mental rightness to a structure. The harmonies formed by the upright motion with horizontal and oblique motions are readily felt when they occur in a painting. In architecture the same motions are used, but under different conditions; the cause of the upright motion in a building may be the contiguous landscape.

The era of the round towers was an era of architecture invariably right in its motives, and the use of the towers in that time as asylums must be taken to be the secondary use of them.

ARCHIBALD KNOX.

Douglas, Isle of Man:
St. Patrick's Day.

A QUESTION OF CRITICISM.

SIR,—Miss E. Nesbit asks: "Have the majority of our lyrics been written to commemorate the experiences of the author?" Surely the right answer is in the affirmative. So vivid is the poet's imagination, that the emotion which the lyric expresses has become his own experience, though the external circumstances of the imagined situation may be very different from his own at the time of composition. On this principle depends the poet's character for sincerity. The living poetesses on whom Miss E. Nesbit animadverts, who "either cannot or dare not attempt to express any emotions but their own," are therefore guided by a true instinct, however limited in its range their imaginative power may be. They will not sacrifice the essential quality of sincerity for a hollow pretence of breadth. And how beautiful poetry so restricted in range may be the late Miss C. Rossetti has given us manifold proof.

A conspicuous instance of the fusion of the imagined and the actual is afforded by Wordsworth's "Lament of Mary Queen of Scots on the Eve of a New Year," which the poet tells us "arose out of a flash of moonlight that struck the ground when I was approaching the steps that lead from the garden at Rydal Mount to the front of the house." Yet it moves us more deeply than any more fully fancied emotion could.

And, after all, is it not faith in Browning's power actually to feel emotions arising in imagined situations that heartens his devotees for the struggle with the ruggedness and obscurities of his style? The poet's function is to create, and it is from him that his creations must derive their life.

—I am, Sir, &c., ALFRED E. THISELTON.

London: March 19.

DIALECT.

SIR,—I have followed with some interest (or shall I say amusement?) the discussion between Mr. Lang and Mr. Quiller-Couch. Being neither a Scot nor a West Countryman, I have viewed the encounter dispassionately; but a little consideration has compelled me to ask myself, not which of the two, but whether either of the two is in the right. For it seems to me that the real question to be put is a broader one than has been put as yet, and that it should be stated thus: "What is the true worth of dialect in general?"

A reference to Mr. Quiller-Couch's last letter shows me that the main points urged by the defenders of dialect are: (1) that dialects preserve large numbers of words and phrases which modern English has lost; and (2)—this chiefly—that to certain kinds of verse dialect adds a peculiar charm, essentially poetical rather than philological. To the former argument I venture to answer that, to my mind, the fitting place for such words would appear to be in a treatise on philology: if words follow—and I imagine they do—the law of "the survival of the fittest," the very departure of words from our normal speech shows that they are no longer required. Why, then, should they not be given honourable burial? Obsolete words are often extremely interesting—in their place. But if the words quoted by Mr. Burrow are examples coming under this head, I may safely appeal not only to Mr. Lang, but to all lovers of poetry and music—to say nothing of the Queen's English—to decide whether, in the case of such expressions as "blooth, tutty, colepexy, hidybuck . . .," that place is in a poem intended for modern readers. To the second argument I would return, that dialect may add a charm to certain verse, but that that charm is for native ears, which find a pleasant home-flavour in the familiar sounds, while only under exceptional circumstances does it exist for other ears. Scottish dialect, no doubt, has charm for a Scotchman, Dorset dialect for Dorset folk, but how many of the rest of us, I wonder, appreciate, say, the songs of Burns because of, and not rather in spite of, the dialect? And even then how few of them! What but dialect is the cause of the widely different estimates formed of Burns in Scotland and in England?—dialect, with its attractive home-flavour for the one, its repellent strangeness of flavour for the other.

Dialect, as a fact, has its place in art. As a means of giving the requisite local colouring and of evolving character, it has a right to appear in literature, but it should be sparingly employed. And even here, in proportion as a writer confines himself to one particular dialect, and again in proportion as this is the speech of few or of many, he must look for a restriction of the audience likely to welcome him. Mr. Barnes and others may write, but, unless they be geniuses, they must expect their audience to be scanty; indeed the whole matter becomes one of merely personal interest, and the writings have little or no intrinsic right to command general attention, as have works of merit written in the national language. If Mr. Lang and Mr. Quiller-Couch are content to view things in this light, we are agreed.

But if authors are justified in their employment of dialect by the fact that it does actually exist, what justification, beyond that of actual existence, has dialect itself? Not very many years ago occurred the death of the Cornish language (R. I. P.). This, I grant willingly, may be a matter of regret for the Cornishman, of interest for the student; but let us regard it from a higher standpoint; let us suppose that Cornish, Welsh, Manx, and the rest, existed still as flourishing languages. Then either the inhabitants of the kingdom must be conversant with some half-dozen languages, or intercourse between the various parts must be terribly restricted, for it is obvious to what extent unity of language facilitates mutual intercourse, and tends to produce unity of feeling and thought. This surely is of the first importance. Diversity of dialect is not, of course, diversity of language, but it is a question of degree. So far as a dialect is but a local version of the common tongue, it is bad English; so far as it is more than this, it becomes an obstacle to be regretted and removed. Again, though the language may be musical and pleasing, I have never been able to recognise these qualities in dialect, but in their stead only roughness and bad grammar. And while we may occasionally regret the gradual extinction of the former, we should realise that, with no shame attaching, the weaker must give place to the stronger, that the gain more than balances the loss, and that the tributary tongues may well be proud of their submission to so magnificent an overlord as is our national English. And if this apply to the genuine languages, how much more to those nondescript provincialisms which we call dialect, and which have incomparably less to recommend them; instead of glorying in them, let us hide them, or publish them abroad only in the hope that exposure may bring on consumption and death. There is, perhaps, a certain measure of excuse for the Scotch, but when I read, "heeh, mon, an' havena the braw Scots a'ready stown the cuddie?" (for it's varra guid Scots, ye ken!)-when I hear around me, "when her seed she down along with we back along"-instead of finding pleasure in the homely roughness, I ask myself, with more or less disgust, "Is not our true English sweet enough and strong enough for us all?" Both Mr. Quiller-Couch and Mr. Lang will, I trust, agree with me that our literary English—majestic enough for Milton; strong and rugged enough for Browning; sweet and melodious for Tennyson, yet sonorous and turbulent for Swinburne; calm and clear for Wordsworth and Arnold as passionate for Shelley; flexible to meet every demand—that this standard English of ours, I say, has no need of aid from any provincial archaisms or debasements. Let it rather be the aim of our writers to preserve its purity uncontaminated. Let them make use of dialect when necessary, as of a fact, but beyond that let them show scant sympathy towards it.

And now, having presumed so far upon your courtesy, I will endeavour, with the help of my friends, the stoic philosophers, to prepare for the storm; for, though I have not the pleasure of Mr. Quiller-Couch's acquaintance, I am, as my address will tell you, a near neighbour of his. May he be merciful!—I am, &c. W. G. FULFORD.

Fowey: March 15.

A PLEA FOR PURER ENGLISH.

SIR,—Most heartily do I agree with Mr. Nesbit both in his criticisms on slipshod English, and in his belief that a great store of forcible expression is to be found in the various provincial dialects, which has not been adopted into the ordinary book-speech. But I should like to say a word as to "hull," which he gives as an example. In my native district (Rutland) "hull" is the word commonly used for "throw." In the cricket-field, one man will call to another to hull up the ball. A man hulls on his clothes when he throws them on hastily; a sudorific hulls (i.e. throws) him into a sweat. In all these cases "hull" is simply equivalent to "throw," and I have always taken it to be no more than a variation of hurl. S. C.
Rochester: March 22.

"TREWINNOT OF GUY'S."

SIR,—In your issue of this week, Trewinnot of Guy's appears as by "Mr. Coulson Kernahan."

An omitted "s" is a small thing to create a "difference" between husband and wife, but it has done so in this instance, I assure you.

The mistake is very natural, but I should be glad, for my wife's sake, and her publisher's, if you will allow me to relieve the book from the ban under which it might otherwise lie, and to inform your readers that "Mr." should have appeared as "Mrs."—I am, &c., COULSON KERNAHAN.

"Thrums," Westcliff-on Sea:
March 19.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, March 24.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

THE ANCIENT AND MODERN LIBRARY OF THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE: S. AUGUSTINE'S CONFESSIONS. LAW'S SERIOUS CALL. FIRST PRAYER-BOOK OF EDWARD VI. Griffith, Farran. 1s. each.

NATURAL RELIGION: THE GIFFORD LECTURES. By F. Max Müller. Longmans, Green & Co. 5s.

THE CLOSED DOOR: INSTRUCTIONS AND MEDITATIONS. By William Walsham How, first Bishop of Wakefield. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. 5s.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE CHETHAM SOCIETY: THE CHARTULARY OF COCKERSAND ABBEY OF THE PREMONSTRATENSIAN ORDER. Transcribed and edited by William Farrer. Printed for the Chetham Society, in 2 Parts.

HISTORY OF ENGLAND UNDER HENRY THE FOURTH. By James Hamilton Wylie, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 21s.

UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE COLLEGE HISTORIES: CORPUS CHRISTI. By Rev. H. P. Stokes. F. E. Robinson.

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD COLLEGE HISTORIES: LINCOLN. By A. Clark, M.A. F. E. Robinson.

FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES: MUNGO PARK. By T. Banks MacLachlan. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 1s. 6d.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES

POINTS OF VIEW, AND OTHER POEMS. By G. Colmore. Gay & Bird. 3s. 6d.

WHERE BEAUTY IS, AND OTHER POEMS. By Henry Johnson. Byron Stevens (Brunswick, Maine, U.S.A.).

A NEW VARIORUM EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE. Vol. XI.: THE WINTER'S TALE. J. B. Lippincott Co. (Philadelphia, U.S.A.). 15s.

THE CLASSICS FOR THE MILLION: AN EPITOME IN ENGLISH OF THE WORKS OF THE PRINCIPAL GREEK AND LATIN AUTHORS. By Henry Grey. Sixteenth thousand. John Long. 3s. 6d.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE GREEK TRAGEDIANS TOWARDS ART. By John H. Huddleston. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.

PHILASTER; OR, LOVE LIES A-BLEEDING: A PLAY. By Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher. Edited by Frederick S. Bona, M.A. J. M. Dent & Co. 1s.

FROM AN INDIAN COLLEGE. By James George Jennings. Kegan Paul. 3s. 6d.

WROXALL ABBEY, AND OTHER POEMS. By David Davenport. Kegan Paul. 2s. 6d.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

A TREATISE ON MAGNETISM AND ELECTRICITY. By Andrew Gray. In 2 vols. Vol. I. Macmillan & Co. 14s.

A NEW ASTRONOMY. By David P. Todd. American Book Co. (New York, &c.).

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTION: A STUDY OF THE RIGHTS, THE ORIGIN, AND THE SOCIAL FUNCTIONS OF THE WEALTHIER CLASSES. By W. H. Mallock. A. & C. Black.

A MANUAL OF SANSKRIT PHONETICS. By Dr. C. C. Uhlenbeck. Luzac & Co.

NEW EDITIONS OF FICTION.

"THE CENTURY SCOTT": IVANHOE, AND KENILWORTH. T. Fisher Unwin. 1s. each.

EDUCATIONAL.

AN ARITHMETIC FOR SCHOOLS. By S. L. Loney. Macmillan & Co. 4s. 6d.

MACAULAY'S ESSAY ON ADDISON. Edited, with Notes, by Herbert Augustine Smith, Ph.D. Edward Arnold. 2s.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WORCESTER CHINA: A RECORD OF THE WORK OF FORTY-FIVE YEARS, 1852-1897. By R. W. Binns, F.S.A. Edited by Charles F. Binns. Bernard Quaritch.

PROFESSIONS FOR BOYS, AND HOW TO ENTER THEM. By M. L. Pechell. Beeton & Co.

AN ETON BIBLIOGRAPHY. By L. V. Harcourt. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.

THE ARCHITECTURAL REVIEW: FOR THE ARTIST AND CRAFTSMAN. Vol. II.: JUNE-NOVEMBER, 1897.

A SHORT HANDBOOK OF OIL ANALYSIS. By Augustus H. Gill, Ph.D. J. B. Lippincott Co. (Philadelphia, U.S.A.). 6s.

IMPORTANT.

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, should subscribe to the

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND
BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

ESTABLISHED 1837.

Among the many attractions of its columns the following may be mentioned:—

Literary articles (including leader on some prominent topic of the moment) announcements of forthcoming volumes, notes on current events in connection with the publishing world, reviews (often illustrated) of new books and magazines, correspondence, &c., &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of

NEW BOOKS OF THE WEEK

The most complete list issued) giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number a list of upwards of a thousand advertised for, thus affording readers an excellent opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and attention is particularly drawn to the fact that annual subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement in each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS

It is an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unequalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

The PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamp to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money-payments should be made.

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ... ..          | 8s. 6d.  |
| Six Months ditto ditto ... ..  | 4s. 6d.  |
| Three Months ditto ditto ... ..  | 2s. 6d.  |
| America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage ... .. | 11s. 0d. |

NOW READY.

BOOKS OF THE YEAR 1897.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR OF ISSUE OF
ANNUAL CATALOGUE.

THE

ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

FOR THE YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 224, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

It contains a much longer List of Works than last year's catalogue, including an addition of some 1,400 more titles, but the price remains the same, viz., 5s. net, cloth or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Each book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenaeum.

"I need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only a list of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this valuable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"They that it is indispensable to whole classes and individuals is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful records.... The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

Price 6s.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY C. KEGAN PAUL.

THE CATHEDRAL.

By J. K. HUYSMANS.

Translated by CLARA BELL.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"We know that the finest imaginative work can be built only of the primary emotions. Here, then, is a novelist who has obtained complete mastery over one of the primary emotions, precisely because it has obtained complete mastery over his own soul—the emotion of faith."

Mr. ARTHUR SYMONS, in the Saturday Review.

"This long-expected book is out at last, and bids fair to attract as much attention as its predecessors. It would be idle to deny that M. Huysmans presents some of the characteristics of a great artist. His picture of the cathedral stands out with the delicacy of a nocturne of Mr. Whistler."—Academy.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LIMITED,
Paternoster House, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

TWO IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: A Critical Study.

By GEORGE BRANDES.

2 vols., Roxburghe gilt top or buckram uncut, demy 8vo, 24s. net.

The OUTLOOK.—"Dr. Brandes's work exceeds the promise of its title, for he offers us much more than a critical study of his subject. His volumes are a perfect armoury of fact, suggestion, and criticism."

ROBERT HICHENS'S NEW NOVEL.

THE LONDONERS: An Absurdity.

By ROBERT HICHENS, Author of "The Green Carnation," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

[Tuesday.]

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS TO "THE ACADEMY."

The following have appeared, and the numbers containing them can still be obtained:—

|                               | 1896.    |    |                                    |          |
|-------------------------------|----------|----|------------------------------------|----------|
| BEN JONSON ... ..             | November | 14 | WILKIE COLLINS ... ..              | March 20 |
| JOHN KEATS ... ..             | "        | 21 | JOHN MILTON ... ..                 | " 27     |
| SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... ..      | "        | 28 | WILLIAM COWPER ... ..              | April 3  |
| TOM HOOD ... ..               | December | 5  | CHARLES DARWIN ... ..              | " 10     |
| THOMAS GRAY ... ..            | "        | 12 | ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ... ..       | " 17     |
| ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON ... .. | "        | 19 | HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW ... ..  | " 24     |
| SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..       | "        | 26 | ANDREW MARVELL ... ..              | May 1    |
|                               | 1897.    |    | ROBERT BROWNING ... ..             | " 8      |
| SAMUEL RICHARDSON ... ..      | January  | 2  | THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..              | " 15     |
| THOMAS DE QUINCEY ... ..      | "        | 9  | PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... ..        | " 22     |
| LEIGH HUNT ... ..             | "        | 16 | CHARLES DICKENS ... ..             | " 29     |
| LORD MACAULAY ... ..          | "        | 23 | JONATHAN SWIFT ... ..              | June 5   |
| ROBERT SOUTHHEY ... ..        | "        | 30 | WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY ... .. | " 12     |
| S. T. COLERIDGE... ..         | February | 6  | WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..               | " 19     |
| CHARLES LAMB ... ..           | "        | 13 | SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..          | " 26     |
| MICHAEL DRAYTON ... ..        | "        | 20 | ALEXANDER POPE ... ..              | July 3   |
| WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ... ..   | "        | 27 | DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..             | " 10     |
| SAMUEL PEPYS .. ..            | March    | 6  | FRANCIS BACON ... ..               | " 17     |
| EDMUND WALLER ... ..          | "        | 13 |                                    |          |

EPPE'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON 'FOODS AND THEIR VALUES,' BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story."

THREE CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Large cr. 8vo, nearly 900 pp., cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Farnival St., London, E.C.

Blaisdell

have a .
pull . .
over other

Pencils.

BEST LEAD - - -
- - ALWAYS READY - -
- - - NO WASTE.

USED BY

THE WAR OFFICE.
BANK OF ENGLAND.
NEW ZEALAND GOVERNMENT OFFICE.
BANKERS' CLEARING HOUSE.
UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OFFICES.
OXFORD UNIVERSITY.
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.
ETON COLLEGE.
UNITED STATES ARSENAL.
UNITED STATES NAVY.
PENNSYLVANIA AND OTHER AMERICAN RAILWAY COMPANIES.
THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE.
NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE AND OTHER INSURANCE OFFICES.

HOW TO USE:

Start the paper with a pin or any pointed instrument—a slight pull—off it comes, and the lead pencil is sharpened. Thirty Fresh Points to every Pencil. The only wear is from use, not from whittling away or breaking the lead.

No wood chips are left on the floor, nor any dirty marking-stuff on your fingers.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:

The Queen.

"What an improvement this is upon the old laborious process of pencil sharpening, and how much less extravagant with regard to the consumption of the lead, which cannot snap off when thus treated!"

Westminster Gazette.

"It is decidedly an ingenious idea."

Black and White.

"The 'Blaisdell' self-sharpening paper pencil is a remarkably smart contrivance. The lead is encased in paper, which can easily be unrolled when a fresh point is required."

If your stationer does not sell them, send 1s. for a set of sample Pencils to—

BLAISDELL PENCILS CO., LIMITED,

46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

Self=Sharpening.

FOUNTAIN PENS AND STYLO

The objections to them,
and how they have been met

Ceteris paribus everyone would rather use a fountain pen that carries its own ink, and can, therefore, be used anywhere and at any moment, in preference to an ordinary pen, which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

But fountain pens have acquired a bad name from two or three general objections to them. "A fountain pen is all very well," people say, "but it has to be carried upright, otherwise the ink comes out in your pocket; in fact, the ink spills and makes a hideous mess on the smallest provocation. By way of compensation, when you want to write, the ink retires to the barrel (if it isn't all spilled into your pocket) and refuses to emerge until the pen has been shaken and thumped until it squirts out a blot on the carpet."

This used to be true; but the CAW PEN has met the difficulty. It does not have to be carried upright; it can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. On the other hand, until the CAW PEN is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

The CAW PEN is not merely the only fountain pen which anyone cares to use who has once seen it as a pocket pen, but it is so convenient for desk use that it supersedes all other pens whatever.

It is easily filled, and having a wide mouth does not clog with air bubbles during that operation. Prices from 12s. 6d.

"Caw pens have a repute beyond their neighbours."—Westminster Budget.

The objection to Stylographic Pens is that the point rarely suits the writer's hand, and cannot be adjusted.

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN can be adjusted in an instant. It has not all the advantages of the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Prices from 5s.

British Depot—

46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1352.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,

Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—
CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 14, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephons 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

BOOKBINDING—LIBRARIES or SINGLE VOLUMES RE-BOUND and REPAIRED, and high-class Work of every Description undertaken by skilled workmen. Magazines and Periodicals carefully bound in any style.—Write for prices to DAVIES & GODDARD, Bookbinders, 3, Clerkenwell Road, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.
English, 10d. per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 16, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.
Special attention given to orders by post.
Address CARON & PUCKEY, 36, Basinghall Street, E.C., and 115, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses & J. PUTZ, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Furnival Street, London E.C.

NO WEALTHY PATRONS OF ART and BELLES
LETTERS.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT
WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent.
Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—
Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs.
Fairman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

FOR SALE.

Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS.—"The AWAKEN'D GIRL" (Mrs. Hamilton). Very fine Painting in its original old frame, £1,000, circa 1780; many fine Old Paintings, Pictures, and China FOR SALE.—CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New Street, at Baskerville, Birmingham.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for
11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—
Any ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPERS' HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D.,
and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.

For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made duly qualified to take charge of a similar business.
Moderate premium, which, supplemented, would be returned as progressive salary. Must write shorthand. May reside with editor or proprietor.—Address M. M., care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Avon Lodge, West Kensington, W.

WANTED.—English GIRL, to join three others, aged 18, who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon.
Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French Instruction, 39 Guineas a quarter.—CHAPERON, Offices of
THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CARRIAGES INSURED AGAINST ACCIDENTS
caused by Collision, the Falling, Bolting or Kicking of Horses, or by being Run into by other Vehicles. Policies issued for the Year or Season only. Prospectuses post free.—IMPERIAL ACCIDENT, LLOYD STOCK AND GENERAL INSURANCE Co., Ltd., 17, Pall Mall East, London
S.W. Agents wanted.

BOOKS TO BUY.

FAME the FIDDLER: a Realistic Novel.

By S. J. ADAIR FITZGERALD. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"A novel of more than average merit. Cleverly written and intensely interesting throughout."—Western Daily Press.
"Full of no flagging interest from cover to cover."—Sunday Chronicle.
"An attractive and fascinating novel."—Weekly Dispatch.

THE DEVIL in a DOMINO: a Weird

Romance. By CHAS. L'EPINE. Long 12mo, cloth, 1s.
"Altogether the book, like the ideal ghost story, proves so fascinating that once it is started the very fear it awakes impels one to read it on, to the end."—North British Advertiser.

"A clever study by Chas. L'Epine, who should, by his style, be an accomplished author, well-known in other ranks of literature."
—Manchester Chronicle.

THE ART of ELOCUTION and PUBLIC

SPEAKING. By ROSS FERGUSON. Introduction by GEORGE
ALEXANDER. Dedicated by permission to Ellen Terry. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.
"A useful little book. We strongly recommend it to the chairmen of public companies."—Australian Mail.
"Students will find it of great service."—Lloyd's.

London: LAWRENCE GREENING & CO.,
20, Cecil Court, Charing Cross Road.

Just published, crown 8vo, 258 pages, picture cover, 2s. net.

THE MUMMY'S DREAM: an Egyptian Story of the Exodus. Written and Illustrated by H. B. PROCTOR.

"Mr. Proctor's book is not an ordinary book; faults fade away before the singular brightness of his imagination. One feels that he must have lived in his story with an absorption and a realism that few authors can command."—Liverpool Daily Post.

London: SIMPSON, MARSHALL, & Co., Ltd.
Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Process in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book
Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

|  |   |
|--|---|
| TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONSfrom ONE GUINEAper annum.  | COUNTRYSUBSCRIPTIONS fromTWO GUINEAS per annum.   |
| LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (forweekly exchange of Books at thehouses of Subscribers) from TWOGUINEAS per annum. | N.B.—Two or Three Friends mayUNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION,and thus lessen the Cost ofCarriage. |

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and
post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL,
SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and
FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH,
GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BASTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Right Rev.
the LORD BISHOP of LONDON, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.

TRUSTEES—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN
LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBERY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life-
Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENS-CROFT Manager.

NOW READY.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTIONA Study of the Rights, the Origin, and the Social Functions of the Wealthier Classes.

BY

W. H. MALLOCK,

Author of "Labour and the Popular Welfare,"
"Classes and Masses," &c.

"Here we have a noteworthy contribution to current thought, and the more so because a point of view is set forward which is entirely opposed to most of the contemporary ideas as to the proper constitution of society."—Daily Chronicle.

"Such section headings as 'Inequality, Happiness, and Progress,' 'Equality of Educational Opportunity,' 'The Motives of the Exceptional Wealth Producer,' and 'The Nature and Scope of Purely Democratic Action' convey some idea of the vital interest and importance attaching to this very noteworthy and luminous contribution to the social thought and discussion of the present day."—Daily Mail.

HIS GRACE o' the GUNNE By
I. HOOPER, Author of "A Singer of Marly." Crown
8vo, cloth, price 6s.

"For further developments of this thrilling tale, which culminates in a supremely heroic climax, we must await our reader's permission to refer them to Part II. of 'His Grace o' the Gunne,' which is even more rife with sensational incident than the first half of that powerful and fascinating work."—Daily Telegraph.

"The author writes of the seventeenth century as though he had lived in it, and had not merely tried to copy the tone of the time. Lurline Kirke is no stage hero, and we trace his career with equal interest and satisfaction. 'His Grace' to give him his nickname, is in the mire, but not of it, and no one can fail to admire the fine young fellow.... There can be no question as to the ability displayed throughout this book."—World.

WHO'S WHO, 1898. An Annual Biographical Dictionary. Fiftieth Year of Issue. Containing 1,143 New Biographies. In crown 8vo, 814 pages, bound in cloth gilt, with gilt edges and rounded corners, price 3s. 6d. net.

"Who's Who" is an invaluable annual. It is the handiest and best compiled book of reference of its kind that is issued from the press, and is quite indispensable to all classes of people who take any interest in public life."—Review of Reviews.

THE VITALITY of CHRISTIAN DOGMAS, and THEIR POWER of EVOLUTION. By A. SABATIER, D.D., Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Translated by Mrs. EM. CHRISTEN. With Preface by the Very Reverend the Hon. W. H. FREMANTLE, D.D., Dean of Ripon. Crown 8vo, 96 pages, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net.

"Is really a gem of theological constructive criticism. With marvellous lucidity and penetration Dr. Sabatier states for us here the philosophy and natural history of the dogma; its position and use in the Christian evolution."—Christian World.

THE STORY of GLADSTONE'S LIFE. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Containing 45 Illustrations, mostly Page Portraits, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods. In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

"A brilliantly written monograph.... One merit is conspicuous—the book is everywhere readable."—Record.

"This is a charmingly written sketch of Mr. Gladstone's public career, with some interesting glimpses at the same time into his private life."—Observer.

PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL ECONOMY. Book III, Vol. II, By Prof. J. SHIELD NICHOLSON. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

"The new volume is marked by the same robust practicality and independence of judgment that gave value to its predecessor.... The book is one to be heartily commended to the student, the business man, and the politician."—Literary World.

ROME, HANDBOOK to CHRISTIAN and ECCLESIASTICAL. By H. M. and M. A. R. T. Part II.—The Liturgy in Rome. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

"The second volume of this useful handbook has appeared in good time for those who intend to visit Rome this spring, and the accounts it gives of the Liturgies in Rome, and especially of the ceremonies of Holy Week, cannot fail to be appreciated."—Cambridge Review.

"It covers ground which is only imperfectly dealt with in the ordinary guide-book, and will be of the greatest service to visitors to Rome, and more especially to those who are attracted there by the services of Holy Week."—Scotsman.

O'SHEA'S GUIDE to SPAIN and PORTUGAL. Tenth Edition. Edited by JOHN LOMAS. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 15s.

"The best book at present in the market, it can be commended to the traveller in Spain."—Full Mall Gazette.

"This guide is admirable, by far the best for the English traveller visiting Spain."—Daily Chronicle.

A. &amp; C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NOTICE.—MR. MAX PEMBERTON'S New Novel, KRONSTADT, will be ready shortly, price 6s.

By far the most important volume of the Diamond Jubilee Celebration. A Magnificent and Unique Pictorial Presentment of the Empire.

THE QUEEN'S EMPIRE. Vol. I., containing about 300 pp. of splendid illustrations, beautifully reproduced from Authentic Photographs, and printed on plate paper, handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled, gilt edges, 4to, 9s. [Ready shortly.]

THE CHURCH of ENGLAND: a History for the People. By the Very Rev. H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. Illustrated. Vol. III., 6s. [Now ready.]

Sixpenny Illustrated Edition of
KING SOLOMON'S MINES. By RIDER HAGGARD. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 6d. [Ready shortly.]

CATRIONA. By R. L. STEVENSON. Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d. [Now ready.]

An Entirely New and Original Work.

CASSELL'S FAMILY LAWYER. A Popular Exposition of the Civil Law of England and Scotland. By a BARRISTER-AT-LAW. Complete in 1 vol., 10s. 6d. [Now ready.]

THE STORY of our PLANET. By Prof. BONNEY, F.R.S., &c. With Coloured Plates and Maps, and about 100 Illustrations. Cheap Edition, 7s. 6d. [Now ready.]

New Volume of "THE CENTURY SCIENCE" Series.

PASTEUR. By Percy Frankland and Mrs. FRANKLAND. 3s. 6d. [Now ready.]

New and Revised Edition.

THE DICTIONARY of ENGLISH HISTORY. A Record of the Doings of the English Nation at Home and Abroad. Edited by SIDNEY J. LOW, B.A., and Prof. F. S. PULLING, M.A., with Contributions by Eminent Writers. 7s. 6d.

Completion of "SOCIAL ENGLAND."

SOCIAL ENGLAND. Edited by H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L. Vol. I., 15s.; Vol. II., 15s.; Vol. III., 15s.; Vol. IV., 17s.; Vol. V., 17s.; Vol. VI., 18s.

* * A Prospectus giving full particulars will be sent post free on application.

YOUNG BLOOD. A New Novel by E. W. HORNUNG, Author of "The Rogue's March," has just been published, price 6s.

MR. FRANK STOCKTON'S New Novel, THE GIRL at COBHURST, will be published during April, price 6s.

CASSELL &amp; COMPANY, LTD., London, Paris, New York, and Melbourne.

MACMILLAN & CO'S NEW BOOKS.THE BOOK OF THE YEAR.
SECOND THOUSAND.FRANCE.

By J. E. C. BODLEY.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 21s. net.

1893 ISSUE NOW READY.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR

BOOK: a Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World, for the Year 1893. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D., Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

TIMES.—"To say that the work... is indispensable to every public man, and to many who can lay no claim to that designation, is to repeat what must be a commonplace to all who have been in the habit of referring to this almost inexhaustible mine of information."

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CELEBRITY: an Episode

By WINSTON CHURCHILL.

Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

HENRY of GUISE, and Other

Portraits. By H. C. MACDOWALL.

Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

ESSAYS on MUSEUMS and other SUBJECTS CONNECTED with NATURAL HISTORY. By Sir WILLIAM HENRY FLOWER, K.C.B., D.C.L., D.Sc., LL.D., P.Z.S., &amp;c.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

DIVINE IMMANENCE. A

Essay on the Spiritual Significance of Matter. I. J. R. ILLINGWORTH, M.A., Author of "Personality Human and Divine."

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY.

RICH and POOR. By Mr.BERNARD BOSANQUET. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. ECONOMIC JOURNAL.—"To economic readers in general whether they have ever or never called forth from a Moral Science Eastward bound, the book has something to convey of instruction and suggestion."

Demy 8vo, 10s. net.

PURE ECONOMICS. B

Professor MAFFEO PANTALEONI. Translated T. BOSTON BRUCE, Esq., of the Middle Temple Barrister-at-Law.

APRIL NUMBER NOW READY.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE

APRIL, 1898.—Price 1s.

CONTAINS:

A PHILOSOPHER'S ROMANCE. By JOHN BREWSTER. Chaps. XIV.-XV.

THE OLDEST GUIDE-BOOK in the WORLD.

CHARLES WHIBLEY.

ON CIRCUIT at the CAPE.

A SPANISH BULL-FIGHT in FRANCE. By H. KENNEDY.

HOW TRADER JEVONS was SAVED (A Story of Niger Delta). By HAROLD BINDLOSS.

COUNTRY NOTES. By S. G. TALLENTYRE, II. The Sh

RECOLLECTIONS of a BLACK BRUNSWICKER.

MIRABEAU in LONDON. By W. B. DUFFIELD.

A COMMERCIAL EDUCATION. By ROBERT L. LEIGHT

APRIL NUMBER NOW READY.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d.

The following are the leading features of the April Numl

OVER THE ALPS ON A BICYCLE.

By ELIZABETH R. PENNELL.

Illustrated by JOSEPH PENNELL.

HER LAST LETTER.

By BRET HARTE.

A FAMOUS SEA-FIGHT.

By CLAUDE H. WETMORE.

THE SEVEN WONDERS of the WORLD

I. The Pharos of Alexandria.

By B. I. WHEELER.

And numerous other Stories and Articles of General Interest.

APRIL NUMBER NOW READY.

ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s.

AN EASTER SNOWSTORM

By P. K. KOUDEKOFF.

THE LITTLE JAPANESE AT HOME

By I. T. HODNETT.

And numerous other Stories.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LTD., LONDON.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS :                                   | PAGE    |
|---|---------|
| A Greek Baedeker ... ..                     | 363     |
| Audubon... ..                               | 364     |
| Literary India ... ..                       | 365     |
| The Later Renaissance ... ..                | 366     |
| Mr. Gregory's Letter-Box ... ..             | 366     |
| A Twelfth-Century Singer ... ..             | 367     |
| BRIEFER MENTION ... ..                      | 367     |
| THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT ... ..               | 369-372 |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..                       | 373     |
| IN APPRECIATIVE MOOD :                      |         |
| I. Mr. J. G. Frazer ... ..                  | 376     |
| II. Mr. Arthur Symonds ... ..               | 377     |
| WHAT THE PEOPLE READ : XII., AN AUNT ... .. | 377     |
| PARIS LETTER ... ..                         | 378     |
| THE WEEK ... ..                             | 378     |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..                      | 379     |
| CORRESPONDENCE ... ..                       | 379     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..                | 380     |
| BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..                       | 381     |
| Announcements ... ..                        | 382     |

* * * Next week the ACADEMY will be published on Thursday morning.

REVIEWS.

A GREEK BAEDEKER.

Pausanias' Description of Greece. Translated, with a Commentary, by J. G. Frazer, M.A., LL.D. 6 vols. (Macmillan.)

WE are unable, as a rule, to take a very complete account of books which belong rather to the literature of learning than to that literature of commerce which necessarily occupies so much of our space, or to that literature of art which, of all forms of literature, seems to us most worthy of stimulus. But exceptional books demand exceptional treatment; and among such must certainly be reckoned the comprehensive and remarkable work which we owe to the fine scholarship and prolonged industry of the author of The Golden Bough. We could desire no better model for writers engaged in the pursuit of the more academic branches of letters to set before themselves. It is conceived and carried out on the lines of the best English tradition, uniting, as it does, the characteristic German thoroughness with a precision and finish of form which is more often found in French than in German treatises. Mr. Frazer is no pedant, piling up undigested learning in tolerable pages; he has the sense of style, and in spite of the vast mass of facts with which he has to wrestle, contrives throughout to be lucid, orderly, even elegant. You may read him for erudition; you may read him also, dipping almost anywhere to his three thousand pages, more or less, for entertainment. And the introduction, in which Mr. Frazer deals with the personality of Pausanias and the scope of his book, is a critical essay of the first water. Judicious and penetrative in its estimate of the writer, it is cast from beginning to end in nervous and scholarly English, and rises at times to heights of considerable eloquence. To the fascination of Greek scenery, and the rich associations of poetry which cling round it, Mr. Frazer is peculiarly sensitive. This is a fine passage of the "storied" land:

Pausanias points out the old plane-tree which Menelaus planted before he went away to the wars; the great cedar with an image of Artemius hanging among its boughs; the sacred cypresses called the Maidens, tall and dark and stately, in the bleak upland valley of Psophis; the myrtle-tree whose pierced leaves still bore the print of hapless Phædra's bodkin on that fair islanded coast of Troezen, where now the orange and the lemon bloom in winter; the pomegranate with its blood-red fruit growing on the grave of the patriot Menœceus, who shed his blood for his country. If he looks up at the mountains, it is not to mark the snowy peaks glistening in the sunlight against the blue, or the sombre pine-forests that fringe their crests, and are mirrored in the dark lake below; it is to tell you that Zeus or Apello or the Sun-god is worshipped on their tops, that the Thyiad women dance on them above the clouds, or that Pan has been heard piping in their lonely coombs. The gloomy caverns, where the sunbeams hardly penetrate, with their fantastic stalactites and dripping roofs, are to him the haunts of Pan and the nymphs. The awful precipices of the Arcanian mountains, in the sunless crevices of which the snow-drifts never melt, would have been passed by him in silence, were it not that the water that trickles down their dark glistening face is the water of Styx. If he describes the smooth glassy pool which, bordered by reeds and tall grasses, still sleeps under the shadow of the shivering poplars in the Lemæan swamp, it is because the way to hell goes down through its black unfathomed water."

The description of Greece by Pausanias, known as the Periegete, is a document of unexampled importance to students of antiquity. Pausanias was a Lydian by birth and a traveller by choice. He had visited Syria, Egypt, Rome itself. About the middle of the second century he set himself down to write a systematic account of the actual condition of the Greece of his day—its peoples, its monuments, its cults, to some extent its manners and customs. His work was executed in great detail and with remarkable accuracy, and remains an authority of the first class for the identification of sites and buildings, preserving in addition the memory of some antiquities and many customs which would otherwise have been lost. Pausanias' aim seems to have been thoroughly practical: he is the prototype of the Baedeker or Murray of to-day. And he wrote at a most happy time. Under the beneficent rule of the Antonines Greece was enjoying an Indian summer of peace and prosperity; her splendid literature was putting forth its last boughs in the youngest of the classics, Plutarch and Lucian. The greatness of the past had yet not quite faded into oblivion; and yet it was the past that was great. The vitality of Greece was exhausted. Pausanias looks backward with a deliberate and melancholy retrospection. He is a careful antiquary, gathering up shreds of custom and fragments of art that may any day be swept clean out of sight. His eyes are fixed on the heroic age from his standpoint in the decadence. His own interests appear to have been mainly religious and archaeological. Now and then he gives you an insight into the daily life, describing, for instance, how the apothecaries distil "balms for the hurts of men" from roses and irises upon the field of Chaeronea, where the last great stand for Hellenic freedom was made. But for the most part he will turn away alike from daily life and from natural beauty when a monument or a cult is in question. Not to Pausanias, but to the fragments of Dicaearchus, must you turn for that pretty description of the women of Thebes:

"The women are the tallest, prettiest and most graceful in Greece. Their faces are so muffled up that only their eyes are seen. All of them dress in white and wear low purple shoes laced so as to show the bare feet. Their yellow hair is tied up in a knot on the top of the head. In society their manners are Sicilian rather than Bœotian. They have pleasing voices, while the voices of the men are harsh and deep."

Pausanias, alas! had no eyes for the women of Thebes; he is too intent on the Ismenian sanctuary and the career of Epaminondas. And so it is everywhere. Men and women, his contemporaries, are little to him:

"For all the notice he takes of them, Greece might almost have been a wilderness, and its cities uninhabited or peopled only at rare intervals by a motley throng who suddenly appeared as by magic, moved singing through the streets in gay procession with flaring torches and waving censers, dyed the marble pavements with the blood of victims, filled the air with the smoke and savour of their burning flesh, and then melted away as mysteriously as they had come, leaving the deserted streets and temples to echo only to the footstep of some solitary traveller who explored with awe and wonder the monuments of his race."

Pausanias, then, has his limitations. But to the folklorist and the art student he is invaluable. His descriptions of cults and rituals bring you down to strata of Greek religious belief quite distinct and of earlier significance than the familiar mythology which owes so much, after all, to poetic imagination. He discovers some of the actual working observances and superstitions of an Aryan peasantry, with their curious touches of savagery, their curious likeness to customs which lie at the root of the world's fairy tales, and are effective to the present day in lands remote from civilisation. He will tell you, for instance, how at the festival of the Dædala the Plateans will deck fourteen wooden images in bridal array, will drive them upon wagons to the top of Cithæron, and there, at a solemn sacrifice, will burn images and victims together in a mighty blaze. Or he will tell you how at Troezen, when the south-west gales from the Saronic Gulf threaten the tender vine-buds, the husbandmen will tear in half a white-feathered cock, run round the vineyards with the pieces, and then bury them in the earth for the protection of the crops. One thing, alas! he will not tell you—the secret of the mysteries; what it was they did in the great hall at Eleusis, or Andania, when the doors were shut upon the initiated and the profanum vulgus left to gape outside. Religious curiosity and love for the historic renown of his country alike led Pausanias to take an interest in the monuments. In such sanctuaries as the graveyard of Athens he loved to linger. And well he might:

"There almost every name was a history as full of proud or mournful memories as the names carved on the tombs in Westminster and St.

Paul's, or stitched on the tattered and blackened banners that droop from the walls of our churches. The annals of Athens were written on these stones—the story of her restless and inspiring activity, her triumphs in art, in eloquence, in arms, her brief noon of glory and her long twilight of decrepitude and decay. No wonder that our traveller paused among monuments which seemed, in the gathering light of barbarism, to catch and reflect some beams of the bright day that was over, like the purple light that lingers on the slopes of Hymettus when the sun has set on Athens."

Theatres, temples, tombs, treasures—these Pausanias rarely passes by without a mention. And of the greater works of art his descriptions are detailed and exact. Modern excavations have confirmed and been confirmed by many of them. And often enough the notes of Pausanias alone preserve the record of vanished splendours. Of the famous paintings of Polygnotus at Delphi only a patch of blue paint on a wall remains; yet from Pausanias' pages archaeologists have made shift to reconstruct the scheme and composition of them all. Moreover, as Mr. Frazer is careful to point out, the taste of Pausanias seems to have been uncommonly good. Like Lucian, the keenest literary intelligence of his day, he selects for admiration precisely what the cultivated modern mind most applauds; Phidias, Alcamenes, and even the more archaic pre-Phidian things are his favourites: most of the work of the decadence, Scopas and Lysippus themselves, he is austere enough to pass by uncommended. This is the more notable, in that Pausanias was by no means on Lucian's level, intellectually. Mr. Frazer defines him for us as rather an average man, "made of common stuff and cast in a common mould." He belongs to the better type of tourist, and has many of the qualities of the class, the somewhat discursive inquisitiveness, the conventional ethical judgment, the ready but not very penetrating verdict. He had literary ambitions, but small literary skill; his style is a halting, clumsy thing, which has lost simplicity without attaining to eloquence. He is no philosopher, but is touched with philosophic rationalism. He accepts the orthodoxy of his day, with exceptions. His disbeliefs are sporadic and arbitrary. Sometimes he will explain away a myth as an allegory, sometimes he permits himself a decent scepticism. That Zeus was changed into a cuckoo, or Narcissus into a flower, he can hardly swallow; or that beasts listened to Orpheus as he sang, or that Orpheus himself went down to hell in search of Eurydice. But of the gods themselves, and their powers, he suggests no doubt. Similarly he is chary in his acceptance of travellers' tales:

"Among the fish in the Arsanius are the so-called spotted fish. They say these spotted fish sing like a thrush. I saw them after they had been caught, but I did not hear them utter a sound, though I tarried by the river till sunset, when they were said to sing most."

"Fish-tales," you observe, are of early origin. This, then, is the manner of man Pausanias was. Mr. Frazer concludes with a defence of his author's veracity and value as an authority, both of which have been impugned.

The first volume of Mr. Frazer's work contains a translation of the text of Pausanias, and the remarkable introduction to which we have already referred. The sixth is an index. The remaining four are occupied by a commentary, in which are liberally inserted a number of maps and plans, and of other illustrations, mostly reproductions of coins. Mr. Frazer's plan is to follow his author closely, and to supplement his statements on points of topography, folklore and antiquities by all the available modern information at his disposal. This is partly derived from two personal visits to Greece, but mainly from the vast stores of Mr. Frazer's wide illustrative reading. Copious references to innumerable authorities—English, French, and German—are given throughout, and space is often saved, on points of folklore, by reference to the author's Golden Bough. Mr. Frazer not only has the learning of the matter at his finger-ends, he has the gift of summarising, briefly and clearly, the essential points of an elaborate investigation; and his commentary becomes practically an encyclopædia of the very extensive archaeological excavations carried out in Greece, mainly by the archaeological schools at Athens during the last quarter of the century. The chief centres of this work have been at Mycenæ and the neighbouring centres of pre-Achæan civilisation, at Athens and Eleusis, at Olympia, at Megalopolis, at Delphi; and in each case the results up to the latest possible date are garnered up by Mr. Frazer. The very latest discoveries of all, those made by the French at Delphi, find a place in the fifth volume. The Delphic remains include, in addition to the great temple of Apollo, a large number of "treasuries," which stand beside the Sacred Way, within the precinct, and contain the offerings of the particular states by whom they were dedicated. The friezes of one of these, variously ascribed to the Siphnians and Cnidians, have recently been unearthed, and prove to be very perfect examples of the best sixth century sculpture. Mr. Frazer gives an excellent heliogravure of portions of this frieze, as well as a full description. It is the most important of recent additions to our knowledge of Greek art.

Adequately to deal with Mr. Frazer's magnum opus within the space at our disposal is impossible. We trust that we have said enough to show that it is a work which no scholar or lover of antiquity can afford to neglect. To have produced it is an honour to Cambridge and to England.

AUDUBON.

Audubon and His Journals. By Maria R. Audubon. With Zoological and other Notes by Elliott Coues. 2 vols. (Nimmo.)

It would not be possible within any reasonable limits even to touch briefly on the immense number of interesting topics raised in these handsome and substantial volumes.

We shall therefore confine our attention to what the naturalist's granddaughter describes as their main object: "I have tried only to put Audubon the man before my readers." At this time of day it is by no means easy to form a just estimate of his singular character. The old jealousies of ornithologists—of George Ord and Waterton and Alexander Wilson, for instance—have not ceased to operate. Peeping through the tangle, on one side is the picture of a vain, selfish, unhelpful, jealous rival; on the other is the gay and kind Audubon of family tradition. How are we to decide which is the real man, which the mere emanation of an image of him conjured up either by friendly or hostile minds?

The first step towards some degree of clearness is to remember that, naturalised in America and married to an English wife, Audubon was French, and typical of his nation. To assert after this that he was not vain would be a contradiction in terms. The man is not wanting in what the Scotch call "a guid conceit" of himself who lingers on the idea that he is a Napoleon of his own craft, and sets down with evident pleasure a chance caller's remark that his features resemble those of the great conqueror. Nor if you listen to Audubon comparing his own bird-pictures with those of anyone else will you blame him for excessive modesty. Yet, as is often the case with Frenchmen, his vanity was of the most harmless and natural description, and so free from envy and ill-feeling as to disarm the fault-finder. For the key to the enigma is that a fine simplicity was the basis of his character. Sir Walter Scott—than whom a more acute judge of men never lived—discerned this at the first interview. "His countenance" (we quote from Scott's Journal) "acute, handsome, and interesting, but still simplicity is the predominant characteristic." Audubon's graphic description of the great novelist is well worth transcribing:

"Sir Walter came forward, pressed my hand warmly, and said he 'was glad to have the honour of meeting me'; his long, loose silvery locks struck me; he looked like Franklin at his best. He also reminded me of Benjamin West; he had the great benevolence of William Roscoe about him, and a kindness most prepossessing. I could not forbear looking at him; my eyes feasted on his countenance. I watched his movements as I would those of a celestial being; his long, heavy, white eyebrows struck me forcibly. His little room was tidy, though it partook of the character of a laboratory. He was wrapped in a quilted morning-gown of light purple silk; he had been at work writing on the Life of Napoleon. He writes close lines, rather curved as they go from left to right, and puts an immense deal on very little paper."

Lovers of old Edinburgh will find much to interest them in the "European" Journal, which fills most of the first volume. Audubon had gone to make arrangements for the publication of his great work, and the keen observer graphically describes such celebrities as Lord Jeffreys and Christopher North, the clever old ladies for whom in the old days the modern Athens was famous, the dinners of boiled sheep's head, the potations of smoky whisky that nearly choked him. But there was one occurrence that moved him with the force of tragedy. He was an Absalom as to his hair, which he wore long, and society ruthlessly decreed that he should be shorn. The dreadful sacrifice was recorded in his journal within a deep black border. The entry, of which a facsimile is given, reads thus :

"March 19, 1827.—This day my hair was sacrificed, and the will of God usurped by the wishes of man. As the barber clipped my locks rapidly, it reminded me of the horrible times of the French Revolution, when the same operation was performed on all the victims murdered by the guillotine ; my heart sank low."

He had come to this country imbued with a French hatred of England, natural enough to the time, but was agreeably surprised by the unostentatious kindness and ready appreciation with which he was met. Paris, far richer in professions, was wretched in performance, and he draws his countrymen with a very disappointed pen :

"September 15.—France, my dearest friend, is indeed poor! This day I have attended at the Royal Academy of Sciences, and had all my plates spread over the different large tables and they were viewed by about one hundred persons. 'Beau! bien beau!' issued from every mouth; but 'Quel ouvrage! Quel prix!' as well. I said that I had thirty subscribers at Manchester; they seemed surprised, but acknowledged that England, the little isle of England, alone was able to support poor Audubon. Poor France! thy fine climate, thy rich vineyards, and the wishes of the learned avail nothing; thou art a destitute beggar and not the powerful friend thou wast reputed to be."

We must forbear further quotation, but it would be extremely interesting to reproduce some of his account of the visit to New-castle and meeting with Thomas Bewick, the old engraver being then over seventy but as full of kindness and vigour as ever.

The "Labrador" and "Missouri River" Journals, which end vol. i., are attractive mainly from a zoological point of view. Audubon was not a deeply learned naturalist; it was the solid labour of MacGillivray that gave enduring value to his Birds of America. But his writing is the same graphic, animated style that makes the charm of his pictures, and a certain impressionableness enables him to render the atmosphere and felling of wood, river, sea, or swamp with unexcelled force. The second volume is mainly taken up with "episodes," written for his ornithological biography. Derived, they are, from frontier, woodland, and prairie when these were still unsettled, what strikes us most is the romantic material they contain. There is, in particular, one called "The Death of a Pirate," so strange and horrible that it might well have suggested another Treasure Island to R. L. S., for the record leaves wide scope to the imagination. The ruffian died after slaying all his pursuers, but he would have none of confession or of spiritual advice, regarding death no more than a jest, were it not for the pain. Only from his broken words do we gain an inkling of his wild and lurid career.

From these fragmentary jottings the reader will perhaps be able to form at least a rough idea of this remarkable book; and perhaps it will be best to leave him to form his own opinion of its hero—the simple, vain, affectionate man of the woods; musician, artist, writer, naturalist, and hunter; at once Parisian, savage, and man of the world. Whatever else may happen, he shows at least one quality in this book for which we are grateful—he is always entertaining.

LITERARY INDIA.

A Literary History of India. By R. W. Frazer. (Fisher Unwin.)

This is an excellent, an invaluable book, filling a want which must often have been felt by the reader who, not a specialist, nevertheless wishes to know something of a literature which he dimly understands to be important. The learning and reading which have gone to the compilation of Mr. Frazer's volume are great, yet he handles them with a clearness and order too frequently absent from books of this kind. He fails only where all Europeans fail—in his comments on Hindoo religious beliefs, rites, and philosophies, which are the outside comments of a Western rationalist, misleading rather than helpful. But this we expect, when the West writes of the East. And his account of these things is accurate. It would be a mistake to regard the book solely as a history of Hindoo literature. It more resembles a history of Hindoo thought. Not only are special sections devoted to the exposition of Brahmanism and Buddhism, but the various Hindoo philosophies are dealt with in their historical order. Now the history of philosophy in the East is equivalent to the history of religion in the West. It may be conceived, therefore, how large a task the author has set himself; since he has also to incorporate a certain amount of political history to keep things together, and render them intelligible. We could wish, almost, that the book had been strictly an account of Hindoo literature, in the narrower sense. As it is, the space devoted to individual poets, &c., is so small that the outsider gets but little knowledge of their character; while of the philosophies we doubt whether he will get any knowledge at all. The account of Kapila's teaching, for example, is unintelligible to an outsider without certain necessary explanations; such as that sound and touch, &c., do not signify the senses so-called, but certain modes of substance, analogous to the forces which produce sound and touch on this earth—a very complicated conception, not to be explained or understood in few words. In the same way, to translate manas by "mind," and linga-sarira by "a subtle body" gives the English reader no notion of Kapila's meaning.

But it is to the literature proper that most readers will turn. Many of us can hardly conceive those swarthy myriads as having a literature at all. In truth, it is a singularly different literature from our own. The great drama of Kalidasa, "Sakuntala," has hardly any action. It depends almost wholly on the beauty of its verse; and accordingly it is not possible to give any idea of it. Bhavabhuti is the great dramatist usually associated with Kalidasa, and of him Mr. Frazer gives specimens—extracts from an incantation scene—which may be appalling in the original, but certainly are not in the translation. The difficulty here, in fact, as with regard to all foreign literature, is translation. It is seldom that the gift of song is combined with the gift of Sanscrit; and too surely that fortunate union has not been attained by the translators of whose versions Mr. Frazer makes use. The most interesting specimen of drama which he gives is also by far the longest, and is from a play with the euphonious title of "The Mud Cart." It is exceedingly singular to the Western reader. The heroine, who is devoted to the hero, a pious Brahman, and is pursued by the villain, the king's brother-in-law, is a girl whom Mr. Frazer euphemistically calls a "wanton," and the Brahman's wife apparently assents to the connexion. Of the two great Hindoo epics, the "Ramayana" and the "Mahābhārata," we have only the stories given us. Of the "Kural," the "masterpiece of South Indian genius," we have specimen couplets in the version of Dr. Pope, which, we are assured, preserves "in an unrivalled manner the form of the Eastern setting." They are like this :

"The pangs that evening brings I never know, Till he, my wedded spouse, from me withdrew."

"Though free from fault, from loved one's tender arms
To be estranged a while hath its own special charms."

No, it will not do. The joys of reading such poetry we leave to others. We are content to know that the "Kural" is a very fine poem, and to wait till we can read Tamil. The one thing which comes alive out of the ordeal of translation is the Vedic hymns. These, doubtless, depend more upon ideas and less upon cunning language, hence the way in which they retain their force. Take this line or two from the "Rig-Veda" :

"Goddess of wild and forest who seemest to vanish from the sight,
How is it thou seekest not the village? Art thou afraid?"

Here one is calling to the cows, another there has felled a tree.
At eve the dweller in the wood fancies that somebody hath screamed."

There is conveyed a sudden sense and picture of the "spirit in the woods."

It must, however, be remembered that Mr. Frazer's object is to present a history of literary development, not to give a series of specimens. And the book, though difficult to quote, is most interesting to read. Very remarkable is the extent to which the mystical loves of Krishna and Radha became the almost exclusive theme of the later Indian poems, from Jaya Deva to Sūr Dās. Under this symbol was signified the desire of the Soul for the Over-Soul; and the same theme, in a narrative rather than lyric form, was sung by Tulsi Das (whom Mr. Frazer calls the "great master-poet of Northern India"), Rama and Sita taking the place of Krishna and Radha. In the Middle Ages this cultus even had its female poet, commentator, and prophetess in the person of Mira Bai. Mr. Frazer has brought his book down to modern times, and concludes with a survey of the writers who are endeavouring to unite Eastern and Western ideas in literature; the novels of Bankim Chatterji, the poems of Toru Dutt, are things singularly interesting to the English mind. Whether the experiment of writing novels in a country where that form is not native, and suchlike Western innovations, will really produce a revival of national literature, remains to be seen. But whatever may be the new literature, here is an excellent book on the old.

THE LATER RENAISSANCE.

The Later Renaissance. By David Hannay. "Periods of European Literature." (Blackwood.)

THIS instalment of literary history begins with Spain, and Spain is the interest of the book. There is perhaps some injustice to other countries which might claim to represent the Later Renaissance more properly than Spain, but this is of little importance. The proper test for a literary history of this scale is whether it encourages the reader to learn more of the books and the authors that it treats of; and Mr. Hannay's history is one that quickens curiosity in the right way. It leaves the reader properly discontented with his own ignorance and want of spirit, and in a mood for exploration. There can be no doubt where his course will lie, if he follows this director: not to the Italians of the age of Tasse, not even by preference to watch the adventures and experiments of the French poets, and the rising of the Pleiad; but to the South-West, to the stage of Lope and Calderon, to the Sierra Morona, even (though here Mr. Hannay is not quite so encouraging) to look for the humours of the market-place in the confessions of Lazarillo and his kin.

On one point an objection must be entered, without hesitation. It is scarcely comprehensible that Mr. Hannay, with his love of the language, and his ear for the fluent rhythms of the natural Castilian verse, should apologise for the ballads, and deprecate comparison with Lockhart's rendering. It may be admitted that the two things are very unlike; there is a wide difference between the Spanish simplicity and the clinking smartness of the translation. There may still be some fortunate people in this country who, knowing the romancero, are ignorant of the English imitations. They may be warned, if they have any respect or gratitude for the biographer of Scott, to leave his Spanish ballads alone, and believe that those, in their turn, are at their best in the cheerful minstrelsy of Bon Gaultier.

Mr. Hannay quotes from Lockhart:

"I ride from land to land,
I sail from sea to sea;
Some day more kind I fate may find,
Some night kiss thee."

"What can be more pretty or more fit?" asks Mr. Hannay; and then he repeats, and condemns as bathos, the stanza that begins:

"Andando de Sierra en Sierra Por orillas de la mar"—

a ballad measure that certainly has a different kind of fitness from the staccato monosyllables of Lockhart's song. Mercifully, he forbears to quote Lockhart's dull defacement of the Rime of the Count Arnaldos. This is the only serious blemish in Mr. Hannay's criticism; the drama, the books of chivalry, the gusto picaresco, and more besides of the great classes of Spanish literature are represented shortly, yet in no perfunctory manner. In the dramatic part one essential thing is brought out, namely, the true dramatic life of the comedies of "Cloak and Sword," some of which are to this day among the liveliest of all old plays. Concealments and surprises have never been better managed than in those comedies. It is perhaps to be regretted that the plan and limits of the book seem to have left out the French dramatists who did so much to make "Spanish plays" the fashion; they gave those plots a vogue in England that lasted at any rate to the days of Mrs. Jordan, who played Beatrice in Kemble's Pannel, a comedy derived from Calderon. Some things, it is true, were incommunicable and untranslatable in the Spanish comedies—the grace of the language, the dignity of manner, the harmony of honour and levity, in the Fairy Lady of Calderon and all her numerous sisters.

The literature to which the title of "Later Renaissance" is most applicable, the Italian, is not treated here with equal zest. Perhaps the title is not taken quite seriously enough, though the concluding chapter does a good deal to give a summary and commanding view of the changes which are called by the worshipful name of Renaissance. In the treatment of French literature, as has been already remarked, there is some want of congruity with the Spanish chapter. Alexandre Hardy is left for the next volume: it would be interesting to see his romantic experiments in drama set against their contemporaries in Spain, and even to have the archaic arrangement of his stage referred to, in comparison with the Autos of Calderon, and their adherence to the old customs of the Mysteries and Miracle Plays. But these points are unimportant; the great thing is to have written a new guide book for some of the brightest regions of literature, which will bear the test of actual travel in those countries. It is, perhaps, unavoidable that the more familiar history of Elizabethan literature in this volume should be a little put out of countenance by the foreign glories of Spain and France with which it is here allied.

MR. GREGORY'S LETTER-BOX.

Mr. Gregory's Letter-Box, 1813-1830. Edited by Lady Gregory. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THIS volume will be of interest to students rather of politics than of letters. William Gregory became Under-Secretary for Ireland in 1813. His post made him head of the permanent administration of Irish affairs, the much debated Dublin Castle, as well as bear-leader to successive Viceroys and Chief Secretaries. He served under Lord Talbot, Lord Wellesley, and Lord Anglesey, and lost his office shortly after the passing of Catholic Emancipation in 1829. The letters now published by Lady Gregory are drawn from the correspondence of her husband's grandfather during those years, now in the hands of his descendants. They are mostly official or semi-official in character, and though many of them are merely applications for tide-waiterships and other places of emolument, others throw a good deal of light on the troublous times that preceded Emancipation and on the opposition of Gregory and his like to that measure. Lady Gregory appears to be by no means in sympathy with the "Castle" attitude towards Irish politics; nevertheless, she naturally tries to put her central figure in as favourable a light as may be. And indeed he was evidently a man of great personal popularity and even merit—amiable, courteous, desirous up to his very imperfect lights to do his duty to the country. But it is very obvious that his dismissal was inevitable if Peel's policy of conciliation was to have any chance of success. He had neither the imagination nor the sympathy necessary for the understanding of the Irish temperament. The letters that passed between him and that kindred spirit, Lord Talbot, show a determination to thwart in every way the growth of more liberal ideas than had hitherto prevailed at Dublin. The maintenance of Protestant ascendancy—that is their war-cry. At conciliators such as Grant or Lord Anglesey, who had at least the right spirit in them, even if they were occasionally wanting in official tact, the Castle makes a dead set. Lady Anne Gregory is instructed not to call on Lady Anglesey.

Gregory, himself an Englishman, was but little in contact with real Irishry, and, therefore, the reader's expectation of a budget of Hibernian humour must needs be disappointed. Such good stories as there are do not, as a rule, come from the letters, but have been worked in in the process of editing. The best is one told by Lord Cloncurry of a "barony constable" of the ante-Peel period. The only qualification of these guardians of the peace was a certificate of having taken the Sacrament at the parish church. Lord Cloncurry, in swearing in one of them, and expounding his official duties, came to that of preventing the straying or grazing of cattle on the public roads, and was interrupted with: "And where am I to keep my own little cow, my Lord?" There is a touch of humour, too, in the account of the Dublin Beef-steak Club, which began as a musical, but afterwards became a Tory place of meeting. It was here that, when Lord Wollesley's removal from the post of Viceroy was announced, "The Exports of Ireland" was to his great indignation, given as a toast. Of George the Fourth's visit to Ireland in 1821 Lady Gregory tells us:

"He arrived after a good passage, during which much goose pie and whisky had been consumed. Word had just come of the death of Napoleon at St. Helena. The story goes that 'Sire, your enemy is dead,' were the words he was greeted with. 'When did she die?' was his response. But the Queen was indeed also dead, and his Majesty was persuaded to wear a piece of crape round his arm during the festivities, which were in no way curtailed."

It is somewhat touching to learn that, although the Dublin crowds shouted for the King, they did not know how to cheer, as "they had not had much practice in the expression of public joy."

A prominent figure in the correspondence is old Lord Talbot of Ingestre, who had been Lord Lieutenant, but, like Gregory, though at an earlier date, was ousted by the spirit of conciliation. The two remained cronies, and wrote despairing letters to each other on the prospect of emancipation. Lord Talbot was a worthy old gentleman, but he could only speak of the Bill as "the horrible evil which is now hanging over us"; and when he saw that its passing had become inevitable, he writes to Gregory: "Depressed in spirits, deprived of hope, I wandered about London like one possessed with an Evil Spirit."

A TWELFTH-CENTURY SINGER.

L'Estoire de la Sainte Guerre. Par Ambroise. Publiée d'après le MS. unique du Vatican par Gaston Paris. (Paris, 1897.)

For nearly twenty-five years English mediævalists have been looking forward to the publication of the poem before us—a poem which, so far as its matter and its form are concerned, is worthy to take its place by the side of those two other rhyming products of the early French historical muse, Garnier's Vie de St. Thomas de Cantorbere and the anonymous Life of the Great Earl Marshal, so lately given to the world by M. Paul Meyer. It is singular, and perhaps not altogether to the credit of English scholarship, that these three works—each in its way of such capital importance for our early history—should be presented to the English-speaking public by foreign scholars. The "Song of Ambrose," now published for the first time in its entirety, is nothing less than a history of the Third Crusade, told from an English point of view in rhyming octosyllabic Old-French verse by an Anglo-Norman poet who was one of Richard Cœur-de-Lion's companions in that great enterprise from the moment of his leaving England in December, 1189, till the day of his finally quitting Palestine in October, 1192. Like Garnier de Pont Ste Maxence, the author of the Chanson de la Guerre Sainte was a minstrel by profession. The caehet of his occupation is on every page. Does he wish to praise the valour of Geoffrey de Lusignan at the barricades of Acre—he tells us that the hero dealt blows of which a "Roland" or an "Oliver" might be proud; and the later songs of Tristran, and of Aspremont; those of the "Saisnes," of "Arthur," and of Pepin, were as familiar to him as was the "Chanson de Roland" itself. But he prides himself on having something better to give his audience than doubtful history or palpable fable.

"Of these old chansons de geste," he writes, "those of which minstrels make so great a to-do—I cannot tell you whether they be false or no, nor could I ever find a man who would go warrant for their truth; but all that I tell you of the heat and cold and sufferings endured before Acre is truth, aye and a right good story it is to listen to."

It is with something of a minstrel's disappointment that he tells us that in the hurried Christmas feast at Lion-sur-Mer in 1189 there was little time for singing chansons de geste—doubtless a record of his own disappointment. And when, at the very close of the expedition, he makes his way into the Holy City to pay his reverence to our Lord's tomb, it is under the wardship of Raoul Tesson, "a great lover of song and music": "Raols Tesson qui mult amoit notes et sons." He was present when Richard Cœur-de-Lion took Messina, "quicker," to borrow his own striking phrase, "than a priest could sing matins"; he was a guest at the great banquet which the same king gave to Philip and his French lords in his wooden castle of "Matte-Griffon" on Christmas Day, 1190; and he breaks out into an ingenuous rapture over the splendour of the scene, taking special care to note amidst all the glory of silver plate and richly carved goblets the homely English point that the table linen was of a spotless purity.

The "Song of Ambrose" does not contain so much absolutely new historical information as might have been expected. And this for a simple reason. Ambrose is one of those unfortunate authors whose legitimate fame has been stolen from them by a plagiarist. He had hardly given his poem to the world when an unscrupulous contemporary laid his hands upon it, and, after cancelling every passage in which the true author mentioned his name, turned it into Latin with a pompous introductory letter in which he, the translator, claimed to have written the whole work. This plagiarist had the assurance to go further still, and apologise to his readers for any deficiencies in style on the plea that his work had been written during the course of the Crusade itself. For nearly 700 years the laurels of this really great work—for such, judged from a twelfth-century standpoint, Ambrose's poem is—have been resting on an impostor's brow; and now, at last, M. Gaston Paris has come forward to restore his proper honours to a long-defrauded man.

BRIEFER MENTION.

The Life Work of Edward White Benson, D.D. By J. A. Carr, LL.D.

THIS is an unpretentious biography of the late Archbishop of Canterbury. Much of it might have been compiled from the files of the Times; and much use has been made of the Archbishop's own sermons and writings. But the quantity of intimate and special matter is not contemptible; and the book will stand good as a biography till a better and a fuller one is written. Benson was a born Churchman. As a child he was called the "little bishop," and his early passion for sermonising was such that he often harangued the silent machinery in his father's chemical factory. One is again and again impressed by a certain sweetness, freshness, and naïveté in the man. When he was appointed to the headmastership of Wellington College, then rising on its brown and breezy plateau, he said: "Who am I that I should be privileged to see Ambarrow every day of my life?" The Archbishop was an antiquarian. He was steeped in Church lore; and, reading his life, we come very near to the heart of the Anglican Church. When Archbishop

"he possessed a master key, which would open all the doors and gates in the cathedral; and sometimes when staying in Canterbury he would steal away from the Deanery, and shut himself up alone for a long while in the place known as 'Becket's Crown,' where is the marble chair of Augustine."

While this book does not alter or even raise our estimate of the late Archbishop as an ecclesiastical statesman, it familiarises and endears him as a man.

Andrée and his Balloon. By Henri Lachambre and Alexis Machuron. (Constable.)

NORMAN could be more precise and definite, or more clearly intelligible, than the portions of this book which deal with the scientific side of Andrée's expedition—the construction of the balloon, and the devices for overcoming the difficulties and averting the dangers which beset his attempt—and so far it is of the utmost interest; but, on the other hand, nothing could be less inspiring than the dismal sprightliness and spurious heroics by means of which the authors have sought to win popular interest and to excite the enthusiasm of the general reader. It was Andrée's misfortune that the initiation of his adventure was too nearly synchronous with Nansen's triumphant return. Besides, his method—whether because of its seeming crankishness or because it suggested a base evasion of the difficulties which traditionally beset the adventure—failed to win any considerable measure of popular sympathy. But the probability, which day by day grows stronger, that the expedition has already succumbed to the rigour of the ruthless North should by this time have rehabilitated the expedition in the public esteem.

It was on July 11 of last year that Andrée's balloon made its start from Spitzbergen. Two days afterwards came the last winged rumour of it that the world of men has received; it had then made 187½ miles. The machine might be expected to remain afloat not more than sixty days. After that the little company of three must take to their feet and the toy boat they carried with them, and for food must trust largely to powder and shot. It is certain, therefore, that if the members of the expedition are yet alive they have already been for some months reduced to the plane of earth and to circumstances which justify keen anxiety on the part of their friends and of all who are open to the appeal of a splendid courage. But English hearts would warm so much more readily to "the hardy explorers" if the narrative were not interspersed with such hydras of sentimentality as this:

"When will he see again that charming Swedish girl, whose photograph which he has so often shown me, and carries next his heart. . . ."

" . . . What anxiety, what suspense, await that poor young girl?"

"But what joy will follow the glorious return of her beloved! What firm bonds of affection will bind them together after this long, hard separation!"

Oh! how I wish them this happiness with all my heart!"

So do we, but we should have expressed it otherwise.

Legends of the Wheel. By Arthur Waugh. (Arrowsmith.)

In this little book Mr. Waugh would do for cyclists what Mr. Norman Gale has done for cricketers. All the philosophy of the Ripley-road is here, and some of the humour, introduced by this motto:

"The legend comes full cycle now,
And in our Age of Steel
The New Ixion bends his brow
Above the deathless wheel."

Considering how little the cycle does for literature or human nature, Mr. Waugh has made (for the cyclist) an interesting book, and has shown dexterity enough in rhyme and metre to merit the title of Laureate of the wheel. Best, we think, of his verses is the parody of Mr. Henley's "Song of the Sword":

"Winger of woman,
Banishing petticoats,
Bringing the female
(Long since irrational)
Rational dress.
Ho! then, the polish
And pride of my ministry.
Ho! then, the gleam
Of my glittering nickel-plate.
Ho! then, the Park
And the pleasure of Battersea.
Ho! then, the hose
Of my deftly-shod womankind.
I, the ubiquitous
Angel of Exercise,
I am the Bike."

A man, however, must have more catholicity of taste than we possess before he can extend his approval of the Angel of Exercise to reading about it, except in makers' catalogues.

Certain Tragical Discourses of Bandello.
Translated by Geffraie Fenton. Edited by Robert Langton Douglas. Tudor Translations. 2 vols. (D. Nutt.)

THESE little novels of Matteo Bandello, in the luscious euphuistic English of Geoffrey Fenton, are so rarely to be met with that Mr. Henley is to be thanked for including them in his admirable series. They are so suave, so simple and particular, so innocent of guile, yet at the same time marked by so pleasant an impropriety, as to make them most refreshing reading. Hardly any Elizabethan book could be named more foreign to Victorian literary methods. Take any passage:

"And albeit she was neither fyne in attire, set out in robes of riche arraye, nor deckte with apparell for the decoration of her naturall beaute, yet appeared she no lesse precious in the eye of this gallande than if she had bene trimmed for the nonste in the same order that the poetes faine of the browne Egepeiane, when she was broughte to lye wyth the Romaine capteine, Marcus Anthoninus. He fayled not to reiterate his haunte with an ordinarie trade to the streete of Janiquette, resolynghe his common abode or place of stage righte over againste her lodginge, whiche increased her doubtte of that mistereye, till nature, that discusseith the darknes of such doubttes and bringes the most rude creatures of the worlde to be capable in the argumentes of love, revealed unto her the meanyng of that riddle, sayinge that the roundes and often tornes with vaylinge of bonnett, whiche the proude pirott made upon the dore of her fortresse, was no other thyng then the intisynghe harmonie of the Syrenes, or other state, to allure or make her plyable to th' appetite of his will."

What leisurely times these lengthy periods imply! What hours of idleness to beguile! Thus do Bandello's stories wind their gentle, deliberate way through a world of appetites and dolours.

To Fenton's edition, which was published in 1567, and is one of the few instances where we feel the translator to be the equal of the original author, Mr. Douglas prefixes a serviceable preface. The reprint is dedicated to Mr. Meredith—"To George Meredith, these essays in an art wherein his achievement has made him illustrious." But it is a far cry from the superficiality of the Tragical Discourses to the profundity of The Egoist.

Hints on the Management of Hawks, and Practical Falconry. By J. E. Harting. (H. Cox).

It will probably be a surprise to many of our readers to learn that falconry is still practised at all; but not only will Mr. Harting's book convince them to the contrary, but so zealous a partisan of the sport is he that it may even make converts of them. Look at this glowing passage:

"Few persons, except those who have experienced it, can realise the feelings of a falconer when flying a hawk which he has tamed and trained himself. To see a brace of well-trained pointers or setters quarter their ground, stand, back, and drop to shot, returning from a distance obedient to their owner's whistle, is, undoubtedly, a grand sight, and one to gladden the heart of any man who has the faintest love of sport in his nature; but to see a falcon leave its owner's hand, take the air, and mounting with the greatest ease, fly straight at the rate of a mile a minute, and then at a whistle, or a whoop, and a toss of the lure, turn in its flight and come out of the clouds to his hand, is to see a triumph of man's art in subduing the lower animals, and making them obedient to his will."

One rubs one's eyes on reading such a passage as that, in a volume dated 1898.

The Monroe Doctrine. By W. F. Reddaway. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THE history of the Monroe doctrine from its first suggestion by Canning to its final development in the hands of President Cleveland is carefully and accurately told in this treatise. The author agrees with those who believe that the mind at the back of Monroe's famous message was that of J. Quincey Adams, and states the argument with much clearness. But he contends with unnecessary earnestness that this purely unilateral declaration of the American Government has not the force of international law. It comes within the sphere of the law of nations, only in this way, that while admittedly a nation may intervene between two others when its own integrity or peace or welfare is threatened, the world now has the advantage of knowing beforehand that the United States will regard certain acts as equivalent to such a menace. The American people, with unarmed hands sheltering the peace of a hemisphere, cannot help contrasting the lot of the New World with that of the Old. The result of that contrast is a passionate resolve to keep the blood tax from the Americas, and to see that the New World is not made a scene for the repetition of the feuds and the ambitions of Europe. They have seen how another continent has been parcelled out; how the doctrine of the hinterland has been pressed; and how certain it is that in a little while all the Old World quarrels, the dynastic bickerings, the race rivalries, the frontier disputes, and the standing armies of Europe will be mimicked and reproduced upon the soil of Africa, from Alexandria to the Cape. With this tremendous object-lesson before them, the Americans cling with redoubled faith to the policy formulated by Monroe. It is interesting and important to note how the language of the American Presidents has grown stronger with the growing strength of the States. Intervention, which Monroe spoke of as "the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition," Mr. Cleveland roundly denounces as a "wilful aggression upon the rights and interests" of America. But then Monroe spoke for eleven millions of people, and Cleveland for seventy.

The Statesman's Year-Book, 1898. By J. Scott Keltie, LL.D. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE thirty-fifth issue of this annual contains several additions and improvements. For example, Mr. Keltie has introduced diagrams showing the rise and fall in imports and exports for the past twenty-five years in the British empire and in many of the countries with which we have large commercial relations. A map of West Africa, illustrating the Niger question, is another useful addition.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE LONDONERS.

By ROBERT HICHENS.

Here we have the "Society" Mr. Hichens pure and simple. The drawing-room occultism and brilliant tawdriness of Flames is forsworn. The Londoners is a very modern novel, and the characters are "smart." It is the merry, superficial, witty story of Mrs. Verulam, a pretty and charming widow who thought she was tired of Society, of her dainty struggles to escape, and her efforts to get Mrs. Van Adam (masquerading as a man) into the whirl. As Mr. Van Adam has divorced Mrs. Van Adam the task is difficult. But Mrs. Verulam is not deterred by trifles: "I hope your husband divorced you," she says, "for something American, such as wearing your hair the wrong colour, or talking without an accent." (W. Heinemann. 338 pp. 6s.)

COMEDIES AND ERRORS.

By HENRY HARLAND.

Twelve short stories by the author of Grey Roses, who has won his spurs as a teller—adroit and delightful—of little tales. Most or all of these appeared in the "Yellow Book," of which Mr. Harland was editor. The writer of Comedies and Errors has style, and a method all his own. (John Lane. 344 pp. 6s.)

YOUNG BLOOD.

By E. W. HORNUNG.

In this, his first book since that excellent story My Lord Duke, Mr. Hornung employs some of the methods of Charles Reade. One is reminded of Hard Cash again and again. The tale deals with the disappearance of an ironmaster, and his son's endeavours to make a living and track his father's enemies. The chief value of the book resides in Gordon Lowndes, a Micawber-like company-promoter; but Mr. Hornung is nowhere at his best. Even here, however, he has many merits above the average novelist, and his enthusiasm never flags. (Cassell & Co. 332 pp. 6s.)

BETWEEN SUN AND LAND.

By W. D. SCULLY.

Mr. Scully's Kaffir Stories were a year or so ago welcomed as good work. Here he returns to his koppies and treks, with which, having been Civil Commissioner for Namaqualand, and special magistrate for Cape Colony, he is familiar enough. His book is strong meat. The first story shows the vicissitudes through which Max, a young Jew, had to pass before he could marry Susannah. The second is an epic of cattle. Mr. Scully has both cynicism and power of vivid writing. (Methuen & Co. 294 pp. 6s.)

SECOND LIEUTENANT CELIA.

By LILLIAS CAMPBELL DAVIDSON.

This is a very heavy book to hold, but, none the less, it offers light reading. It is modern and flippant and amusing. Celia is a tin-boy, who so loves her officer brother that she rides a bicycle in his flannels, and cuts her hair short, military fashion, and earns the nick-name which gives the story its title. Those who like ties of garrison life, and all the frivolities and heart-aches appertaining thereto, will like this book a good deal. And John Strange Winter, if she reads it, will realise that she has a capable rival. There are several smart illustrations. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 318 pp. 3s. 6d.)

A WOMAN WORTH WINNING.

By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN.

Mr. George Manville Fenn's latest story is about a jealous husband whose feelings carry him to the point of injuring his suspected rival. The results are tragic. The supposed lover loses his reason and is sent to a private lunatic asylum by the remorseful husband. The disappearance of the wife is also explained. Though gruesome enough in its plot, the story is written with a light hand, and much of it is an amusing reflex of Scotty. (Chatto & Windus. 377 pp. 6s.)

BIJLI, THE DANCER.

By J. B. PATTON.

A romance of India by one who has an intimate knowledge of the native character. The love of a Pathan nobleman for a dancing girl is the central motive—indeed, the only motive. The subject is treated with dignity, the scene is laid at Ronáki, in Northern India, and the characters are all natives. A book for Anglo-Indians. (Methuen & Co. 344 pp. 6s.)

A STOLEN LIFE.

By MATTHIAS McDONNELL BODKIN, Q.C.

Dr. Vivian Ardol is cycling along the Embankment. Casually, he dives into the river to save a beautiful girl who throws herself over the parapet (see frontispiece). At the Hotel Cecil the Doctor "tosses" the cabman a sovereign. "The smartest man in London!" says a clean-shaven Yankee, as the dripping girl-laden doctor flashes through the vestibule. "And the richest!" adds his wife. "And the handsomest!"—his daughter. The hero resuscitates the angel, orders the hotel about, plunges into his bath, and, emerging therefrom, hastily pencils "a luncheon menu at once, costly and substantial." And so on. (Ward, Lock & Co. 320 pp. 6s.)

THE LUST OF HATE.

By GUY BOOTHBY.

A hot melodrama, compact of murders, hypnotism, hansoms, and gold dust. The hero's hatred toward a gold digger who had stolen from him the secret of a mine is fanned by our old friend Dr. Nikola, the villain of the story; and Gilbert Pennethorne is led to believe that he has actually murdered his old enemy. Things are righted, and Dr. Nikola discomfited; but a series of murders of peers of the realm, each of whom is asphyxiated and denuded (each time in italics) of his left eyebrow, is among the preliminary horrors. When we leave the hero he is rapturously assessing the virtues of his wife—forgetting our fatigue. (Ward, Lock & Co. 283 pp. 6s.)

MISS BETTY'S MISTAKE.

By ADELINÉ SERGEANT.

Miss Sergeant describes her novel as simply "A Story." It is just that and no more; it reminds us of certain tricks with a piece of string, wherein a vast tangle is made to disappear like magic. Miss Betty's is not the only mistake. A daughter loves a father who is not her father, and a mad mother who is not her mother. Miss Betty is betrayed. Love is tossed about on a sea of misunderstanding. And the result is only "a story": not a criticism of life. (Hurst & Blackott. 325 pp. 6s.)

JOHN SHIP, MARINER.

By KNARF ELIVAS.

"In this, the autumn of my life, my dear children have many times urged me to set down, in such order as may be, the relation of those adventures, hardships, and mishaps through which it has pleased a gracious Providence to bring me scatheless." So it begins; and so—following familiar and honourable lines—it continues until the end, when he at last possesses "a wife beyond compare, tenderest of helpmates, sweetest of companions, dearest and truest of all women in the wide world." On the way there are, among other matters, the tortures of the Inquisition. (Sampson, Low & Co. 304 pp. 6s.)

ACROSS THE SALT SEAS.

By J. BLOUNDELLE-BURTON.

The author of The Hispaniola Plate and The Clash of Arms is safe for a good story of adventure and fray. Here he offers yet another. The hero, who relates the tale, fought in the Netherlands in the reign of William III., and subsequently, under Anne, took part in the siege of Vigo and saw the death of many Spaniards. Mr. Bloundelle-Burton's chapter headings are earnest enough of his brave methods: "Secret Service"; "The Taking of the Galleons"; "The Cowl does not always make the Monk"; "The Dead Man's Eyes—the Dead Man's Hands," and so on. (Methuen & Co. 333 pp. 6s.)

THE REV. ANNABEL LEE.

By ROBERT BUCHANAN.

Mr. Buchanan casts his story in the future, at a time when healthy men need to eat only once a week, and the religion of humanity has taken the place of Christianity. Then arises Annabel Lee, who has nothing to do with Poe's poem, and preaches the old creed, assisted in her crusade by Uriel Rose the musician. And in the end Uriel Rose is condemned to death and is thus the first martyr in the revival. A hectic, hysterical romance of the type called "spiritual." (C. Arthur Pearson. 255 pp. 6s.)

STORIES SWORN TO BE TRUE (SERIES II.)

By A BARRISTER.

Here are seven stories in all, and truth now and then is stranger than fiction. The author's method has been to delve in old law reports for the skeleton of his work, and then fill in. The filling in might have been more generously done. (Horace Cox. 104 pp. 1s.)

ALL THEY WENT THROUGH.

By F. W. ROBINSON.

A collection of very readable short stories and sketches. We selected "Thomas Jones's Trouble," and found it to be a description, by Thomas Jones, of the inconveniences he suffered in living near Timothy Jones. "T. Jones, of Hatchingdon Green," might be either the needy poet or the prosperous solicitor—hence the mistakes made by tallymen and butchers' boys and "hire system" collectors. When the local paper announced the "Mysterious Disappearance of Mr. S. T. Jones," and Chips—young Chips of the War Office—offered misplaced sympathy, then Thomas Jones's "Trouble" culminated. A more serious tone marks other stories in the book. (John Long. 316 pp. 6s.)

A BRIDE OF JAPAN.

By CARLTON DAWES.

This is the story of an Englishman marrying—despite the sneers of his friends—a beautiful Japanese girl, daughter of a market-gardener. Briefly, it is a study of a mixed marriage and its tragic consequences. Daidai, the ugly old rice-grower, whom Tresilian had forestalled in the affections of Sasa-San, is a striking figure, prophesying woe and shame to Tresilian. Woe and shame come; but Tresilian proves that he can play the man as well as the fool. A very readable story. (Hutchinson & Co. 293 pp. 6s.)

YOUTH AT THE PROW.

By E. RENTOUL ESLER.

This book contains ten short stories. The first and longest is called "The Philanderer." The philanderer is Roderick Weston, a barrister, who uses a poor but high spirited girl as his plaything while negotiating an advantageous marriage. His discomfiture when, fifteen years later, he offers himself as a widower to the girl he had disappointed is a good passage in a story which, as a whole, is well written. (John Long. 234 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE STORY OF LOIS.

By KATHARINE S. MACQUOID.

This story, by the author of Patty, The Red Glove, &c., is dedicated to Mr. Gladstone. It is the story of Lois Ercott's determination to become an actress. Her father, an old Indian chaplain, is terror-stricken at the thought, but Lois and fate are too strong for him. Yet his fears for his daughter are well grounded; Lois meets success and a husband, only when she has met failure and a scoundrel. (John Long. 310 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

Poor Max. By the Author of The Yellow Aster.
(Hutchinson.)

THE author of The Yellow Aster has in her new novel attempted a difficult and exacting piece of work, and it is a pleasure to be able to congratulate her on her striking success. Max Morland is one of those characters who cannot be measured by the ordinary standards. He is an original; one of those personages whom the world likes to sum up in the word—"impossible." In writing the every-day history of such a man, in treating him as a mere mortal, an author is in great danger of becoming either dull or hysterical, and it is no mean tribute to Mrs. Caffyn's (we drop a moaningless anonymity) art to say that Poor Max is readable from cover to cover, and that the "impossible" hero of the book is not only possible, but convincing.

When Judith married Max Morland she was completely under the spell of his charming personality. It was, after all, no wonder, for we, too, though we have only met him in cold print, have seldom come across a more attractive and altogether delightful man. When he talked—and he talked incessantly on every subject under the sun—she listened to the voice of a god. She placed him on such a high pedestal that a very little shake brought him down with a crash at her feet—a fallen idol. In one moment she discovered that she had never known him; at a single stroke she was called upon to revise all her estimates of his character. "For an hour did Judith sit without a move or an emotion, patiently forging on to the truth, her intelligence minute by minute expanding steadily and strangely."

It was a very bitter awakening, but it made a woman of her, and we like Judith better as a woman than as an unthinking, worshipping machine. Max was, she discovered after all, a child, which comes very near to being a god. He demanded and received from Judith continual watching, continual care, continual forgiveness. He was reckless and thoughtless; one of those perverse men of genius who deluge the world at large with brilliant epigrams, always forgetting that conversation, however sparkling, does not go far towards paying butchers' bills. He was a bundle of contradictory emotions, hopeless and beaten when brought face to face with life's realities, cringing helplessly before the cruelty of existence. And in spite, and a little on account, of all his manifest weakness, he was always charming, always attractive. Mrs. Caffyn has realised her hero most thoroughly, he is true to himself right down to his heroic death, and to readers of her book "poor Max" will be for a long time to come a very pleasant and refreshing memory.

The other characters in the novel are, without exception, well drawn. Judith strikes us as being the least consistent figure, and we are quite unreconciled to her conduct after her husband's death; but Lady Grindal, Graves, Sandy, and the boys are all excellent. There is not a dull page in Poor Max, and this in spite of the fact that the action is very limited. The book is packed with smart sayings and delightful conversations, and it is altogether far above the common run of fiction. It is one of the few really clever psychological novels that can be read with uninterrupted pleasure.

* * * *

Sunlight and Limelight. By Francis Gribble.
(A. D. Innes & Co.)

MANY books have made their market of that curious attraction which the middle-class public feels towards the naughty unknown of stage Bohemia. This is one of the least pleasant. "Sunlight" in the book there is none, or anything fresh and natural. It is all limelight, and limelight by no means of the first quality. Even when the characters begin to talk grandiloquently about "real life" and "pure art" you feel that it is all pose, and that they will swing back to their melodrama in the next sentence. If Mr. Gribble wrote with an idea of repelling the stage-struck, he should surely attain his end, for a more repellent, unwholesome world than the stage-world as he presents it can hardly be conceived. Mr. Clement Scott himself could paint the thing no blacker. The heroine, Angela Clifton, is a leading lady, run after by society and the newspapers, but fulfilled of vanity, and bereft alike of idealism and of the sense of honour:

"Whispers of the Master's assiduous attentions got abroad, but did not harm Angela in the world's opinion. There was no open scandal; nothing was known for certain. The fact that she always appeared in society without her husband caused no censorious comment. Not every one knew that she had a husband, and to those who did know it never occurred to include him in their invitations. For the rest, she was an actress, and actresses were allowed a certain license, so that it was only properly piquant that such reports, always provided that they were not too definite, should hover round her name. As Lady Breul said: 'If one believed everything that one heard about actresses it would be impossible to invite them to one's house, and so many men who hate parties can be got to come to Harley Street to meet them.'

Moreover, Angela had at least laid the solid foundation of a virtuous renown by her attitude towards the Earl of Richborough. This white-haired veteran of gallant adventure had begun by offering ellery as a tribute to her talents. She had accepted the jewellery, the spirit in which a queen will accept a present from her humblest object; but when the donor explained, with all possible delicacy and courteous consideration for her feelings, to what proposals the presents were the prelude, she turned upon him, and declaimed her indignation in the manner of an injured heroine of tragedy."

The seamy side of the theatre is kept to the front throughout. Playwrights, actors, managers, patrons, and hangers-on, all alike, according to Mr. Gribble, are made up of all that is sordid, artificial, and sensual. Kisses and caresses are as common as "cues," and every man neighs after his friend's wife. We are given the outline of two or three plays, said to be the work of men of genius, the smacking most distinctly of the Adelphi; and the rest of the story circles around stage-doors and green-rooms, with a brief episode in the Engadine, where the engaging Angela seduces an Alpine climber in a snow-hut.

Mr. Gribble has undoubted talent. We trust he will see his way to exercising it on some more worthy subject.

* * * *

Plain Living. By Rolf Boldrewood.
(Macmillan & Co.)

The improbability which is inherent in the plot of this tale is no obstacle to its enjoyment. Harold Stamford, of Windāghil, is embarrassed. A dry season has depleted the sheep on his station. A banker has sent him an ultimatum. But when the night is darkest the dawn is nearest. Harold Stamford comes in for a huge fortune. But with his intense relief comes intense anxiety lest wealth should corrupt his home, lest luxury should sap the growing vitality and sweetness of his boys and girls. He therefore conceals his good fortune through long years, until his children have passed the age of danger. Then comes the happy revelation. But in the meanwhile Stamford does not find it too easy to play his quaint game of a needy man:

"He often smiled to himself as he found what an amount of conscientious reluctance to accept the unwonted plenty he was compelled to combat. Did he effect a surprise of a few rare plants for his flower-loving wife, she would calculate the railway charges, and ask gravely if he was sure he could afford it. Did he order a new riding-habit for Linda, a hat or a summer dress for Linda, they were sure they could do as the old ones do for another season. It was interesting to watch the conflict between the natural, girlish eagerness for the new and desirable and the inner voice which had so long cried 'refrain, refrain!' that sorely tried household."

This story is a piece of pleasant quixotism. It is a book to read and that merrily.

* * * *

A Chapter of Accidents. By Mrs. Hugh Fraser.
(Macmillan & Co.)

We are grateful to Mrs. Hugh Fraser for her amusing chronicle of mishaps. Two smart people go down to a country house in Devon bent on their own schemes, and the result is so disastrous that both at the end become more reasonable and goodnatured. The plot is a delightful madcap, and the whole tale goes rattling through the probable and the unlikely with a very pleasant spirit. The book makes no pretence to be serious fiction. The two characters, indeed, are drawn with much insight; but the other members of the house—even the adorable Kitty—are mere trait d'union, with a gentle tinge somewhere of caricature. The style is neat and attractive; sometimes it even takes on the colour of a pigmy, as in the description of Alicia Marston—"a creature of small faults made unbearable by large patent virtues." High spirits in fiction are always welcome; and when these are joined, as here, with something of art and a very kindly humour, the result is acceptable to every reader.

* * * *

Josiah's Wife. By Norma Lorimer.
(Methuen.)

"You married a devil, Josiah," said Josiah's wife, Camela. Nor was she far wrong. For, as appears in the opening chapter of the story, Camela was a perfect whirlwind of a woman, with the artistic temperament, an enormous capacity for discontent, and an uncontrollable desire to squeeze life dry. Camela's husband, Josiah

Skidmore, was a man whose best qualities did not strike the eye first. He was a teetotaler, a Seventh-day Baptist, and kept a ready-made clothes store, which was lucrative, but did not conduce to refinement of manner. One could scarcely imagine a worse matched pair. It is the task of the author to show how Josiah and his wife, after bickerings which led them to the eve of divorce, discovered that they were really very fond of each other. It is a difficult task to render credible the mingling of natures so antagonistic, and it is a proof of Miss Lorimer's skill that when we saw Camela in Josiah's arms we believed our eyes. Miss Lorimer prescribes foreign travel as the remedy for square-toed American storekeepers who cannot hit it off with wives of artistic temperament. First, Camela goes off for a year in Europe. She spends some time in Sicily, flirting—quite decorously—with Walter Norreys, an Englishman who is horribly afraid of compromising himself. There are some pretty pictures of Sicilian life and ways. When she returns, Josiah irritates her more than ever, and Cousin Mamie, who has been looking after the deserted husband's dinners, introduces a further complication. Then Walter Norreys, who has come to Boston on business, carries off Josiah to England, gives him a round of country-house visits, and teaches him a thing or two; while the American Courts are haggling over the divorce. On his return he meets his wife, dramatically. But instead of an ill-dressed man of admirable character, but no manners, she finds a man who has been fitted out by a West-End tailor, and knows how to behave. So she does not want to be divorced any more. Josiah has loved his wife all along; and that is how they reach one another's arms. It is a well-told story, with a good idea at the back of it.

* * * *

Devil's Apples. By Mrs. Lovett Cameron.
(F. V. White & Co.)

LONG experience always means something in the making of fiction. Here is this story with a thin and threadbare plot, and with no characterisation worth speaking about; and yet, inasmuch as Mrs. Lovett Cameron has written many tales, she manages to keep our interest alive in the puppets to the end. To be sure, it is rather a mechanical sort of interest. We want to know what happens to the people, and see how the writer works out a climax which we are morally sure of from the beginning. The book is full of glaring faults. Blanche's progress from extreme healthiness of body and mind to homicidal mania is not made credible; Angus is an ugly little caricature; the hero is conventional beyond words; and the sentiment is always just on the verge of silliness. But to talk like this is to judge the work by a standard which it does not aim at. The average novel reader seeks a clear and well-developed plot, and does not trouble about originality; and if you add a facile grace of writing and plenty of wholesome reflections, he asks for nothing more.

---

AFTER THE TOUR.

REMONSTRANCES FROM MR. ANTHONY HOPE AND MR. ANDREW LANG.

ONLY a week ago (remarks The New York Critic) we published a letter from Mr. H. G. Wells, in which he complained that his latest story, The War of the Worlds, had been grossly garbled, to meet the sensational needs of two American newspapers. To-day we print a card from Mr. Anthony Hope, protesting against the publication in this country of bogus interviews in which he was made to ridicule and decry the American people. We appreciate the compliment of being asked to set these gentlemen right in the eyes of the reading public, but regret that they should have been made the object of such gratuitous discourtesy.

"TO THE EDITORS OF The Critic."

"The American people need not, and, presumably, do not, care what I say about them; but I do care what they say about me, since I have received from them infinite kindness and an appreciation too generous. The reports of my utterances about America since my return are, so far as they have come to my notice, entirely inaccurate—I may say untrue. To the best of my recollection I have said nothing of what is attributed to me, and it in no way represents my thoughts; even if I had such thoughts, I trust that my manners would not be so bad as to allow me to express them. Let me thank you, then, for refusing to 'believe that Mr. Hope is a cad' on the strength of these silly inventions; perhaps you will also be kind enough to refuse to believe, on the same evidence, that I am an ass.

I suppose it is not customary to attempt to sift paragraphs of this description in any way before publishing them as facts. If some such process is not altogether impossible in a newspaper office, it would seem to be desirable. In the present state of affairs a wise man treats all paragraphs as more or less amusing fiction; probably this is only taking them in the spirit in which they are offered by their ingenious authors.

London, March 2, 1898."

ANTHONY HOPE.

It will be seen from the following letter (the Critic continues) that Mr. Lang is more loyal than the king, resenting, in Mr. Hope's behalf, an expression which Mr. Hope himself takes in good part, as it was intended to be taken. He is disloyal, however, in assuming the possibility of Mr. Hope's having spoken as he was reported to have done—an assumption which we ourselves expressly repudiated.

"TO THE EDITORS OF The Critic.

The delicate question as to whether Mr. Anthony Hope is, or is not, a cad is raised by the Longer (19th February). It is not for me to offer an opinion about nuances of manners, and 'cad' may be a desirable term to use in a journal of literature. But 'cad' carries certain school-boy associations which, in the land of its birth, rather unfit the term for critical employments.

Censures of this kind are usually in the air, when a foreign man-of-letters has paid a public visit to the United States. M. Paul Bourget did not wholly escape; Mr. Nansen was 'said to have abused us,' now Mr. Hope is a possible 'cad,' and but dubiously 'gentlemanly,' because he is reported to have said things about interviewers and feminine gaucheries. Whether he said such things in public or private, or not, I know not, but I do know that he was certain to be said to have said them, just like Mr. Nansen. And then there was sure to be excitement.

Foreign men-of-letters must know that these and similar amenities almost inevitably follow a public tour in the United States. It is easy to see why they make such tours—namely, for money; but not so easy to understand why the practice is encouraged on your side of the water. What has your side to gain? You can read Mr. Hope's books or any Briton's books at a moderate price, without leaving your firesides, and his books are the best things that the British or any other author has to give you. As an orator he is seldom distinguished. His personal beauty does not often warrant you in laying out money for the purpose of brooding fondly on his charms. Then what do you want with the foreign author—in the flesh? His strong point, believe me, is in the spirit.

We are so convinced of this that neither British nor foreign men-of-letters are run after in England, except occasionally by ladies who have not read their books—or any books. That kind of lady always loves to see a 'celebrity,' and, from some strange impulse of conscience, she generally tells an author that she has read none of his works, or she pays him a compliment on a book by some other person. These, at least, are the engaging gaucheries of the British woman who finds herself in company with a literary 'celebrity.' She thinks she must converse about his books, concerning which she is exhaustively ignorant. Conceivably this kind may also exist in America. There is a great flutter about an author, his moustache, boots, manners, and future performances, among people who have not opened any of his volumes. Do people of this kind make literary tours in America profitable? As to money derived from such exhibitions, ohet. I wish British writers would 'swear oath and keep it with an equal mind,' never to visit your hospitable country as readers or lecturers. But, even so, do you think that they would escape the odium of being said to have said things?

'In the name of the Bodleian,' as Mr. Birrell impressively asks, what has all this tattle to do with literature?

St. Andrews, Fife: March 4."

A. LANG.

HAROLD FREDERIC.

For a recent number of the Chap-Book Mr. Stephen Crane wrote an appreciation of his elder brother in the art of fiction, from which we have extracted the following passages:

"It was my fault to conclude beforehand that, since Frederic had lived intimately so long in England, he would present some kind of austere and impressive variation on one of our national types, and I was secretly not quite prepared to subscribe to the change. It was a bit of mistaken speculation. There was a tall, heavy man, moustached and straight-glanced, seated in a leather chair in the smoking-room of a club, telling a story to a circle of intent people with all the skill of one trained in an American newspaper school. At a distance he might have been even then the editor of the Albany Journal.

The same man does not live amid another people without seeking to adopt whatever he recognises as better; without seeking to choose from the new material some advantage, even if it be only a trick of grilling oysters. Accordingly, Frederic was to be to me a cosmopolitan figure, representing many ways of many peoples; and, behold, he was still the familiar figure, with no gilding, no varnish, a great reminiscent panorama of the Mohawk Valley!

It was in Central New York that Frederic was born, and it is there he passed his childish days and his young manhood. He enjoys greatly to tell how he gained his first opinions of the alphabet from a strenuous and enduring study of the letters on an empty soap-box. At an early age he was induced by his parents to rise at 5.30 a.m., and distribute supplies of milk among the worthy populace.

In his clubs, details of this story are well known. He pitilessly describes the grey shine of the dawn that makes the snow appear the hue of lead, and, moreover, his boyish pain at the task of throwing the stiff harness over the sleepy horse, and then the long and circuitous sledding among the customers of the milk route. There is no pretence in these accounts; many self-made men portray their early hardships in a spirit of purest vanity. 'And now look!' But there is none of this in Frederic. He simply feels a most absorbed interest in that part of his career which made him so closely acquainted with the voluminous life of rural America. His boyhood extended through that time when the North was sending its thousands to the war, and the lists of dead and wounded were returning in due course. The great country back of the line of fight—the waiting women, the lightless windows, the tables set for three instead of five—was a land elate or forlorn, triumphant or despairing, always strained, eager listening, tragic in attitude, trembling and quivering like a vas mass of nerves from the shock of the far-away conflicts in the South.

Those were supreme years, and yet for the great palpitating regions it seems that the mind of this lad was the only sensitive plate exposed to the sunlight of '61-'65. The book, In the Sixties which contains The Copperhead, Mansena, The War Widow, The Eve of the Fourth, and My Aunt Susan, breathes the spirit of Titanic conflict as felt and endured at the homes. One would think that such a book would have taken the American people by storm, but it is true that an earlier edition of The Copperhead sold less than a thousand copies in America.

In the Valley is easily the best historical novel that our country has borne. Perhaps it is the only good one. Seth's Brother's Wife and The Lawton Girl are rimmed with fine portrayals. There are writing men who, in some stories, dash over three miles at a headlong pace, and in an adjacent story move like a boat being sailed over ploughed fields; but in Frederic one feels at once the perfect evenness of craft, the undeviating worth of the workmanship. The excellence is always sustained, and these books form, with In the Sixties, a row of big American novels.

But if we knew it we made no emphatic sign, and it was not until the appearance of The Damnation of Theron Ware (called Illumination in England) that the book audience really said, 'Here is a writer.' If I make my moan too strong over this phrase of the matter, I have only the excuse that I believe the In the Sixties stories to form a most notable achievement in writing times in America.

It is natural that since Frederic has lived so long in England he should turn toward English life. One does not look upon the fact with unmixed joy. It is mournful to lose his work even for a time. It is for this reason that I have made myself disagreeable upon several occasions by my expressed views of March Hares. It is a worthy book, but one has a sense of desertion. We cannot afford a loss of this kind. But at any rate he has grasped English life with a precision of hand that is only equalled by the precision with which he grasped our life, and his new book will shine out for English eyes in a way with which they are not too familiar. It is a strong and striking delineation, free, bold, and straight.

In the meantime he is a prodigious labourer. Knowing the man and his methods, one can conceive him doing anything, unless it be writing a poor book, and, mind you, this is an important point."

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1898.

No. 1352, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| Obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .                  | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . . . .                | 0 15 3  | 6 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

IN another column will be found the letters which, quite independently of each other, Mr. Anthony Hope and Mr. Andrew Lang have addressed to the New York Critic on the subject of irresponsible and misleading newspaper tattle about literary visitors to America. Both speak wrongly, but whereas Mr. Hope confines himself in the main to his own grievance, Mr. Lang treats the scandal in the abstract. Feeling that Mr. Hope's views on the matter would be interesting to our readers, we asked him for some expression of them. He replies:

In regard to the matter on which you courteously offer me the opportunity of expressing my views, I have really very little to add. My letter to the Critic, although, I fear, a trifle irritable in tone, remains a true statement of the case.

Perhaps it is unnecessary to add that, with all respect, I differ from the opinion expressed in Mr. Lang's letter. If I had agreed with it, I should not have gone on my expedition; if I had been converted to it, I should not look back on my expedition with the satisfaction and pleasure that I now feel.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
ANTHONY HOPE."

Mr. Lang, by the way, might have remarked upon the cordial hospitality and courteous public treatment that has always been extended to American writers privately visiting this country.

MR. SIDNEY COLVIN, having finished other work which had more immediate claims upon his attention, is now able to devote his leisure to the completion of his biography of R. L. Stevenson. It will be published, we understand, in three volumes some time next year. Mr. Colvin purposes keeping the biography and letters distinct.

Volume I. will contain the Life, Volumes II. and III. the Letters. The article on Stevenson referred to below, which Mr. Colvin has written for the Dictionary of National Biography, does not anticipate the longer work. Owing to the exigencies of space Mr. Colvin's contribution to the Dictionary is little more than a sketch of Stevenson's career.

BUT, though only a sketch, it contains excellent reading. Mr. Colvin thus describes Stevenson's moods as an Edinburgh law-student:

"With high social spirits, and a brilliant, somewhat fantastic, gaiety of learning, Stevenson was no stranger to the storms and perplexities of youth. A restless and inquiring conscience, perhaps inherited from Covenanting ancestors, kept him inwardly calling in question the grounds of conduct and the accepted codes of society. At the same time, his reading had shaken his belief in Christian dogma; the harsher forms of Scottish Calvinistic Christianity being indeed at all times repugnant to his nature. From the last circumstance rose for a time troubles with his father, the more trying while they lasted because of the deep attachment and pride in each other which had always subsisted between father and son. He loved the aspects of his native city; but neither its physical nor its social atmosphere was congenial to him. Amid the biting winds and rigid social conventions of Edinburgh he craved for Bohemian freedom and the joy of life, and for a while seemed in danger of a fate like that of the boy poet, Robert Fergusson, with whom he always owned a strong sense of spiritual affinity."

MR. COLVIN has the following note on Stevenson's personal appearance:

"Stevenson was of good stature (about 5 ft. 10 in.) and activity, but very slender, his leanness of body and limb (not of face) having been throughout life abnormal. The head was small; the eyes dark hazel, very wide-set, intent, and beaming; the face of a long oval shape; the expression rich and animated. He had a free and picturesque play of gesture, and a voice of full and manly fibre, in which his pulmonary weakness was not at all betrayed."

CONCERNING Stevenson's life in Samoa, we read:

"In health he seemed to have become a new man. Frail in comparison with the strong, he was yet able to ride and boat with little restriction, and to take part freely in local festivities, both white and native. . . . His literary industry during these years was more strenuous than ever. His habit was to begin work at six in the morning, or earlier, continue without interruption until the mid-day meal, and often to resume again until four or five in the afternoon."

It is interesting to note that sixteen Stevensons are included in this volume, and that to Robert Louis Stevenson nineteen columns are allotted, as against twenty-nine to his fifteen namesakes. Mr. Colvin's article makes us eager for the biography of which it is a foretaste.

MR. ALFRED AUSTIN is represented in the papers this week by an official poem on the alleged disposition recently shown by America to co-operate with England against the old country's enemies. Here are four stanzas, which, though they may not be very distinguished poetry, are the mellifluous statement of a very desirable condition of international amity:

"What is the Voice I hear
On the wind of the Western Sea?
Sentinel! listen from out Cape Clear,
An! say what the Voice may be.
'Tis a proud free People calling loud to a People proud and free."

'And it says to them, "Kinsmen, hail!
We severed have been too long:
Now let us have done with a worn-out tale,
The tale of an ancient wrong,
And our friendship last long as Love doth last,
and be stronger than Death is Strong."

Answer them, Sons of the self-same race,
And blood of the self-same clan,
Let us speak with each other, face to face,
And answer, as man to man,
And loyally love and trust each other, as none but free men can.

A message to bond and thrall to wake,
For, wherever we come, we twain,
The throne of the Tyrant shall rock and quake,
And his menace be void and vain;
For you are lords of a strong young land,
and we are lords of the main."

DEMOCRATIC followers of the Muse must have been glad to see that Mr. Alfred Austin did not favour the Times exclusively, but scattered these lines broadcast through the London papers. Yet not all the papers printed the poem. Does this mean that the Laureate did not submit his verse to the Daily Telegraph and the Daily Chronicle, or can it be that the editors of those papers — ?

IN the late James Payn has passed away a nimble wit, a fluent, optimistic novelist, and one of the kindest and most popular men of his time. In no sense was he precisely great; but he knew his powers and limitations, and he wrote nothing all his life that did not add to the world's store of good-humour and sunshine. His novels amounted to upwards of half a hundred; and these by no means represent the sum of his literary activity, for he had contributed "Our Note Book" to the Illustrated London News since the discontinuance of Mr. Sala's "Echoes of the Week," he edited for many years Chambers's Journal and Cornhill, he acted as literary adviser both to Messrs. Smith & Elder and Baron Tauchnitz, and he reviewed many books for the Times. Mr. Payn's connexion with that paper was, by the way, peculiar, for the present editor, Mr. Buckle, was his son-in-law.

MR. PAYN'S novels have vivacity and sentiment: to-day they are read probably only by people of an older generation—the young require stronger meat—but as stories, rather than "documents," studies in impressionism, and what not, such as it is the fashion now to prefer, they are excellent. By Proxy is enthralling; and Lost Sir Masingberd is not easily laid aside. As some proof of how entertaining his pen could be, there is the story of Mr. Payn (who was an excellent critic) offering a book to a friend at a club with the remark that it was one of the most interesting novels he had picked up for some time. The other, taking the volume, saw that it was an early effort of Mr. Payn's own, a fact which the author himself had entirely overlooked!

In Some Literary Recollections, published in 1884, and Gleams of Memory, ten years later, Mr. Payn has told the story of his literary life as fully as need be. Both are delightful exercises in urbane garrulity and pleasant, cultivated humour—models of their kind. But the following story, told by Mr. Payn to a Daily News interviewer, does not occur in either, and is so dramatic as to be well worth repeating here. It refers to an experience when he was editing Chambers's Journal:

"The editorial room he occupied during his long connexion with the popular Edinburgh publication had long before the Chambers's time been a bedroom in which one or the other of two partners of a firm had for many years made a rule of sleeping. It was, in fact, a stipulation of the deed of partnership that one of them should sleep on the premises. In course of years, however, it became rather an irksome restriction upon their liberty, and in order to free themselves from it they agreed to take into partnership their manager, an old servant of the house, on condition that he would occupy the bedroom and so fulfil the requirements of the deed. The old servant was naturally very much moved by this recognition of his services, but pleaded that he had not the necessary capital to qualify him for partnership. As to that, it was only £500 that was necessary, and this the firm had decided to give him. And so the matter was settled. The trusty servant became a partner, and took possession of the room, in which he was found next morning with his brains blown out. He left behind him a letter in which he explained that all those years during which he had been so trusted he had been robbing his employers, and their great kindness had so filled him with remorse that he couldn't live under it."

MR. LANG'S letter concerning William Barnes, which will be found in another place, will be a pleasant surprise to those of our readers who love the Dorsetshire poet, and were grieved to find so acute a critic as Mr. Lang depreciating him. But Mr. Lang has now "burned his faggot," and all is well. By the way, this would not be an ill time for Messrs. Kegan, Paul & Co. to prepare a selection of William Barnes's poems in a volume more portable, and therefore more companionable, than the considerable one that now holds his three series. Barnes is too homely for a library edition only; his best might well be offered in smaller compass. Would not his daughter, the accomplished lady who writes under the pseudonym of "Leader Scott," make such a selection?

WE have received the following letter:

"DEAR SIR,—My attention has only just been drawn to a recent review in your columns in which your critic demolishes twenty-two minor poets at a meal, or rather in one article. Among the victims of this voracious appetite is a poor little volume of mine entitled Rip Van Winkle, and other Poems. As your representative has probably digested all of us by this time, and as your readers have probably done the same, I will only trespass on your space for a moment. Your critic states that he only discovered one savoury morsel upon my platter, a lyric entitled 'The Viking's Song,' which he is good enough to quote four verses of. Curiously enough this poem was written when I was a boy of fourteen at the Charterhouse. It was sent to the school paper, and I was informed by our school editor, who had also a voracious appetite, that I had better desist from writing poetry since 'Poeta nascitur non fit.' In no wise daunted by contemporary criticism, for I never am, I forwarded the poem to the editor of the Graphic, who published it. The distressing part of this narrative, however, is to follow. The above incident happened twenty years ago. By induction nothing I have written since approaches my juvenile efforts, and twenty valuable years of my life have been wasted. Shall I throw up the unequal task of combating critics, Mr. Editor, or shall I pray for the time when I may have the privilege of demolishing twenty-two minor reviewers at a meal, I should say in a column? Trusting to your courtesy to insert this.— Yours obediently,

WILLIAM AKERMAN.
March 23, 1898."

MR. AKERMAN has our sympathy, but he does not state the case quite accurately. Our critic did not say that "The Viking's Song" was the only savoury morsel in the dish. He remarked that it was "among the best." Hence Mr. Akerman's exercise in inductive reasoning fails, and his twenty years of poetic assiduity are not a blank, and the minor reviewers are for a while safe.

To the new papers now in course of preparation—and it is safe to assume that some dozen are at this moment being planned—must be added the American Judge, an English edition of which is about to be issued. Judge is chiefly notable for its comic scenes of American-Irish and American-Jewish life, signed, if we remember aright, "Zim," which to some are quite the funniest humorous drawings on either side of the Atlantic. Its cartoon, though a powerful factor in American politics, is not likely to be much appreciated here.

CONCERNING Stevenson as fabulist a contributor to the ACADEMY had something to say last week, and now, in the revolutionary and progressive pages of Reynolds's Newspaper, we find further testimony to R. L. S.'s merits in that line, in the form of imitation. The experiments, which are by Mr. T. W. H. Crosland, are so good that we quote two:

"MASTER AND MAN.

'Sir,' quoth the man, 'you treat me less mercifully than you would treat your dog.'
'Doubtless,' replied the master; 'but then I have an affection for my dog.'

"THE NEW POET.

The new poet sat on a green hill.
And they brought him tidings of the death of the King's cousin.
'Quite so,' quoth the poet. 'Here is a threnody.'
'Also,' said they, 'a princess hath been happily delivered of a male child.'
'I shall felicitate her highness in sweet verses,' said the poet.
'And,' they continued, 'it is now the time of the year for the putting forward of rythmical trifles wherefrom the delicate few may derive delectation.'
'There is a bundle of such trifles,' the poet answered.

'And the people, the common people, that dwell in the shadows and are eaten up of penury and squalor and the cupidity of the mighty; it were meet that thou had'st some word for them.'

'Ab,' mused the poet, '... the dear people!; ... I have nothing for the people!'

Mr. Crosland has a pretty gift of satire.

THE motor-car has found its laureate early. In the current Cornhill is a ballad by Mr. Conan Doyle, if not in honour, at any rate in celebration, of that new invention, which is spirited enough to give the art of recitation a brisk fillip. The story, which purports to be told by a groom, tells how his master, a true sportsman, bought, in a moment of aberration, a motor-car:

"I seed it in the stable yard—it fairly turned me sick—
A greasy, wheezy engine as can neither buck nor kick.
You've a screw to drive it forrard, and a screw to make it stop,
For it was foaled in a smithy stove an' bred in a blacksmith shop."

One day the car refused to budge, and a horse had to be brought from the stable to drag it home. The horse had long been a problem to the ostlers:

"We knew as it was in 'im. 'E's thoroughbred, three part,
We bought 'im for to race 'im, but we found 'e 'ad no 'cart;
For 'e was sad and thoughtful, and amazin' dignified,
It seemed a kind o' liberty to drive 'im or to ride;
For 'e never seemed a-thinkin' of wot 'e 'ad to do,
But 'is thoughts was set on 'igher things, admirin' of the view.
'E looked a puffeduck pictur, and a pictur 'e would stay,
'E wouldn't even switch 'is tail to drive the flies away."

No sooner was this animal harnessed to the car than it began to move:

"And first it went quite slowly and the 'orse went also slow,
But 'e 'ad to buck up faster when the wheels began to go;
For the car kept crowdin' on 'im and buttin' 'im along,
And in less than 'arf a minute, sir, that 'orse was goin' strong."

And then "somethin' else went fizzywig, and in a flash, or less, that blessed car was goin' like a limited express"; while as for the horse:

"'E was stretchin' like a grey'ound, 'e was goin' all 'e knew
But it bumped an' shoved be'ind 'im, for all that 'e could do;
It butted 'im an' boosted 'im an' spanked 'im on ahead,
Till 'e broke the ten mile record, same as I already said.

Ten mile in twenty minutes! 'E done it, sir. That's true.
The only time we ever found what that 'ere 'orse could do.
Some say it wasn't 'ardly fair, and the papers made a fuss,
But 'e broke the ten mile record, and that's good enough for us.

u see that 'orse's tail, sir? You don't! No more do we, which really ain't surprisin', for 'e 'as no tail to see; at engine wore it off 'im before master made it stop, and all the road was littered like a bloomin' barber's shop."

comic verse is so rare that we offer Conan Doyle cordial congratulations on new accomplishment. He has provided a precedent to the "One Hoss Shay."

R. E. T. REED, continuing his researches in "Animal Land," in Punch, comes this time to his editor. Under the title of "The PUNCHIBOSS, or Ephsee Bee," Mr. Reed is thus happily hit off:

"This humrous little Creature has a most logical brain—full of happy thoughts. He is on everything directly you put it in his mind. He is awful kind to children, and gives me great enkurygment when I do my work nice enough, which is almost always so."

He does buzz round you though and you up. He likes to get a good run on boards sometimes. He has a skillful little of knocking off a piece if it comes in his hand and he is very strong in the wings. He got a awful clever lot of drawers and tips together—all of them genyusses and tipes English beauty. (I must get this put in my time when he is away—he might not like to berlesk him after his politeness and eight in letting me beggin so young.)"

While the report reaches us that the PUNCHIBOSS is fairly on the road to recovery from his recent illness.

Mrs. LAURENCE BINYON's volume of verse, titled Porphyryon, and Other Poems, comes out in a dainty format. The dedication to the book—"To Joy"—is rather puzzling. Is it a lady, or the feeling we experience in seeking in closing the correspondence on our Towors? The title-poem fills the first sixty-eight pages, and for the benefit of country gentlemen who wish to know what a "Porphyryon" is about, we quote the first line of the poem. It reads:

"A young man of Antioch, flying from the world in that enthusiasm for the ascetic life, is fascinated early Christendom, dwells in a cave, wears a hermit in the Syrian desert; till, an apparition of magical loveliness, his life is broken up, and his nature changed: returning to the world, he embraces every vicissitude, and strives to find and win the lost vision of that ideal beauty."

Mr. Binyon explains that the poem is founded on a story of Rufinus told in the first chapter of Historia Monachorum, produced by Mr. Lecky in his History of European Morals. But Mr. Binyon has adapted the legend to his own uses with perfect freedom.

An excellent bull is put on record by the correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette; the first bull that we have ever met which touches reviewing. "I sent," says the correspondent, "a review of a volume of an eminent Irishman to the editor of a Dublin paper. He replied that he had published my article, but could not pay me for it, as he wrote all the reviews in his own name! I considered the bull a fair substitute for the usual cheque."

THE Great Tongue of the Public has been wagging all this year on the subject—"Did Bacon write Shakespeare's plays?" The controversy has raged in back parlours as if it were a brand new heresy. We ourselves have felt the kick of it, and our readers would be grateful if they know how many Shakespeare v. Bacon letters we have excluded from our columns. Of course this recrudescence is due to the anti-Shakespeare article published by a popular magazine last Christmas.

Now, on the eve of Easter, we are glad to give publicity to the following statement by Mr. Sidney Lee, which he calls, "Shakespeare and Bacon." May it calm the troubled waters!

"During the past eight months I have been the recipient of numerous communications directing my attention to the crazy theory that Bacon was the author of Shakespeare's plays. This morning an obviously bona fide appeal is made to me for detailed direction as to how the question may best be studied. A serious treatment of the subject is difficult for one who has closely studied the authentic records of Shakespeare's life, the scantiness of which, as I hope I have made clear in my memoir of Shakespeare in the Dictionary of National Biography, is a popular fallacy. Most of those who have pressed the question on my notice are men of acknowledged intelligence and reputation in their own walks of life both at home and abroad. I therefore desire as respectfully, but also as emphatically and as publicly as I can, to put on record the fact, as one admitting to my mind of no rational ground for dispute, that there exists every manner of contemporary evidence to prove that Shakespeare, the householder of Stratford-on-Avon, wrote, with his own hand, and exclusively by the light of his own genius—merely to paraphrase the contemporary inscription on his tomb in Stratford-on-Avon Church—those dramatic works which form the supreme achievement in English literature.

The defective knowledge and casuistical argumentation, which alone render another conclusion possible, seem to me to find their closest parallel in our own day in the ever popular delusion that Arthur Orton was Sir Roger Tichborne. I once heard how a poor and ignorant champion of the well-known claimant declared that his unfortunate hero had been arbitrarily kept out of the baronetcy because he was a poor butcher's son. Very similar is the attitude of mind of those who assert that Bacon wrote Shakespeare's plays because Bacon was a great contemporary philosopher and prose writer. The argument for the Baconian authorship, when stripped of its irrelevances, amounts to nothing more than this."

MR. MEREDITH's influence would seem to be increasing. A founding recently discovered in North London and carried to the Islington Workhouse has been named by the Guardians "Clara Middleton." Can this be a belated birthday compliment to the author of The Egoist?

SWEET are the uses of adversity: "By Commercial Company's Cables: New York, Monday, March 28. Probably if the French Court of Appeal grants M. Zola a new trial he will come to America to give fifteen lectures at 20,000 francs each. A telegram was received here this morning from him accepting these terms."

WHILE America is offering M. Zola francs, England continues to offer sympathy. A number of English women, who are perhaps somewhat rashly described as "representative," are putting their signatures to a letter intended to console M. Zola. The letter lies for signature at the house of Mrs. Edwin Collins, 12, Albert-road, Regent's Park, N.W.

M. HANOTAUX is no longer merely the French Foreign Minister, he is an Academician. One finds a new interest, therefore, in the facts of his life and his daily habits. M. Hanotau is a bachelor, and a retiring one. He has chambers at No. 258 the Boulevard Saint-Germain—a busy thoroughfare, but pleasant, near the Sorbonne and Latin quarter, and convenient enough for the Chamber. M. Hanotau's flat is on the fifth floor. "Eh bien!" he will exclaim, "one might do worse." Fresh air, sunshine, and silence are to be had best in cities on a fifth floor. M. Hanotau has them. He prefers his cosy den to drawing-rooms and cafés. In its appointments it proclaims the pensive disposition of its owner. The bookshelves are well laden, and include the books of Daudet, Bourget, Pierre Loti, Maupassant, and others. Poetry, philosophy, and travel are represented; and besides these modern books there are, in a second room, old and rare ones of which M. Hanotau is very proud.

M. HANOTAUX's reception into the Academy has, doubtless, a political aspect; but it is interesting to learn that he owes his rise in life to his pen. The story is thus told by a contemporary:

"Fifteen years ago the modest salary of three pounds a week tempted a youthful schoolmaster in one of the educational establishments of Paris to scribble for the newspapers to alleviate an existence more honourable than prosperous. Fortunately the lynx-eyed Gambetta was the editor of the paper chiefly chosen for these effusions, which were striking, and the writer was placed on one of the bottom rungs of the ladder at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The young man was Gabriel Hanotau, born in a notary's office in Picardy. For the next ten years little was heard of him outside of Ministerial circles. There, indeed, his quality was known and expectations formed. It only wanted the given moment to bring out the silent worker into the glare of public life. That moment came when M. Charles Dupuy looked everywhere about him for a capable Foreign Minister, and could find none. By a happy inspiration his eyes turned towards the man who, by force of sheer toil and perseverance, had mastered all the mysteries of the Quai d'Orsay, and was known to be as ambitious and masterful as the great Richelieu, whom he had taken as his guide, counsellor, and friend."

A VERY interesting autobiographical sketch of Mr. Walter Crane—a work of true modesty, enriched by illustrations of his very various artistic accomplishments, painting, drawing for books, designing pottery, designing wall paper—constitutes the Easter Art Annual for 1898, that being the new extra number of the Art Journal.

Some of the pictures are in colours, some in photogravure.

HARD upon our reference last week to The Heart of Midlothian come vols. xii. and xiii. of the charming Temple edition of the Waverley Novels, which are filled by that story. The volumes have an excellent biographical note by Mr. Clement Shorter, and a reproduction of the portrait of Scott in the uniform of the Edinburgh Light Dragoons. At the same time we have received Kenilworth and Ivanhoe in Mr. Fisher Unwin's new edition. Its chief merit lies in completing each novel in one volume, but the reader's eyes have to suffer for the concession.

THE fact that the whole of the édition de luxe of Mr. Murray's definitive edition of Byron—250 copies—has been over subscribed is proof of the interest still taken in the poet, for it must be remembered that Mr. Heinemann's edition has also many followers.

THE Daily Chronicle's correspondence on our prison system was enlivened by a candid and amusing letter from one gentleman who described his experiences as a debtor committed to Holloway. Literature may be a hard task-mistress, but she reserves consolations for her votaries in the hour of their distress. Hear this:

"I was escorted by a policeman to Hammer-smith, and there deposited in an evil-smelling cell, where I was left for five hours. I beguiled the time by reciting Shakespeare, some of whose plays I know by heart. Beginning with 'Hamlet,' I went through 'Macbeth,' 'Romeo and Juliet,' and was half through 'Othello' when the key turned in the door, and I was marched out with several others to the police-van."

ARRIVED at Holloway this literary debtor was asked his occupation:

"As I am addicted to writing verse, I replied, 'a poet.' I thought this would both fully account for my inability to pay the poor rates, be a veiled satire on society agreeable to my own cynicism, and illumine with a grim humour that melancholy company of recruits to the ranks of criminals. In the latter expectation I was not disappointed. A ripple of weird laughter passed along the line."

We should think so. But beneath the humour of the incident—which seems to have been enjoyed by no one more than the incarcerated author—there is a sad suggestion of the old régime of authorship—Dr. Johnson's "toil, envy, want, the patron, and the gaol."

PROF. SCHENK, of Vienna, has concluded his work upon sex, in which he explains his method of determining sex before birth. Precautions have been taken to prevent any possibility of the nature of the discovery leaking out before the publication of his book. We have not yet seen any announcement as to an English translation.

THE arrangement of the two volumes of Mr. G. Bernard Shaw's Plays: Pleasant and Unpleasant, will be somewhat different from that which has always been followed heretofore in collected plays, for Mr. Shaw has his own views about the printing of work intended for the stage: he holds that the mere printing of the prompt copy is insufficient, and that the institution of a new art is necessary. In accordance with this idea Mr. Shaw has replaced the customary meagre stage directions and scenic specifications by finished descriptions, physiological notes and comments of considerable length.

THE publication of Mrs. Craigie's "sentimental comedy" in four acts—"The Ambassador"—has been postponed until the autumn, when Mr. George Alexander will produce the play. He will appear in the title-rôle. The play was not read to Mr. Alexander, or submitted to him, till it was quite complete and ready for the printers. He has secured all the dramatic rights. The book rights have already been arranged for in England, the Colonies, and the United States.

THE Right Hon. James Bryce, M.P., has consented to preside at the Booksellers' annual dinner, which will be held at the Holborn Restaurant, on Saturday, May 7.

GREAT things are expected of the International Art Exhibition which will be opened at Prince's Skating Rink on May 7. Mr. Whistler will be responsible for the arrangement and decoration of the galleries. Many distinguished artists have promised to contribute.

ON Saturday, April 30, at four o'clock, Mr. Alfred Austin, the Poet Laureate, will read from his poems in the Galleries of the Royal Society of British Artists. The selections will be "A Dialogue at Fiesole" and the third and fourth scenes of the first act of "Savonarola."

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. have just received the following interesting letter from Colonel Howard Vincent, C.B.: "I am greatly obliged to you for the copies you were so good as to send me of your excellent book, Scarlet and Blue; or, Songs for Soldiers and Sailors. They seem to be extremely well adapted for the purpose, and I shall not fail to put them into use. . . . I earnestly hope that by united exertions we may succeed in inducing the British soldier to take to singing on the march, and to teach him some sensible songs for the purpose. We are a century behind Russia, Turkey, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, and Spain in this matter. I am strongly of opinion that the man who leads a song on the march should be let off 'guard,' or given some indulgence, when a regiment arrives in camp." Yet we believe it to be the fact that English soldiers do sing a little. If they do not sing much, it is because the national temperament is against it.

THE proprietors of the Unicorn Press have arranged to publish, under the name of "The Unicorn Quartos," a series of books, each containing new and hitherto unedited work by some one artist. A Book of Giants, drawn, engraved, and written by Mr. William Strang, will form the first volume. The Dome is about to enter on its second year.

IN APPRECIATIVE MOOD.

I.—MR. J. G. FRAZER.

MR. FRAZER'S monumental work on Paganism must give him an assured position throughout Europe in the ranks of classic scholars. The history of the book is curious one. Originally it was undertaken for Messrs. Macmillan, soon after Mr. Frazer took his degree, and was planned on a comparatively small scale. The Mr. Frazer fell under the influence of that pioneer in the scientific study of religious conceptions, Prof. Robertson Smith and began the wide course of anthropological reading which bore such magnificent fruit in The Golden Bough. This was published in 1891, and Mr. Frazer turned to the earlier scheme, which had now become something of a burden upon his conscience. He set to work with characteristic thoroughness, but had not reckoned with the immense mass of material that fell to be dealt with. The book grew under his hands, and time went on until, as the author himself tells us, he had spent upon it "well or ill, some of the best years of my life." Two journeys to Greece were necessary to get the local colour and to verify archaeological details and the result is another masterpiece and second distinct reputation.

Nevertheless, folklore was Mr. Frazer's first love, and to folklore it may be conjectured that he will now return. Possible a new edition of The Golden Bough may now be called for, and in the background there lies the comprehensive study of religious ideas to which the preface of the work hopefully alludes. A stupendous task, but of all men living Mr. Frazer, with his firm grasp of far-reaching ideas and his voracious appetite for facts, is perhaps the most likely to achieve it. The Golden Bough, indeed, was an epoch-making book. It has been ransacked, alike for theories and for illustrations of theories, by a score of followers. And it has set the model for such admirable work as Mr. Sidney Hartland's Legends of Perseus, in which, as in The Golden Bough, the method adopted is that of analysing the constituent elements of particular myth or custom, and explaining the psychological state of mind in which these originated by a comparison, not only with other survivals of them in mythology but also with savage states of society in which they may be still vital and effective. The particular custom which served as starting-point for Mr. Frazer was a local cult at Aricia in Italy. Its object was a "golden bough" that hung on a tree in a sacred wood, and was guarded by a priest who had won his place by the surprise and murder of his predecessor, and was himself liable at any moment to a similar fate. The explanation of this curious institution carried Mr. Frazer over a wide field. The nature of priesthood, the nature of sacrifice, the nature of taboo, the various forms taken by tree-worship and by the worship of the vegetable world generally, all fell to be discussed; and all were handled with a remarkable lucidity and an unusual power of throwing masses of unwieldy material into a logical and attractive form. Over tain parts of his survey Mr. Frazer had able predecessors. Mannhardt had collected and correlated many facts with regard to the religious ideas connected with trees and crops. Prof. Robertson Smith, in his great book on The Religion of the Semites, had thrown a flood of light upon the nature of sacrifice and the primitive conceptions of deity which it implied. But it was left for Mr. Frazer to give the first complete picture of what may roughly be called the Agricultural religion, the group of customs and beliefs to which men who live mainly by tilling the soil seem everywhere naturally to give scope. Such a method of study as is employed in The Golden Bough implies, of course, something of an abstraction. As he has passed out of the hunting or pastoral to the agricultural stage, they did not naturally lay down one set of religious ideas to take up another. But, as in geology the study of individual strata must precede the study of the changes by which strata in nature supersede each other, so must such work as Mr. Frazer's on particular phases of the world's religious history precede the reconstruction by which the whole process of that vast development may ultimately be revealed.

Besides The Golden Bough and Pausanias, Mr. Frazer has published a little book on Animism, which is really an expansion of an article on the subject contributed to Prof. Robertson Smith's Encyclopædia Britannica. Until now he has held a Fellowship at Trinity College, Cambridge, which has been some times extended to allow the enterprise to be completed to proceed unchecked. Mr. Frazer does not intend to leave Cambridge; but he has recently married, and will, therefore, pursue his unwearied labours at some other home than that "tranquil port of an ancient college" to which he refers in an eloquent passage, quoted recently in the ACADEMY, at the close of his preface to Pausanias.

II.—MR. ARTHUR SYMONS.

This writer, born in 1865, is the author of some half-dozen books, including Days and Nights, Silhouettes, London Nights, and Amoris Vena in verse, with a Study of Browning and Studies in Two Literatures in prose. As he is always dexterous, neat, adroit, and celebrating trifles, either elegant or quaint, in an accomplished and highly refined manner. His is entirely emotional, unconnected with the loftier sides of the fine art: he gives us lyric notes upon æsthetic, evanescent things of a day, and at a moment. His technical ability and he often invest the comparative nothings of his muse with a true charm, and his touch upon inanimate nature is often of the finest. Yet, for the most part, he writes upon the life and scenery of the streets, the ragged Bohemias and Alsacias of the day, with too little humour and humanity to be a set-off of fine distinction. The themes of Rossetti's "Jenny" and of Mr. Austin Dobson's "Une Marquise," with many a similar theme, appeal to him; but his treatment seldom rises above a graceful and ingenious prettiness of an elaborate trifling, somewhat subtle and cold. "Inventions" is the word for this verse:

the execution, the emotion, are alike equally clever, often of an astonishing cleverness; but when we have enjoyed and admired once, we are apt to have done with it for ever. And that is a strange truth to have to confess about a disciple of Browning and Verlaine, each, in his intensely living way, so personal, human, fascinating.

But what we miss in Mr. Symons's verse we find plentiful in his prose. He possesses, in a degree uncommon among English critics, the personal vision and apprehension of books, men, places, which makes French criticism so fresh and vivid a thing. His reader need not agree with him; but when he has read Mr. Symons's account of the West of Ireland or of Moscow, his view of an Elizabethan English or of a contemporary French writer, even his personal impressions of the slightest, least positive kind, the reader feels that Mr. Symons could not have taken him more completely and effectively into confidence. Books, men, places, affect Mr. Symons both strongly and sincerely; he will not write of them with loose phrase and vague æstheticism, but always with anxious pains to find words commensurate with his precise feelings. There is probably no French master of style in modern times unknown to him; and French masters have been of greater service to him in the ars pedestris than in the ars poetica. For good writing he has an absolute enthusiasm and a prompt discernment, and he loves to write well about it. Certainly, he is one of the critics whose writings about others' writings are, so to say, dramatic and creative, true confessions and a piece of personal history; and that, with no self-intrusion nor preciosity. He should go far in this field of literature; he is the very man to give us a series of essays upon literary movements in France, from the romantics to the naturalists, the naturalists to the symbolists. Flaubert, Baudelaire, Gautier are figures "made to his hand." And though poetry should be to him but a pleasing parergon, let us not, in our preference for his prose, forget how pleasing it can be at times. For example, this "Wanderer's Song," which Mr. Symons published in last week's Outlook:

"I have had enough of women, and enough of love,
But the land waits, and the sea waits, and day and night is enough;
Give me a long white road, and the grey wide path of the sea,
And the wind's will and the bird's will, and the heartache still in me.

Why should I seek out sorrow, and give gold for strife?
I have loved much and wept much, but tears and love are not life;
The grass calls to my heart, and the foam to my blood cries up,
And the sun shines and the road shines, and
the wine's in the cup.

I have had enough of wisdom, and enough of mirth,
For the way's one and the end's one, and it's soon to the ends of the earth;
And it's then good-night and to bed, and if heels or heart ache,
Well, it's sound sleep and long sleep, and sleep too deep to wake."

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

XII.—AN AUNT.

"I HAD no idea that Ibsen was seventy," said my aunt. "I always thought he was a young man. Certainly I was always given to understand that he was quite a new writer."

My aunt prides herself on keeping abreast of the times, though she is verging upon her seventieth year. Every three months or so she comes up to London from a small provincial town, mainly with the object of discovering what books a woman of culture should be reading.

"I have never seen any of his plays," she continued. "Why is that? I have seen Pinero's plays, and Henry Arthur Jones's, at Canterbury. Don't the touring companies act Ibsen's plays?"

"I don't believe they do," I said. "But you can read them. They're published."

"I shouldn't dream of reading a play," said my aunt, drawing her skirts away from the fire. "I can't read Shakespeare. You might just as well" (here she looked round the room over her spectacles for a simile)—"you might just as well smell a picture as read a play. But from all I hear, this Ibsen is rather a—a—an improper old man, isn't he? Still, at my age—"

"Well, you don't look it," I said.

"Ah, but I feel it," she said. "It isn't that I can't get about nearly as well as ever, because I can. But every time I come up to London now I find people are talking about some fresh writer that I've never heard of, and when I get his book and read it, well, I don't understand it. I really don't. There!"

She looked at me over her spectacles.

"Now who is this Mr. Phillips they're talking about?" she asked. "He's very young, I suppose."

"Quite young. I sent you his poems," I said.

"You did," she replied. "And I read them. But I don't think—I don't think you want any new poetry when you are growing old. I haven't really liked anything since 'Crossing the Bar,' and I think I shall stick to Tennyson. One doesn't quite realise how beautiful 'In Memoriam' is until one begins to grow old. And I am growing old."

She looked thoughtfully into the fire a few moments, and then continued more cheerfully.

"Tell me, who is this foreign person people are writing about—Omar something or other?"

"Omar Khayyam. Well, he was a Persian, and he is dead, and he has been much translated. He is very pessimistic and very soothing."

"A black man," said my aunt. "I don't want to be soothed in my old age by a black man."

"Not black," I said. "A Persian, a member of the Aryan—"

"It's the same thing," said my aunt.

"Well, what about novels?" I asked. "There are lots of good novels written nowadays."

"Oh, I don't mean to say," said my aunt, "that I can't appreciate the younger writers."

Crockett, for instance, I love; and that book of Barrie's about his mother made me—well, it made me want to kiss him. But what has become of Rhoda Broughton? I think Red as a Rose is She was one of the sweetest books I ever read. So was Belinda."

"And what did you think of The War of the Worlds?"

"Oh, it's too absurd. I can't think what people see in that Mr. Wells. I know I'm getting an old woman, and I dare say I'm behind the times; but fancy people coming here from another planet. Fancy! It's too ridiculous. Why, it's not possible."

My aunt leaned back in her chair and set her feet upon the fender, looking at me with some severity through her glasses.

"There never has and there never will be a novelist like Dickens," she said. "How well I remember him putting up at the inn opposite our house—you know the place. It must have been some time in the sixties, because Edmund was in knickerbockers, and I remember he had torn them horribly. And Dickens came out while they were feeding the horses in the stable, and sat on the shafts of the carriage, and I ran and got the opera-glasses and looked at him through them at the window, and he noticed me, and put up his two hands—just like opera-glasses, and looked at me through them. Ah, well, I don't suppose there will ever be a novelist like Dickens again. David Copperfield and Little Dorrit—ah! but I am an old woman now. Let me see, what was the name of the new man you said I must read? George Gissing? Well, put the book in my bag."

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

THIS new volume of Victor Hugo's correspondence throws no fresh light upon the man's character, and can hardly be described as an added glory to his name. The letters are interesting to read, but they only tell us what we already knew of Victor Hugo: that he was a hard worker, an admirable husband and father, an indefatigable letter-writer, and an adept courtier of that capricious sovereign, popularity; a trifle histrionic in his attitude to his friends, who cover the whole of Europe almost; wholly Napoleonic towards the rest of his literary brothers. Whenever a young man sends him a volume of verse or prose, he at once writes back to him: "Young man, you have a great talent, a generous heart, a noble mind. Give me your hand." When it is a lady who courts his approval, he thus addresses her: "Madame, you are all grace and charm; that is to say, you are a woman. Permit me to kiss the charming hands that have written such beautiful things, and behold me respectfully at your feet." Or he tells her that he fears he is in love with her, but takes refuge in contemplation of his grey hairs. He never writes to anyone outside his domestic circle (where he is always delightfully tender and affectionate) as a simple mortal. We are never permitted to see the poet otherwise than athwart the shadow of his reputation. He always seems to address us in front of his own statue, and cannot forget for five precious minutes that he is "the greatest poet of the century." There is nothing extraordinary in this, for it would require a simplicity and modesty Victor Hugo was far from possessing to have forgotten for an instant such a flamboyant reputation as his. Intellectual kingship is the most difficult to wear, and the sublime attitude inevitably touches the ridiculous.

Are we nearer than we dared to hope to the happy period foretold, when the poet of the future is to be an amiable young man hymning the joys and sorrows of guileless love? My faith! I begin to think so, and that it is the novelists who are starting the pleasant movement. This week I receive two fresh and charming novels, as clean as dew, as honest as laughter, where the men have no mistresses, the wives no lovers, and where nice innocent youths fall blithely and honourably in love with sweet, innocent maids, marry or mourn as fate may permit, and remain beautifully faithful even in the most hopeless separation. Le Refuge, by André Theuriet, is a refreshment and a delight. It is not a strong or an original novel, but it is most charming, with a fresh and delicate sentimentality that makes us, at this hour of the day, gratefully rub our eyes, to assure ourselves that it is really written in elegant French and wears the familiar yellow cover. What will be thought of a French aristocrat, a lad of twenty-one, handsome, wealthy, who is as pure as a child, and utters to the girl he loves these naïve and un-French sentiments:

"The old priest who was my tutor used to say that we should marry young, and a girl of our own age. That, he said, was the best method of loving long and religiously. It is my opinion too. Only I mean to marry to please myself. I am not ambitious; I care neither for fortune nor rank; I should choose an honest and pretty girl of my own age, with my own illusions, and I should say to her: 'Let us begin life together; let us love one another, and remain closely united to the end, both in the good and in the bad days'"

This the ingenuous lad does in the pleasantest manner possible. The girl is not his social equal; she is poor into the bargain, and is saddled with an objectionable father. But nothing is of any consequence to Feli except his love. He is even ready to wait four years, as the French law only recognises the son's right to marry to please himself at twenty-five. Then comes the intrigue. Pretty Catherine gave her hand to Feli's father before the radiant vision of this Prince Charming, believing that friendship is enough in marriage. Her favourite novel is Jane Eyre, and she naturally regards her middle-aged lover as a modified Rochester, with whom, however, the blasé and elegant nobleman has nothing in common. When he broaches his declaration, she asks herself with a shudder of terrified joy: "Is he going to speak to me as Rochester spoke to Jane?" Happily not. He woos delicately, but most unintelligently. He goes off to Turin on his son's business without revealing his engagement, leaving Catherine in the hands of a resplendent and romantic youth, with April in his eyes and sunshine in his smile. The result is inevitable, and, to dispose of the jealous and reluctant nobleman, the author remembers the ending of the Mill on the Floss. The father rises near Catherine's house. Feli is beforehand in rescuing the beloved, and the disappointed father is washed into eternity, thus removing the obstacle to the lover's happiness. The scenery and local atmosphere are very prettily handled, and the style sober and finished. Not a great deal assuredly, but like the air of the woods breathe is M. Theuriet, perfumed, fresh, a little wild, with a gratifying taste of innocence.

More interesting as a story, resembling more our English novel, La Forêt d'Argentan, by Alfred du Pradeix, with whose name I am not familiar. Here, too, the mistress and the French lover are absent. The hero is a viscount in reduced circumstances, who earns his bread as an employé on a Parisian railway. He is a nice, melancholy young man, highly-bred and sentimental. It is proposed to marry his dearest friend, a scientific sage, to a young lady of fortune in the provinces. The viscount, on the pretext of shooting, goes down to the country and is invited to the castle by the girl's father, a resplendent admiral, who keeps open house, and at his table mingles the luxuries of the far North with those of the South and the remote East. His daughter is an exquisite beauty, brilliant and bewildering, who nourishes a secret passion for the villain of this novel. The villain is overcharged with a hint of melodrama, and mars rather than adds to the interest of the tale. But it is so brightly told, so vivid and light and so sentimental, that in these harsh times we are disposed to swallow even the villain with a murmur. The viscount, of course, secretly loves the maiden, but breaks his heart in silence while his friend marries her. The friend dies of distracted love; and the beautiful widow and the faithful viscount are united "after long years of grief and pain." One of the prettiest light novels I have read for a long while.

H. I.

THE WEEK.

THE shadow of Easter is on the publishing world. Books are few and miscellaneous. Booksellers, we learn, are busier in taking stock than in selling. Reviewers are sending in their holiday addresses on post-cards. The printing presses are slowing down.

BUT—there appears to be always room for a new dictionary. Messrs. W. & A. Chambers have just put forth their Chambers's English Dictionary. The volume is in imperial octavo, and contains over 1,250 pages arranged in double columns. This dictionary is distinguished by clearness and largeness of the type, which it is printed. It is claimed to evocably is "exceptionally copious." In addition to ordinary words, phrases such as the following are included and named: Argon, power of the keys, top-song, Mrs. Leo Hunter, log-rolling, pledged securities, and new woman; also idiomatic phrases, such as to find one's self to knock into a cocked hat, to know the top, &c. The editor, Mr. Thomas Davidson, thinks the Dictionary "will satisfy the man, and supply some answer to the hand and one questions that arise before as he threads his way through the bewildered wilderness of words." The Preface concludes:

"His [Mr. Davidson's] aim has been to include all the common terms of the sciences and arts of life—of astronomy, physiology, and medicine, as well as of photography, printing, and heraldry. Obsolete words imperishable in Spenser, Shakespeare, the Authorised Version of the Bible, and Milton; the Scotch of Burns and Scott—of the heather, if the kailyard; the slang words of Dickens the man in the street; the honest Americanisms of Lowell and Mark Twain; the sayings of word-masters like Carlyle, Brown, and Meredith; provincial and dialect words that have attained to immortality in the pages of the Brontës and George Eliot—to all these the editor has opened his doors. It is his duty to judge whether a word is, or is not, to be added to the treasury of English, but to register such words as have been spoken or written, and to give an honest and unbiassed explanation of their meaning, if possible, of their origin."

SOCIOLOGY is a vast and pressing subject, therefore, Mr. J. H. W. Stuckenberg's Introduction to the Study of Sociology ought to be a useful work. Mr. Stuckenberg is the author of an Introduction to the Study of Philosophy, a Life of Immanuel Kant, and other books. His present work answers to its title: "an elaborated system of sociology is not attempted; but the purposes to lay the basis for sociological study and to designate the study involved—and to aid the beginner in the solution of these problems." Three classes of readers have been in the author's mind:

First, that large class of professional men and other persons of culture who have had no instruction in sociology, but are desirous of pursuing its study privately. . . . Second, students who have no sociology in their present course, but realise that without it their education and their preparation for life are incomplete. Third, teachers of social science who desire a compend as the basis of instruction, or who, while lecturing on sociology, want a manual in the hands of their pupils."

Stuckenberg has arranged his book on a very definite plan. He gives ten chapters, and the problem to be solved is stated at the beginning of each.

THE old angler is Harry Druidale, who relates his angling experiences for the twenty years in an illustrated volume entitled Harry Druidale, Fisherman from the Coast to England. The book is chiefly concerned with trout-fishing in Yorkshire, Lancashire, and the Isle of Man.

In A Tour Through the Famine Districts of India, Mr. F. H. G. Merewether "has, as far as possible, merely hinted at the awful and gruesome sights and scenes which it was his lot to witness, and which certainly any word-painting of his would fail to accurately portray." These sad spectacles are, however, brought to the reader's eye by means of photographs.

MR. WILLIAM ASHTON ELLIS's laborious translation of Wagner's prose works has reached its sixth volume. This contains Wagner's essay on "Religion and Art."

THE BOOK MARKET.

HALFPENNY HUMOUR.

THERE is just now a "boom"—the word can be useful—in cheap humorous papers. They are multiplying like flies in August. One wonders who reads them, but the wonder vanishes when one sees a street of small houses. They percolate into these. The boys and girls buy them and loudly dispute their merits. The tired father condescends to look at them after tea, and is amused. These halfpenny sheets are masses of funny or would-be funny pictures. Their humour is brief and broad, and turns mainly on personal injuries. Before we examine a budget of these papers we will give a list of some we have been able to collect within twenty-four hours. These are:

- Funny Cuts.*
- The Funny Wonder.*
- Larks!*
- Dan Leno's Comic Journal.*
- The Monster Comic.*
- Comic Cuts.*
- Jokes.*
- The Comic Home Journal.*
- Illustrated Chips.*
- The Halfpenny Comic.*
- Comic Bits.*
- The World's Comic.*

Need we apologise for drawing attention to a literary demand which, however remote from our readers' tastes, can only be satisfied by such an array of prints as the above? Unquestionably many of these papers have large circulations. They are seen in the train and the tram-car. Their blatant contents—bills and advertisements grin and jibber in the street. To seek any variations in them would be absurd. They are as similar as their names. Burglars and wild-beasts, dynamite, bicycles, and automatic machines are responsible for the more boisterous humour; and the regulation pretty girl and high-collared snob for the inanities. Larks gives its readers a sequence of pictures illustrating an elephant adventure at Barnum's. We spare our readers the pictures, but here are the "legends" to them:

"(1) Our three lodgers went to Barnum's Show last Saturday, and got among the elephants. 'Don't this one like 'aving his trunk smoothed down, neither?' said Snoddy; 'see—he sorter curls it up when I strokes it.'

(2) Well, Tuppy and Winky left Snoddy still cuddling that trunk, and whatever do you think they did? They went and bought a dozen buns, and then, in a quiet spot, peppered 'em like winking till the very look of 'em made you sneeze.

(3) Then placing one or two unpeppered ones on top, they hied them back to Snoddy. 'Ere, Snod,' said Winkle, 'give the s'elephant a few buns. I should like ter see 'ow they ketches 'old of anything with them trunk affairs.'

(4) 'Why, I do believe you're 'arf afraid of the animile,' gurgled Snoddy, as he came to the first doctored bun; 'come closer, you sillies, 'e won't 'urt yer. Why, I never—'

(5) But just then there came a wild shriek from the snout of the angered elephant, the ground shook, the fat lady trembled, the skeleton fell through his trousers, the freaks freaked, and Snoddy felt himself raised mountains high—

(6) And that elephant—oh, the game he had! He was just like a blessed whirligig, with poor Snodgrass, Tupman, and Winkle for the 'osses "

Meanwhile Funny Cuts regales its readers with a mad bull sequence, and Jokes makes the eyes of the groundlings twinkle with the story of a traveller who brings the butt of his musket down on a lion's tail, thinking it to be a snake, with results which are only temporarily disagreeable to the lion. In Comic Cuts one is faintly amused by a couple of burglars who bring every instrument known to their craft to the exploitation of a safe. Their indignation is complete when they discover that they have brought dynamite and jemmies to open a safe which proclaims on its front that it was "made in Germany." We accordingly behold the senior practitioner opening the "biscuit-tin" with an ordinary tin-opener held in one hand. One is amazed by the brutality of halfpenny humour. Collisions, duckings, scrimmages, and attacks by bull-dogs are of its essence, and the cat on the tiles is its symbol for ever and ever.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BURNS SUPERSTITION.

SIR,—In the Edinburgh Evening Dispatch of the 23rd instant there is a short report of what appears to have been a very interesting lecture of Mr. C. E. S. Chambers's on the story of the publishing firm of which he is the present head. In that report I find the following statement: "In connexion with the Life of Burns he had the diary of Robert Chambers in his tour of the Burns localities; but he would be afraid to publish it now. It would excite a controversy, and it would be a pity to disturb the romance that encircled a great name."

Now, Mr. Chambers has said either too much or too little. For Mr. Wallace, to whom he entrusted the revision of Chambers's Burns, has so thoroughly revised Robert Chambers's estimate of Burns that he has revised it out of existence: the statements which he has preferred being utterly in the teeth of those of Robert Chambers. Robert Chambers tells you, indeed, that the charges of intemperance have been "greatly exaggerated." But he can do nothing except deplore "one serious frailty"; he affirms that "there was a defect in Burns which no number of years would have ever enabled him to remedy, and this was his want of a vigorous will"; and, notwithstanding every desire to qualify and excuse, he is compelled to own that Burns "was unable to exercise a control upon his own passions in the smallest thing." Finally, he remarks that "it must ever be a fearful problem, how such a being is to stand towards the rest of society, how he is to get his living, and how he is to observe one half of the sober maxims of conventional life." In other terms, Robert Chambers's opinion of Burns is, in substance, very much my own: that he was a sort "of inspired faun" and a "lewd, amazing peasant of genius." With Chambers, as with Lockhart, "I am glad," as I have said elsewhere, "to agree that the truth lies somewhere between the two extremes"; only that somewhere is not put by me so hopelessly near to moral ruin as it is put by Robert Chambers.

But when you turn to the new issue of Chambers you find that, without scruple, without apology, without the smallest explanation, without even the faintest hint that such a thing is being done, Robert Chambers's deliberate and careful estimate is blotted out of history, and you are introduced in its stead to the "figmentary Burns" of Mr. Wallace: a Burns so impossible that of him Robert Chambers, with everyone else who knows anything of human nature and has any belief in what he knows, would pronounce that his like never walked the streets of Dumfries, and (in effect) is not to be found out of Mme. Tussaud's. It is, in fact, quite impossible (so entirely unregulated by reason is Mr. Wallace's estimate of Burns) to give an analysis of that estimate, and it must suffice to state that it results in this final inference: "Time only was wanting to realise his design, and Time was denied him. But, though lack of time stopped achievement, it could not alter the noble basis of character on which Burns was working when the night came in which no man can work"—which, of course, means—what?

Of course, too, Mr. Wallace, in his preface to the Dunlop Correspondence, affirms that in a certain letter Burns "effectually disposes in advance of the modern theory that he was 'an inspired faun' and a 'lewd peasant of genius.'" Does this letter, then, also dispose of Robert Chambers's statements and Robert Chambers's diary, which Mr. C. E. S. Chambers tells you he is "afraid to publish"? Or was he also afraid to show it to Mr. Wallace? And if Mr. Wallace has seen it, and has rejected its statements, is it fair, either to the public or to Robert Chambers, to allow such a stain to rest on Robert Chambers's memory as is implied in the inference that his estimate of Burns, which Mr. Wallace is allowed to suppress, and which is virtually to be excluded from all subsequent editions of his book, was founded on untrustworthy information?—I am, &c.,

March 28.

W. E. HENLEY.

DIALECT.

SIR,—When I wrote a letter on dialect in poetry, in reply to some observations of Mr. Quiller-Couch, I had not read more of those observations than was quoted in the ACADEMY. All the Scottish lion was stirred in a bosom usually tranquil, and I ventured to defend the literature of Alban against that of the Somersætas. But Mr. Quiller-Couch quoted, in his article, such a beautiful poem of Mr. Barnes, in the Somerset dialect, that I must ask leave to withdraw my remarks. Mr. Barnes, in those, and doubtless in other verses, put dialect to its proper use, and, though I still think the literature of Scotland richer than that of Somerset, I burn my faggot as far as Mr. Barnes is concerned.—Faithfully yours,

A. LANG.

ROUND TOWERS.

SIR,—“Inquirer” has conferred too much honour on my brief communication to you. He has used a sledge hammer to drive home a tin tack.

The fact is, some of my early years were spent under the shadow of the Round Tower at Brechin; and I have naturally ever since taken some amount of interest in the subject of Round Towers, both in reading and inspecting a few of them in Ireland. It therefore appeared somewhat singular to me that your reviewer, when noticing O'Brien's book, had not given some prominence to a very probable surmise as to the use of these towers.

I am not an archaeologist by any means, but possessing in some slight degree the bookseller's faculty of remembering all he reads, I recalled to mind the chapter dealing with the subject in Joseph Anderson's Scotland in Early Christian Times (1881), where he endorses Dr. Petrie's views; and the absence by your reviewer to any reference to his conjectures was my sole reason for writing you.

I do not now propose taking up the cudgels on behalf of his theory—which, all the same, I believe in—but will leave the matter to be settled by “Inquirer” and others, who know far more about the subject than I do.—I am, &c.,

March 28.

DAVID STOTT.

SIR,—Referring to the correspondence on this interesting subject, it is a matter of regret that, like many other questions of historical importance, the “Round Tower” controversy has never yet been satisfactorily cleared up. We may or may not be the losers by the absence of any definite information, and it would, therefore, be better perhaps for all disputants to endorse the words of the writer of an article that appeared in Fraser's Magazine for August, 1835, and which is quoted at the commencement of the introduction to a new reprint of this book just issued:

“When all is dark, who would object to a ray of light merely because of the faulty or flickering medium by which it is transmitted? And if those Round Towers have hitherto been a dark puzzle and a mystery, must we scare away O'Brien because he approaches with rude and unpolished but serviceable lantern”—I am, &c., R. A. E.

March 28.

[This correspondence, which, judging the letters we continue to receive, might last till Lammastide, must now cease.—E]

NEWSPAPER ENGLISH.

SIR,—A good deal is written in denunciation of what is called “Newspaper English.” Some of it would be more to the point there were no such thing as progress, elasticity, as growth, in a living language, distinguishing it from the majestic immobility of the dead tongues. The following quotation is not an example of “newspaper English” (an ill phrase, that, itself by the way), but it is a sweet example of the way in which the most censorious may go astray:

“An understanding with Russia; that would be a policy. An insistence upon the open door that would also be a policy, though, according to our view, a dangerous one. But to harp with ‘Keep open, Sesame,’ when Sesame being barred and bolted; that is mere futility!”

The influential London journal from which the above is taken evidently thinks that “Sesame,” in some language or another signifies a door! Yet it needn't so much have gone to that neglected compilation the Arabian Nights to correct its quite idyllic ignorance. The encyclopaedic Brewer would have steered it off the rocks: so, more likely, could any average school-girl, than to Mr. Ruskin!—I am, &c.,

Dulwich: March 26.

T. B. R.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

“Simon Dale.” MR. ANTHONY HOPE's late novel is recognised as a departure from his usual genre and, on the whole, he is credited with doubtful success. The Athenæum's critic the most lavish of praise. He prefaces his review by a column and a half of remark on the difficulties of writing a good historic novel. It is after stating these difficulties that this critic writes:

“Anthony Hope has very nearly obtained a complete triumph in his Simon Dale. I have chosen an excellent period for the action—the time of Charles II., known to us by Mr. Pepys and Comte de Grammont, an audacious in itself deserving of success; and the audacious is all the greater and all the more successful inasmuch as he obviously imitates Dumas' method in his narrative, and actually brings Louis XIV. himself, as Dumas did in Vicomte de Bragelonne. Charles II. is excellent: he is witty, good-humoured, and, at the same time, a king, even when he allows himself to be mocked by Rochester or Buckingham. Rochester and Buckingham, the Duke of Monmouth and the Duke of York, all live in our writer's pages, and the more vividly for his narrative. . . . As for the hero, he is a perfect hero of romance—he is brave, witty, adventurous, and a good lover, and he succeeds in the difficult task of narrating his own prowess without a suspicion of priggishness. . . . Perhaps the least convincing part of it rative is the hero's calf love for Nell Gwynne. does not ring quite true, but it serves as an use for a great deal of Nell, who is the st charming coquette imaginable. For the t, the story is rapid and most excellently l."

From the Athenæum to the Referee may n a far cry; but the Referee, though not literary organ, prints careful reviews; in this instance its critic is at war with brother of the Athenæum.

Is it possible to fix a standard of comparison the criticism of novels? I think not. en I say that Mr. Anthony Hope's new story ot so good as one might expect, I mean to pare Mr. Hope with himself, for Simon Dale (then) is better at any rate than the erality of novels. To begin with, the or's wit is as nimble as ever, so you may ure that this is not a dull book. The story, ever, is not so animated as it should be; although Mr. Hope, in introducing hisal personages into his narrative, is innocent ny literary offence, his romance of the oration has not the sense of lifelikeness. ously enough, it has not the plausibility h is characteristic even of the most fan- e of Mr. Hope's novels. This is dis- inting, for one would say that a writer so nguished for imagination and elegance and ery could hardly have hit upon a period e agreeable to his fancy; yet his Charles II., ouis XIV., and his Nell Gwynne, who are prominent characters in the intrigue of Simon Dale, are but the historical personages tancy dress ball."

The Westminster Gazette's critic also dges in rather lengthy remarks on the tions of the historical novel. He thinks a Mr. Anthony Hope, while not departing eily from these, makes the most of them :

"His model is Dumas, and none could be t. He has one qualification for following e master which many of his competitors have t. He writes admirable dialogue and can vop his story out of it. The dialogue of Simon Dale is a delight to read, pointed, witty, ilant, and from a literary point of view faining in dexterity and finish."

the review has a mild sting in its tail. t describing the story, the critic becomes nitory :

"We will tell no more of the story, but send eader to the book, which he will find full tudent and invention. In short, it is done tinely well, and a vast deal of literary skill employed on it. Yet, without being in the t ingrateful, we are not quite sure whether e could not rather in future that Mr. Hope ved himself to something else. The histori- l novel does not give him scope for those e early original gifts which made his mark e again of his earlier books, and which are as t exhausted. We look to him yet for that lit comedy of modern life which he seemed rprise us a year or two back. Meanwhile, Simon Dale has great merits, and cannot fail to pular."

The Daily News's critic is laudatory. Re- arking on the excellence of Mr. Hope's alone, he writes :

"Few good, for instance, is this bit of talk tween Simon and Nell Gwynne, when the tter has to tell her friend and half-lover of e scheme that has been made for getting rba Quinton away from Dover Castle. 'Do you carry a message from him' (that is, the Duke of Monmouth) 'to me?' Simon asks Nell Gwynne.

'I did but say that I knew a gentleman who might supply his needs. They are four: a heart, a head, a hand, and perhaps a sword.'

'All men have them, then.'

'The first true, the second long, the third strong, the fourth ready.'

'I fear, then, that I haven't all of them.'

'And for a reward —'

'I know. His life, if he can come off with it.' Nell burst out laughing.

'He didn't say that, but it may well reckon up to much that figure,' she admitted.

'You'll think of it, Simon?'

'Think of it? I? Not I!'

'You won't?'

'Or I mightn't attempt it.'

'Ah! You will attempt it?'

'Of a certainty.'

"William Shakespeare: a Critical Study." By Dr. George Brandes. THE importance of Dr. Brandes' contribution to our knowledge of Shakespeare is not disputed.

The Times's critic makes out a list of the qualifications which go to the making of a Shakespearean critic :

"It is of no use for anyone to attempt to write comprehensively on such a theme as Shakespeare unless he possesses several endowments which are uncommon when taken singly, very rare indeed in combination. He must in the first place, if he is to satisfy the demands of the modern historical spirit, have a very exact and full knowledge of Shakespeare's life and times, of the literature which was then coming into being, of the books which the poet must be supposed to have read, and of the plays which he had probably seen. He must, of course, know his text, and have mastered the best results of modern chronological study as applied to it. Lastly, he must be a man of sound critical sense, which, after all, in such a case differs very little from common sense; he must eschew metaphysics, and have no moral parti pris — which is as much as to say that he must be a very different person from the eminent Germans who, forty or fifty years ago, led the fashion among the Shakespearean critics. Whether it is equally necessary for our modern scholar to be steeped in the writings of these gentlemen and of the other commentators is much less certain; in fact, he may afford to neglect the vast majority of them, and to regard at least three-quarters of existing Shakespearean literature as a negligible quantity. Dr. George Brandes has all or nearly all these qualifications."

The Daily Telegraph's reviewer amplifies Dr. Brandes' qualifications as follows :

"Dr. George Brandes, of Copenhagen, is no mere German scholar. We know that he has devoted a life-time to the study of English literature, and has understood with rare critical insight the extraordinary combination of antagonistic elements which goes to make up our character. 'Norman and Saxon and Dane are we'; we have taken lessons from the Renaissance, we have understood the Pagan attitude towards nature, we have tried to copy classical ideals, we have caught some of the languor and fervour of the South, we have pondered life's problems with the German, and we have laughed and been sceptical with Rabelais and Voltaire. When Dr. George Brandes writes about Shakespeare he seems to understand better than any foreign commentator of recent times how all these discordant trains of thought and feeling were united in our great representative poet."

The Standard's critic finishes the portrait. He thus describes Dr. Brandes' method :

"No one takes in at once the entire meaning and significance of a Shakespearean play. To be able to do so in the fullest possible manner it would be necessary to possess the insight, the power of appreciation, the information, and the desire for further knowledge which distinguish Dr. Brandes. When was the play produced, what is it made of, whence do the materials come, what sort of man was the author of these materials—thus in his critical mind, one inquiry leads to another, so that in considering 'Julius Cæsar' and the character of Cæsar, Dr. Brandes takes us from Shakespeare to Plutarch and the three Lives on which the play is founded; from Plutarch's writings to Plutarch himself, and the difficulty which this thorough Greek (who not only was ignorant of Latin literature and the Latin language, but ignored them) would feel in doing justice to Cæsar's high qualities; from Plutarch to Mommsen, who judged Cæsar from the Roman point of view; and, finally, from Mommsen back to Shakespeare."

This critic concludes with an effective compliment to Dr. Brandes simply as a literary artist :

"In addition to his other merits Dr. Brandes is a wonderfully attractive writer. At the beginning of his first volume, the striking manner in which he gives Shakespeare his historical place in literature—born in the year of Michael Angelo's death and of Cervantes' birth—will at once arrest the reader's attention; and every reader will thank him for placing at his disposal, in so orderly a manner and so agreeable a style, the treasures of his vast erudition."

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, March 31.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

STUDIES IN TEXTS FOR FAMILY, CHURCH, AND SCHOOL. By Joseph Parker, D.D. Horace Marshall & Son. 3s. 6d.

SERMONS PREACHED IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By Basil Wilberforce, D.D. Elliot Stock.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY OF EUSEBIUS IN SYRIAC. Edited from the MSS. by the late Wm. Wright, LL.D., and Norman McLean, M.A. Cambridge University Press.

A STUDY OF THE SAVIOUR IN THE NEWER LIGHT; OR, A PRESENT-DAY STUDY OF JESUS CHRIST. By Alexander Robinson. Williams & Norgate. 7s. 6d.

THE KING OF THE JEWS: A POEM. By George Stewart Hitchcock. W. Hutchinson (Chatham).

COMPANIONS OF THE SORROWFUL WAY. By John Watson, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 2s. 6d.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

HARRY DRUIDALE, FISHERMAN FROM MANXLAND TO ENGLAND. By Henry Cadman. Macmillan & Co. 8s. 6d.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

RICHARD WAGNER'S PROSE WORKS. Translated by William Ashton Ellis. Vol. VI.: RELIGION AND ART. Kegan Paul.

THE POEMS OF SHAKESPEARE. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by George Wyndham. Methuen & Co. 10s. 6d.

PORPHYRION, AND OTHER POEMS. By Laurence Binyon. Grant Richards.

RICHARD WAGNER'S PROSE WORKS. Translated by William Ashton Ellis. Vol. VI.: RELIGION AND ART. Kegan Paul.

NIGHTSHADE AND POPPIES: VERSES OF A COUNTRY DOCTOR. By Dugald Moore. John Long. 3s. 6d.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

A TOUR THROUGH THE FAMINE DISTRICTS OF INDIA. By F. H. S. Mercwether. A. D. Innes & Co.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

OUTLINES OF DESCRIPTIVE PSYCHOLOGY: A TEXT-BOOK OF MENTAL SCIENCE. By George Trumbull Ladd. Longmans, Green & Co. 12s.

THE PROCESS OF CREATION DISCOVERED; OR, THE SELF-EVOLUTION OF THE EARTH AND UNIVERSE BY NATURAL CAUSES. By James Dunbar. Watts & Co. 7s. 6d.

A TEXT-BOOK OF BOTANY. By Drs. E. Strasburger, Fritz Noll, H. Schenck, and A. F. W. Schimper. Translated from the German by H. C. Porter, Ph.D. Macmillan & Co. 18s.

PURE ECONOMICS. By Prof. Maffeo Pantaleoni. Translated by T. Boston Bruce, Esq. Macmillan & Co. 10s.

AN UNKNOWN PEOPLE. By Edward Carpenter. A. & H. B. Bonner. 6d.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

AMONG THE MEADOW PEOPLE. By Clara Dillingham Pierson. J. M. Dent & Co.

MISCELLANEOUS.

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF SOCIOLOGY. By J. H. W. Stuckenberg. Hodder & Stoughton. 9s.

GIANT-LAND: THE WONDERFUL ADVENTURES OF TIM PIPPIN. By "Roland Quiz." James Henderson.

TOURIST'S VADE MECUM OF GERMAN COLLOQUIAL CONVERSATION. Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.

MADGE'S LETTERS: GERMAN AND ENGLISH ON OPPOSITE PAGES. Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons. 6d.

COMIC HISTORY OF GREECE. By Charles M. Snyder. J. B. Lippincott Co.

AN ARABIC VOCABULARY FOR EGYPT. By F. E. Robertson. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

CHAMBERS'S ENGLISH DICTIONARY: PRONOUNCING, EXPLANATORY, ETYMOLOGICAL. Edited by Thomas Davidson. W. & R. Chambers, Ltd.

THE WORKERS: AN EXPERIMENT IN REALITY. By Walter A. Wyckoff. William Heinemann. 3s. 6d.

NEW EDITION.

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. By Oliver Goldsmith. Service and Paton. 2s. 6d.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

IN the April number of Macmillan's Magazine Mr. Charles Whibley reviews Mr. Frazer's monumental edition of Pausanias' Description of Greece, under the title of "The Oldest Guide-Book in the World." In the same issue a Scotch gentleman, who conceals himself under initials, gives some recollections of the days, now long distant, when he wore the black uniform with the silver death's head and cross-bones of the Brunswick Hussars, "Les Chasseurs de la Mort," as Napoleon's soldiers called them.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish in a few days a romance of adventure, by Mr. Victor Waite, entitled Cross Trails. The story is a sketch of the "Remittance Man" of our colonies, and the motive the tradition of the loss of a Spanish treasure-ship.

THE world has been, and must be, without an authorised life of Thackeray, owing to the novelist's expressed distaste for a biography. But his life is in his books, and of each book a memoir has been written by Mrs. Richmond Ritchie, his surviving daughter. These memoirs will form the introduction to the Biographical Edition which Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. have in preparation. This edition, containing additional material and hitherto unpublished letters and drawings, will be issued in thirteen monthly volumes, beginning with Vanity Fair on April 15.

SIR GEORGE ROBERTSON, K.C.S.I., who was at the time British Agent at Gilgit, has written a story of Chitral from the point of view of one actually besieged in the fort. The book is of considerable length, and is a connected narrative of the stirring episodes on the Chitral Frontier in 1895. It will be published by Messrs. Methuen in the autumn.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & Co. will publish, towards the end of April, T. Nash's A Spring Song (1600), with illustrations by L. Leslie Brooke, printed in colours by Edmund Evans.

MESSRS. LUZAC & Co. have bought the library of the late Dr. J. Legge, Professor of Chinese at the University of Oxford.

THE April number of the Antiquary will contain articles on "Ancient Wall Paintings," by George Bailey; and on "Old Sussex Farmhouses and their Furniture," by J. L. André.

THE publisher of Trewinnot of Guy's is Mr. John Long, not Mr. James Bowden, as we stated last week.

MISS ANNA KATHARINE GREEN's new novel is called Lost Man's Lane. It presents a second episode in the life of Amelia Butterworth, some of whose experiences have been already told in That Affair Next Door.

A SECOND edition of Dr. Whyte's appreciation of Father John of the Greek Church is now in the press, and a translation into Russian has been undertaken by Col. E. E. Goulaeff.

THE Portfolio Monograph on Greek Bronzes, to be published by Messrs. Seeley & Co. in the middle of April, is written by Mr. Alexander Stewart Murray, keeper of the Greek and Roman Antiquities at the British Museum, author of Greek Sculpture under Pheidias &c. The number will be illustrated mainly from the collection of Bronzes in the British Museum, and will contain several that have not been previously reproduced.

The Honourable Peter Stirling is the title of a novel by Paul Leicester Ford, which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately. It deals largely with political life in New York, and is attracting considerable attention there.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & Co. have projected another series of books. It will deal with country life, and be called the Haddon Library. There will be works on angling, gardening, and similar subjects.

THE Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge will issue in the course of the next few days Two Hundred Years: the History of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1698-1898, by Rev. W. O. F. Allen and Rev. Edmund McClure, the secretaries of the society. The work is largely based on the records, letter-books, reports and minutes of the society since its foundation. The early history of the plantation in America, the beginnings of missionary work in India, the emigration of the Salzburg exiles, the early steps taken to provide education for the masses and religious instruction for the seamen of the English Navy and merchant marine, and the first attempts at prison reform made by it, are fully dealt with.

THE Guild of Handicraft (Essex House Bow) announce that they are about to publish a translation of Benvenuto Cellini's treatises on goldsmiths' work and sculpture by Mr. C. R. Ashbee. This work, which has never yet been translated into English is intended to serve as a companion volume to John Addington Symonds's translation of Cellini's Autobiography. The translation is based upon the Marcian Codex, the being the original version of the treatises as Cellini dictated them to his amanuensis but which he withdrew from publication and which did not appear till the middle of the present century.

THE first edition of The Book of Genesis in Basque, translated by Pierre d'Urte, who was in England in the reign of George the First, was published at the Clarendon Press on June 1, 1894. A new edition, for the pocket, will shortly be issued at a nominal price by the Trinitarian Bible Society. Being intended for popular reading, its orthography has been modernised; and the few textual improvements, which will be seen to be absolutely necessary, have been made—that is to say, some slight alterations, omissions, or additions—to bring the version into conformity with the French of Calvin and the general style of the Basque author himself. The MS. at Shirburn Castle evidently never benefited by his personal revision.

Saunterings in France, a new artistic and practical guide-book, will shortly be published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

EDITED BY W. L. COURTNEY.

APRIL.

HERE LORD SALISBURY HAS FAILED. By DIPLOMATICUS.
BROKEN GATES of DEATH. By W. B. YEARS.
DUOR TRAFFIC with WEST AFRICA. By Miss MARY KINGSLEY.
POSTHUMOUS WORKS of ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.
By STEPHEN GWYNNE.
FRENCH on the NIGER (with a Map). By FREDK. A. EDWARDS, F.R.O.S.
NATIONAL GALLERY and COMMON SENSE. By H. M. PAULL.
LICE CAVALLOTTI. By OCIDA.
WORKS on BIG GAME. By THEODORE ROOSEVELT.
DO WE RELY on our WAR NEWS? By MICHAEL MACDONAGH.
VENILE REFORMATORIES in FRANCE. By E. SPEARMAN.
"MAINE" DISASTER and AFTER. By FRED. T. JANE.
STORY-TELLER at LARGE: Mr. HENRY HARGLAND. By HENRY JAMES.
FRIENDLY SOCIETIES for WOMEN. By Rev. J. FROME WILKINSON.
FISH TRADE and the INTEGRITY of CHINA. By HOIT S. HALLWELL.
CORRESPONDENCE: Sporting Literature. By HEDLEY PECK.
CRAPMAN & HALL, Ltd., London.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 990. — APRIL, 1898. — 2s. 6d.

DEATH IN THE NIGER DELTA.—PROGRESS IN CANAD.—JOHN SPLENDID: THE TALE OF A POOR GEN- MAN, AND THE LITTLE WAES OF LOEN, by Neil MUNRO.
OS. XIX., XXII.—THE TOWN of the RENEGADES: AGURAI, Walter B. HARRIS.—AT THE STROKE of the HOUR, by K.—MRS. OLIPHANT as a BIOGRAPHER.—THE BOY FROM LYTEARIM, by Meira O'NEILL.—ADVENTURES OF THE TE DE LA MURTE during the REIGN of TERROE.
AMUS and THISBE; THE MOUSE-TRAP, by Bernard CAPES.
MOIRS of a HIGHLAND LADY.—THE GUERRILLERO.— CHINESE IMBROGLIO.—THE LOOKER-ON.—THE ORACRY and WAR: APPEAL to the RADICALS.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

AUTHORS and their PENS.

HALL CAINE: "I wrote the 'Manx- man' with the Swan Pen."

S. R. CROCKETT: "Your Gold Pen suits me most admirably."

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA: "I have lately taken to writing with a Gold Pen."

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES: "You may like to know I used this pen from the days of a book of mine called 'The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table' (1857)."

PHIL MAY: "It is the most successful pen I have ever used."

W. R. BRADLAUGH: "I write over 8,000 words a day, and your pens are a perfect boon."

"TOBY'S DIARY" daily written with it."

Send for Illustrated List, &c., to MAME, TODD & BARD, 93, Cheapside; 95, Regent Street; 2, High Street, Kensington.

MAME, TODD & BARD.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

Price 6s.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY C. KEGAN PAUL.

THE CATHEDRAL.

By J. K. HUYSMANS.

Translated by CLARA BELL.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"We know that the finest imaginative work can be built only of the primary emotions. Here, then, is a novelist who has obtained complete mastery over one of the primary emotions, precisely because it has obtained complete mastery over his own soul—the emotion of faith."

Mr. ARTHUR SYMONS, in the Saturday Review.

"This long-expected book is out at last, and bids fair to attract as much attention as its predecessors. It would be idle to deny that M. Huysmans presents some of the characteristics of a great artist. His picture of the cathedral stands out with the delicacy of a nocturne of Mr. Whistler."—Academy.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LIMITED, Paternoster House, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

Price 3s. 6d. net; postage 3d.

ALAMO, AND OTHER VERSES. By EDWARD McQUEEN GRAY, Author of "Elsa," &c.

A. & F. DENNY, 304, Strand, London, W.C.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, Fumival Street, E.C.

IMPORTANT.

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, should subscribe to the

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

ESTABLISHED 1837.

Among the many attractions of its columns the following may be mentioned:—

Literary articles (including leader on some prominent topic of the moment) announcements of forthcoming volumes, notes on current events in connection with the publishing world, reviews (often illustrated) of new books and magazines, correspondence, &c., &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of

NEW BOOKS OF THE WEEK

(the most complete list issued) giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number upwards of a thousand

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS

are advertised for, thus affording readers an excellent opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and attention is particularly drawn to the fact that annual subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money-payments should be made.

For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ... .. 8s. 6d.
Six Months ditto ditto ditto ... 4s. 6d.
Three Months ditto ditto ditto ... 2s. 6d.
To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage ... .. 11s. 0d.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.

SIXTY-FIRST YEAR OF ISSUE OF ANNUAL CATALOGUE.

THE

ENGLISH CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

FOR THE YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 224, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

It contains a much longer list of Works than last year's Catalogue, including an addition of some 1,400 more Titles, but the price remains the same, viz., 5s. net, cloth limp; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

Now ready, in two volumes, royal octavo, bound in buckram, illustrated with Map of the Town, Facsimile of Charter, and numerous Plates of Maces, Seals, &c. Price £2 2s. net.

THE RECORDS OF
THE BOROUGH of NORTHAMPTON.

TWO VOLUMES.

With a Preface by the LORD BISHOP of LONDON, and an Introductory Chapter on the History of the Town by W. RYLAND D. ADKINS, B.A., late History Exhibitioner of Balliol College, Oxon.

The First Volume Edited by CHRISTOPHER A. MARKHAM, F.S.A., Hon. Sec. Northamptonshire Architectural Society, Author of "The Church Plate of the County of Northampton," &c.

The Second Volume Edited by the Rev. J. CHARLES COX, LL.D., F.S.A., Author of "Three Centuries of Derbyshire Annals," &c.

Published by Order of the Corporation of the County Borough of Northampton.

This work is in two volumes. The first contains extracts from Domesday Book, the Pipe Rolls, the Charters, and the Liber Custumarum, and an Introductory Chapter on the History of the Town. The extracts from Domesday Book, and from the earlier Pipe Rolls, and the whole of the earlier charters, are printed in Latin and English; and the Liber Custumarum is printed entire, with translations of the Latin and Norman-French portions, and a full and suitable glossary of obscure words is added. A valuable essay on the legal matter contained in the Liber Custumarum, by Mr. T. Green, is also included in this volume.

The second is based on the Orders of Assembly, the more modern records, and contains full extracts of points of special importance, with a careful selection of the remainder. A full list of the Mayors and Bailiffs from the earliest times is given from the original documents, and list of other officials, such as Recorders, Town Clerks, and Mayors' Sergeants, have been attempted.

"The archives of the town are in many cases of great historical interest, especially those which relate to the Civil War, and the part which Northampton played in that memorable struggle. The work is provided with a full index, admirable critical notes, and a plan of the town."—SPEAKER.

In demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.; roxburgh, hand-made paper, 10s. 6d. net; Large Paper, £1 1s. 6d. net.

NOW READY.

THE TENTH VOLUME OF THE TOPOGRAPHICAL SECTION OF

The Gentleman's Magazine Library.

Edited by G. LAURENCE GOMME, F.S.A.

CONTAINING:—

SHROPSHIRE and SOMERSETSHIRE.

THE PREVIOUS VOLUMES CONTAIN:

1. Bedfordshire, Berkshire, and Buckinghamshire.
2. Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Cornwall, and Cumberland.
3. Derbyshire, Devonshire, and Dorsetshire.
4. Durham, Essex, and Gloucestershire.
5. Hampshire, Herefordshire, Hertfordshire, and Huntingdonshire.
6. Kent and Lancashire.
7. Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Middlesex, and Monmouthshire.
8. Norfolk, Northamptonshire, Northumberland.
9. Nottinghamshire, Oxfordshire, and Rutland.

The Topographical Section of THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY contains a mass of valuable information concerning the counties of England, which is of the greatest interest to Residents, Topographers, Antiquaries, and others.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S LIST.

BERTRAM MITFORD'S NEW ROMANCE.

In cloth gilt, 3s. 6d., with Illustrations by A. D. M'COMICK.

THE INDUNA'S WIFE. By the AUTHOR of "THE KING'S ASSEGAI," &c.

NEW ROMANCE BY HUME NISBET.

FOR LIBERTY. By the Author of "A SWEET SINNER."

POPULAR NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

At all Libraries, Booksellers', and Bookstalls.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE BEETLE."

Ready this day, in 1 vol., 6s.

THE HOUSE of MYSTERY. By RICHARD MARSH.

"It is a clever tale, and deserving of many readers." Scotsman.

BY ESME STUART.

THE STRENGTH of TWO. By the AUTHOR of "ARRESTED," "A WOMAN OF FORTY," &c.

JEAN MIDDLEMASS'S NEW NOVEL.

BLANCHE CONINGHAM'S SURRENDER. By the AUTHOR of "DANDY."

NEW NOVEL BY E. YOLLAND.

MISTRESS BRIDGET. By the Author of "IN DAYS of STRIFE."

F. V. WHITE & CO., 14, Bedford Street, Strand.

Stevens & Sons' New Law Works.

NOW READY, No. 54 (APRIL), price 5s. Subscription for 1898, post free, 12s. 6d.

THE LAW QUARTERLY REVIEW. Edited by Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., M.A., LL.D., Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford.

Contents.

NOTES: Allen v Flood—Concurrent Causes of Action—Cases on Private International Law—Private Arrangements with Creditors—Actions against Government Officials—Limit of Justification by Orders of Superior Officer, &c.

ALLEN v FLOOD. By the Editor.
LEGAL REMAINDERS and PERPETUITIES. By E. C. C. FISH.
THE SHIPOWNERS LIEN FOR FREIGHT. By G. D. KEON.
JUDICIAL SENTENCES, and the HABITUAL CRIMINAL. By C. H. BROMBY.

EXCUSABLE BREACHES OF TRUST. By F. H. MAUGHAM.
THE ENGLISH, FRENCH, and BELGIAN BARS. By MALCOLM MELMORANT.
THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT, 1894: Some Notes on Parish Councils and Suggestions for an Amendment Act. By J. HARRIS STONE.

STATUS OF CANADIAN QUEEN'S COUNSEL. By A. SWINBURST BOOK REVIEWS.

Just published, royal 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

PALMER'S COMPANY LAW. Based on Lectures delivered in the Inner Temple Hall at the Request of the Council of Legal Education. With an Appendix containing the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893, and Rules. By FRANCIS BEAUFORT PALMER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "Company Precedents," &c.

"The work is a marvel—for clearness, fulness, and accuracy nothing could be better. In every page the master-hand is discernible. Nothing is shirked; every difficulty is faced and met."—Law Notes.

Just published, Fifth Edition, royal 8vo, cloth, 18s.

HOOD and CHALLIS'S CONVEYANCING and SETTLED LAND ACTS, and some recent Acts affecting Conveyancing. With Commentaries. By H. J. HOOD and H. W. CHALLIS. Fifth Edition. By H. W. CHALLIS, assisted by J. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 1895.

"This is the best collection of conveyancing statutes with which we are acquainted."—Law Journal.

Just published, Eleventh Edition, cloth, 15s.

SMITH'S MANUAL of COMMON LAW. For Practitioners and Students. Comprising the Fundamental Principles, with useful Practical Rules and Decisions. By JOSHUA W. SMITH, B.C.L., Q.C. Eleventh Edition. By C. SPURLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. 1895.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 18s.

THE MAGISTRATES' ANNUAL PRACTICE, 1898. Being a Compendium of the Law and Practice relating to matters occupying the attention of Courts of Summary Jurisdiction, with an Appendix of Statutes and Rules, List of Punishments, and Calendar for Magistrates. By CHARLES MILNER ATKINSON, Esq., Stipendiary Magistrate for the City of Leeds.

"Information is afforded, in the readiest manner possible, as to almost every conceivable offence with which magistrates are empowered to deal."—Solicitors' Journal.

Catalogue (1893) post free.

STEVENS & SONS, LIMITED, 119 and 120, Chancery Lane, London.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S LIS

NOW READY.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

ROBERT BURNS

AND

MRS. DUNLOP

CORRESPONDENCE NOW PUBLISHED IN FULL FOR THE FIRST TIME, WITH ELUCIDATIONS.

By WILLIAM WALLACE.

With Portrait of Mrs. Dunlop, and Facsimile

"It is extremely fortunate that the work has been undertaken by an editor like Mr. Wallace, whose subjective thoroughness, and minute knowledge of his subject ensure a satisfactory result. He has brought together nearly the letters of Robert Burns and Mrs. Dunlop; not only those which have been already published, but a large number which Mrs. Dunlop retained unhandled till her death. These new letters have been interwoven with the old, elucidations and connecting explanations added, and the whole presented skillfully in an almost unbroken narrative." Saturday Review.

"The reader will not close the volume without feeling that it has increased his admiration for the manliness and genius of Burns, and for the fine character and value of the teaching of Mrs. Dunlop. There is nothing exactly like this correspondence in literature."—Leeds Mercury.

SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

OTHER PEOPLE'S LIVES. By RO

NOUCHETTE CAREY, Author of "Nell Memorios," &c.

"A gentle, fragrant book."—Academy.

"Worthy of a genial reception on account of its wisdom, its strong human feeling, and the intrinsic interest of each of the several tales."—Literary World.

THIRD EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA

HESBA STRETTON, Author of "Jessie's Prayer," &c.

"Wholesome, not too exciting, written in good, simple English."—Literature.

"Written with scrupulous care, and probably does contain one slovenly sentence; its leading and even minor characters are each and all real persons in whom reader fully believes, for their characters are outlined by a deft hand, and the home life of the Channel Islands forms an exceedingly pleasant background for the story." Scotsman.

SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MARY QUEEN of SCOTS, from her

Birth to her Flight into England: a Brief Biography with Critical Notes, a few Documents hitherto unpublished, and an Itinerary. By DAVID H. FLEMING, LL.D.

"Mr. Hay Fleming has done historical and political students a signal service by putting together in this compact form all the facts needful for an understanding of parts which Scotland played in the rivalries between England and France, and England and Spain." Daily News.

"Mr. Hay Fleming gives us the quintessence of six-a-twenty eventful, changeable, and tragic years."—Scotsman.

"As a critical history and a magazine of facts, it is an invaluable one; its study the essential preliminary to the first steps towards an historical judgment of Mary. It will secure Mr. Fleming an honorable reputation for scholarship and patient industry. The Itinerary which he puts into an appendix, must represent months of tedious work; and the critical sagacity displayed in sifting of the immense mass of material to be dealt with of a very high order."—Academy.

SECOND EDITION, completing Twenty-three Thousand. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

THE IDEAL LIFE, and other U

published Addresses. By HENRY DRUMMOND. With Introductory Sketches by W. ROBERTS NICOLL and IAN MACLAREN.

"These addresses are written in a singularly beautiful style, and contain much beautiful thinking, showing that the writer has pondered deeply on some of the most spiritual aspects of religion. They will, we are sure, be much prized by the many admirers of their author." Glasgow Herald.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

RELICS of PRIMEVAL LIFE

By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, LL.D., F.R.S.

"Naturalists will certainly be glad to have this comprehensive treatment of the subject by one who has been intimately associated with the find ever since it was submitted to the consideration of paleontologists by W. E. Logan."—Academy.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1353.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The APRIL CATALOGUES of Valuable HAND-MADE WORKS and NEW REMAINDERS, offered at greatly reduced, are Now Ready, and will be sent post free on application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, Strand, London, W.C.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

P. PUNNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 33rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities afforded by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most liberal terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 13, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. Specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast proof and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Publications. Estimates upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africaner, London."

BOOKBINDING — LIBRARIES or SINGLE VOLUMES RE-BOUND and REPAIRED, and high-class proof every Description undertaken by skilled workmen. Magazine and Periodicals carefully bound in any style.—Write for prices to W. & G. GODDARD, Bookbinders, 3, Clerkenwell Road, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, 10d. per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman Characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilized world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. No work has met so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Messrs. Messrs. and Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

1 HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Impressionist Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE of ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes of this kind, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Publishers, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS,
or Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Aldemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

LECTURE ARRANGEMENTS AFTER EASTER, 1898.
LECTURE HOUR, 3 O'CLOCK P.M.

THOMAS COOPER GOTCH, Esq.,—TWO LECTURES ON "PHASES OF ART; PAST and PRESENT." On TUESDAYS, April 19, 25.

SAMUEL RAWSON GARDNER, Esq., M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.—FOUR LECTURES ON "THE HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF EUROPE." On TUESDAYS, May 3, 10, 17, 24.

Professor S. H. BUTCHER, LL.D., Litt D., Professor of Greek in the University of Edinburgh.—TWO LECTURES ON "LITERARY CRITICISM IN GREECE." On TUESDAYS, May 31, June 7.

The Rev. Canon AINGER, M.A., LL.D.,—THREE LECTURES ON "SOME LEADERS IN THE POETIC REVIVAL OF 1780-1820—COWPER, BURNS, and SCOTT." On THURSDAYS, April 21, 28, May 5.

The Right Hon. Lord RAYLEIGH, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., M.R.I., Professor of Natural Philosophy, R.I.—THREE LECTURES ON "HEAT." On THURSDAYS, May 12, 19, 26.

EDWARD E. KEELIN, M.D., F.R.S., Lecturer on Physiology at St. Bartholomew's Hospital.—TWO LECTURES ON "MODERN METHODS and their ACHIEVEMENTS IN BACTERIOLOGY." On THURSDAYS, June 2, 9.

Sir WALTER PARRATT, Mus. Doc., Master of the Queen's Music.—FOUR LECTURES ON "PROGRAMME MUSIC" (with Musical Illustrations). On SATURDAYS, April 23, 30, May 7, 14.

J. ARTHUR THOMSON, Esq., M.A., Lecturer on Biology, School of Medicine, Edinburgh.—TWO LECTURES ON "THE BIOLOGY OF SPRING." On SATURDAYS, May 21, 28.

RICHARD CATON, M.D., F.R.C.P.,—TWO LECTURES ON "THE TEMPLES and RITUAL of ASKLEPIOS at EPIDAUROS and ATHENS" (with Lantern Illustrations). On SATURDAYS, June 4, 11.

Subscription (to Non-Members) to all Courses of Lectures (extending from Christmas to Midsummer), Two Guineas. Tickets issued daily at the Institution, or sent by post on receipt of Cheque or Post-Office Order.

Members may purchase not less than THREE SINGLE LECTURE Tickets, available for any Afternoon Lecture, for Half-a-Guinea.

THE FRIDAY EVENING MEETINGS will be resumed on APRIL 2nd, at 9 p.m., when Mr. W. H. CHRISTIE, the Astronomer Royal, will give a Discourse on THE RECENT ECLIPSE. Succeeding Discourses will probably be given by Professor ANDREW CLARKE, Mr. EDWARD A. MINGHIN, Professor W. A. TILDEN, the Right Hon. D. H. MADDEN, Lieut.-General the Hon. Sir ANDREW CLARKE, Professor W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE, the Right Hon. Lord RAYLEIGH, and other Gentlemen. To these Meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the Secretary. When proposed they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms; and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a reduced charge. Payment: First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a Year; or a composition of Sixty Guineas.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY of LONDON.

A COURSE of TEN POPULAR LECTURES on "AMPHIBIANS and REPTILES" will be delivered in the LECTURE ROOM in the Society's Gardens, Regent's Park, on THURSDAYS, at 5 p.m., commencing April 21st, by Mr. F. E. BEDDARD, M.A., F.R.S., Professor to the Society. Tickets for the whole Course, including Entrance to the Gardens, 10s. each; or 1s. each Lecture, not including Entrance, can be obtained on application to the Secretary, 3, Hanover Square, W.; the SHILLING Tickets can also be had of the Clerks, at the Kiosk in the Gardens. Fellows are admitted free.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and SCHOOL.

The SUMMER SESSION will begin on MAY 2nd, 1898. Students can reside in the College within the Hospital walls, subject to the collegiate regulations. The Hospital contains a service of 750 beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly £500 are awarded annually. The Medical School contains large Lecture Rooms and well-appointed Laboratories for Practical Teaching, as well as Dissecting Rooms, Museum, Library, &c. A large Recreation Ground has recently been purchased. For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to the WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C. and A Handbook forwarded on application.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

WANTED.—English GIRL, to join three others, aged 18, who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French Instruction, 29 Guineas a quarter.—CHAPERON, Office of THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CARRIAGES INSURED AGAINST ACCIDENTS caused by Collision, the Falling, Bolting or Kicking of Horses, or by being Run into by other Vehicles. Policies issued for the Year or Season only. Prospectuses post free.—IMPERIAL ACCIDENT, LIFE STOCK and GENERAL INSURANCE CO., Ltd., 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W. Agents wanted.

FOR SALE.

Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 3d. per line, prepaid.

SEVRES Tea Service, exquisite Watteau design, £45 (cost £100)—Punch, Vols. 1 to 100, rich half-purple morocco, £40 (cost £80)—Picturesque Europe, fine set, handsome half-morocco, £5 (cost £20)—Pickwick Papers, First Edition, 20s.—Hansard's Parliamentary Debates, 91 vols., handsome half-calf, £20 (cost £120)—CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New Street, and Baskerville Hall, Birmingham.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 3d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY OFFICE, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

WANT WATER COLOURS.—T. B. Hardy—R. W. Fraser, 1892-7—Tully Lott—R. Wane—Shalders—Rowbotham—Louise Rayner. Also choice Books, including Dickens, 30 vols., originals or reprint (circa 1870).—Thomson, Fenwick Street, Manchester.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN,
RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS
from ONE GUINEA
per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY
SUBSCRIPTIONS from
TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO AND A HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

NOW READY.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTION

A Study of the Rights, the Origin, and the Social Functions of the Wealthier Classes.

BY

W. H. MALLOCK,

Author of "Labour and the Popular Welfare," "Classes and Masses," &amp;c.

"He does not envelop the subject in a cloud of philosophic phraseology, he is always lucid and orderly, and he relieves his argument by welcome touches of satire and humour. His last book shows no deficiency in these qualities, and it is also perhaps the most complete and sustained effort of reasoning which he has so far produced."—Literature.

HIS GRACE o' the GUNNE By

I. HOOPER, Author of "A Slogar of Marly." Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

"Really a clever, entertaining volume.....No common piece of work."—Athenaeum.

WHO'S WHO, 1898. An Annual Biographical Dictionary. Fiftieth Year of Issue. Containing 1,143 New Biographies. In crown 8vo, 864 pages, bound in cloth gilt, with gilt edges and rounded corners, price 3s. 6d. net.

"This is undoubtedly the handiest biographical dictionary and compendium of information, referring to prominent persons and their doings, in existence."—Nature.

THE VITALITY of CHRISTIAN

DOGMAS, and THEIR POWER of EVOLUTION. By A. SABATIER, D.D., Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Translated by Mrs. EM. CHRISTEN. With Preface by the Very Reverend the Hon. W. H. FREMANTLE, D.D., Dean of Ripon. Crown 8vo, 96 pages, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net.

"Is really a gem of theological constructive criticism. With marvellous lucidity and penetration Dr. Sabatier states for us here the philosophy and natural history of the dogma, its position and use in the Christian evolution."—Christian World.

THE STORY of GLADSTONE'S LIFE.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Containing 45 Illustrations, mostly Page Portraits, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods. In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

"This is a charmingly written sketch of Mr. Gladstone's public career, with some interesting glimpses at the same time into his private life."—The Observer.

PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL

ECONOMY. Book III. Vol. II. By Prof. J. SHIELD NICHOLSON. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

"The new volume is marked by the same robust practicality and independence of judgment that gave value to its predecessor. . . . The book is one to be heartily commended to the student, the business man, and the politician."—Literary World.

ROME, HANDBOOK to CHRISTIAN

and ECCLESIASTICAL. By H. M. and M. A. R. T. Part II.—The Liturgy in Rome. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

"This guide-book is in its department very complete, and it is crammed full of curious learning."—Literary World.

O'SHEA'S GUIDE to SPAIN and

PORTUGAL. Tenth Edition. Edited by JOHN LOMAS. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 15s.

"This guide is admirable, by far the best for the English traveller visiting Spain."—Daily Chronicle.

A. &amp; C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

JUST PUBLISHED.

In 1 vol., royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 18s.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

BEING THE ELEVENTH VOLUME OF A NEW VARIORUM EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE.

EDITED BY

HORACE HOWARD FURNESS.

"We have not space to do full justice to Mr. Furness's volumes. Every instalment is of great value, and complete as regards the play treated."—Athenaeum.

In 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

COMIC HISTORY OF GREECE.

From the Earliest Times to the Death of Alexander the Great.

By CHARLES M. SNYDER.

Profusely Illustrated.

"This book was undertaken for the purpose of getting even with Greece for ever venturing to have a history."—PREFACE.

In 1 vol., post 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE GENERAL'S DOUBLE.

A Story of the Army of the Potomac.

BY

Capt. CHARLES KING, U.S.A.

Illustrated by J. Steeple Davis.

"Full of fighting, and very good fighting too. It is exciting and thoroughly interesting."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"As lively and truthful a picture of the struggle between North and South as we remember to have come across."—World.

In 1 vol., post 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE TRUE GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Representing him as a Man rather than as an Historical Figure.

24 Illustrations.

"Adding appreciably to our knowledge of the character and manners of the great President."—Academy.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY,
6, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden,
London.OLIPHANT'S LIST

NOTICE.—The First Large Edition of Dr. Whyte's "FATHER JOHN of the GREEK CHURCH" having been exhausted, SECOND EDITION is in the Press, and will be ready in a few days, price 2s. A Second Edition of Dr. Whyte's "SANTA TERESA" is Now Ready price 2s.

NOW READY, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

MUNGO PARK.

By T. BANKS MACLACHLAN.

The New Volume of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" Series. With the romantic story of Mungo Park is interwoven the history of the Niger and of the British and French settlements there. The Author gives a short but complete sketch of the spread of the French dominion in that region brought down to the present day.

"A study of the wanderings of Mungo Park is absolutely necessary to a clear understanding of the Niger question. We owe to Mr. MacLachlan not only a charming life story but a vivid chapter in the romance of Africa."—Leeds Mercury.

"While giving an eminently readable résumé of Park's travels in West Africa, it embodies a complete history of exploration on the River Niger."—Daily Mail.

BY P. WILSON, M.A.

LEADERS in LITERATURE. Emerson

—Carlyle and Emerson: a Comparison—Lowell—George Eliot—Mrs. Browning—Robert Browning—Matthew Arnold—Herbert Spencer—John Ruskin. By P. WILSON, M.A. Cloth extra 3s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

NEW SERIES of STILLING COPYRIGHT NOVELS.

The First Volume will be

BY REEDS and RUSHES. By Esme STUART. Cloth extra 1s. [Nearly ready.]

BY NEWELL D. HILLIS.

THE INVESTMENT of INFLUENCE

A Study of Social Sympathy and Service. By NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS, Author of "A Man's Value to Society." Cloth extra gilt top, 5s.

BY J. T. FORBES, M.A.

GOD'S MEASURE, and other Sermons

By the Rev. J. T. FORBES, M.A., of Dublin Street Baptist Church, Edinburgh. Art linen, 2s. 6d.

BY R. S. DUFF, D.D.

THE SONG of the SHEPHERD:

Meditations on the Twenty-third Psalm. By R. S. DUFF, D.D. Minister of Free St. George's Church, Glasgow. Art linen, 2s. 6d.

A SECOND EDITION IS NOW READY OF

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS. By

Rev. GEORGE JACKSON, B.A., of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission, Edinburgh. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

INEBRIETY: its Source, Prevention, and Cure. By CHARLES FOLLEN PALMER. Price 1s.THE FAR EAST—BOOKS TO READ.*A CYCLE of CATHAY: China, South and North, with Personal Reminiscences. By W. A. P. MARTIN, D.D., LL.D., ex-President Emeritus of the Imperial Tungwen College, Peking. With Map and numerous illustrations. 7s. 6d. Times.—"It is perhaps the most valuable contribution that has been made to our knowledge of China in recent years."

THE GIST of JAPAN: the Islands, their People, and Missions. By Rev. R. B. PEERY, A.M. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. 5s. Athenaeum—"Mr. Peery's volume portrays with admirable truth and justice the Japanese people."

OLIPHANT'S NEW UNIFORM EDITIONS OF

ANNIE S. SWAN'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt back and side, price 3s. 6d. each.

SHEILA*THE GATES of EDEN. With Portrait.THE GUINEA STAMP.*BRIAR and PALM*MAITLAND of LAURIESTON.*ST. VEDA'S*A LOST IDEAL.*WHO SHALL SERVE?OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, 21, Paternoster Square; and Edinburgh.

CONTENTS.

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| REVIEWS :   | PAGE    |
| An Amateur Biographer . . . . .                               | 387     |
| An Open Letter to Mr. W. H. Mellock . . . . .                 | 388     |
| The Man of Mystery . . . . .                                  | 389     |
| A Poet Theorist . . . . .                                     | 390     |
| For Stamp Collectors . . . . .                                | 391     |
| BRIEF MENTION . . . . .                                       | 391     |
| THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT . . . . .                              | 393-396 |
| NOTES AND NEWS . . . . .                                      | 397     |
| THE SUNKEN BELL" . . . . .                                    | 400     |
| THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS: VII., DON JUAN IN LONDON . . . . . | 401     |
| SHORT VERSE . . . . .   | 402     |
| THE FABLES . . . . .  | 403     |
| THE WEEK . . . . .  | 408     |
| THE BOOK MARKET . . . . .                                     | 403     |
| CORRESPONDENCE . . . . .                                      | 404     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED . . . . .                               | 405     |
| BOOKS RECEIVED . . . . .                                      | 406     |
| Announcements . . . . .                                       | 406     |

REVIEWS.

AN AMATEUR BIOGRAPHER.

Brief Lives," chiefly of Contemporaries, set down by John Aubrey between the years 1669 and 1696. Edited by Andrew Clark, M.A. 2 vols. (Clarendon Press.)

WHEN that learned and voluminous, but most inaccurate writer, Anthony Wood, was engaged, about 1667, upon his History of Oxford, he received much assistance from Mr. John Aubrey, of Trinity College. Aubrey, with far less industry, was a scholar, or, rather, antiquarian, of Wood's own kidney. He was a Fellow of the newly established Royal Society, and inclinately proud of it. He was curious in all matters of scientific invention and of hæological research, and also in those personalia about writers great and small, which, according to the point of view, may be set down as literary history or as gossip. His own career had been a chequered one. The son of a good Wiltshire family, he had entered away his estate in idleness and unprofitable schemes. Broken down in purse and health, he retained his lively interest in men and books and passed his life in the familiar companionship alike of the grave scholars and of fashionable wits. Differently he haunted libraries and coffee-houses, scribbling a little, drinking more, and eating most. His head and his note-books were crammed with reminiscences of the men he had known or seen, generally trivial, and often scandalous. The History of Oxford finished, Anthony Wood turned to the very more considerable Athene Oxonienses. Aubrey seemed the very man for his purpose. He begged him to commit to writing anything that might be suitable for the projected series of biographical notices of Oxford writers and bishops" since 1500, of which the work was to consist. Aubrey jumped at the proposal. He purchased some MS. books, wrote a famous name at the top of each page, and jotted down facts or what he could recall them or gather them from the conversation of his friends. These memoranda he presently sent to Anthony Wood, and to them the Athene certainly owes much of its life and colour, and not a little of its untrustworthiness. The thing led to a pretty quarrel between Wood and Aubrey. Aubrey meant to have his papers back, and to deposit them as a collection of importance in the Bodleian. They were freely written, and Wood was to make discreet use of them. Aubrey complained bitterly of the state in which they were returned, mutilated for the printer, and with libellous passages missing.

"Ingratitude!" he cries. "This part Mr. Wood hath gelded from p. 1 to p. 44. There are several papers that may cut my throat. He hath also embezill'd the index of it. It was stitch't up when I sent it to him."

We regret to add that Wood added insult to injury by speaking very slightingly of Aubrey in the preface to the Athene.

Aubrey is not, of course, a serious biographer. With the exception of the long account of his friend Thomas Hobbes, of Malmesbury, which was written under different circumstances from the rest of the Lives, he has left nothing but brief fragments, a few pages, or even a few lines long. They are, moreover, hastily scribbled, disconnected, full of erasures, and of gaps which he intended to fill up when he could ask the man who knew. Moreover, he made it a principle not to write down what was already, so far as he knew, in print. What he does record is often demonstrably untrue, and the rest is, therefore, where it cannot be verified, unreliable. Nevertheless, with the exception, perhaps, of the singularly candid self-revelations left us by such naïve men as Benvenuto Cellini, Konelm Digby, Herbert of Cherbury, there are few biographical works more interesting. Aubrey is interested in precisely those points which the serious biographer dismisses as not worth mention. He delights in quaint personal habits and eccentricities of character. He loves a racy story. He never forgets to tell you what a man looked like, what he wore, what he preferred to eat and drink. Of personal description he has the gift, though one may suspect here and there the satirical intention in the selection of features. "Raleigh" he says, "had a most remarkable aspect, an exceeding high forehead, long-faced, and sore eie-lidded, a kind of pigge-eie." And here is his vignette of Sir John Denham :

"He was of the tallest, but a little incurvetting at his shoulders, not very robust. His haire was but thin and flaxen, with a moist curl. His gate was slow, and was rather a stalking (he had long legges). His eie was a kind of goose-grey, not big; but it had a strange piercingness, not as to shining and glory, but (like a momus) when he conversed with you he look't into your very thoughts."

Of course Aubrey is as scurrilous as he can be. If you believe him you must condemn "Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother" as a very wanton. In his cynical reflections you behold scandals, as it were in the making. "Ben Jonson," he says, "had one eie lower than t'other, and bigger, like Clun, the player; perhaps he begott Clun." Of this quality in his gossip he seems to have been himself fully aware. "I here lay down to you," he tells Wood, "the naked and plain truth, which affords many passages that would raise a blush in a young virgin's cheek. So that after your perusal, I must desire you to make a castration, and to sowe-on some figge-leaves—i.e., to be my Index expurgatorius." Nor are his remarks always free from ill-nature. Speaking of his cousin, Harry Vaughan the poet, he observes that his father was "a cox-combe and no honeste then he should be—he coscened me of 50<sup>s</sup> once." And some personal rancour must surely underlie the following comprehensive comment on the manners of a gentleman curtly denominated as "Gwyn":

"A better instance of a squeamish and disobligeing, slighting, insolent, proud, fellow, perhaps cant be found then in . . . Gwyn, the earl of Oxford's secretary. No reason satisfies him, but he overweenes and cuts some sower faces that would turne the milke in a faire ladie's breast."

Aubrey may fail in decency or in temper, but he rarely fails to be entertaining. Indeed, your gossip of parts generally does amuse. And Aubrey goes to his work with such gusto; he is so much interested himself in his little tit-bits of information, that, perforce, he carries you along with him. His task is a joy to him. "Twill be a pretty thing," he writes to Wood, "and I am glad you putt me on to it. I doe it playingly"; and again, "After I had began it, I had such an impulse on my spirit that I could not be at quiet till I had donne it." His chief difficulty, indeed, was the morning headache consequent on his mode of life. "If I had but either one to come to me in a morning with a good scourge, or did not sitt-up till one or two with Mr. Wyld, I could doe a great deal of businesse." And for the social life of the seventeenth century, for the undress manners of the Caroline and Restoration writers, for the seamy side of a London against which the Puritan outcry was not unjustified, no better mirror than Aubrey's note-books can be desired. His facts may be distorted enough, but like the impressionist painters, he catches the atmosphere. Nor, of course, is the picture without its more pleasant passages. Aubrey has no wish to exaggerate his shadows or to leave out the high lights. He has much that is pleasant to record of his poets and scholars, generousities, genialities, devotions to causes and ideals, sweet tempers, honours bravely maintained. His very artlessness led him to depict the varied web of humanity truly as he saw it.

In the space of a brief review, to garner a tithe of Aubrey's good stories would be an impossible thing. Two or three specimens may serve to illustrate his manner and to send readers to the fountain-head. Jovial Bishop Corbet was a famous Oxford character, and the common-rooms supplied Aubrey with many a jest of him.

"His conversation was extreme pleasaut. Dr. Stubbins was one of his cronies: he was a jolly fatt Dr. and a very good house-keeper; parson of Ambroseden in Oxfordshire. As Dr. Corbet and he were riding in Lob-lane in wett weather ('tis an extraordinary deepe dirty lane) the coach fell, and Dr. Corbet sayd that Dr. Stubbins was up to the elbowes in mud, he was up to the elbowes in Stubbins.

One time, as he was confirming, the country people pressing in to see the ceremonie, sayd he, 'Beare-off there, or I'll confirme yee with my staffe.' Another time having to lay his hand on the head of a man very bald, he turns to his chaplaine (Lushington) and sayd, 'Some dust, Lushington' (to keep his hand from slipping). There was a man with a great venerable beard; sayd the bishop, 'You, behind the beard.'

His chaplaine, Dr. Lushington, was a very learned and ingeniose man, and they loved one another. The bishop sometimes would take the key of the wine-cellar, and he and his chaplaine would goe and lock themselves in and be merry. Then first he layes downe his episcopall hat—'There goes the Dr.' Then he putts of his gowne—'There lyes the Bishop.' Then 'twas 'Here's to thee, Corbet,' and 'Here's to thee, Lushington.'

Aubrey's MSS., or what Wood had left of them, were deposited in the Bodleian. From them a portion of the Lives were printed by Philip Bliss in 1813. The present handsome edition is the first complete one that has appeared. Those who know Mr. Clark's work for the Oxford Historical Society will not need to be told that it is a model of what a well-edited book of the kind should be. With the exception of a few quite impossible passages, Mr. Clark has printed the MSS. just as they stand, only re-arranging them so as to get the names into alphabetical order and to collect all the passages that refer to the same name together. A comparison with Dr. Bliss's edition shows not only that many of the Lives are altogether new, but also that to those previously printed many corrections and additions have been made. Much of the new material—for instance, the Key to Sidney's Arcadia, sent to Aubrey by a correspondent and inserted as it stood among his papers—well deserves the attention of biographers and literary historians.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MR. W. H. MALLOCK.

MY DEAR SIR,—Though I am personally unknown to you, yet I venture to address you in this letter because you were one of my earliest enthusiasms. As the author of The New Republic you seemed to my youthful imagination the most brilliant, the most trenchant of satirists, and, looking back down the vista of years, I can still find, in this your earliest volume, the promise of a keen observer, a sound thinker, and a writer of much polish and brilliancy. I am not sure whether that promise has been altogether fulfilled, but it was certainly there. There is a story, probably untrue, that the late Prof. Jowett said of you, disparagingly, that you would never do anything more than write a second-rate novel. You replied with The New Republic, in which, under the name of Dr. Jenkinson, you so happily ridiculed the late Master of Balliol and his foibles, the man who could not be offered a bishopric because, "though it would be a great compliment to learning, it would be a grievous insult to God." Nothing that you have done since in fiction has come up to that book in merit. You have attempted greater things, and no doubt the attempt must always count for something; but the world, after all, can only judge by achievement, and in no other book have you achieved the same indisputable and startling triumph. Other men have written similar satirical sketches in which contemporary characters have been held up to ridicule. The name of Thomas Love Peacock at once suggests itself. Mr. Hichens, to take a modern example, had a considerable success with his Green Carnation, and it would be easy to recall other instances, but in this particular line your New Republic seems to me easily first. Every character in it, Matthew Arnold, Pater, Jowett, Huxley, Tyndal, Pusey, Clifford (but especially the first three), is sketched with a master hand,—

"All his faults observed Set in a note-book, learned and conned by rote,"

as Cassius says, and that surely, though not in itself a very good-natured proceeding, is a valuable accomplishment in a writer in this genre. At the same time I cannot wonder that the friends of these gentlemen nourished considerable resentment toward you for so admirably pillorying their follies and vanities.

But The New Republic, you may say, was a youthful indiscretion, brilliant, no doubt, but in its nature essentially impermanent. And you will probably prefer to be judged by your later and more ambitious writings. Leaving out of account, then, that rather amusing skit, The New Paul and Virginia, which followed your first success, your work falls into three divisions. First of all there are the novels—A Romance of the Nineteenth Century, A Human Document, and the rest. These have, I know, many readers, and, I am willing to believe, many admirers. But I, alas! am unable to avow myself an admirer too. I admit their cleverness. Indeed, it would be impossible to deny it. Your work, even at its least successful, is always clever. I admit that they may fairly claim to rank, artistically, in a different category from the mass of merely successful Circulating Library fiction. But—the murder must out—I find them dull. This is, I fear, the besetting sin of the psychological novel, and you, as it seems to me, have been unable to escape it. Even your wit has failed to save you.

After your novels your poems. I remember some years ago seeing a volume of these advertised at the preposterous price (was it not?) of eight shillings and promptly ordering them. You see, I was still hypnotised by the glamour of The New Republic. I remembered one or two passages of occasional verse contained in it which displayed distinct ability, if no great inspiration, while the parody of Matthew Arnold's dreamy rhymeless verse displayed at least some mastery over technique. But your poems were disappointing. There was no "stuff" in them. They were full of echoes of things which I seemed to have read elsewhere. "By many a name, in many a creed, they had called upon me," as Mr. Swinburne sings, and their vellum cover and sumptuous amplitude of margin could not atone for the want of originality and force they enshrined. The poems were the "thin keen sounds of dead men speech." They had nothing new to offer, nothing save a fair standard of metric excellence, and a fair discrimination in the use of language. In a word, they were "minor" poetry, and minor poets, alas! a not uncommon.

You will say that it is very rude of your unknown correspondent, to damn your novels (except The New Republic) and to converse with this faint praise, but there is still another department of your work which remains to be spoken of, and of that I will write with very much greater favour. After the powder, the jam; after the Human Document and the poems, I come to those sociological and philosophical writings of yours which I always read with pleasure for their clearness of thought and precision of statement. The earliest of these is, of course, Is Life Worth Living?—a suggestive and, at times, brilliant re-handling of an old question. That it provides a conclusive answer to the pessimist, who is always with us, should be sorry to assert; but while it speaks forth with strict fairness the strength of the pessimist position, it, at the same time, points out where those who wish may find an escape from it. But I must really hasten to your latest work—Aristocracy and Evolution*—or if I do not, this letter will have come to a close before I reach it. And there would be to omit all mention of one of your most successful and, at the same time, most characteristic works. As an attack on the blunders of the modern Socialist—his want of intellectual clarity and his inability to grasp the stern facts of practical life—it is quite admirable. Its title, I fear, is somewhat misleading. By aristocracy, the vulgar are apt to understand merely what are called the "upper classes"—to wit, the House of Lords and perhaps the baronetage. Your "aristocracy," on the contrary, is what you may call the Aristocracy of Intellect and the Aristocracy of Energy—in other words, those persons who, by pre-eminent mental gifts, or pre-eminent organising or stimulating or business faculties, become the leaders of their fellow-men. You christen your theory, in fact, "The Great M Theory"; and your position is, that the real causes of progress in the world are the intellectual, social and industrial masterminds who alone are able to lead the masses of their fellow-men in the way they should go. The Socialists, on the contrary, as we all know, love to speak of these "leaders" of ours as created by society rather than as creating it. According to their creed the capitalists are not men who have been the cause of great advances in industry and commerce, and incidentally have reaped their reward for this, but robbers who, by superior astuteness, have contrived to appropriate to themselves the major part of the benefits of achievements which are due solely to the working classes. In this book you have no difficulty in showing that, far from this being the case, the working classes might have gone on toiling through the centuries without materially hastening the march of progress were it not for the "leaders," the "great men," the "Aristocracy" of industry who directed their labours. This is the main thesis of your book, and you have expounded it most luminously. And in these days we hear so much of the Man being the product of his Age that it is as well that we should be reminded, as you remind us, in clear language, that the Age is in at least as true a sense the product of the Man. Shakespeare was, in a sense, the product of the age of Elizabeth with its triumphs and adventures, its stimulating moral and intellectual atmosphere. But have not subsequent ages been, in some of their aspects, the product of Shakespeare? The great man is influenced by his age, but he moves his age also, and any social philosophy which ignores this, and pretends that social and intellectual progress springs from the multitude, and not from those who lead the multitude, is demonstrably fallacious. Men are infinitely various, and it is absurd to treat them, even for the sake of argument, as all alike.

* Aristocracy and Evolution. By W. Mallock. (A. & C. Black.)

I have only touched upon what seems to me the chief point in your book, but there are many other matters which I would speak of did space allow. In particular, I would refer, with admiration, to the vivid illustrations with which you accompany your argument, and the flashes of wit with which you lighten up your subject. But of these things there is no time to speak now, and your readers must discover them for themselves.—Believe me, your sincere admirer,
Y.

THE MAN OF MYSTERY.

The Life of Napoleon III. By Archibald Forbes, LL.D. With 37 Illustrations. (Chatto & Windus.)

IT is difficult to believe that any man, save a flunkey, should find the career of the second Napoleon, commonly called the Third, of an inspiring quality; and the wonted riskiness and brío of the style of Mr. Archibald Forbes have not been proof against the radical meanness and squalor of his subject. Never before have we encountered Mr. Forbes in so wordy, so politic, so portentously solemn a mood as in this Life; and never before have we found him failing to write with whole-hearted vigour and nervous snap, and to hit straight from the shoulder. It may be that years have taught him tediousness and circumlocution; but we refer to believe it is a temporary effect imposed by the dead-weight of his subject. From the outset we are sadly oppressed with the phenomenon. We come upon such crab-like, cumbersome, and ineffectual sentences as this: Queen Hortense "dreaded a repetition in the Eternality of those bloody tragedies which near the close of the previous century had made Paris a human shambles," which, of course, simply means "a repetition in some of the horrors of the French Revolution." By the former mode of expression there is no gain save in portentiousness and a sham kind of rhetorical dignity—as when one would call a "spade" an "implement of husbandry." There is, indeed, not only so much of the "implement of husbandry" style in the earlier chapters, but also so careful and gingerly a step among debatable matters, and withal so deferential an air of impressment and courtliness (as when, in the episode of escape from Italy, we are told with astonishment and admiration that "Prince Louis, the future Emperor of the French, in the dress of a flunkey, slept on a stone bench out in the open until at length horses were procured") that we are tempted to wonder whether Mr. Forbes had not undertaken to write this Life of Napoleon III. under lofty and distinguished patronage. But that impression wears off; and, although Mr. Forbes continues tedious and portentous until near the end, when he treats of familiar matters of military action, we are convinced he has done his utmost to compile a true history of the little Emperor, and not merely to achieve an apology for his life.

It must be admitted that it is difficult to be both fair and effective in writing of Louis Napoleon, who was at the same time so much less and so much better than he seemed, so much less a hero or personage and so much better a man. Mr. Forbes most conscientiously chooses the way of entire fairness, so far as it can be attained. He contemns equally the vehement and vitriolic abuse of Kinglake, and the turgid panegyric of Blanchard Jerrold, while he utterly ignores the windy anathemas and predictions of Victor Hugo. He chooses early to endorse the opinion of Louis Blanc. This is what he says on p. 61:

"Louis Blanc, with rare perspicuity, has thus described the character of the Prince at the opening of his active career: 'To be insensible and patient; to care for nothing but the end in view; to dissemble; not to expend one's daring on mere projects, but to reserve it for action; to urge men to devotedness without putting implicit faith in them; to seem strong in order to be so; such, in the egotistical and vulgar meaning of the phrase, is the genius of the ambitious. Now, Prince Louis possessed scarcely any of the constituent elements of that genius, whether good or evil. His easily moved sensibility exposed him unarmed to the spurious officiousness of subalterns. Through haste or good nature he often erred in his judgment of men. The impetuosity of his aspirations deceived him or hurried him away. Endowed with a natural straightforwardness injurious to his designs, he exhibited in curious combination the elevation of soul that loves the truth and the weakness of which flatterers take advantage. He was prodigal of himself to augment the number of his partisans. In a word, he possessed neither the art of husbanding his resources nor that of dexterously exaggerating their importance.'"

That must seem to-day a very generous estimate, for the sole remarkable thing about "Prince Louis" was his belief in the Napoleonic ideas. (Was not his favourite phrase "les idées Napoléoniennes"? and did he not write a book about them?) That belief made him not only respectable but formidable; for he held to it as salvation both for France and for himself with the tenacity and fervour of a religious enthusiast. Without it he would have been merely a completely amiable, undistinguished, and innocuous little man, with a languorous interest in art and literature, and an active pursuit of strange women and obscure superstitions, as befitted his origin—half Italian, half Creole. It is hard now to believe that for years he was known as "The Man of Mystery," and was the puzzle and the terror of European cabinets, and that the dread of him provoked our Volunteer movement.

The two unsuccessful attempts of Prince Louis to impose himself upon France as the heir and agent of the Napoleonic Ideas made him the laughing-stock of Europe; and no wonder. The first attempt—that on Strasburg in 1836—was conceived and carried out in the spirit of comic opera; indeed, a comic opera for stage production, if as fantastic, must be something more feasible and coherent. Mr. Forbes, in narrating it, forgets the dignity he has imposed upon himself, is compelled to write with a kind of reluctance, and rudely describes the Prince's proclamation as "bunkum." Concerning this predestined fiasco Kinglake, "the virulent enemy [says Mr. Forbes] of Louis Napoleon," remarks:

"In some of its features this attempt was a graver business than was generally supposed. At that time Louis Napoleon was twenty-eight years old." [And, therefore, presumably beyond the age of mere fantasy and comic opera.] . . . "The men [of the 46th regiment], taken entirely by surprise, were told that the person now introduced to them was their Emperor. What they saw was a young man with the bearing and countenance of a weaver" [why weaver?]—"a weaver oppressed by long hours of monotonous indoor work, which makes the body stoop, and keeps the eyes downcast; but all the while—and yet it was broad daylight—this young man, from hat to boot, was standing dressed up in the historic costume of the man of Marengo and Austerlitz. . . . But by and by Tallaudier, the colonel of the regiment, having been at length apprised of what was going on, came into the yard. . . . In a moment the Prince succumbed to the Colonel. . . . One of the ornaments which the Prince wore was a sword; yet without striking a blow he suffered himself to be publicly stripped of his grand cordon of the Legion of Honour, and of all his other decorations. . . . Louis Napoleon could not alter his nature, and his nature was to be venturesome beforehand, but to be so violently awakened and shocked by the actual contact of danger as to be left without the spirit and, seemingly, without the wish or motives for going on any further with the part of a desperado. . . . The moment he encountered the shock of the real world, he stopped dead; and becoming suddenly quiet, harmless, and obedient, surrendered himself to the first firm man who touched him."

"These be very bitter words," but there is a point of view from which they are fully justified, and that is the point of view of the average insular Englishman, who neither understands nor cares to understand the nature and phenomena of a "foreigner"—the point of view, in short, of Mr. Kinglake, "the virulent enemy of Louis Napoleon." These (and many more) are the words concerning the Strasburg episode of one who was a "virulent enemy," according to Mr. Forbes's own accusation, and yet all he can find to say in rebuke of them is, "The diagnosis is actually vitriolic in its bitterness, but it loses much of its venom because of its obvious and, indeed, undisguised animus." And the voice is neither that of a partisan nor of a good advocate. The second attempt, that on Boulogne in 1840, was perhaps more extravagantly and fantastically contrived and conducted than the first. Concerning it Mr. Forbes makes no comment at all. He contents himself with a full narrative of the episode, and adds the criticism of Kinglake, with the bare remark that it is "very biting."

It is thus plain that Mr. Forbes is no thick-and-thin apologist and admirer of Napoleon III., though he palpably dislikes to be forced to confess, now and then, that he stood in a mean or a ridiculous situation. On the other hand, he defends him where defence has been rare and condemnation general. In this country in 1851 there was scarcely a man of repute or knowledge to be found who would excuse the coup d'état that changed Louis Napoleon from Prince-President of the French Republic into absolute monarch of France: the insult to representative assemblies seemed so gross and the destruction of life and deprivation of freedom in the "days of December" seemed so wanton. But at this time of day the point of view is somewhat changed. Even in the land of "the Mother of Parliaments" we no longer have the old respect for talking-shops, nor the old patience with vain and tedious gentlemen who drown in floods of babble the precious hours that should be devoted to necessary matters of order and government; nor do we think that the persons of factious parliamentarians, who were ready if they got the chance to play a similar game to Louis Napoleon's, were especially sacred. We cannot but agree with Mr. Forbes that the French Assembly deserved the treatment it received—to be turned out as Cromwell turned out the Long Parliament; and we cannot pretend any sympathy with the self-seeking notable gentlemen who were arrested and kept a while in durance; least of all with the contemptible little Thiers, who, twenty years later, became President of the Republic. Louis Napoleon was no Cromwell; but it was with him as has been said of a well-known actor-manager of to-day: "He is not much, but he knows how to surround himself." Louis Napoleon had the faculty, in those early and more alert days, of surrounding himself; and of those by whom he was surrounded there was no abler nor more astute counsellor and agent than his half-brother, the Duc de Morny, the first patron of the late Alphonse Daudet, and the De Mora of Le Nabab.

Some critics have made it a reproach against Mr. Archibald Forbes that this Life of Napoleon III. is but a compilation. Yet it is hard to guess what else it should be, for recent French research has not been so rewarded with discovery as to tempt a foreigner to grub in original archives, even if they were accessible. Moreover, it is impossible that there is now anything to discover which can either raise or depress Napoleon III. from his recognised position as a well-meaning and amiable man, but a weak, timid, and ineffectual monarch. His kind has been common enough even in our own country; it has been loved and cherished at the fireside, but hooted and hustled from the throne. Mr. Forbes, as we have said, has not written this history of his public life with any enthusiasm, nor even (it seems to us) with much liking, but, all the same, his volume is such a useful compendium as has not been hitherto accessible.

A POET THEORIST.

Another Sheaf. By R. Warwick Bond.
(Elkin Mathews.)

It is an audacious thing to preface your verses. Yet in Mr. Warwick Bond's case we hold the audacity justified. The score of admirably written pages which stand as an introduction to Another Sheaf are packed with acute criticism and wise comment upon some of the conditions which at present govern the production of poetry. Mr. Bond's instincts are alarmed, not so much by the lack of popular interest in poetry, as by the free scope given in the absence of control which such interest would supply to certain tendencies which may result, he thinks, in the disintegration of poetry itself. He finds in our latest rhymers a striving after originality which leads them in extravagance, a worship of "sound, and colour, or merely metrical effects," to the exclusion of "thought and imagination, of clear sense and definite invention." Against "crude, indecent, or silly productions" he would set up "quiet work, rooted in the past and striving to base itself on immutable principles." In our own judgment Mr. Bond exaggerates the extent of the spirit which he condemns, and underestimates the real value of experiment in verse. Nevertheless his modestly and sensibly expressed protest is worth weighing, and his own achievement is an excellent illustration of the methods he would extol. He is in the classical tradition, and has caught much of its stately manner and dignified felicities. His verse is intellectualised, yet his elaborate stanzas have nothing rugged about them; they unroll a serene and melodious length. In the most considerable poem of the volume, "At Stratford Festival," there is fine thought, fine feeling, and fine music; we have read it with pleasure and shall do so again. Here are two stanzas on Shakespeare's return to Stratford Puritanism:

"He, too, confessed the auroral sympathies:
Afar through mist of triumph and of tears
He caught their paradisaic gleam, and saved
A quiet remnant from his strenuous years:
To Nature, wife, and child returning braved
The petty calumnies,
The peevish scorns, the looks precise that freeze
A wandering heart come back to wonted ways.
But witlessly ye raise,
Dear fools! your eyebrow of contempt, for these

Do but enlarge their empire by your ban!
Think of those stormy spirits as reeds of choice
Plucked by a fictive Deity that wrought
Tumultuous pipes for his great organ-voice,
Teasing life's every fibre to the thought.
Ye, whose mechanic plan
Would mend the bungling of this Ar'isan,
Con these last leaves; and, as blessed eyes discern
The all-conquering sunshine, learn,
The poet yet may purify the man?"

"The auroral sympathies" is a phrase that lingers, and the only thing we do not quite like is the running over of the sense from the first to the second stanza. Surely so long and elaborate a stanza-form may claim its progression by unities!

There is some fine austere writing in "The Ordered House," of which the larger part is a Stoic monologue by Brutus after Philippi. Here, too, Mr. Bond prefers an elaborate metre, and handles it with skill and distinction. This stanza, for instance, has its authentic dignity, and there are many as good:

"Hast thou not oft from some disastrous hour
Plucked such an issue as redeemed the field?
Can't thou not fashion from defeat a power
That mocks the victory of spear and shield?
If to our rude assault shall never yield
The fortress of thine unascended sky,
In sorrow shall the conquest be revealed,
In sacrifice the race their bliss descry,
And catch through mist of tears the blaze of Deity."

And finally, these beautiful lines were written as a "Swan Song" for Webster's noble and intimate tragedy, "The Duchess of Malfi":

"Pass gently, Life!
As one that takes farewell of a dear friend:
For ne'er till now were thou and I at strife,
Nor shall the sequel lend
The rich succession of thy smile and tear,
The conquering pride of love that tramples fear
And vaunts itself a rapture without end!
But mine is weariness thou can't not mend.

Come, kindly Death!
Unweave for tired hands the tangled plot!
To thy forgetful palace entereth
None to ask heriot
No hope and no regret—but ever, there,
Passes the slumbrous waft of popped air
O'er happy multitudes that have forgot:
Angel, I would be sleeping—tarry not!"

It is scholarly poetry, you see; meditative, interpretative, by no means strident. Mr. Bond defers legitimately to great masters: there is an Elizabethan note here, a note of Shelley there. The strongest individual influence is probably that of Matthew Arnold, and for the perpetuation of the Arnoldian tradition in English poetry we must always confess gratitude.

FOR STAMP COLLECTORS.

Stamp Collector. By W. J. Hardy and J. D. Bacon. (George Redway.)

This volume follows Mr. Hazlitt's The Coin Collector and Mr. Wedmore's Fine Prints in a Collector Series. Taken together these three books are a guarantee of the worth of the series. In one respect Messrs. Hardy and Bacon's book introduces a new note; its subject is acutely modern. Coins and stamps have been collected for ages; but the postage stamp was struck less than twenty years ago, and many of the first philatelists are living. Mr. E. von der Meek, the Russian collector, who has a right to be the father of the hobby, began collecting in 1854, and is still at work on his stamps. On the whole, it is clear that stamp collecting had its wayward beginnings about 1835. In 1860 Mme. Nicolas's shop in the Rue Tarbout, Paris, became a rendezvous for dealers; in 1862 the first English guide to stamp-collecting was published in London; and a few years later stamp-dealing became general enough to be ridiculed in the press and recognised in the Directory. Messrs. Hardy and Bacon scarcely trust themselves to write about those languid sixties. To have been a collector then!—that is the dream of every collector now. After 1866 the mania lessened. It was but gathering its force for an astonishing advance. From 1870 stamp-collecting has become the basis of a trade, the hobby of princes and millionaires, and the solace of tens of thousands of pettier men.

London, indeed, the world could not revolve so smoothly on its axis for the philatelist. The chapter of this book is devoted to "Stamps for Collectors"—stamps, that is to say, which have been called into being, not only useful, but to be gummied into albums. The industry still flourishes; and our authors give the following precious letter, written from Borneo by the agent of a stamp-collecting firm, and dated "Labuan, March 30, 1895":

"I have just come back from Brunei, having had the pleasure to see the Sultan and Postmaster about business principally. Let me explain that I am the only one who suggested to the Sultan that he should issue stamps, and I have arranged the whole thing. He and his Postmaster have no other way of the way to conduct any business. I can assure you that the delay in sending the stamps is caused by the illness of the Postmaster's wife—at least one of his wives. In the meantime the post-office is shut."

Stamp-making of this kind is now generally effectually discouraged.

We cannot trace the march of stamp-collecting as it is detailed by Messrs. Hardy and Bacon. Our authors are very bright; and the chapters entitled "Art in Postage Stamps," "Stamps with Stories," "Local Stamps," and "The Stamp Market" are all of interest. The book is hardly a guide to stamp collecting. Messrs. Hardy and Bacon greet the would-be collector with a friendly and weary smile. They do, indeed, descend to the plodding, interested collector (the less opulent collector," they call him), and give us descriptions of the collections of a child and a prince of the blood.

BRIEFER MENTION.

Some Welsh Children. By the Author of Fraternity. (Elkin Mathews.)

It would not be easy for the least impressionable to read the ten sketches comprised in this pretty volume without submitting to their fascination. Perfumed with humour and melancholy, they proceed from a mind in retreat from a world that has grown dull and stale. The nursery myths of Jack Frost and Betty Snow, of Morris the wind (perhaps), and of the monstrous house sprite, Evanrodenacw; the persistent inexplicable impressions derived from the nursery book-shelf; the mysterious properties of nursery toys and nursery furniture—all these are explored with such delicacy and sincerity that the sympathetic reader lives for some brief moments in the child's world of make-believe. Perhaps the most charming chapter of all is that which treats of "The Little Brothers." There had been born into this family of girls a little brother, but "God had taken him away from us because we were not 'worthy,' our mother had given us to understand."

"It was impossible to feel much warmth of sisterly affection for this spotless being. And while we felt the slight implied to ourselves, we fully concurred in our secret hearts with the wisdom which had ordained his removal from our midst. We knew well enough that we were no fit companions for immaculate purity. But we liked the distinction conferred by an angel brother, and heaven was the right place for him."

At last there came a little brother who did succeed in developing, from a disappointing stage of mottles, wrinkles, and baldness, into a very human and charming child. He occasionally had a difficulty in squaring matters with his father:

"Master Richard consoled himself for his defeat by making special mention of papa in his evening prayer in loud and unctuous tones. 'Grant, O Lord, that my dear father may be forgiven for his sinful temper this day, and give him grace to control his passion; soften his heart, O Lord,' &c."

Imagine the feelings of this same parent when, being introduced to the bedside of a relative sick unto death, the child broke eagerly forth: "May I go to your funeral, please? Do ask papa to promise to take me to your funeral." But this attraction towards the more solemn rites of religious service, unhappily, was not accompanied by such rigid orthodoxy as you might expect:

"When Richard heard of the terrible fate which overtook the laughing children who mocked Elisha's baldness, he hesitated long between incredulity and indignation.

His sympathies were naturally entirely with the children. 'It was too bad!' he declared with great disgust.

And the history of Ananias and Sapphira . . . only seemed to anger him against the Apostles.

'Peter hadn't been so very good himself,' he gloomily remarked. Then going to the root of the matter, after a moment's reflection: 'Jesus would never have done that!'"

One cannot but rejoice to learn that this prematurely critical habit in no way troubled his confidence as to the allotment of his own sempiternal mansion; for the child never grew up:

"He knew no fear.

'It does seem strange that I should die when there were so many old people in the village,' he said half-wonderingly; 'I should think they will be surprised to see me in heaven before Papa. You had better send down to the village to ask if anyone has any message they would like me to take for them. It's a good thing I can speak Welsh.'

We have quoted enough, we hope, to engage interest in a book which has real charm.

The Women of Homer. By Walter Copeland Perry. (Heinemann.)

MR. PERRY addresses himself primarily to those ignorant of Greek. After a brief general discussion of the "Homeric question," he describes the position of woman in Homeric civilisation, and proceeds to a study of the individual female types—divine, semi-divine, and human—painted in the Iliad and Odyssey. It is a good subject, more especially in view of the recent paradoxical theory put forward by Mr. Samuel Butler, that the very author of the Odyssey was a woman. But we cannot profess to be pleased with the way in which Mr. Perry has treated it. To rehaudle the criticism of Homer, after what has already been written, requires some subtlety of touch, and this Mr. Perry has not got. He means well, but he fails to catch the right accent. Instead of being simple, he is banal and commonplace, and his attempts to write brightly, and even humorously, only succeed in setting our teeth on edge. It is suburban, surely, to speak of Hecuba as turned into a "female dog," or, after stating that Homeric "marriage was a matter of arrangement and barter between the suitor and his intended father-in-law," to comment in a footnote, "How different from our own matrimonial arrangements, in which love and merit alone decide!" But for the infelicity of its manner, the book would be useful. Mr. Perry knows his archaeology, and explains it carefully. The English reader will not, however, understand why Ibycus sneered at the Spartan women as φαινομυρπιδες without a translation. There are numerous illustrations, not all remarkable for their relevance; and in an appendix Mr. Perry adopts the ingenious, but untrustworthy, views of the late Mr. Bonecke on the treatment of women in later Greek literature.

Side Lights on Siberia. By James Young Simpson. (Wm. Blackwood & Sons.)

MR. SIMPSON journeyed in Siberia in the summer of 1896 with a quick eye; and he has made a book of nearly four hundred pages out of his experiences. The note of it is the imminence of the great Siberian iron road from Russia to Vladivostok. It is clear that in this country we have not formed a just conception of this stupendous engineering work. But Mr. Simpson has come, seen, and — been conquered. He writes:

"When in the years to come men review the greater undertakings of the nineteenth century, it will be hard to find a rival to the Trans-Siberian Railway. Winding across the illimitable plains of Orenburg, traversing the broad Urals, spanning the widest rivers, like the Irtysh, Ob, and Yenisei, it creeps round the southern end of Lake Baikal, and mounts the plateau of far Trans-Baikalia. Thereafter, leaving behind it the Yablonovoi Mountains, the line descends into the valley of the Amur, exchanges it presently for that of the Ussuri, and ends at last in Vladivostok."

Such is the inspiring route of a railway which is twice as long as that which joins New York and San Francisco, and traverses a country inhabited by peoples that know not each other. All the more interesting by reason of the coming change is the account given of the well organised Siberian post system. Mr. Simpson describes its working in detail. Here is a part of the picture:

"Among ordinary passengers, the claim to horses at any station is decided by the order of arrival. The passage of the post is the one great hindrance to the eager traveller, as it leaves so many empty stalls behind it, and everyone must give precedence to it. Tables are hung upon the station wall showing when it is timed to reach that particular halting-place; hence the postmasters know exactly when to expect it, and for three hours before reserve the required number of horses. Moreover, the complement of horses kept at each station averages twenty-one, so the feelings of the traveller may be imagined when he sees the post drive in, consisting, as it often does, of five turandasses in charge of one or two armed officials. This means fifteen at least of the available stock swept away at once, and, if the station is crowded, there are heartburnings as one or two favoured individuals drive off with the remaining teams."

We have not space to follow Mr. Simpson into the penal settlements. He traversed the convicts' country and examined the convict life thoroughly. What we wish to note is that Mr. Simpson was led to the definite conclusion, on evidence supplied by the convicts themselves, that "the present condition of the political exiles is not so bad as many would have us believe."

Evolutional Ethics and Animal Psychology.
By E. P. Evans. (Heinemann.)

The interest of this book is primarily an ethical, rather than a psychological one. Mr. Evans desires to combat the view taken by scholastic philosophy, that as animals have no "souls" there cannot be, strictly, any moral duties towards them. The theory is not so paradoxical as it seems, because there may be a duty to act kindly towards animals without its being precisely a duty "to" the animal. Mr. Evans seems to have somewhat imperfectly grasped this distinction, and no doubt it is true that the belief that animals were made solely "for the use of man" has had its corollaries of practical brutality. Surely, however, Mr. Evans is overstating his case when he says of kindness to animals, that "no treatise or pastoral theology ever touches this topic, nor is it ever made the theme of a discourse from the pulpit, or of systematic instruction in the Sunday-school." We cannot answer for the Sunday-schools, but the following passage from a circular issued by the Education Department with regard to the instruction of day-schools lies before us as we write: "Good object-teaching develops a love of nature and an interest in living things, and corrects the tendency which exists in many children to destructiveness and thoughtless unkindness to animals, and shows the ignorance and cruelty of such conduct." It is, of course, true that the exclusion of animals from moral rights is inconsistent with the more extreme evolutionary psychology, for which the human consciousness does not differ in kind from the types of animal consciousness out of which it is conceived as being evolved. The bulk of Mr. Evans's book consists of a survey of animal consciousness from this point of view. He attempts to minimise the barrier between the animal and human self, criticises Prof. Max Müller's theory that this barrier is to be found in the capacity for articulate speech, and searches among animals for rudiments of æsthetic and even religious sentiment. Animals, he says, "are amenable to rewards and punishments, doing the will and seeking to win the favour of superior beings, on whom they are dependent, propitiating and fawning upon them, creeping and grovelling on the ground in abject adoration, in order to assuage their anger or to secure their kind regard." Well, if this is the religious sentiment, no doubt animals have it: to us it reads like a parody. Granted the general standpoint of his psychology, in our opinion a thoroughly false one, Mr. Evans has written an interesting and, on the whole, a well-reasoned book, and a book not devoid of entertainment. Some of his examples of the excess of sentiment towards animals are delightful: the lady, for instance, who advertised for "well-mannered and well-dressed children to be employed for several hours each day to amuse a sickly cat"; and Cardinal Bellarmine, who used to let bugs and other insects bite him undisturbed, on the plea that "we shall have heaven to reward us for our temporal sufferings, but these poor creatures have nothing to look forward to except the enjoyment of the present life." For some of Mr. Evans's animal stories we should ourselves desire very exact verification before using them for argumentative purposes: they have a suspicious resemblance to those which Balliol undergraduates used to send, and for all we know, still send to the Spectator. And Mr. Evans ought not to have quoted the statements of Mr. R. L. Garner, since he shows in a note that he is perfectly well aware of the probability that Mr. R. L. Garner is not in authority.

The Highlands of Scotland in 1750. From MS. 104 in the King's Library, British Museum. With an Introduction by Andrew Lang. (Blackwood.)

THAT convenient abstraction, the general reader, in spite of tourist-tickets, yachting cruises, and deer forests, still views the Western Islands and the Hill Country through the glamour of time and poetry. For he has trodden those showery solitudes with Vich Ian Vohr, Rob Roy, and Alan Breck Stewart, and trudged many a mountain mile beside the stirrup of Dr. Johnson, high chief of Island Isa. But the author of The Highlands of Scotland in 1750

went on his way unaccompanied by even an imagination. Indeed, an imagination was not required of him, for Mr. Lang, in a learned critical Introduction, tells us that he was probably a "Court Trusty," named Bruce, who was employed in 1749 to survey the forfeited and other estates, and to suggest schemes of reform in the interests of the Black Cockade. In a word, "the dog was a Whig," and, of course, performed his task in a violently congenial fashion. Here are no intimate pictures of manners, such as are to be enjoyed in Burt's Letters from the North of Scotland, or in Johnson, Scott, and Boswell; but an ordered array of plain statements, relating principally to the localities of the tribes, the names and characters of their chiefs, their disposition towards the Hanoverian Government, and the numbers of their fighting men. On most of these points the writer appears to be well-informed; but his estimate of the Highland strength on a war-footing at 220,000 claymores is, as Mr. Lang notes, enormously above that of the Gartmore MS., which places it at 57,500 men, a figure which Scott, who owned the MS., puts into the mouth of Bailie Nichol Jarvie. On the whole, the book is certainly one to be possessed by those especially interested in its subject, and it may be usefully compared with the volumes of Browne and Skene. But it is curious to observe that Bruce is so utterly prejudiced against the military spirit when it is displayed by the Hill-men that he finds no better word than "madness" to describe the heroism of the Macleans at Inverkeithing. He adds that, "tho' none but the Refuse and Gleanings of them went to the Battle of Culloden, yet no Clan lost near their Proportion, for of 240, most of their officers and above 160 of their men were left Dead upon the Field." Upon which one says with Boswell: "The very Highland names, or the sound of a bagpipe, stir my blood, and fill me with a mixture of melancholy and respect for courage."

Cassell's Family Lawyer. By a Barrister-at-Law. (Cassell & Co.)

This is a reference book of more than 1,100 pages. The author's aim, however has been to make the book readable and informing, even to the man who has no anxious need to consult its pages. What he very properly does not aim at is to instruct laymen how to conduct actions. The functions of the book are precisely analogous to those of a household medical book, with the difference that whereas the study of a book of medicine is apt to generate imaginary ailments, the study of this Family Lawyer will scarcely rouse the spirit of litigation. Cromwell described the law as "an ungodly jumble." Here it appears by no means a jumble, but as an everyday mentor and philosopher. We have chapters devoted to "Husband and Wife," "Parent and Child," "The Householder," "The Landlord," "Wills," "The Franchise," "The Law of the Workman," "Agents," "Bills, Notes, and Cheques," and so on ad infinitum. A bland introduction and a copious index complete a work of undoubted usefulness.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

CROSS TRAILS.

BY VICTOR WAITE.

"Mad with pain, he caught one man by the arm and swung him round, dashing his head against the wall with a sickening crunch. At the same time he hurled the second man from him with a kick. Then, with a bellow like that of an angry bull, he picked up a tile one-legged table that stood by the bed, and fell upon his assailants. The first man dropped with a fractured skull." Such is Mr. Waite's happy way. The story is of adventurous men, in South America and Australia, and of hidden treasure, and treachery and assassination, and love and strength, and every page is thrilling. A godsend to a schoolboy. (Methuen. 456 pp. 6s.)

THE HONOURABLE PETER STIRLING.

BY PAUL LEICESTER FORD.

This is the novel of Transatlantic politics which Americans have been buying to the extent of thirty-five thousand copies. We might quote the reply given by the editor of the New York Times Literary Supplement to the reader who asks if it is true that the character of Peter Stirling is based on that of Mr. Grover Cleveland: Mr. Ford was appealed to and asked if the character of Senator McGuire was not taken from Senator Hill and that of Peter Stirling from that of Mr. Cleveland, but Mr. Ford remains non-committal." (Hutchinson & Co. 417 pp. 6s.)

THE IRISH CIRCUMSTANCE.

BY EDWIN PUGH.

Twelve short stories by the author of that clever novel, The Man of Straw. Gathered from various magazines and newspapers, they do not all conspicuously reflect Mr. Pugh's studies of London life, many of the stories being rural in their setting; but this is not the case with "Bottles: a Cockney Ishmael," which opens in a downy public-house, where the smell of Thames mud is perceptible. "The Inevitable Thing" is another story of low London life. (Leinemann. 303 pp. 6s.)

THE BELICAN HOUSE, E.C.

BY B. B. WEST.

Open this story where one will, amounts of money greet the eye. The story is satirical of City doings, and particularly of the Hon. Mr. Qui Mal y Pense Company, Limited. Turning the pages in some bewilderment (for we are not financiers), we spy such sentences as these: "If he wanted £600, part in fruity port, he could have it at the usual rate." "The remaining £32 6s. 10d. . . was to be handed, less omnibus and other charges, to the Professor for greasing the palm of the Pontifical Prime Curser." "The total sum, some £78 odd, she poured into her brother's lap." "Mrs. Henry Palmerstown must in any case have her £750." In the City the story should find readers, or, at least—auditors. (Fisher Unwin. 276 pp. 6s.)

THE FORTUNE'S GATE.

BY ALAN ST. AUBYN.

The author of A Fellow of Trinity, and other stories over which undergraduates sometimes dare to make merry, is here again on the familiar ground. He is still, to adapt an old joke, calling up spirits from the 'Varsity deep. In the first sentence of the first chapter Andrew Clay goes to Cambridge. Subsequently we come to the larger life, but the story, in the main, is of the colleges and Downham, and Andrew's debts and idleness. "Fortune's Gate" is a pill, with the assistance of which Andrew hoped to make vast riches. (Chatto & Windus. 306 pp. 6s.)

THE KEEPERS OF THE PEOPLE.

BY EDOAR JEPSON.

Herein the author of A Passion for Romance blends two civilisations and three nationalities. Part of the story is laid in England, part in Russia, and part in Varandaleel, which lies east of Russia and hates it. Prince Ralph of Varandaleel, Prince Melinsky (his foe), Lord Lisdor, Althea, Ruth, Vashti, the Reverend Peter Stucker—these are sufficiently bizarre characters; and there is war, and a tiger fight, and love in plenty. A barbaric romance of the present time, with such a passage as this in it: "'No,' said Althea, 'I am sharpening this sword for you. If we get the worst of it, I am to kill you. That was Prince Ralph's orders; and he has my promise.'" (C. Arthur Pearson. 358 pp. 6s.)

LUCKY BARGEE.

BY HARRY LANDER.

Let us quote the dedication: "To the silent companions of many wasted hours, my bulldogs Boss and Spider, this book is dedicated without permission, as an acknowledgment of their grave contempt for such follies." The book, one sees, is humorous. It dealeth with the lower river, and hath a plethora of slang. (C. Arthur Pearson. 286 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE ROMANCE OF A NAUTCH GIRL.

BY MRS. FRANK PENNY.

Another of those Indian stories which are proclaimed in a preface to be concerned with hidden mysteries. At once we are hypnotised by motionless air, busy cicadas, and the soft moan of the casuarina's needles. Also there are devil dances and nautch dances, and when things are not pulsing wildly, sweetmeats and betel nut are handed round. The atmosphere of the temple and the demon-haunted grove mingles with that of the cantonment; nor is it surprising that Minachee finally "took wing to other scenes where the drumming of the tomtom and the orgy of the heathen poojah filled her wild heart with a gladness that made her life complete." (Swan Sonnenschein. 369 pp. 6s.)

A SECRET OF WYVERN TOWERS.

BY T. W. SPEIGHT.

Mr. Speight's hand is cunning in devising and unravelling mysteries, as readers of The Mysteries of Heron Dyke know. In the new book, the first wife of Mr. Drelincourt of Wyvern Towers is murdered, by whom no one knows, no one even suspects, until p. 289, when the clearing up begins. An old-fashioned and quite readable romance of the kind perfected by Wilkie Collins. (Chatto & Windus. 301 pp. 6s.)

A SOUL ON FIRE.

BY FLORENCE MARRYAT.

"His hands wandered about the soft-cushioned velvet, and he spoke to himself, until they rested on the top of a man's head—the head of a man who, apparently, still occupied the seat he had vacated." "His" hands were the Professor's ghost's hands. For the Professor, who was blue-eyed and brutal, was dead, and was just finding it out. Subsequently he met a number of persons whom he had known in the flesh and had not treated over well. A fantastic idea not too well carried out, but readable as everything of Miss Marryat's is. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 260 pp. 3s. 6d.)

FIGHTING FOR FAVOUR.

BY W. G. TARBET.

A kailyard romance of the seventeenth century, written in the first person. It concerns an attack by English pirates on a Scottish bark, and the subsequent capture, by the brave men of Anstruther, of the pirates, "whereof twa [writes the Anstruther minister in his diary] were hang'd on our pier-end, the rest in St. Andrews; with nae hurt at all to any of our folks, wha ever since syne have been free from English pirates. All praise to God for ever. Amen." (Arrowsmith. 318 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE VICAR.

BY JOSEPH HATTON.

Mr. Hatton has ere now found the material for stirring romances in Italy and Russia; here we have a story of English life. In the opening chapters the vicar's scapegrace son, Tom Hussington, is revolving desperate measures of raising money with his friend

Jim Renshaw. In the last chapter Jim is in the hands of the police, and Tom is saved only by the kindness of a rival in love. The story is thoroughly interesting, and the character of Lady Barwick, the intriguing widow, who bids the maid hide the Sporting Life and Tipster and spread forth the Guardian, when she is expecting visitors, is well realised. (Hutchinson & Co. 403 pp. 6s.)

MISTRESS BRIDGET.

BY E. YOLLAND.

"To this day the spirit walks: no one will pass alone between the box-tree paths of the Rectory garden; the weathercock turns in the wind with all the initials in view, and fragrant apples strongly scent the dormer chamber, always called 'Madam's Zimmer,' wherein no doubt to those whose ears are listening to it, the hum of a wheel can be heard in the stillness of the summer night, and were there eyes to see—a slender form, and delicate fingers spinning the web of fate. None of the old family remain." This formula is worked out in the old way. (F. V. White & Co. 264 pp.)

AN EGYPTIAN COQUETTE.

BY CLIVE HOLLAND.

Behold the story of Evan Grant, a young scientific journalist and the most brilliant contributor to the Torch, and Ethel Vallance, who being hypnotised at a séance by Spinoza—not the philosopher, but a mesmerist—straightway fetched a knife and stuck one of her suitors in the shoulder; and the consequence was that Evan Grant dreamed a dream, and went to Egypt and brought back a hypnotised female mummy and a papyrus. The latter was translated, and the former, in an attempt to de-hypnotise her, fell to dust. A very unreal piece of sensationalism. (C. Arthur Pearson. 232 pp. 2s. 6d.)

FOR LIBERTY.

BY HUME NISBET.

The author says that these "Chronicles of a Jacobin" are founded on a collection of autobiographical MSS. relating to Major-General George Martel, which have long been in his possession. The story takes us to Paris during the Revolution, and is carried down "to the downfall of those gore-grimed monsters who crushed Liberty, and made France the trembling home of Terror." (F. V. White & Co. 296 pp. 6s.)

BETWEEN TWO WIVES.

BY WILLIAM TURVILLE.

This is a very long story, divided into three books. We permit the reader to divine its contents by such chapter headings as: "The Motive and the One for Passion," "Haw, haw!" "Asperities," "Gall and Nettles," "The Garden Party," "Washing Day," "A Dinner Pill," "A-weary of the Sun," "Claimed," and "After Me the Deluge." Four hundred and fifty-one pages of love and talk. (Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 451 pp. 6s.)

IN THE PROMISED LAND.

BY MARY ANDERSON.

The story of Rahab, who dwelt on the city wall of Jericho, re-written and elaborated. Joshua is introduced as one of the characters, and the King of Ai as another; and the destruction of Achan and his family is a leading incident. The story concludes with a suggestion of Rahab's repentance and happier life. (Downey & Co. 288 pp. 6s.)

A POINT OF VIEW.

BY CAROLINE FOTHERGILL.

We have here one of those stories which may be said to have several heroes and heroines; and their difficulty is to sort themselves out into married couples. The sorting process entails mistakes and heart-burnings. A quiet country setting is sufficient for such a story, and we have it. For the rest, the characters are carefully drawn. (Arrowsmith. 312 pp. 3s. 6d.)

A TWO-FOLD SIN.

BY M. BRAZIER.

The mansion is "noble" and "castellated"; and a "young man about seven-and-twenty" (a stranger) exclaims: "How fair a scene; can I ever hope to aspire to such a home, or will it only come when youth and energy have fled? Ah, well! a truce to sad thoughts, I will not be disenchanting on this lonely evening, but let yonder setting sun be the harbinger of bright days to come." The story that opens like this is ever with us. We admire its—persistence. (Digby, Long & Co. 188 pp. 2s. 6d.)

REVIEWS.

American Wives and English Husbands. By Gertrude Atherton. (Service & Paton.)

This is a stronger piece of work than His Fortunate Grace: more ambitious, and achieving more. The somewhat clumsy title strikes a keynote. This story, like the last, deals with the theory or practice of Anglo-American intermarriage. Mrs. Atherton would protest, one gathers, against the blunt judgment which lumps all American wives into a single unflattering category. After all, she points out to us, there is a world of difference between, say, your raw Western heiress and the Southern woman of good Californian family with a century or two of delicate breeding behind her. The former does not beseech a coronet; the latter may meet an English noble with a pride of race equal to his own. Such a one is Lee Tarlton, Mrs. Atherton's heroine. Her personality dominates the book. She is well conceived and thoroughly alive. We rejoice that she is beautiful, for heroines with lank drab hair and squat figures pall on the reviewer; but when to beauty she adds brains, courage, and a high sense of honour, we feel that Lord Maundrell is a lucky man. He, too, is well drawn, though with a touch of Transatlantic scurr for the impressive "set" Englishman. The plot is not much; the interest centres in Lee's development as a Californian girl and an English bride. Over against her is set her husband's stepmother, also an American, of rank extraction, who brings Lord Barnstable's fortune and good name to ruin. He learns at last that the expenses of Maundrell Abbey are being paid out of her lover's purse, and a strong scene between him and the true-hearted Lee follows:

"He was sitting at his desk writing; and as he lifted his hand at her abrupt entrance, and laid it on an object beside his papers, she received no shock of surprise. She went forward and lifted his hand from the revolver.

"Must you?" she asked.

"Of course I must. Do you think I could live with myself another day?"

"Perhaps no one need ever know."

"Everybody in England will know before a week is over. She gave me to understand that people guessed it already."

"This seems such a terrible alternative to a woman—but—"

"But you have race in you. You understand perfectly. My honour has been sold, and my pride is dead: there is no place among men for what is left of me. And to face my son again! Good God!"

"Can nothing be done to keep it from Cecil?"

"Nothing. It is the only heritage I leave him, and he'll have to stand it as best he can. It won't kill him, nor his courage; he's made of stronger stuff than that. And if I've brought the family honour to the dust, he has it in him to raise it higher than it has ever been. Never let him forget that. You've played your part well all along, but you've a great deal more to do yet. You'll find that Fate didn't steer you into this family to play the pretty rôle of countess—"

"I am equal to my part."

"Yes, I think you are. Now, I have an hour's work before me. I can't let you go till I've finished. You are a strong creature—but you are a woman all the same. You must stay here until I am ready to let you go."

"I want to stay with you."

"Thank you. Sit down."

He handed her a chair, and returned to his writing.

* * * *

Lord Barnstable laid down his pen and sealed his letters. He stood up and held out his hand.

"Good-bye," he said.

They shook hands closely and in silence. Then she went out and he closed the door behind her. She stood still, waiting for the signal. She could not carry the news of his death to his son until he was gone beyond the shadow of a doubt. It was so long coming that she wondered if his courage had failed him, or if he were praying before the picture of his wife. It came at last."

Lord Barnstable dies, but the atmosphere remains electric. We somehow expect that Lord Maundrell will follow in his father's footsteps, and that Lee will fall into the hands of a "magerful" compatriot who has encompassed her with vows since childhood. And then—there is no ending: Lee seeks her husband's study in trepidation; "Cecil was writing quietly."

A Voyage of Consolation. By Sara Jeannette Duncan.
(Methuen & Co.)

THIS is an amusing story, with a love motive strong enough to set it going and finish it off. The heroine, Mamie Wicks, writes in the first person, and we are at once made acquainted with the fact and the manner of her broken engagement with Mr. Arthur Greenleaf Page, of Yale College. Mamie has been to England and has returned to Chicago with an English accent and a new view of the American twang. Mr. Page, to whom attachment to the American accent is the alpha of patriotism, is so shocked that the engagement is broken; and Mamie instantly arranges a trip to Europe with her parents by telephone. It is with the travel adventures of these three that the book is concerned. Poppa, who is a Senator, is consistently dry and amusing; Momma cautious and absurd; and Mamie holds the pen.

In Rome Mamie is approached with a proposal of marriage by a very but nearly destitute Italian Count, to whom Poppa had inquisitively talked about his soda business in the train from Genoa. Here is Mamie's story of the Count's offer:

"If I must speak of myself, believe me it is not a nobody, the Count Filgiatti," he went on at last. "Two Cardinals I have had in my family and one is second cousin to the Pope."

"Fancy the Pope's having relations!" I said; "but I suppose there is nothing to prevent it."

"Nothing at all. In my family I have had many ambassadors, but that was a little formerly. Once a Filgiatti married with a Medici—but these things are better for Mistra and Madame Wiek to inquire."

"Poppa is very much interested in antiquities, but I'm afraid there will hardly be time, Count Filgiatti."

"Listen, I will say all! Always they have been much too large, the families Filgiatti. So now perhaps we are a little reduce. But there is still some things—ah, signorina, can you pardon that I speak these things, but the time is so small—there is fifteen hundred lire yearly revenue to my pocket."

"About three hundred dollars," I observed sympathetically. Count Filgiatti nodded with the smile of a conscious capitalist. "Then, of course," I said, "you won't marry for money." I'm afraid this was a little unkind, but I was quite sure the Count would perceive no irony, and said it for my own amusement.

"Jamais! In Italy you will find that never! The Italian gives always to heart before—before—"

"The arrangement," I suggested softly.

"Indeed, yes. There is also the seat of the family."

"The seat of the family," I repeated. "Oh—the family seat. Of course, being a Count, you have a castle. They always go together. I shall be forgotten."

"A castle I cannot say, but for the country it is very well. It is not so amusing there, in Tuscany. It is a little out of repairs. Twice a year I go to see my mother and all those brothers and sisters—it is enough! And the Countess, my mother, has said to me two hundred times, "Marry with an Americaine, Nicco, it is my command." "Nicco," she calls me—its what you call jackname."

The Count smiled deprecatingly, and looked at me with a great deal of sentiment, twisting his moustache. Another pause ensued. It's all very well to say I should have dismissed him long before this, but I should like to know on what grounds?

"I wish very much to write my mother that I have found the American lady for a new Countess Filgiatti," he said at last with emotion.

"Well," I said awkwardly, "I hope you will find her."

"Ah, Moes Wick," exclaimed the Count recklessly, "you are that American lady. When I saw you in the railway I said, "It is my vision!" At once I desired to embrace the papa. And he was not cold to me—he told me of the soda. I had courage, I had hope. At first when I see you to-day I am a little derange. In the Italian way I speak first with the papa. Then came a little thought in my heart—what is propitious! In America the daughter make always her own arrangement. So I am spoken."

"But this I rose immediately. I would not have it on my conscience that I toyed with the matrimonial proposition of even an Italian Count. I mentioned the matter to my parents, thinking it might amuse them, and it did. From a business point of view, however, papa could not help feeling a certain amount of sympathy for the Count."

"I hope, daughter," he said, "you didn't give him the ha-ha to his face."

The author's aim is to be amusing; and in this she succeeds. Her keen observation is turned quite as much on the American tourist as on European sights and customs; and the result is a very clear novel of travel.

The Scourge-Stick. By Mrs. Campbell Praed.
(William Heinemann.)

MRS. CAMPBELL PRAED has struck out in this volume into a vein new to her, and fortunately for her readers she has produced a story of much more than her usual significance and power. One cannot but shrink occasionally from the excessive morbidness of the book. It deals with a girl of sensitive and introspective temperament who, failing as an actress, hastily accepts an offer of marriage from a wealthy admirer, Hector Vassal, whose cold and ruthless character the author, with a motif-like persistence, likens to the type of the Roman Emperors. "Agatha Greste, who had odd fancies, used to say that he was a reincarnation of the Roman period." Of course they are unhappy—their tastes conflict in every interest, their ideas in every aspect of life. And one day the inevitable happens. The story is not to be told apart from the context; but it may be said that the final development of the plot is a very clever and ingenious display of mechanism. The psychology and soul-stirring of The Scourge-Stick are not its strongest point. The writing is too much in gasps. Dots and dashes take the place which, under the old dispensation of feminine literature, would have been filled by italics. Open the book at random, and your eye lights on a paragraph like this:

"Anything—anything but that. I should feel it was the offence against the Holy Ghost. . . . I know that I have sinned against you and against the law, in breaking my marriage oath. . . . I know it now. . . . But there's just this excuse for me. . . . I did love, with my whole heart and soul. . . . I made a religion of my love. . . . I can't dishonour it."

This method gives emphasis at the expense of disjointedness; and when it is pointed out that nearly the whole book, certainly all the heroine's part of it, is conducted on this system of spasms and jerks, it will be clear that restraint is the one consummate quality which is absent from it. Nor is Mrs. Campbell Praed above a certain preference for the needlessly unpleasant, not from the moral, but from the artistic point of view. The closing scenes of the life of Mr. Vassal, the worn-out debauchee clinging with frantic eagerness to the dregs of vitality, ordering his wife, when no longer able to stir himself, to read indecent French novels to him, throwing off his life-time's mask of respectability more and more as his senses dull, may not be untrue, but are they art? Was not this one little picture of the dying man enough without over-elaborating it?

"Only Bunchy, attracted by the litter of flowers, peeped furtively in at the outer vestibule and, catching sight of the dread-inspiring figure in the chair, ran swiftly away. Somehow, Mr. Vassal, as he sat there with his fierce eyes gleaming from over his book or paper at any sound that caught his attention, made one think of one of those old, bloated, uncannily marked spiders one sees lying in wait for unsuspecting flies. His limbs had a shrunken look owing to his huddled position in the great chair; and his head seemed to have grown larger, while his face was yellow and more deeply lined and broader about the jaws, giving the effect of a faint leer."

Mrs. Campbell Praed uses a larger canvas and a freer brush in The Scourge-Stick than she has done before, but she should tone down the crudeness of her colours. There is too much red and yellow about the story of Esther Vrintz.

THE CONFESSION OF A DISAPPOINTED AUTHOR.

A REMARKABLE "human document" is printed in the current New Century Review above the signature of "Julian Croskey"—a name not unfamiliar in connexion with the "Pseudonym Library," where it appeared on the title-page of a story entitled The Shen's Pigtail. The writer bids a disgusted farewell to literature; and his article claims to be an absolutely frank statement of how he has fared in authorship. The value, though not the interest, of his article is somewhat discounted by the fact that he has used literature merely as a stepping-stone. "Julian Croskey" has spent some years in China. He held a position in the Chinese Customs, but becoming discontented made a wild attempt to get up a rebellion, was arrested, and being handed over to the British Government was then under the Foreign Enlistment Act sent to prison. In prison he revolved a quixotic scheme of raising a body of gentlemen-adventurers in English society to exploit China. The first thing was to get into society. While therefore keeping up his knowledge of Chinese, studying military tactics, and keeping in touch with his native confederates, "Julian Croskey," embarked on a two-years' attempt to win fame as an author. His hardships seem to have been many and severe; but, again, it is necessary to point out that they have not been of the kind which are inseparable from literary aspirations. After the first three months—during which period he wrote twenty-six magazine articles and two books—"Julian Croskey" went into the London Hospital, having broken down from "starvation, fever, and isolation." Thence emerging, he borrowed fifty pounds. "On this fifty pounds," he writes:

"I took a small room near Hampstead Heath for four shillings and sixpence a week, living on tinned meat and opium. I was here for a year, and, although full of creativeness, wasted the year in what I thought the more important duty, the composition of my bible and military scheme of conquest. I joined the Volunteers as a private, and made an exhaustive study of tactics and armament by the book. I was already beginning to feel the pleasure of writing fiction, and suppressed my eagerness in order to finish my technical work with a constant effort. My invention was so abundant that I thought it would easily stand the postponement of a year. Fatal postponement!

I now began to send out my slum work, and, for the first time, to court the agonies of refusal. On the whole, I was successful for a beginner, although I thought I was a terrible failure. I placed three or four articles with Temple Bar, two tales, and The Shen's Pigtail in Mr. Fisher Unwin's Pseudonym Library. My agreement with Mr. Unwin specified two or three other books which I was to supply, so that if I had taken to literature then I should at once have been launched. I, however, neglected my part of the agreement, and let my opportunity slide. During that year I made fifty pounds out of my first three months' work. Messrs. Bentley have still a typed MS. of mine, consisting of articles on China, which may or may not have appeared. I have changed my address often, and do not read magazines. I had intended adding to my labours by illustrating my own tales. The first half of The Shen's Pigtail went to the Strand Magazine, with several illustrations, at least correct in local colour, and came back after two or three months without them. I gave up sending illustrations.

During the year '93, then, I wrote little for publication. I certainly sent out my military book, The Army of the Naturals, a sort of Spartan Utopia, to several military publishers, who admired it, but said it would not pay; Messrs. Kegan Paul also offered to accept it if I would bear part of the cost. I consequently withdrew it, feeling that it would be time enough to publish it when I had made my entrée into society by fiction. This was on a par with the rest of my folly, for the book is now useless, as my heart is no longer in its tenets. I wrote also during this year my Recollections of a Prisoner, and it was accepted by Messrs. Chapman & Hall on the condition that I should tone down the style. In my youthful conceit I did not like the reader's honest brutality, and let that opportunity also go by. I have found since that he was right, and the style was abominable. I found such good stuff in the book that I thought it worth re-writing; and now I know that the MS. is doomed, for I never finish a revision. That, then, was the third labour wasted; my biography (The Strange Affair of Mr. M— in China), my Utopia (The Army of the Naturals), and my prison recollections (In Gaol). These MSS. are now in an inchoate state, and useless for publication. After ten or twenty years I might possibly be equal to reviving them, for want of better copy.

However, I was prepared to make good use of my third year ('94), the year in which The Shen's Pigtail appeared, when a catastrophe happened. I accepted a clerkship. My people insisted on my earning a reasonable living, and I weakly consented, because they had been at great pains to find me a place. It was against all my better judgment. I had enough still to live on with great economy, and brains ready and willing to do good work. My office was in Pall Mall, and I moved my 'diggings' to Bloomsbury. I endeavoured to make my first attempt at fiction by working after office hours. It was the book I had had in my mind during the previous year of technical work, and foreshadowed, in the form of piratical novel, my schemes for the subversion of the world—an appendix to the 'gospel' for the guidance of 'my gentlemen-adventurers' still to be sought. In spite of its purpose there was some astonishing literary work in the book (a safe boast, for it will never appear now). I sent the first part to Mr. Unwin, who said it appeared to him too realistic for a 'boy's book.' My absurd folly took offence at the expression 'boy's book,' and I never sent Mr. Unwin the remainder, which he wished to read. When the book was finished I had lost self-confidence, and was afraid it was far too audacious. The next year several books appeared on the same lines, and met with great success. The Great War of '97, for instance. My book accurately anticipated the China-Japan War and the invasion of Corea, but when the war came I felt that I had lost my opportunity of being a prophet. I was also timid to issue, as history, the imaginary success of an English adventure in China; it seemed like libel. There was some local colour in it, which I presume, is seldom likely to be repeated, because I am the only novelist who has belonged to the Kolao Revolutionary Society and held council with Chinese rebels. However, it is all dead now; it seems to banal to me who am familiar with it. I have, too, unfortunately cast the book up beyond repair for use in magazine stories and short book. Fourth labour, and second year wasted!

Feeling that my work was spoiled by the office, and clinging still to the faith in my ability to conquer a profession which I used contemptuously as a jumping-off place, I gave up my clerkship at the end of the year determined to face poverty and work again. It was a good resolution and might still have borne fruit. During the first few months of '95 I wrote Max, a tremendous biographical work of the length and form of Pendennis, narrating my adventures from early youth. It was over 200,000 words long. In this I again incorporated my China experiences, but with the conviction that it was the last time I could touch that sickening record. Resolved to begin at the bottom, in order to get it accepted once, I sent it to the Tower Company, whose reader suggested that should be cut in half, and accepted the half. I made the necessary alterations, relegating my China experiences ultimately to the waste-paper box, and by the time I had done it the Tower Company wound up its affairs. A domestic interruption then occurred which quite split up my tranquillity for some months. I again borrowed money, and took a holiday by myself, believing that I was going to be married. . . .

From this time, the spring of '95 onward, I have drifted from my ambitions and knocked myself to pieces. During the year I was unable to plan anything, and despaired of literature. . . . I went round in a continuing circle of desperate plans, impotence, refuge in creative work, and revived ambition again. . . . In the intervals of literary impulse I wrote Merlin and The Chest of Opium, which appeared that autumn ('96); but they were mere pot-boilers, and I had no heart in the works beyond pecuniary need. I also placed Max with Mr. John Lane. In this way I earned £70 during 1896. I also wrote a novel called Clon for Mr. Lane, in two months, and it proved to be too 'thick.' I wrote also the first of a series of detective stories, called 'Craft and the Criminal,' for a magazine, and the magazine never appeared. And I placed two tales with the English Illustrated, neglecting again a lucrative opening for a series. My opportunities were excellent for a professional scribbler, but I would not make it my profession. . . .

If I ever resume the pen it will be my third start in the one profession which is unusual. I began with The Shen's Pigtail, under the pseudonym of 'Mr. M—.' I used this name from '93 to '96, with the exception of two magazine tales under the name of C. W. Mason, the China articles by M. Jones, two 'threepenny dreadful' pot-boilers by M. Cricklewood, and two tales which I gave to other young authors. Being tired of these pseudonyms I made a fresh début in '97 under the name of 'Julian Croskey,' with a long novel Max, and forthcoming issue of Merlin. Now, with this record of failure, and the possibility of publication of one or two MSS. which are out, I have forgotten where I drop the name of 'Julian Croskey.' I believe I have five tales accepted somewhere which are yet to appear, but I have burnt my records and cannot recall them. I have asked one editor if he would pay me in advance, but have had no reply. I have absolutely wasted six years, have wasted, indeed, the first thirty years of my life.

And now, vale. I am afraid my promise of writing a true chapter of humanity has miscarried. I have done nothing but advertise my own inédits. There is, nevertheless, one moral to my tale, and that is that if you would succeed as an author, be one and nothing else. If you beg, borrow, or steal as much as £50 a year, cut yourself off from everything and write. . . ."

We hope that 'Julian Croskey,' having disburdened his mind, will see his career in a more favourable light. We do not believe that his last six years have been so "wasted" as he imagines, and we should say that his chance of doing creditably in literature is a respectable one. And, as if to confirm our view, we notice that Mr. Lane advertises this week that Mr. 'Croskey's' Max is in its second edition.

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1898.

No. 1353, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| obtained of a News-vendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .                 | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . . . .                | 0 15 3  | 0 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices : 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

"Cannon his name,
Cannon his voice, he came."

THESE are the first two of the eight hundred odd lines of Mr. Meredith's second contribution of Napoleonic verse to Cosmopolis. Some might say, borrowing from the Douglas Jerrold mint, that these are the only understandable lines, but that would be unjust, as there are many illuminative passages in the whirl of imagery and gymnastic thought that go to the making of this feat in verse. We can place our hand upon our heart and say we have read it through from "Cannon his name" to "Hull down, with mast against the Western hues," and, if we say that it is our intention never to renew the escalade, it is because this is not the kind of poetry we read for pleasure. At the same time, we offer our humble tribute of admiration to the splendid vigour of a mind that could conceive and bring forth such a giant exercise in the art of ode-making.

Our first stumble occurred on the second age:

That Soliform made featureless beside
His brilliancy who neighboured: vapour they;
Vapour what postured statutes barred his tread."

et against that the vivid imagery of these two lines:

Kind to her ear as quiring Cherubim,
And trampling earth like scornful mastodons."

and these:

Like foam-heads of a loosened freshet bursting banks,
By mount and fort they thread to swamp the sluggish plains."

In the passage that follows it was "the hydrocephalic aërolite" that pleaded for quotation:

"Now had the Seaman's volvent sprite,
Lean from the chase that barked his contraband,
A beggared applicant at every port,
To strew the profitless deeps and rot beneath,
Slung northward, for a hunted beast's retort
On sovereign power; there his final stand,
Among the perjured Scythian's shaggy horde,
The hydrocephalic aërolite
Had taken; flashing thence repellent teeth,
Though Europe's Master Europe's Rebel banned
To be earth's outcast, ocean's lord and sport."

HERE, finally, is a characteristic Meredithian passage:

"He would not fall, while falling; would not be taught,
While learning; would not relax his grasp on aught
He held in hand, while losing it; pressed advance,
Pricked for her lees the veins of wasted France;
Who, had he stayed to husband her, had spun
The strength he taxed unripened for his throw,
In repercussent casts calamitous,
On fields where palsyng Pyrrhic laurels grow,
The luminous the ruinous.
An incalcescent scorpion,
And fierier for the mounded cirque
That narrowed at him thick and murk,
This gambler with his genius
Flung lives in angry volleys, bloody lightnings, flung
His fortunes to the hosts he stung.
With victories clipped his eagle's wings."

Yet one more quotation: one line in the Ode which aptly describes the effect upon the ordinary reader after grappling with the 800 lines:

"The innumerable whelmed him, and he fell."

APROPOS of a second edition of the Ode, we notice, by the way, that a flippant critic commenting upon the phrase "incalcescent scorpion" suggests that some editor of the future, more intent upon fact than imagination, will probably alter it to "incandescent Corsican."

It was almost a relief to come back to earth and Mr. Andrew Lang on p. 69 of the same issue of Cosmopolis—to such a morsel of natural happy-go-lucky criticism as this: "One would be glad to lie on a sofa, like Gray, and read dozens of novels by Miss Coleridge, if they were all as good as The King with Two Faces." Half way down the same page we found something which, as Archdeacon Farrar said of Mr. Hall Caine's Christian, "made us think." There Mr. Lang is allowed by the editor and the printer's reader of Cosmopolis to speak of The Master of Ballantyne. If such a misprint is possible in "Notes on New Books," then misprints are also possible in Mr. Meredith's "Napoleon." Can it be that —? We await a second edition of the Ode with anxiety.

As a matter of fact, if Ballantyne were to come into the question at all it would be as master, with R. L. S. for pupil. Most boys of the last generation date their first desire to write stories from reading Ballantyne; and Stevenson, in some charming verses, was glad to call that worthy writer "Ballantyne the brave."

MR. STEPHEN GWYNN, we observe, who writes in the Fortnightly of Stevenson's posthumous works, is disposed to think little of the Fables. "They are," he says, "interesting reading, but people who like a meaning made quite plain will not take kindly to the more elaborate among them, and, upon the whole, they must be reckoned among his failures." "Posterity," says Mr. Gwynn farther on, "will probably regret the time spent upon these things, if it thinks that it might have had in exchange a few more chapters, let us say, of Heathercat." It is, of course, a matter of temperament. Mr. Gwynn finds fault with Mr. Gosse and Mr. Strachey for preferring Stevenson's essays to his stories; and we are tempted equally to object to Mr. Gwynn's depreciation of such exquisite work as "The Poor Thing" and "The House of Eld." But it is not worth while—these are matters to be settled for oneself. Mr. Gwynn's article, we might add, is extremely interesting and well knit.

By the way, Mr. Crossland, who wrote the two amusing fables which were quoted in these columns last week, is a little disturbed that we suggested Mr. Stevenson as his inspiration, since he began to play with this form of literature some time before Longman's gave R. L. S.'s experiments to the world. As his ambitions, he assures us, "do not run to 'sedulous' or other 'apishness,' imitation is a bit severe. A fabulist might put the matter as follows:

An injudicious bird fluttered unwittingly into a garden where there was a nightingale. And, as had been his wont in other situations, he endeavoured to chirp his best and chastest.

And the rose, hearing sounds, was minded of the nightingale, and said, 'Ah! an imitation—an experiment, good!'

And that injudicious bird, though flattered and obliged, somehow wished he hadn't come."

THE Elizabethan Stage Society's representation of Middleton's Spanish Gipsy, on Tuesday night, was prefaced by the delivery of a resonant prologue, written for the occasion by Mr. Swinburne. The poet's mouthpiece was Mr. Gosse. He came on the stage accompanied by a blue-coat boy, who carried a lantern. Mr. Gosse wore the costume of to-day, but the blue-coat dates, of course, from Edward the Sixth, and was no anachronism. The boy held the lantern so that the light shone upon the paper, and Mr. Gosse then read the poem, which we print in full:

"The wind that brings us from the springtide south
Strange music as from love's or life's own mouth

Blew hither, when the blast of battle ceased
That swept back southward Spanish prince and priest,
A sound more sweet than April's flower-sweet
rain,
And bade bright England smile on pardoned
Spain.

The land that cast out Philip and his God
Grew gladly subject where Cervantes trod.
Even he whose name above all names on earth Crowns England queen by grace of Shakespeare's birth
Might scarce have scorned to smile in God's wile down
And gild with praise from heaven an earthlier crown.
And he whose hand bade live down lengthening years

Quixote, a name lit up with smiles and tears,
Gave the glad watchword of the gipsies' life,
Where fear took hope and grief took joy to wife.

Times change, and fame is fitful as the sea:
But sunset bids not darkness always be,
And still some light from Shakespeare and the sun

Burns back the cloud that masks not Middleton.
With strong, swift strokes of love and wrath
he drew

Shakespearean London's loud and lusty crew:
No plainer might the likeness rise and stand
When Hogarth took his living world in hand.
No surer than his fire-fledged shafts could hit,
Winged with as forceful and as faithful wit:
No truer a tragic depth and heat of heart
Glowed through the painter's than the poet's art.

He lit and hung in heaven the wan fierce moon
Whose glance kept time with witchcraft's air-struck tune:

He watched the doors where loveless love let in
The pageant hailed and crowned by death and sin:

He bared the souls where love, twin-born with hate,

Made wide the way for passion-fostered fate.
All England-hearted, all his heart arose
To scourge with scorn his England's cowering foes:

And Rome and Spain, who bade their scorner be

Their prisoner, left his heart as England's free.
Now give we all we may of all his due
To one long since thus tried and found thus true."

Two American books about to be published are A Confident To-morrow, by Prof. Brander Matthews, and Cheerful Yesterdays, by Colonel Higginson. The similarity of the titles is not accidental. Each has its origin in a phrase which one of the authors used in conversation. He described himself as "a man of cheerful yesterdays and confident to-morrows." This origin is interesting; but it would be appalling if every happy phrase used by an author produced a brace of books.

ACCORDING to the American Bookman the best selling books in America are at present the following:

1. Quo Vadis.
2. Shrewsbury.
3. Hugh Wynne.
4. The Choir Invisible.
5. The Story of an Untold Love.
6. Simon Dale.

The popularity of Quo Vadis has become wearisome.

It is therefore almost a relief to learn that the American Mrs. Grundy does not like Quo Vadis. Her belated objections to the book occupy nearly two columns of the New York Times, where they appear in the form of a letter signed J. W. H. Here Sienkiewicz's novel is declared to be only an exalted form of the yellow-backed species. We read:

"It is safe to say that this book of Sienkiewicz's has been read the past year or two more extensively than any other paper issued from the press and chiefly by the young. That it should not have called forth stronger protests from the purist and moralist indicates a blunted sensibility as to the fitness of things on the part of those interested in the education of the mind that seems to the writer both amazing and deplorable. Other books are tabooed by those discriminating in their reading, and yet it could easily be shown that the descriptions of the life in Nero's palace by the author of Quo Vadis are far more sensuous and revolting than any other volume shut from our homes; indeed, it is not too much to say that Quo Vadis is but the advanced type of the yellow novel, and by reason of its literary excellence is finding a wider and higher circle of readers."

MR. RICHARD HARDING DAVIS begins in the April Scribner's a new serial story entitled The King's Jackal. The first instalment is somewhat niggardly in bulk, but there is enough to tell that the readers of the magazine have good entertainment in store. The deposed King of Messina, incognito in Tangier; the Baron Barrat, diplomatist; Prince Kalonay; Colonel Erhaupt; the Countess Zara, a spy; Father Paul, an adamantine priest; Miss Carson, an American heiress—these are some of the characters; and over all is the electric air of impending struggle for the re-establishment of the King on his throne. But does Mr. Davis seriously spell necklace "neckless"?

MR. RIDER HAGGARD's King Solomon's Mines receives the honour of a sixpenny edition this week, and it will probably find many new readers, although the lines are longer than they ought to be for comfort in reading: full four and a-half inches of closely-printed type. Since its first appearance, thirteen years ago, more than one new generation of schoolboys has sprung up. Mr. Haggard prefixes the following note to the cheap reprint: "The author ventures to take this opportunity to thank his readers in all parts of the world for the kind reception that they have accorded to the successive editions of this tale during the last thirteen years. He hopes that in its present form it will fall into the hands of an even wider public, and that, in years to come it may continue to afford amusement to those who are still young enough at heart to love a story of treasure, war, and wild adventure."

MEANWHILE, in Hungary, a ballet has appeared based upon Mr. Haggard's She, concerning which the Bookman tells a good story. Mr. Haggard, it seems, hearing of the production, wrote asking for some programmes and photographs, and received a reply from the manager of the theatre that he was much shocked at the receipt of this letter, for he for months had believed that Mr. Haggard was dead. Long obituary notices he continued, had appeared in some of the most important papers. Mr. Haggard wrote again that if the obituary notices were in any more translatable language than Magyar he would be glad to see a few of them, and at the same time he begged that a paragraph might be circulated amongst the newspapers to the effect that he was alive. The last news is that the manager reports that no newspaper will insert his paragraphs, that they decline to credit his statement, and look upon his request as a clever but somewhat unscrupulous attempt to obtain fine advertisements for the ballet.

MR. EDGAR FAWCETT, the American writer who is making a long stay in this country says something of what he calls "Preciousness" in a recent letter to Collier's Weekly and during his remarks tells the following story of the Brownings:

"They were living in 'Casa Guidi,' a Florence—that big, ugly, yellow house, which stares at the feudal gravity of the Pitti Palace through rows of high, square, green-shuttered windows, and which has been lugged into so many Browning biographies with an idealising indulgence quite disproportionate to its architectural deserts. A guest, at one of their 'evenings,' chanced to find in some bookshelf or on some table, a volume of Gray. Dipping into the Elegy, he became absorbed (half-memorially, perhaps) by its mesmeric beauties. Presently Robert Browning tapped him on the shoulder. 'Oh, are you reading that thing?' he asked. 'We've quite outgrown it here. . . . Yes, indeed; he was wholly right 'they' had quite outgrown it. If 'they' hadn't, all that sickly affectation which marks so much of Mrs. Browning's verse would have ceased to appear there, and from her husband such horrors of tedium as Red Cotton Night-Cap Country and Ferishtah's Fancies would never have sprung."

We should like to have authority for Mr. Fawcett's story. As it stands it reveals a facet of Robert Browning too new for immediate acceptance.

In a brief critical note, interesting in its inverse ratio to its bulk, Mr. Henry James, in the Fortnightly, pays a tribute of praise to the narrative gifts of his friend Mr. Harland, with special insistence upon his cosmopolitan character, his citizenship of the world, the absence in his work of any "clean sound of the fundamental, the native note." Instead, Mr. James finds therein an "intensity of that mark of the imagination that may best be described as the acute sense of the 'Europe'—synthetic symbol!—of the American mind," and the discovery has led him to certain subtle reflections:

"It is a very wonderful thing [he says], this Europe of the American in general and of the author of Comedies and Errors in particular—in particular, I say, because Mr. Harland tends, in a degree quite his own, to give it the romantic and tender voice, the voice of fancy pure and simple, without the disturbance of other elements, such as comparison and reaction, either violent or merciful. He is not even 'international,' which is, after all, but another way, perhaps, of being a slave to the 'countries,' possibly twice or even three times a ngo. It is a complete surrender of that province of the mind with which registration and subscription have to do. Thus is presented a disencumbered, sensitive surface for the wonderful Europe to play on."

It is pleasant, and reminiscent of old times, to find Mr. Bret Harte continuing in the Century the story of "Her Letter" and His Answer to Her Letter." In this third instalment—"Her Last Letter"—that hitherto incomplete romance is finished symmetrically; but we have had to wait a very long time for the curtain. To say what happened would not be fair; but a stanza or two, to show that Mr. Bret Harte as poet is still what he was, may not be out of place. The "Lily" is telling of the changes that have come in the old township:

There's the rustle of silk on the sidewalk;
Just now there passed by a tall hat;
But there's gloom in this 'boom' and this wild talk
Of the 'future' of Poverty Flat.
There's a delicious chill in the air, Joe,
Where once we were simple and free;
And I hear they've been making a mayor, Joe,
Of the man who shot Sandy McGee.
But there's still the 'lap, lap' of the river;
There's the song of the pines, deep and low.
(How my longing for them made me quiver
In the park that they call Fontainebleau!)
There's the snow-peak that looked on our dances,
And blushed when the morning said, 'Go!'
There's a lot that remains which one fauces—
But somehow there's never a Joe!"

Before coming to the new poem, it would be well to refer back to the two pieces that so long ago preceded it.

An extraordinary "feast of language" is spread before us by the S.P.C.K. in the shape of readers and prayer-books, Communion services and hymn-books, in Swahili, Nama, Xosa, and Chino. The Swahili readers deal with the history, not of England, but of Rome, according to Dr. Keighton. We imagine that, learned as he is, the Bishop of London would be not a little dismayed were he confronted with the following sentence and told that he wrote it: "Mji huu mpya ulikvitwa Rumi, na kwa sababu uliwekwa kando ya mto kubwa wa upande ule wa Italia, ulikuwa mpira wenye nguvu kwa biashara na tena kwa kawaziwa Waturuski." Which means, of course, "This colony was called Rome, and as it was founded upon the great river of that part of Italy, it soon became of importance for trade as well as for keeping off the Etruscans."

HERE, also in Swahili, is the first stanza of the old carol, "The First Nowell":

"Mbele Kheri" kapelekwa
Kwa Walisha-k'ondoo ni malaika:
Walikilinda kundi lao
Nao usiku uzizimao.
'Zaidi Kheri! Zaidi Kheri!
Manludu malik Israeli."

THE writer of the humorous items in Messrs. Hatchards' Books of To-day and Books of To-morrow continues his "Child's Guide to Literature" in the vein of refreshing impudence he has already adopted.

This month we have the following catechism on Ibsen:

"Q. What is Ibsen?
A. Ah, there you have me.
Q. Do you mean that you don't know?
A. Well, opinions differ. Some say he isn't a person at all, but just a thing. Every now and then all kinds of little bits from police reports, and accounts of lunatics, and divorce cases, in the Norwegian papers, are gathered together, and they call it Ibsen. Just as we call chopped meat Mince.
Q. I call it beastly. Yes, and the others?
A. Others say Ibsen is Mr. Archer.
Q. Not 'W. A.'?
A. Yes, there is a theory that Mr. Archer, when he is tired of criticising other people's, writes plays himself under the name of Ibsen.
Q. Then what is the meaning of all this talk about Ibsen's seventieth birthday?
A. O, that's blague.
Q. But England sent him a fifty-pound present?
A. Yes, it went to a man named Ibsen whom Mr. Archer employs to act the part—a dummy.
Q. But why doesn't Mr. Archer confess to it?
A. Because he's afraid of Clement Scott.
Q. And how about Mr. Gosse? He says he discovered Ibsen.
A. Ah, that's the joke. Mr. Gosse thought he discovered Ibsen: really it was only the dummy."

In a review last week of Mr. Arthur Waugh's Legends of the Wheel we ventured upon a remark which has impelled Mr. Waugh to the following remonstrance:

"CONSIDERING—HOW LITTLE?"

["Considering how little the cycle does for literature or human nature." — THE ACADEMY, April 2, 1898.]

"Green memories of breezy meadowland,
Crowned by torn wreaths of sea,
White apple-blossom blown above the sand
In fields of faery.
Brave lessons of the white road's brotherhood—
The hourly give-and-take;
The hardship shared, the well-divided good,
For Sport's insurgent sake,
Still whispers, in the twilight and the shade,
Of heroisms divine—
Where Arthur fought, where Merlin's self is laid—
By good St. Alban's shrine.
Remembering these—and who that knows forsakes?—
One vague, unlettered creature
Hails in the 'wheel' the spirit that re-awakes
His tired human nature."

In the current Chap-Book there is a summing up of the achievements of Mr. Robert W. Chambers, the author of The King in Yellow, A King and a Few Dukes, and other stories which have fluttered critical dove-cotes by their strangeness and extravagance. Mr. Chambers has fulfilled at least one condition of being interesting in his books: he has lived an interesting life himself. In his greener youth he studied art at Julien's and other Paris studios. He exhibited at the Salon nine years ago. But Parisian life attracted more than his artist's eye. He hob-nobbed with anarchists at the Chateau Rouge, where Louise Michel held her court. He studied the French military organisation, and had the history of the Commune at his fingertips; while "time to be spared from the cafés, the studios, and the shrines of Paris, and from the barracks and drill ground, Mr. Chambers spent in the woods, whipping every available trout stream and chasing moths and butterflies with scientific ardour."

Thus equipped, Mr. Chambers wrote his book, The King in Yellow. This was a volume of grotesque stories, written in the most Lutetian fantastic manner, and published in Chicago. The Red Republic, a romance of the Commune, followed. Then Mr. Chambers wrote a fantasy about Chinese sorcerers who make gold on the Canadian prairies—The Maker of Moons. This was succeeded in the spring of last year by A King and a Few Dukes; and last autumn by The Mystery of Choice, a volume of short stories, and Lorraine, a story of the Franco-German war. The Chap-Book writer says of Mr. Chambers's treatment of war: "Late studies of campaigning have made much of the problem of individual courage or cowardice, of the psychology of a trembling recruit. For Mr. Chambers the great sweep, the overwhelming magnitude of the thing, is what has been worthy his attention. It is a view of war as true as the other, and yet more romantic."

THE renewed interest in the family of Shore, aroused by the recent publication of Poems by A. and J., is responsible for the new edition of The Journal of Emily Shore, which Messrs. Kegan, Paul & Co. announce. It will contain a series of reproductions of pencil drawings by Emily Shore, mostly portraits.

THE annual exhibition of the Royal Amateur Art Society will be opened on May 11 by Princess Christian of Schleswig Holstein, at No. 1, Belgrave-square. The Loan Annex will consist of drawings in pencil and water-colours by Sir Thomas Lawrence, P.R.A., and water-colour portrait sketches by the late George Richmond, R.A., also of curious old fans, old shagreen and piqué work. Owners of drawings by Sir T. Lawrence and Mr. Richmond who are willing to lend them are invited to communicate with the Lady Newton, 20, Belgrave-square.

MR. BENJAMIN SWIFT'S new novel, The Destroyer, is in the press. The "destroyer" is love: and we understand that the closing scene takes place in the Cathedral at Milan.

HEINRICH HEINE'S sister, Frau Charlotte Embden, has conveyed, through her son, the Baron L. Von Embden, her thanks to Prof. Buchheim for a copy of his edition of Heine's Lieder und Gedichte, recently published in the "Golden Treasury Series." Frau Embden expressed at the same time her fervent wish that the Professor's efforts to make her brother's poems more generally known and appreciated in this country may be crowned with success.

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING is due in England again, from the Cape, next month.

"THE SUNKEN BELL."

THAT good books, like good wine, improve by keeping, and that the literary vintage of Christmas, 1896, should first be broached at Easter, 1898, are refinements of taste which the modern palate would reject. In the instance of Gerhart Hauptmann's Versunkene Glocke, which has reached its thirtieth edition in the fifteenth month of its existence, and has been played at the rate of ten times a month to the fickle public of Berlin, I venture respectfully to believe that the modern palate is wrong, and that the literary Aladdin, with his cry of "old books for new," and the Transatlantic sage who lets a year intervene between the printing-press and the paper-knife, would alike be justified of their maxims.

This belief is supported by the following confession. I was staying in Berlin when the Versunkene Glocke was first published. I overheard the confused murmur of baby-worship which accompanied the early weeks of its life. I counted its endless reproductions, both in book-form and upon the stage. I watched the ecstasy of the gray-beard scholars, who issued pamphlet after pamphlet discussing the significance of the new-born play. A Royal infant, the sole hope of a nation, could not have been teased with more flattering attentions. The drawing-rooms echoed with its praises, and a critic who had been trusted to nurse the Versunkene Glocke achieved a reputation on the strength of it. More seriously speaking, the bibliography of the play is a formidable item in the booksellers' catalogues, and Gerhart Hauptmann has undoubtedly scored the most notable literary success of recent times in Germany. And yet—here comes the confession—while the heady properties of this strong wine were in the ascendant, I refrained from broaching my particular bottle. For more than a year the book lay uncut upon my shelf, and its third jubilee had been celebrated in the theatre before I saw it performed. Tried by this practical test, the value of Emerson's recommendation becomes abundantly clear. The froth and bubbles caused by this mystic bell when it first sank to the bottom have since had leisure to grow still; the broken waters have closed over it at last, and there it lies in the crystal depths beyond the plumb-lines of the critics.

It is, after all, so simple a matter, this world-old allegory which it embodies, that one wonders a little at the babel of readings it provoked. It is, in all literalness, as old as the hills themselves, which guard the secret of their peace. When Moses came down from the mountain, we are told, "the skin of his face shone," and all Zipporah's embraces, we remember, never succeeded in finally quenching the after-glow. Rather it drove him forth again, led by that perilous light,

"from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, that is over against Jericho. And the Lord showed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan, and all Naphtali, and the land of Ephraim, and Manasseh, and all the land of Judah unto the utmost sea, and the south, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto Zoar."

And

"the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord. . . . His eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated. And the children of Israel wept for Moses in the plains of Moab thirty days."

Translate the Pisgah of historical fact into the Pisgah of every man's yearning; substitute a less perfect revelation for the knowledge of the Lord face to face; make the tugging of the valley at his heart-strings more imperious, as the vision dwindles in brightness, and does every prophet, whether of art, or ethics, or any other form of truth, come down some time to Zipporah with a shining face? Does he not waver as the glow departs, and the claims of the valley press more closely upon him? And will he not finally go forth again to refresh his eyes, while they are not dim, with the lands whose names are music, and to spend his force, while it is not abated, upon the peace which is guarded by the hills? For the source of his inspiration is eternal, but the mourning in the plains is a thirty days' matter at the most.

This, at any rate, was the experience of Heinrich, the master bell-founder, who was kissed by Rautendelein, the elfin maiden of the hills, and conceived at her touch a vision of the Perfect Bell, the Platonic idéal of musical peals, so that for its sake and hers he left his Magda in the valley, and followed Rautendelein to a mountain fastness, where she bent the forces of nature to his will. This was his experience when the village priest came up and rebuked him for living in adultery. "If your bell is so perfect," said the Church, "and demands such tremendous sacrifices, who is going to pay you for it?" And Heinrich met his questioner with a fine speech of passion, some lines of which I attempt to represent:

"Who pays me for my work? O Priest, good Priest,

Does bliss crave blessing? Shall the crown be crowned?

For though you call my work, as I have called it,

A chime of bells, yet is it such a chime

As never belfry-tower of minster yet

Enclosed, and in the crashing of its peal

Echoes the thunder of the earliest spring,

Which drove across the furrows like a flame.

With silken banners rustling in the breeze,
The hosts of worshippers draw nigh my temple,

And lo! the chiming of my wonder-bells

Peals forth in tones of mingled sweet and fire

Till every bosom pants with long desire.

It sings a song, forgotten and forlorn,

Fresh-drawn from crystal depths of faery streams,

Telling of homely things, and children's love,

Known unto all, but never heard before.

And as it sinks, in dear, consuming strains,

Like plaintive nightingale or laughing

doves,

It breaks the ice in every human heart,

And hate and scorn and rage and pain and grief

Melt into burning, burning, burning tears."

The glow was still strong upon him when he defended Rautendelein from some bold climbers from the village below, who had scaled his fastness and thrown stones:

"Not though an angel, sped direct from heaven
With lily beckonings and pleading words
Bade me be steadfast in my chosen way,
Should I be swifter to obey,
Better convinced of my pure work and merit
Than by these voices that would howl me down."

And when he returns triumphant from the conflict, and Rautendelein offers him draught of her potent wine, he exclaims that he is "again athirst for wine, and high and love, and thee." And this, I take it was Heinrich's experience to the end, though the glow of his ideal departed for a while when his children brought him from the plains the full vessel of their mother's tears. He withstood the priest and repulsed the villagers, but almost on the top of these scenes, which seemed to draw him nearer to Rautendelein came the last trial of all, when the spirit of his two little boys appeared to Heinrich to tell him that Magda had drowned herself. For a moment—the irrevocable moment—the artist reverted to the man. The master craftsman, who had been confirmed in his faith by the reproaches of parish and church, became the conscience-stricken husband and father. He cast off Rautendelein, and a the wonders to which she had opened his eyes. His peal of bells was forgotten; like the Prophet in the valley, "he put a veil on his face," and the plains dragged him down from the heights.

That the moment passed, though its fatality remained; that Heinrich repented and sought the light again; that Rautendelein, the shadow of his lost love, now the water-sprite's bride with her human experience blotted out, should hand him the third of the witch's cups, and watch him till the morning broke, this is the logical conclusion of the drama, as Hauptmann tells in the fifth act. For us, who have read the recital, refined by the charm of German poetic diction and drenched in the colours of old-world German romance, there is no need to follow the critics into the maze of their discussion. We may take for granted the Moral Philosophers' debate whether Heinrich was nobler on his artist's height or in his descent to the plain. Every man must explore his Moab and Pisgah for himself; there is no common ordnance survey, and valley and hill become hopeless mixed when pegged out by stay-at-home map-makers. Even more readily may we dismiss the curious ingenuity of the biographers, who would explain the play by the facts of the author's life, and translate into a plea for celibacy. Hauptmann speaking in the "categorical imperative," and, like all great messengers of universal import, his sympathy leaves something to the initiative of his audience. "Many are the reed-carriers, but the Bacchantes are few"—this märchendrama but repeats the old familiar theme; and the story of Heinrich and Rautendelein and Magda should remind us again that the gleam is not false, nor the music out of tune, though lights still fail and bells still sink.

L. M.

THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS.

VII.—DON JUAN IN LONDON.

RD BYRON left London, never to return, in 1816. He wrote the London passages in Don Juan at Genoa in 1823. It is at the close of the tenth canto of that poem that we discover Don Juan approaching London. His retinue is considerable, as befits one sent by Catharine of Russia to negotiate a treaty of hides and train-oil with England. A bull-dog and a bull-finch and an "urn" go with him, and valets and seeresses occupy other vehicles. By his side is little Leila. Canterbury passed, they went along the turnpike road, and at last reached Shooter's Hill. Here occurs the famous single-stanza view of London. One has seen it quoted by saintly critics along with Wordsworth's Westminster Bridge sonnet: "See," they have exclaimed, "how London affected a noble and an ignoble air." This is not criticism, nor justice. The Byronic sneer does not mar, it merely distinguishes, Byron's picture; and it fixes the mood to which, perhaps, no lover of London is wholly a stranger. Topping the hill, Don Juan's party enjoyed the spectacle which had moved Drayton and Johnson to verse, and had lured the brush of Turner:

A mighty mass of brick, and smoke, and shipping,
 Dirty and dusky, but as wide as eye Could reach, with here and there a sail just skipping
 In sight, then lost amidst the forestry
 Of masts; a wilderness of steeples peeping
 On tip-toe, through their sea-coal canopy;
 A huge, dun cupola, like foolscap crown
 On a fool's head—and there is London Town!"

That verse will always please robust minds. What immensity is conveyed in Byron's stanza! "A wilderness of steeples peeping on tip-toe"; the sail "lost amidst the forestry of masts"! Yet London in 1814 was but beginning to be a giant. Don Juan saw a broad carpet of meadows encircling the town. Toll-gates and cottage gardens gay with hollyhocks dotted the white road before him. The summer "boxes" of the "cits," with their toy temples and pagodas, alone signified the richness of London. True, houses were creeping across the Lambeth Marshes, congealing as they crept. Horace Smith had not bewailed the fact that:

St George's Fields are fields no more,
 The trowel supersedes the plough;
 Huge inundated swamps of yore,
 Are changed to civic villas now;"

But David Cox had snatched in the same fields the last rural view of St. Paul's, the last cow-pond unpolluted by lime and brick-dirt.

Onward rolled Don Juan. His sanguinary adventure with the highwayman on approaching the city of freedom and virtue need not be lingered on here; but the death of the robber, who, at his last gasp, untied his neckchief, exclaiming, "Give Sal that!" is as well done in its way as the death of the gladiator in "Childe Harold." The progress through the villages and turnpikes, through Kennington and all the other tons," is described with Byron's dash as a sketcher:

"Through Groves, so call'd as being void of trees (Like lucus, from no light); through prospects named
 Mount Pleasant, as containing nought to please,
 Nor much to climb; through little boxes framed
 Of bricks, to let the dust in at your ease
 With 'To be let' upon their doors proclaimed;
 Through 'Rows' most modestly called 'Paradise,'
 Which Eve might quit without much sacrifice;

Through coaches, drays, choked turnpikes,
 and a whirl

Of wheels, and roar of voices, and confusion!
 Here taverns wooing to a pint of 'purl':

There mails fast flying off like a delusion:

There barbers' blocks with periwigs in curl
 In windows: here the lamplighter's infusion

Slowly distill'd into the glimmering glass
 (For in those days we had not got to gas);—

Through this, and much, and more, is the approach

Of travellers to mighty Babylon:

Whether they come by horse, or chaise, or coach,

With slight exceptions, all the ways seem one.

I could say more, but do not choose to encroach

Upon the guide-book's privilege. The sun
 Had set some time, and night was on the ridge

Of twilight, as the party cross'd the bridge."

The "bridge" was old Westminster Bridge, built by Charles Labelye, the Swiss, and first opened to the public in 1750. It had inspired Wordsworth's sonnet in 1803. And Gibbon, one remembers, wrote, when leaving London for Lausanne and literature: "As my post-chaise moved over Westminster Bridge, I bade a long farewell to the fumum et opes strepitumque Romæ."

Over this bridge Don Juan now rolled into the well-lit crowded streets of London. The gas-lamps dazzled him. The bridge had been lit with gas in 1814, and on Christmas Day of that year the general lighting of London by gas had been inaugurated. Hence he notes:

"The lamps of Westminster's more regular gleam," and continues:

"The line of lights, too, up to Charing Cross,
 Pall Mall, and so forth, have a coruscation

Like gold as in comparison to dross,

Matched with the Continent's illumination,
 Whose cities Night by no means deigns to gloss:

The French were not yet a lamp-lighting nation;

And when they grew so—on their new found lantern,

Instead of wicks, they made a wicked man turn."

Even the English became "a gas-lighting nation" unwillingly. Sir Humphry Davy's scoffing suggestion that the dome of St. Paul's should be used as a gasometer was typical; and the dwellers in Grosvenor-square haughtily burned oil for twenty years after the rest of London had adopted gas. Meanwhile, Don Juan rattles up Pall Mall, and past "St. James's Palace and St. James's "Hells," to "one of the sweetest of hotels."

From his desk in Genoa Byron could guide his hero through the West End with a perfect knowledge of his subject. All his London homes had been located there. He had lived in Piccadilly and in Jermyn-street. He had written "Childe Harold" in St. James's-street. New Bond-street and Albemarle-street and the Albany had given him shelter. Watier's Club, and the Alfred, and the Cocoa Tree had been his haunts; and at Rogers' breakfast table and in Mr. Murray's drawing-room he had met Moore and Scott and the wits, orators, and social leaders of the day. He knew every fashionable street. In a note to Moore on April 9, 1814, he had written before his exile: "There was a night for you! without once quitting the table, except to ambulate home [to the Albany], which I did alone, and in utter contempt for a hackney coach, and my own vis, both of which were deemed necessary for our conveyance." The recollection of this night [he had been drinking "a kind of Regency punch" at the "Cocoa Tree"] might well have moved Byron's pen when, on the Mediterranean, he wrote of Don Juan's reception:

"In the Great World—which, being interpreted,

Meaneth the west or worst end of a city,
 And about twice two thousand people, bred

By no means to be very wise or witty,

Bur to sit up while others lie in bed,

And look down on the universe with pity—

Juan, as an inveterate patrician,

Was well received by persons of condition."

We have a rollicking Byronic picture of West-End life in the season, much of which can be quoted as true to-day. Take three stanzas out of thirty:

"His afternoons he pass'd in visits, luncheons,
 Lounging, and boxing; and the twilight hour

In riding round those vegetable puncheons

Call'd 'Parks,' where there is neither fruit nor flower

Enough to gratify a bee's slight munchings;

But after all it is the only 'bower'

(In Moore's phrase) where the fashionable fair

Can form a slight acquaintance with fresh air.

Then dress, then dimer, then awakes the world;

Then glare the lamps, then whirl the wheels, then roar

Through street and square fast flashing chariots hurl'd

Like harness'd meteors; then along the floor

Chalk mimics painting; then festoons are twirl'd;

Then all the brazen thunders of the door,

Which opens to the thousand happy few

An earthly Paradise of 'Or Molu.'

There stands the noble hostess, nor shall sink

With the three thousandth curtsey; there the waltz,

The only dance which teaches girls to think,

Makes one in love even with its very faults.

Saloon, room, hall, o'erflow beyond their brink,

And long the latest of arrivals halts,

'Midst royal dukes and dames condemn'd to climb,
 And gain an inch of staircase at a time."

Moralising these scenes, Byron does not forget to exclaim on the transitoriness of the social drama, and the entrances and exits of the actors. "Where is the world of eight years past?" he exclaims.

"Where's Brummel? Dish'd. Where's Long Pole Wellesley? Diddled.
Where's Whitbread? Romilly? Where's George the Third?
Where is his will? (That's not so soon unriddled)
And where is 'Fum' the Fourth, our 'royal bird'?
Gone down, it seems, to Scotland, to be fiddled Unto by Sawney's violin, we have heard:
'Caw me, caw thee'—for six months hath been hatching
This scene of royal itch and loyal scratching.
Where is Lord This? And where my Lady That?
The Honourable Mistresses and Misses?
Some laid aside, like an old opera hat, Married, unmarried, and re-married (this is An evolution oft performed of late):
Where are the Dublin shouts—and London hisses?
Where are the Grenvilles? Turn'd, as usual.
Where
My friends the Whigs? Exactly where they were.
Where are the Lady Carolines and Franceses?
Divorced, or doing there aenut. Ye annals
So brilliant, where the list of routs and dances is—
Thou Morning Post, sole record of the panels
Broken in carriages, and all the phantasies
Of fashion—say what streams now fill those channels?
Some die, some fly, some languish on the Continent,
Because the times have hardly left them one tenant."

These were sights and reflections which Don Juan could have enjoyed in Russia. There were spectacles, nobler than gas-lamps, that he could enjoy only in England; and at one of these Byron does not permit his hero to scoff:

"He also had been busy seeing sights—
The Parliament and all the other houses;
Had sate beneath the gallery at nights,
To hear debates whose thunder roused (not rouses)
The world to gaze upon those northern lights
Which floated as far as where the musk-bull browses:
He had also stood at times behind the throne—
But Grey was not arrived, and Chatham gone.
He saw, however, at the closing session
That noble sight, when really free the nation,
A king in constitutional possession
Of such a throne as is the proudest station,
Though despots know it not—till the progression
Of freedom shall complete their education.
'Tis not mere splendour makes the show august
To eyes or hearts—it is the people's trust."

On this note we may end. The descriptions of London in "Don Juan" are a medley within a medley; but they are mordant and graphic, and therefore memorable.

LIGHT VERSE.

A PLEA FOR ITS REVIVAL.

LIGHT verse—to use a title convenient, if something inept—is the Cinderella of English literature, regarded by most readers and many critics with a frigid indifference or, at best, with good-humoured tolerance. Your fifth-rate "poet," your writer of sonnets doleful and threnodies lugubrious, however scant his success in execution, in aspiration at least is reckoned deserving of sympathetic praise. But the versifier of a gayer mood finds himself accounted but a literary buffoon, and learns that, by a cruel irony of fortune, the better his work, the more careful his polish, the greater his art in concealing artifice, so much the more will the average reader believe that no real labour can have gone to the making of it.

Worse still, the critics, as their highest meed of praise, will advise him to forswear forthwith his especial art—an art so rare, so delicate, so hard of mastery—and to enrol himself in that nameless legion of melancholy poetasters who bewail existence in the ears of an unheeding world. Who does not know the run of the glib sentence penned by the "indolent reviewer" with a volume of good light verse on his desk? "Delightfully fluent," he writes; "composed evidently with remarkable ease and facility; qualities, however, which make one wish that the writer would devote his evident powers to serious poetry. There is little in the present volume that calls for serious notice. . . ."

Once more, your critic commonly believes that the only light verse of any real merit has been written by Calverley, Praed, Locker-Lampson, and Austin Dobson; any others he eyes with suspicion as rash trespassers upon the demesne appropriated for all time by this quartette. Scarce could there be a judgment more misleading. Mr. Dobson, in his especial field, is hors concours. None can hope to rival his treatment of eighteenth century themes, to unite his exact historical knowledge with his mastery of verse graceful and refined. Yet other subjects there are ready to the hand of the verse-writer; he needs not to dress his characters in powder and patch; in a word, his work is not of necessity inferior if its inspiration be drawn from the present rather than the past. Turn to the other three; we may not endorse Mr. Swinburne's verdict that "Calverley has been preposterously overpraised," we may value to the full the smoothness of Praed, the deftness of Locker-Lampson, but is it heresy to suggest that—to give a single modern instance—their equal in dexterity and humour is to be found in the person of Mr. Owen Seaman?

There is, indeed, a striking difference between "light verse" as we know it to-day and the ragged stuff which was once in vogue. The older mode was that of Theodore Hook, that of the Ingoldsby Legends, wherein a few extra syllables in a line mattered little, a clumsy inversion or a false rhyme still less. We have learnt better things; we have been taught that good light verse must be polished ad unguem, that the humour may be subtle and refined, and even blended with a delicate pathos. Best of all, to emend a celebrated dictum, "Puns have had their day," to write light verse well you must needs unite a sense of humour to a sensitive ear, intolerant of jarring lines and slovenly finish.

In some degree the art of writing serious poetry is easier of attainment. True, in that latter pursuit, your chance of great achievement is remote. On the other hand, you may acquit yourself creditably with small natural gift or expenditure of toil; you may be—as the great bulk of "serious" verse writers are—you may be mediocre, no man forbidding you; but that saving middle term exists not for light verse. Either it succeeds—it "comes off," to use a slang phrase—or it fails, fails hopelessly, irremediably. Perhaps of no art may it be said with more truthfulness that only he who himself has attempted it can rightly estimate its difficulties, can guess how much "labour of the file" has gone to the perfecting of those lines which fall so pat, which seem so effortless, so inevitable.

Partly, no doubt, through this lack of appreciation—for the work is so hard to do well, so lightly regarded when done—and partly, to be frankly mercantile, because hers is the worst paid service into which the man of letters can enter, the gayer Muse has but few devotees in this country, fading reader honour across the Channel. Some who paid her assiduous court in their youth—Mr. Lang, Mr. Gosse, Mr. Gilbert, and, alas! Mr. Dobson—have deserted her in later years. Yet she can claim some worthy followers. Mr. Seaman's name has been mentioned above; nor can we forget the skill of Mr. C. L. Graves, of Mr. Alfred Cochrane, Mr. Barry Pain, Mr. A. Godley and Mr. R. C. Lehmann; authors whose work, widely though it differ in manner and matter, can yet be classed with some fitness under the common title of good light verse. This brief catalogue makes no pretence of completeness, other names could be added to it without impropriety. But, when all is said, writers of good light verse are few, and the bulk of the rhymes which figure in the "comic" journals are of a quality so contemptible that it were otiose to waste criticism upon them.

We have been bidden of late to welcome a growing taste for serious poetry; some glimmering of appreciation is to be discerned, they tell us, in the mind of "the average reader"; no longer a drug in the market, poetry is to be a joy to the man in the street. Perhaps, then, it is not quite idle to hope that at some future time the "average reader" will gain an insight into the true worth of light verse, when he will perceive that, at its best, it is no mere vagrant of the outer courts, but can fitly claim a place, humble yet honourable, within the temple of the Muses.

PURE FABLES.

I.

THE TWO MEN OF LETTERS.

Two men of letters met in the workhouse. "My friend," cried one of them, "what all brought you to this?" "Sloth!" replied the other. "And you how came you here?" "Alas, sir! Have you forgotten that I a stylist?"

II.

NEWVERSE AND THE EDITOR.

Newverse brought an editor to task for noticing his book. "Quoth the editor: "Sir, the verses were foolish that it would have been impossible for me justly to praise them, and I had no say." "Knave!" cried Newverse, "knowest thou not that I had rather be flayed alive than perish reviewless?"

III.

THE CAPABLE PLAGIARIST.

The stars accused the moon of plagiarism. And they sent word to the nightingale to commend her, saying, "She deceiveth thee, and borroweth this beauty." "Even so," answered the nightingale. "Let which of you will tell me that she borroweth not to advantage?"

IV.

THE KING AND THE VILLA.

A king, making a progress through his dominions, came suddenly on a glittering villa, the like of which, with its gables and turrets, and palm-house and gorgeous front garden, he did not remember to have seen before. And he enquired of his equerry to what person of rank and fortune such magnificence might belong. "That, sir," answered the equerry, "is one of the residences of Mister Brilliant, the great story-writer." "Bless my soul!" gasped the king.

T. W. H. C.

THE WEEK.

WE do not always understand the ways of publishers; but at holiday-time they are made plain. Hardly any serious literature has appeared, for instance, during the past week; but there has been a rush of fiction (see our "Guide to Novel Readers"). It does not, we trust, mean a wet Easter.

In justification of a new prose rendering of the Odes and Epodes of Horace, Mr. A. D. Gilley writes:

After all, Horace in prose need not be more obviously inadequate than Horace in verse. Efforts in translating him metrically have never been crowned with any real success. When the humbler aim is merely to convey some idea of the exact meaning and not to attempt a tour de force, the translator, if he wishes to be taken seriously, had better keep to prose, which is less repellent to the reader than bad poetry; at least, he will not be obscuring the correctness of his interpretation by the inferiority of his versification."

We will give Mr. Godley's rendering of Horace's most famous Ode as a specimen of his method.

"Posthumus, Posthumus, the flying years, alas! glide on, nor shall piety delay wrinkles and hastening old and unconquered death; no, my friend, not if every day thou shouldst offer three hundred bulls to appease tearless Pluto, who enchain Geryon's triple bulk, and Tityus with that gloomy wave which all we who live by earth's bounty must traverse, be we kings or poor husbandmen. 'Tis vain to shun bloody war and the hoarse Adriatic's breaking surf; vain to guard against autumn's unhealthy south winds; still must we behold black Cocytus' dull meandering stream, and Danaus' accursed kin, and Sisyphus, Æolus' son, doomed to an eternity of toil. Thy lands, thy house, thy loved wife—all must thou leave; nor of all you trees that thou tendest shall any, save the hated cypress, follow their short-lived lord. Thy worthier heir shall drain the Cæcuban thou guardest with a hundred keys, and stain thy floors with royal wine that e'en priestly banquets cannot match."

A HANDSOME volume is Mr. Ernest Law's The Royal Gallery of Hampton Court. It takes the form of an annotated catalogue, interspersed with numerous reproductions of paintings. The aims of the author have been comprehensive. The book is "an attempt towards tracing the history of the pictures in the collection of Her Majesty the Queen at Hampton Court, seeking to discriminate between the valuable and worthless; to verify or disprove their claims to authenticity; to assign them, as far as possible, to their real painters; and at the same time to present, by means of descriptive, biographical, and critical commentary and notes, some idea of the circumstances in which the pictures were painted and the place they occupy in history or in art. To this end researches, in the first place, have been made among the old inventories of Henry VIII., Charles I., the Commonwealth, James II., Queen Anne, &c., and in the State Papers and other ancient records, which have resulted in fixing the time when most of the pictures came into the royal collection, and in determining the painters to whom they were originally ascribed."

Mr. Law has had assistance from the highest sources, and, outwardly, his book is as complete as it is comely.

Studies in Brown Humanity, by Hugh Clifford, the author of In Court and Kampong, deals with native life in the Malay Peninsula. Many of the sketches wear the garb of fiction, but the author declares that "they are studies of things as they are—drawn from the life. . . . I can only claim these stories as my own in that I have filled in the pictures from my knowledge of the localities in which the various events happened, and have generally told my tales in the fashion which appealed to me as the most appropriate. Umât, who is the subject of one of the sketches, is a very real person indeed, and as I write these lines he is sleeping peacefully over the punkah cord, with which he has become inextricably entangled. The purely descriptive chapters are the result of personal observation in a land which has become very dear to me, which I know intimately, and where the best years of my life have hitherto been spent."

THE "Fur and Feather Series" has become the "Fur, Feather, and Fin Series," and it now includes a work on The Salmon, by the Hon. A. E. Gatherne-Hardy.

To the "Story of the Empire Series" is added New Zealand, by Mr. William Pember Reeves.

GLASGOW CATHEDRAL is not much heard of in England; but a Glasgow firm of publishers has just sent south an imposing Book of Glasgow Cathedral. This work has been edited by Mr. George Eyre-Todd, and contains contributions by a number of writers. It is nobly printed and illustrated, four of the illustrations being full-page photogravures. The book aims to be a complete historical and pictorial survey of Glasgow Cathedral.

ANOTHER part (H—Haversian) of the New English Dictionary is issued.

THE BOOK MARKET.

PENNY DOMESTICITY.

IT is profitable, like all adjuncts of the chapel. Brixton battens on it; the maidens of Holloway absorb it in the long tram ride to the City; by its aid a railway journey becomes a glow of virtue. But we will not seem to mock—penny domesticity has its place, and a big place it is, in modern journalism. Mr. Pearson set the model in his Home Notes; Mr. Harmsworth pursued him with Home Chat; and now with ease we count:

Home Notes.
Home Chat.
Our Home.
The Happy Home.
The Home Companion.
Woman's Life.
The Lady's Gazette.
Etc., etc.

They are all unimpeachable; they are nearly all extremely well edited; and as to contents, they are as like as pins. Each is intensely parental and affectionate. Readers are emphatically our readers, more often my readers. The "Assistant Editress" of one paper writes:

"It is brave and good of you, Bessie, not to mind having to be a lady-clerk. . . ."

The poem you send me, Hernia, I am glad to tell you, shows a promise of such poetic feeling and real talent as I have seldom. . . ."

Again we read:

"ALONE.—You should certainly bow. The gentleman evidently knows what is correct. He is right not to take any notice unless you do. It is yours, as it is every other lady's privilege to indicate her wish for recognition."

But the profane eye finds most amusement in the advice given to such a correspondent as Esperanza. Wild editresses shall not prevent us from quoting it in full:

"Esperanza tells me that some months ago she was staying at a hydropathic establishment and there met a young gentleman who paid her a great deal of attention, so that she thought he really cared for her. Indeed, when he left, a few days before he did, she asked if he might write to her, and begged her to call him by his Christian name. Since then she has heard nothing of him, and she wants to know whether she might write to him, as she thinks he may have lost her address.—I certainly advise Esperanza to do nothing, but to try to forget this young man as soon as possible. 'Men were deceivers ever,' and idle young men at hydropathies are very apt to make the time pass pleasantly for themselves by a flirtation, never troubling to think that their sport may be another's pain. You have evidently been victimised by a selfish and unscrupulous young man, for he had no business to have gone so far unless he meant to go farther, and had he been really in love with you he would have written to you at once. When a man loses a girl's address he takes care to find it if he wants to, for 'where there's a will there's a way.'"

No one can deny that this is interesting "copy"—in its place.

Two papers refuse to mix questions of the heart with questions of wall paper and the removal of grease spots. The first has opened a "Courtship Column." Here forlorn letters of inquiry (they are always forlorn) are printed, as well as "Amor's" answers; hence we read:

"Lizzie writes thus: 'About four months ago a young man paid me a great deal of attention. He was very kind to me, and always came to see me according to his appointment. I was very fond of him, and very sorry to part from him. We have been corresponding with each other, and he has also given me presents and appeared to be greatly attached to me. He has promised me marriage, but of late he failed to see me according to his promise. Can you kindly give me any advice on the matter? We are not engaged, but he has promised to send me an engagement ring for my birthday. I have written to him to know why he has behaved so meanly, but I have received no answer. Should I be doing right in sending back his presents or not? I am nineteen years of age, and my lover is the same age.'

Answer: 'Amor' fears Lizzie has been too hasty, and offended her lover by terming his conduct mean. Lovers, above all people, should remember that things written sound so very much different to things said. 'Amor' thinks Lizzie had better try and see the young man, and have an explanation, and hopes this may turn out nothing more serious than a lover's quarrel."

Another paper dedicates a page frankly to "Sweethearts and Lovers" ('Envelopes to be marked 'Lovers' Difficulties'). The following precious morsel is a revelation of the trivial issues which not only achieve print, but become the basis of a whole class of journals:

"Here is a letter from a married lady. She admits to being curious, and she tells me that her husband has a very annoying and irritating way of bringing home newspapers at night with certain little paragraphs cut out of them. It sets her wondering what these paragraphs originally were, and on one or two occasions she has gone to the trouble and bother of buying duplicate copies of the paper, and found that there was no harm in the paragraphs at all. Can I tell her why I think he does it?—Well, I will give you a perfectly frank answer. Seeing that you have tested this, and found that these all-important paragraphs which your husband cuts out amounted to absolutely nothing at all, you can only come to the conclusion that he simply does it for a bit of fun. Probably he knows what you have admitted to me, that one of the principle ingredients which go to make up your constitution is curiosity. I daresay that he is quietly chuckling all the time, and does not intend to cause you five minutes' anxiety. Take my advice, let the whole matter slide. Do not let him see that you notice anything, and depend upon it, it will soon be stopped, and you will be relieved of all your anxiety."

We violate these confidences with some misgivings. But they appear to embody the vital principle of penny domestic journalism. These papers are read by maidens who are willing to be wives; and courtship being the basis of their hopes, the ethics of courtship and brideals receive prominence. And the day of general dissertations is over. The "You and Me" note is all important.

"Boudoir Chat," "Side Talks with Girls," "Our At Home," "Five O'clock Tea with the Editor"—these are the cues. In this spirit the whole making of a home is discussed; and every good thing is recommended, from a bicycle lamp to a forgiving spirit. Great are the treatises on furniture (vide "How I Furnished my Sweetheart's Room"); great the articles of guidance (vide "The Etiquette of a Wedding" and "How to Answer Advertisements"); great the character-sketches (vide "Clever Wives of Well-known Men" and "Men whom Women Admire"); great the moral philosophy (vide "The Restlessness of the Age" and "Characters as Shown by the Mouth"); great the verses and versicles which flow into every cranny (vide "Only a Little Pink Baby Shoe" and "Voices of the Tender Past."). The genre of penny home papers is definitely formed; and, like most products of compulsory education, it bewilders.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JEAN-JACQUES ROUSSEAU. •

Sir,—Jean-Jacques' life has always been a favourite theme with French essayists. His name evokes a unique past made of strange doings and imperishable doctrines having left their mark upon society at large. This great man proved his own enemy in many ways. His "Confessions," published after his death, supplied posterity with a weapon wherewith to scourge his memory. His critics complacently dwell upon his morose character, and find no excuse for it except his own natural perversity, forgetting that the cruel internal complaint from which he suffered almost invariably leads to mental gloom and depression. An early martyr to melancholia, Rousseau must have stood more than once on the brink of self-destruction. It is to woman he owed his salvation. These fair enthusiasts whom Julie's love-story has enthralled, were all up in arms in his defence, shielding him from the outer world, soothing him in his distress, leading him by the hand, so to say, like a child in need of protection. Indeed, the ladies of France had every cause to be grateful to the man who, whatever his crochets and vagaries had meant well by them, teaching them above all things, to be good wives and mothers. He preached to them a gospel that went straight to their hearts. We might Victor Cousin, who felt so keenly of the question of female education (see his Jacqueline Pascal) deplore the neglect into which Rousseau's writings had fallen nowadays. That question, according to Cousin, was understood by none better than by the author of Emile, and he more particularly refers to the fifth and concluding part of that remarkable treatise which concerns woman alone and the noble part assigned to her by nature at the side of her companion, man. The "New Woman," I am afraid, will think but poorly of these eloquent pages so completely at variance with her own bold theories, for Jean-Jacques held it as his firm belief, and all his arguments are based upon that belief, that equality between the two sexes was neither possible nor desirable for woman's own sake, who would thereby lose all moral influence and the respect due to her. Altri tempi, altri costumi.

One of the more recent contributors to the "Rousseau literature" is M. Léo Claretie, the son, I presume, of the distinguished director of the French comedy. Under the attractive title, J.-J. Rousseau et ses Amies, M. Claretie presents to the reader a series of biographic sketches, the place of honour in the series being given to Mme. d'Houdetot, the most sympathetic of all Rousseau's "friends," and the one he loved best; but to this purpose, for the sprightly Countess has already an admirer, the famous Saint Lambert, to whom she was devoted. As customary in those times among the upper classes, the Count, her husband, lived on the best terms possible with his wife's paramour. The prevailing fashion was, not to stick at such trifles as fidelity in wedlock and respect for one's own name. M. Claretie tells us all this in that light, easy style which the French language lends itself so well, but he is not very careful as to date. For instance, after having stated that Saint Lambert died in 1803, and the husband in 1806, he would have us believe that the two met at the Countess's table in 1811 to celebrate an anniversary. It speaks well for the old lady's nerves that she could sit down to dinner with a couple of ghosts without being upset.

Armed with Jean-Jacques' "Confessions," the most startling monument of self-revelation ever conceived, the author has not a word to say in exculpation of that poor monomaniac, racked by disease, who saw an enemy in every fellow-creature. M. Claretie is particularly indignant with Rousseau for having forsaken his children. The curious part of the affair is that no one ever saw them. There is not a particle of dependent evidence to show that those children have ever existed. There is no better proof extant than Thérèse Lovasseur, supposed mother, who survived her strait-laced husband upwards of twenty years, never been questioned upon that moot point. That poor woman may not have been a paragon of virtue, but she was a good and faithful nurse, and the tears of gratitude with which Rousseau spoke of her in his declining years are a testimony in favour that no sneers can obliterate.

Claretie's sarcasms are out of place concerning her. His associating her name with that of Omphale by way of making ridicule of her "who sat at her feet" is in worse taste still. M. Claretie seems to forget what he owes to the author of the Le Contrat Social. The very French he writes of is Rousseau's, the father and creator of such modern prose. The judicious, always accurate, Sainte-Beuve calls him a "générateur de la langue," and he points to the sources from whence he drew his inspiration: Rousseau is the first French writer who introduced nature into the arid literature of the eighteenth century, who spoke in melodious and hitherto unknown tones of blue skies, green fields and the tranquil majesty of forests. Those were the delights to the readers of Voltaire's La Pucelle and Montesquieu's Lettres Persanes, and they charmed them. No wonder the French liked him so well and stuck to him to the last.

March 14.

THOMAS DELTA.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

THE Daily Chronicle's critic of "The Dreamers of the Ghetto," by Mr. Zangwill, finds an affinity between Mr. Zangwill's book and the works of the late Mr. Pater:

"As in Pater, we are carried up and down centuries to various parts of Europe, and are shown glimpses of life and strange phases of thought, snatched, as it were, from the oblivion which, when the brief scene is over, lies again on either side, whilst that one point of life with its living hopes and thoughts, and its varied colours, remains to us vivid and memorable. We have a vision of the years presented to us in typical souls. We live again through crises of human thought, and are compelled by the writer's art to regard them, not as a catalogue of errors or hopes dead and of with, but under the vital forms in which at some time or another they confronted the minds of actual men like ourselves."

Coming to the work itself, this critic gives it enthusiastic praise. We quote a passage near the end of his review:

"It will be seen that the author has courage. He does not flatter or spare. He shows us all that is unequal, the sordid narrowness, the perverted ingenuity of his people. Those are the things, indeed, which give him his artistic opportunity. For, in pathetic contrast to them, he reveals to us the peculiar glory of Israel—the obstinate patience, the undying hope, the strange beauty of an immemorial ritual, the reason of a despised kinship, and somewhere in the heart of the race that unsatisfied hunger for God. Had not the author himself passed through the phases of emotion and thought represented, for instance, in the 'Chad Gadya,' he could not have accomplished that fine study in dramatic meditation without exaggeration, sentimentality or bathos. Yet he achieves the difficult task without a slip, and as his world-weary and disillusioned Jew sinks in a Venetian canal, and with his last breath tries to utter the ancient words, 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one,' we feel that the common use of the word artist falls short of the truth."

From an acute and informing notice in the St. James's Gazette by Mr. W. P. James, we quote the following fragments:

"Mr. Zangwill continues to interpret Israel to the Gentiles. It is a work well worthy to be done, and a work urgently needed to be done, if one is to judge by the rapidity with which modern European nations drop back into a blind mediæval hatred of the Chosen People. The Dreamers of the Ghetto is a thoughtful and, both in form and substance, a singularly interesting contribution both to the work of interpretation and to the literature of fiction. . . .

Mr. Zangwill, as readers of his first Jewish novel will remember, has a pitiless eye for the pinchbeck glitter of the parvenu Jew. He detects it even in the great English Earl, the 'Primrose Sphynx,' perhaps not forgetting, besides the glitter of the novels, some little indications in Disraeli's private letters to his sister written in early manhood, in 'the days of the dandies.' And it is precisely because he thinks the world is only too familiar with the external aspect of the prosperous Jewish parvenu that he is anxious to interpret the 'dreamers' of the ghetto, the creators of religions and religious revivals, the people of 'longings that cannot be uttered,' who yet have given Europe, in Spinoza, its most profound philosophy; in Heine its most perfect and most poignant love-lyrics as well as its most biting wit. 'The Jews,' said Heine, 'were a wonderful people. They invented Christianity and loans: Christendom highly appreciated loans; it had not made trial of Christianity. If Christendom ceases to appreciate loans when the Christians are not the creditors, and the usurer charges sixty per cent., never was Nemesis clearer. Christendom, which drove the Jews from the general street into its ghettos, drove the Jews likewise into the practice of usury. . . .'

It is rather amusing, by the way, now to recall Mr. Zangwill's début as a 'new humorist.' Happily, when mirth was required of him, he remembered Jerusalem; and his tongue, instead of cleaving to the roof of his mouth, became eloquent in her service. The seriousness of the present book is notable. It is an earnest plea for the spirit of religion against the tyranny of the letter. And a comparison of Joseph the Dreamer with Uriel Acosta will prove how impartially in this matter Judaism and Christianity are treated by Mr. Zangwill."

The Spectator devotes an article to Mr. Zangwill. The writer begins by recalling Mr. Zangwill's earlier work, The Children of the Ghetto, which he thinks was "a book of the truly revealing kind." He then compares The Dreamers of the Ghetto with it—but unfavourably:

"We expected it, perhaps unreasonably, to explain something of the central fact of all Jewish history, the marvellous, the almost miraculous, disparity and distance between their highest minds and their average minds, between Isaiah and the Rabbis, between St. Paul and the traders in the market-place, and found nothing that made the facts in any degree more clear. The book is a collection of sketches of men who are often striking and always interesting, but does not, so far as we see, suggest any thread of connexion between the minds of those men, or any, even the most insufficient, explanation of their lives.

If Mr. Zangwill really wishes to make his people clearer to the world, and so remove a mist of unjust prejudice, he should tell us his views, through tales if he will, though we think he might do the work more convincingly through a graver statement of all that in his judgment differentiates the Hebrew from the European intellect. The former intellect has, as we conceive, another kind of intuition, one that pierces the veil of life more sharply, and sees more clearly the rightful dominance of that which is beyond. And he should answer three questions, which are all of them just now, though unimportant here, of terrible importance to his kinsmen on the Continent. The first is—are Hebrews capable of being patriots? . . . Mr. Zangwill in this very book sings a sort of prelude to England as the country which has caught the Hebraic inspiration, and is heiress, as it were, of the Hebrew spirit. Still, the Continent is fuller of Jews than England is, and the Continent denies patriotism to Jews with terrible results for the persecuted people. What is the precise truth as a fair-minded Jew understands it, and in what way does the feeling for their race slide into the feeling for their adopted country? What, again, is the true Jewish feeling among the thoughtful as well as the ordinary as to the acquisition of wealth? Do they look upon it as the mediæval Jews did, as a defence, or as a means of obtaining luxury, or as an instrument for obtaining the power for which they are believed to thirst? And, finally, what is the depth and what are the limits of that spirit of mockery which all their enemies of to-day attribute to Jews, which is so singularly absent from the Old Testament—there is only one mocking sentence in it—but which inspires the genius of Heine, is believed on the Continent to be ingrained in the character of the race, and is, we incline to think, revealed as really existing by their special tastes in jests? No Jew, we fancy, not even Mr. Zangwill, quite understands how completely sealed a book the modern Jew character is to the Gentile communities, or how much dangerous prejudice would disappear if it were thoroughly understood. It is the unknown, not the known, before which modern men recoil."

From a well-written review of this comedy, signed H. F., in the Westminster Gazette we take leave to quote the following passages:

"Fortunately M. Rostand is no decadent. Whether he build us up a delicate fairyland structure, breathing, like 'La Princesse Loaintaine,' the spirit of mediæval romance, or give us a bold, heroic comedy, full of life and colour and movement, like 'Cyrano,' he is always poetically sane and vigorously dramatic. It may be old-fashioned to feel grateful to him for this, and for his choice of subjects among things pleasant and of good report; but there are many of us who, like Mr. Hardcastle, still love some old fashions better than the new, and the brilliant success of 'Cyrano' in Paris shows that, even there, such a taste has not altogether lost its influence.

Cyrano, the Gascon hero with the huge nose:

'Un nez! Ah! messeigneurs, quel nez que ce nez-là!

On ne peut voir passer un pareil nasigère Sans s'écrier "Oh! non, vraiment il exagère!" Puis on sourit, on dit "Il va l'enlever," mais Monsieur de Bergerac ne l'enlève jamais."

Cyrano is played at the Porte St. Martin by Coquelin, and is, of course, the part Sir Henry Irving had in his eye when he bought the English rights of the play. So much as to look at Cyrano's nose is dangerous; to mock at it is to face his steel. Thus he saves his ugliness from ridicule among his fellow-men, but, alas! he has no spell to cast over women, and he—the famous poet and fighter, the glass of fashion, and the mould of form for every Gascon youth—loves in vain the beautiful Roxane, whose affections are set on young Christian de Neuville. The irony of mocking Cupid makes Roxane, all unconscious of Cyrano's passion, demand his protection for her lover, and nobly Cyrano discharges his trust. When the foolish Christian tries to pick a quarrel, Cyrano refuses to be provoked by the most insulting references to his nose and takes the boy to his arms. They become inseparables, and Cyrano even writes Christian's love-letters and sonnets to his mistress's eyebrows, putting into them his whole soul, and pleading for another as he would fain have pleaded for himself. So well does he succeed that at last Roxane declares, in a fervour of poetic admiration, that she loves Christian for his verses alone:

'Je t'aimerais encore
Si toute ta beauté tout d'un coup s'envolait!'

She would love Christian même laid, affreux, défiguré, grotesque. Here, then, is a strange situation. The only solution is Christian's death. He is killed in battle a moment after Roxane has made this avowal to him and to Cyrano, and so the fourth act closes. The fifth shows us in infinitely pathetic scenes the long-delayed discovery by Roxane, who for fifteen years has mourned Christian as her poet-lover, of Cyrano's noble deception. But it is made too late. Cyrano is death-stricken, and Roxane, broken-hearted, can only cry:

'Je n'aimais qu'un seul être et je le perds deux fois.'

Of the large humanity, the humour, the pathos, and the dramatic effectiveness of the play, such a brief and bald summary of the plot can convey but a hint. The scenes in the private theatre at the Duke of Burgundy's; in the shop of the pastrycook Ragueneau, whose adoration of poetic genius makes every needy poetaster of Paris his debtor; in the French camp before Arras; and in the peaceful convent garden whither Roxane has taken her woes of widowhood—each is full of life and poetry and wit."

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, April 7.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- A TREATISE ON THE PREPARATION AND DELIVERY OF SERMONS. By John A. Broadus, D.D. New (twenty-third) edition. Hodder & Stoughton.
- DIVINE IMMANENCE: AN ESSAY ON THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE OF MATTER. By J. R. Illingworth, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 7s. 6d.
- THOUGHTS ON THE CHURCH. By the Rev. Vernon Staley. Thos. Hibberd.
- THE PREPARATION FOR CHRISTIANITY IN THE ANCIENT WORLD. By R. M. Wenley. A. & C. Black.
- A HARVEST OF MYRRH AND SPICES GATHERED FROM THE MYSTERIES OF THE LORD'S PASSION. By William H. Draper, M.A. Henry Frowde.

THE CHRISTIAN INTERPRETATION OF LIFE, AND OTHER ESSAYS. By W. T. Davison, M.A. Charles H. Kelly. 4s. 6d.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE HOLY LANCE: AN EPISODE OF THE CRUSADES, AND OTHER MONOGRAPHS. By W. Stewart Ross. W. Stewart & Co.

HENRY OF GUISE, AND OTHER PORTRAITS. By A. C. Macdowall. Macmillan & Co. 8s. 6d.

THE STORY OF THE EMPIRE SERIES: NEW ZEALAND. By William Pember Reeves. 1s. 6d.

THE BOOK OF GLASGOW CATHEDRAL: A HISTORY AND DESCRIPTION. Edited by George Eyre-Todd. Morison Bros. (Glasgow).

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

PROLEGOMENA TO "IN MEMORIAM." By Thomas Davidson. Isbister & Co. 1s. 6d.

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. By Oliver Goldsmith. Service & Paton. 2s. 6d.

THE ODES AND EPODES OF HORACE. Translated by A. D. Godley. Methuen & Co.

ART.

THE ROYAL GALLERY OF HAMPTON COURT. Illustrated by Ernest Law. George Bell & Sons.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

STUDIES IN BROWN HUMANITY: BEING SCRAWLS AND SMUDGES IN SEPIA, WHITE, AND YELLOW. By Hugh Clifford. Grant Richards. 6s.

WEALTH AND WILD CATS: TRAVELS AND RESEARCHES IN THE GOLD-FIELDS OF WESTERN AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND. By Raymond Radclyffe. Downey & Co. 1s.

EDUCATIONAL.

BLACK'S SCHOOL SHAKESPEARE: KING LEAR. By William Shakespeare. Edited by P. Sheavyn, M.A. A. & C. Black. 1s.

UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES: MILTON'S PARADISE REGAINED. Edited by A. J. Wyatt, M.A. W. B. Clive. 2s. 6d.

SELECTIONS FROM PARADISE LOST. Edited by Albert Perry Walker. Isbister & Co.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FUR, FEATHER, AND FIN SERIES: THE SALMON. By the Hon. A. E. Gathorne-Hardy. Longmans, Green & Co. 5s.

SANITARY ENGINEERING. By Wm. Paul Gerhard, C.E. Published by the Author (New York).

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

IN our last issue we inadvertently gave the price of Mr. Guy Boothby's new novel, The Lust of Hate, as six shillings. It should have been five shillings.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish on 18th April a new romance, by Mr. Crockett, entitled The Standard Bearer. The hero is the minister of a Galloway parish. The story opens with the persecution of the Covenanters in 1685.

THE third volume of Messrs. Service Paton's "Popular Biblical Library" will be published immediately. It is entitled The History of Early Christianity, and is from the pen of the Rev. Leighton Pullan, of St John's College, Oxford.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & Co. will issue this month a large paper edition of The History of the Holy Grail, limited to 1000 copies, printed on hand-made paper, with proofs of Sir Edward Burne-Jones's illustrations on India paper.

THE Rev. R. T. Mylne is about to publish a volume of sermons preached in Bangor Cathedral, entitled The Abiding Strength of the Church. Mr. Mylne is a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and some of the sermons are on antiquarian subjects. The work will be illustrated by four photographs of antiquities, will have a preface by the head master of Rugby, and will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN writes to say that the play, "The Master," about to be produced by Mr. John Hare, has no connexion with the novel by Mr. I. Zangwill who has in no way sanctioned the use of the title, though unable in the present state of the copyright law to substantiate his claim to a title duly copyrighted as a book.

THE concluding part of Mr. Will Rothenstein's series of English Portraits is announced for publication by Mr. Grant Richards early in April, and will contain drawings of Mr. R. B. Cunningham Graham and Mr. Henry James. The portraits will then be issued in one volume with cover and title-page by Mr. Rothenstein. It has been generally understood that the notices which accompany the portraits have been the work of the artist but a note to the volume expresses Mr. Rothenstein's thanks to "Messrs. Grant Allen, William Archer, L. F. Austin, Max Beerbohm, Laurence Binyon, Vernon Blackburn, Edward Clodd, Canon Dixon, Edmund Gosse, C. L. Graves, John Gray, Laurence Housman, Lionel Johnson, Clement Shorter and Prof. York Powell for the biographical notices which accompany the portraits."

MR. GRANT RICHARDS announces the immediate publication of a new edition of a poetical drama by the late Louisa Shore. This is Hannibal, a book which in its day attracted a considerable amount of attention.

THE portfolio monograph on Greek bronzes, to be published by Messrs. Seeley & Co. in the middle of April, is written by Mr. Alexander Stewart Murray, keeper of the Greek and Roman antiquities at the British Museum, author of Greek Sculpture under Pheidias, &c. The number will be illustrated mainly from the collection of bronzes in the British Museum, and will contain several that have not previously been reproduced.

ELLIOT STOCK'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

demey 8vo, handsomely printed and bound, with a Map of Sheffield in 1780, price 10s. 6d. net; Large-Paper copies, £1 ls. net.

THE RECORDS of the BURGERY of SHEFFIELD, commonly called THE TOWN TRUST. By JOHN DANIEL LEADER, Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, one of the Town Trustees of Sheffield, &c.
A noble local record of far more than local importance."
Leeds Mercury.

Contains many curious and precious grains of information with regard to the local life, customs, and institutions of Sheffield, and even the public events of the time."
Scotsman.

A NEW NOVEL.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

UTES and RIFTS. By LOUISA SAHN.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, price 5s.

UNCONSIDERED TRIFLES.

By GEORGE DALZIEL, Author of "Mattie Gray; and Other Poems," "Faces in the Fire," "Only a Flower Girl," &c., &c.

I have discovered a poet whom I can understand—Mr. George Dalziel. No man can babble more prettily than he concerning lovely maidens and sweet things of the elden world. It is a deep delight to hear him sing."
Morning Leader.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

DREAM of PARADISE: a

Poem. By ROBERT THOMSON.
Stanzas by no means destitute of poetical merit."
Family Churchman.

Mr. Thomson has the gift of imagination, and he gives expression to many thoughts that are both beautiful and comforting. His measure is pleasing, and his choice of language and metaphor extensive."
Dundee Advertiser.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.,

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTIONS of FAMOUS WORKS of ART.

AUTOTYPES of the OLD MASTERS in the GREAT CONTINENTAL GALLERIES.

AUTOTYPES of MODERN BRITISH ART.

AUTOTYPES of WORKS by ARTISTS of the PRE-RAPHAELITE SCHOOL.

AUTOTYPES of PICTURES in the NATIONAL GALLERY.

AUTOTYPES of DRAWINGS by OLD MASTERS.

AUTOTYPES of SELECTED WORKS from the PARIS SALONS.

Those interested in Art, and in the recent developments of the Photographic Reproduction of Pictures, are invited to inspect the Company's extensive Collection of Autotypes and Autogravures of all Schools, now on view at their Gallery, 74, New Oxford Street, where may also be seen a series of examples framed in mouldings of specially designed patterns, made in oak, walnut, and other hard woods. Framed Autotypes form acceptable artistic gifts, and are eminently suited for the adornment of the Home.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE.

Now ready, New Edition of 160 pages. With upwards of One Hundred Miniature Photographs of Notable Autotypes, and Twenty-three Tint Block Illustrations. For convenience of Reference the Publications are arranged Alphabetically under Artists' Names. Post free, ONE SHILLING.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

NEW SERIES. No. 26. Price 3s. APRIL, 1898.

MIND.

A Quarterly Review of Psychology and Philosophy.

Edited by G. F. STOUT.

With the Co-operation of Prof. H. SIDGWICK, Dr. E. CAIRD, Dr. VENN, Dr. WARD, and Professor E. H. TITCHENER.

CONTENTS.

- I. THE REGULAE of DESCARTES (L.). BOYCE GIBSON.
- II. A CONTRIBUTION towards an IMPROVEMENT in PSYCHOLOGICAL METHOD (II.). W. McDUGALL.
- III. FREEDOM. G. E. MOORE.
- IV. THE PARADOX of LOGICAL INFERENCE. Miss E. E. C. JONES.
- V. MANDEVILLE'S PLACE in ENGLISH THOUGHT. NORMAN WILDE.
- VI. THE DIALECTICAL METHOD (II.). Prof. E. B. MCGILVARY.
- VII. CRITICAL NOTICES: George Trumbull Ladd, "Philosophy of Knowledge," &c.; JAMES SMITH—Emile Durkheim, "Le Suicide, Etude de Sociologie," HAYLOCK ELLIS—Borden P. Bowde, "Theory of Thought and Knowledge," GEORGE A. COE—R. L. Nettleship, "Philosophical Lectures and Remains" (ed. A. C. Bradley and G. R. Benson), B. BOSANQUET—C. Lloyd Morgan, "Habit and Instinct," Editor.

VIII. NEW BOOKS.

IX. PHILOSOPHICAL PERIODICALS.

X. NOTE on the ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY and "MIND."

WILLIAMS & NORWATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; 29, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh; and 7, Broad Street, Oxford

Just published, crown 8vo, 258 pages, picture cover, 2s. 6d.

THE MUMMY'S DREAM: an Egyptian Story of the Exodus. Written and Illustrated by H. B. PROCTOR.

"Mr. Proctor's book is not an ordinary book; faults fade away before the singular brightness of his imagination. One feels that he must have lived in his story with an absorption and a realism that few authors can command."
Liverpool Daily Post.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & Co., Ltd.
Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON 'FOODS AND THEIR VALUES,' BY DR. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocos (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story."

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

The following have appeared, and the numbers containing them can still be obtained; or Complete Sets may be had separately.

| Author                 | Date    | Author                        | Date     |
|------------------------|---------|-------------------------------|----------|
| 1896.                  |         | WILKIE COLLINS ...            | March 20 |
| JOHN JONSON ...        | Nov. 14 | JOHN MILTON ...               | " 27     |
| JOHN KEATS ...         | " 21    | WILLIAM COWPER ...            | April 3  |
| JOHN SUCKLING ...      | " 28    | CHARLES DARWIN ...            | " 10     |
| ALFRED HOOD ...        | Dec. 5  | ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON }       | " 17     |
| THOMAS GRAY ...        | " 12    | HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW }  | " 24     |
| CERT LOUIS STEVENSON } | " 19    | ANDREW MARVELL ...            | May 1    |
| WALTER SCOTT ...       | " 26    | ROBERT BROWNING ...           | " 8      |
| 1897.                  |         | THOMAS CARLYLE ...            | " 15     |
| DAVID RICHARDSON.      | Jan. 2  | PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ...      | " 22     |
| THOMAS DE QUINCEY      | " 9     | CHARLES DICKENS ...           | " 29     |
| JOHN HUNT ...          | " 16    | JONATHAN SWIFT ...            | June 5   |
| ROD MACAULAY ...       | " 23    | WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY } | " 12     |
| ROBERT SOUTHEY ...     | " 30    | WILLIAM BLAKE ...             | " 19     |
| COLERIDGE ...          | Feb. 6  | SIR RICHARD STEELE ...        | " 26     |
| CHARLES LAMB ...       | " 13    | ALEXANDER POPE ...            | July 3   |
| MICHAEL DRAYTON ...    | " 20    | DOUGLAS JERROLD ...           | " 10     |
| WATER SAVAGE LANDOR }  | " 27    | FRANCIS BACON ...             | " 17     |
| ANNE PEPYS ...         | March 6 |                               |          |
| 1898.                  |         |                               |          |
| EDMUND WALLER ...      | " 13    | HENRIK IBSEN ...              | March 26 |

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

"A brilliant book."—Sketch. "Particularly good."—Academy.

6s. net, claret roan, gilt, illustrated.

LONDON in the TIME of the DIAMOND JUBILEE.

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Letter from H.M. the QUEEN.

"Sir Henry Ponsonby is commanded by the Queen to thank Mr. Darlington for a copy of his Handbook which he has sent to Her Majesty."
"Nothing better could be wished for."—British Weekly.
"Far superior to ordinary Guides."—London Daily Chronicle.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S.

Maps by JOHN BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S.

Fcap. 8vo.

ONE SHILLING EACH.

Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING; A. W. KINGLAKE; and SIR THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

- BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.
- THE NORTH WALES COAST.
- BRECON and its BEAONS.
- ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.
- BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
- BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.
- LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, RETTWSYCOED and SNOWDON.
- ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLLETH and ABERDOVEY.
- BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICCIETH and PWLLHELL.
- MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER and CHELTENHAM.
- LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.
- THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.
- THE ISLE of WIGHT.
- THE WYE VALLEY.
- THE SEVERN VALLEY.

"The most comprehensive and interesting Handbook to our vast city that we have seen."—The World. "No ordinary handbook."—The Times.

Sixty Illustrations.

3s. 6d. net.

Twenty Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS.

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Ltd.
The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish on APRIL 18 a New Romance by S. R. CROCKETT, entitled THE STANDARD BEARER; on APRIL 21 a New Novel, THE CROOK OF THE BOUGH, by MENIE MURIEL DOWIE, Author of "A Girl in the Carpathians," &c.; and on APRIL 25 a New Novel by M. E. FRANCIS, MISS ERIN.

THE POEMS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE WYNDHAM, M.P. Demy 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

This Edition contains the "Venus," "Lucrece," and Sonnets, and is prefaced with an elaborate Introduction of over 140 pp. The Text is founded on the First Quartos, with an endeavour to retain the original reading. A set of Notes deals with the problems of Date, Rival Poets, Typography, and Punctuation; and the Editor has commented on obscure passages in the light of contemporary works. The Publishers believe that no such Complete Edition has ever been published.

"One of the most serious contributions to Shakespearean criticism that has been published for some time, and its publication assures to Mr. Wyndham an honourable place among men of letters. He comes well equipped with knowledge, and is well endowed with some higher critical gifts . . . this extremely interesting volume."—Times.

THREE YEARS IN SAVAGE AFRICA. By LIONEL DECLE. With an Introduction by H. M. STANLEY, M.P. With 100 Illustrations and 5 Maps, demy 8vo, 21s.

"One of the brightest books of travel we have ever read."—MR. STANLEY.

"Absorbingly interesting."—Daily Mail.

"It will take a permanent place among the very best books of travel. It combines solidity and liveliness, and carries the reader gaily through. A fine full book."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Abounding in thrilling adventures and hairbreadth escapes."—Daily Telegraph.

A FRONTIER CAMPAIGN. By Viscount FINECASTLE, V.C., and Lieutenant P. C. ELIOTT-LOCKHART. With a Map and Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s. A narrative of the recent operations of the Field Force on the North-West Frontier. [Second Edition in the Press.]

"A narrative that depicts the author as modest as he is brave."—Daily News.

"A stirring tale of gallantry."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"It shows on every page the heroism of our troops and their officers. We can heartily commend this volume."—St. James's Gazette.

WITH THE MOUNTED INFANTRY AND MASHONALAND FIELD FORCE, 1896. By Lieut.-Colonel ALDERSON. With numerous Illustrations and Plans. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

This is an account of the military operations in Mashonaland by the officer who commanded the troops in that district during the late rebellion. Besides its interest as a story of warfare, it will have a peculiar value as an account of the services of mounted infantry by one of the chief authorities on the subject.

CAMPAIGNING ON THE UPPER NILE AND NIGER. By Lieutenant SKYMOUR VANDELEUR. With an Introduction by Sir G. GOLDFIE, K.C.M.G. With four Maps, Illustrations, and Plans, large crown 8vo, 30s. 6d.

A Narrative of Service (1) on the Upper Nile in 1895 and 1896; and (2) under Sir George Goldie in the Niger Campaign of January, 1897, describing the capture of Bida and Iorin, and the French Occupation of Boussa. The book thus deals with the Two Districts of Africa where now the French and English stand face to face.

"So good that it would have been welcome at any time. Upon the African question there is no book procurable which contains so much of value as this. Sir George Goldie's introduction is a remarkable paper; the utterance of a clear and statesmanlike intelligence, marked by the fullest knowledge and by that imaginative insight which belongs to a born ruler of men."—Guardian.

"Deserves to be read by every one."—Standard.

ENGLISH LYRICS. Selected and Edited by W. E. HENLEY. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

"Mr. Henley has exercised his individual taste and judgment, which have here served him and his readers to admiration."—Scotsman.

"A body of choice and lovely poetry."—Birmingham Gazette.

"On almost every page of this volume there are lines of beauty."—Academy.

"Mr. Henley's notes, in their brevity and their fulness, their information and their suggestiveness, seem to us a model of what notes should be."

A HISTORY OF THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY, 1845-95. By CHARLES H. GRINLING. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"An excellent history, full of valuable information."—Glasgow Herald.

"The only adequate history of a great English railway that has as yet appeared."—Times.

"Admirably written, and crammed with interesting facts."—Daily Mail.

THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE. By EDWARD GIBBON. A New Edition. Edited, with Notes, Appendices, and Maps, by J. B. BURY, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin. In Seven Volumes. Demy 8vo, gilt top, 8s. 6d. each. Crown 8vo, 6s. each. Vol. V. [April 18th.]

THE ODES AND EPODES OF HORACE. Translated by A. G. GODLEY, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 2s. [Classical Translations.]

THE MINISTRY OF DEACONESSES. By CECILIA ROBINSON, Deaconess. With an Introduction by the LORD BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, and an Appendix by Professor ARMITAGE ROBINSON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

This book is a review of the history and theory of the office and work of a Deaconess, and it may be regarded as authoritative.

[April 14.]

THE CHURCHMAN'S LIBRARY.

SOME NEW TESTAMENT PROBLEMS. By ARTHUR WRIGHT, Fellow and Tutor of Queen's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s. This book deals with a number of important problems from the standpoint of the "Higher Criticism."

LEADERS OF RELIGION

THOMAS CRANMER. By A. J. MASON, D.D., Canon of Canterbury. With a Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE LIBRARY OF DEVOTION.

THE CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE. Newly Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by C. BRIGG, D.D., late Student of Christ Church. Post 8vo, 2s.; leather, 3s.

FICTION.

THE STANDARD BEARER. By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "Lochinvar," "The Raiders," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CROOK OF THE BOUGH. By MENIE MURIEL DOWIE, Author of "A Girl in the Carpathians." Crown 8vo, 6s.

MISS ERIN. By M. E. FRANCIS, Author of "In a Northern Village." Crown 8vo, 6s.

CROSS TRAILS. By VICTOR WAITE. Crown 8vo, 6s. A romance of Adventure in America and New Zealand.

BIJLI THE DANCER. By JAMES BLYTH PATTON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s. A Romance of India.

ACROSS THE SALT SEAS. By J. BLOUNDELLE-BURTON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BETWEEN SUN AND SAND. By W. C. SCULLY, Author of "The White Hecatomb." Crown 8vo, 6s.

SIMON DALE. By ANTHONY HOPE. Third Edition. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A brilliant novel. The hero is a perfect hero of romance."—Athenaeum.

"A bright and gallant story."—Graphic.

"The style is virile and distinguishable, and the whole tale most entertaining reading."—St. James's Gazette.

A VOYAGE OF CONSOLATION. By SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN, Author of "An American Girl in London." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

"Humour, pure and spontaneous and irresistible, brightens every page of this exhilarating story."—Daily Mail.

THE VINTAGE. By E. F. BENSON, Author of "Dodo." Illustrated by G. P. JACOMB-HOOD. Crown 8vo, 6s. A Romance of the Greek War of Independence. [Third Edition.]

"The leading characters stand out and the love story is old with charm and delicacy."—Westminster Gazette.

"The book is full of vivid detail."—Daily Telegraph.

"An excellent piece of romantic literature; a very graceful and moving story."—Saturday Review.

THE KLOOF BRIDE. By ERNEST GLANVILLE, Author of "The Fossiker." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. A Story of South African Adventure. [Second Edition in the Press.]

"Scene after scene of stirring interest follow each other in almost bewildering rapidity. Without doubt Mr. Glanville can write a tale of adventure."—Scotsman.

JOSIAH'S WIFE. By NORMA LORIMER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A witty and interesting book. Josiah is a noble character, and Camela is bewitching."—Queen.

"A well-told story."—Daily Chronicle.

"Written in a bright and witty style."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"It has literary finish and deep feeling."—Daily Mail.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S CATALOGUE and NEW BOOK GAZETTE sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1354.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

OTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT OF LITERATURE.

No. 574, for APRIL, published this day, contains a collection of books in Art, and the usual selection of good Books and Sets in Literature and Science; also fine copies of the Third and Fourth Shakespeares.

Free from HENRY SOTHERAN & Co., Booksellers, 140, Strand, W.C., and 37, Piccadilly, W.

RTHUR THOMAS, 27, Silver Street, Leicester.

Desires to intimate that he will issue his Second CATALOGUE of Books. It will contain many interesting items, including First Editions of esteemed Authors in Belles Lettres, Folk-lore, Geography, History, Antiquities, Fiction, and a selection of finely illustrated Works on Art and Architecture.

Gratis and post free to applicants.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,

Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities afforded by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favorable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., especially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and other Publications and especially-built Machines for fast binding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.

Price and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Publications.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. English, 10d. per 1,000 Words. French and German, in Roman Characters, 1s. 3d. per 1,000. French Translated. Samples and references.—Miss E. M., 18, Mortimer Crescent, N.W.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Dressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses G. Purz, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any other requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Farnival Street, London, E.C.

FOR SALE.

Advertisements inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.

HEISTORIC FLINT IMPLEMENTS.—A Gentleman living in locality where these are found would improve them for Collectors. Has also a collection to sell.—Address P. N., THE ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 1897 and 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply to THE ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

WANT WATER COLOURS.—T. B. Hardy—R. W. Fraser, 1893-7—Tully Lott—R. Wane—Shalders—Rowtham—Louise Rayner. Also choice Books, including Dickens, 100 vcs., originals or reprint (circa 1876).—THOMSON, Fenwick Street, Manchester.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Albemarle Street, Piccadilly, W.

TUESDAY NEXT, April 13, at 3 o'clock.—THOMAS COOPER GOTCH, Esq.—FIRST OF THREE LECTURES on "PHASES OF ART: PAST and PRESENT." One Guinea the Course.

THURSDAY, April 21, at 3 o'clock.—The Rev. Canon AINGER, M.A., LL.D.—FIRST OF THREE LECTURES on "SOME LEADERS in the POETIC REVIVAL of 1790-1820—COWPER, BURNS, and SCOTT." Half-a-Guinea.

SATURDAY, April 23, at 3 o'clock.—Sir WALTER PARRATT, Mus. Doc., Master of the Queen's Music.—FIRST OF FOUR LECTURES on "PROGRAMME MUSIC" (with Musical Illustrations). Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

FRIDAY, April 22nd, at 9 o'clock.—W. H. M. CHRISTIE, Esq., C.E., M.A., F.R.S., on "THE RECENT ECLIPSE."

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY. (Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, O.C.S.I.

THURSDAY, APRIL 21st, at 5 p.m., at the MUSEUM of PRACTICAL GEOLOGY, Jermyn Street, S.W., the following Paper will be read.—"THE MEETING OF THE DUKE OF MARCHBOUGH and CHARLES XII. at ALTRANSTADT, APRIL, 1707," by Mr. A. E. STAMP, R.A.

HUBERT HALL, Director and Hon. Sec. 115, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY of LONDON.

A COURSE OF TEN POPULAR LECTURES on "AMPHIBIANS and REPTILES" will be delivered in the LECTURE ROOM in the Society's Gardens, Regent's Park, on THURSDAYS, at 5 p.m., commencing April 21st, by Mr. F. E. BODDARD, M.A., F.R.S., Professor to the Society. Tickets for the whole Course, including Entrance to the Gardens, 10s. each; or 1s. each Lecture, not including Entrance, can be obtained on application to the SECRETARY, 3, Hanover Square, W.; or the Shilling Tickets can also be had of the CLERK, at the Kiosk in the Gardens. Fellows are admitted free.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and SCHOOL.

The SUMMER SESSION will begin on MAY 2nd, 1898. Students can reside in the College within the Hospital walls, subject to the collegiate regulations.

The Hospital contains a service of 750 beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly £500 are awarded annually. The Medical School contains large Lecture Rooms and well-appointed Laboratories for Practical Teaching, as well as Dissecting Rooms, Museum, Library, &c.

A large Recreation Ground has recently been purchased. For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to the WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch F. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways.

For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

WANTED.—English GIRL, to join three others, aged 18, who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French Instruction, 3l. Guinea a quarter.—CHAPRON, Offices of THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CARRIAGES INSURED AGAINST ACCIDENTS caused by Collision, the Falling, Bolting or Kicking of Horses, or by being Run into by other Vehicles. Policies issued for the Year or Season only. Prospectuses post free.—LLOYD'S ACCIDENT, LIFE, SICK and GENERAL INSURANCE CO., Ltd., 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W. Agents wanted.

Just issued. 300 pp., 7s. 6d.

THE PROCESS OF CREATION DISCOVERED; or, the Self-Evolution of the Earth and Universe by Natural Causes. By JAMES DUNBAR.

The publishers would particularly direct the attention of scientists and the learned to the salient points of the new theory of Evolution of which this work treats. In regard to the evolution, mechanism, and phenomena presented by the sun, the author urges that his theory is infinitely superior to that of the nebular hypothesis, and that in its application to the earth it is capable of absolute demonstration.

London: WATTS & Co., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

TWO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in reading a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilized world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to N., care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 25, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 45, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are especially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Office: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Sonthampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENS CROFT, Manager.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

New Edition of W. M. Thackeray's Works

To be issued in Thirteen Monthly Volumes, large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s. each.

THE BIOGRAPHICAL EDITION

OF

W. M. THACKERAY'S
COMPLETE WORKS.

This New and Revised Edition comprises

Additional Material and hitherto Unpublished Letters, Sketches, and Drawings,

Derived from the Author's Original Manuscripts and Note-Books.

AND EACH VOLUME WILL INCLUDE A MEMOIR IN THE FORM OF AN INTRODUCTION.

By Mrs. RICHMOND RITCHIE.

Vol. I., containing "VANITY FAIR," with 20 Full Page Illustrations, 11 Woodcuts, a Facsimile Letter, and a New Portrait IS NOW READY.

And a volume will be issued each subsequent month, so that the entire Edition will be completed on April 15th, 1899.

* * * A Prospectus of the Edition, with Specimen Pages, will be sent post free on application.

MR. GREGORY'S LETTER-BOX, 1813-30.

Edited by Lady GREGORY.

With a Portrait. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

From the Athenæum.—"This is a delightful book, which places the reader on terms of respectful intimacy with great personages, and instructs him in the easiest manner conceivable about momentous events."

From the World.—"Lady Gregory's pages bristle with good stories. Indeed, the great difficulty of a reviewer in dealing with this fascinating book is the plethora of good things that clamour for quotation."

GARDNER'S HOUSEHOLD MEDICINE and SICK-ROOM GUIDE:

A Description of the Means of Preserving Health, and the Treatment of Diseases, Injuries, and Emergencies.

Revised and expressly Adapted for the Use of Families, Missionaries, and Colonists.

By W. H. C. STAVELEY, F.R.C.S. England.

THIRTEENTH and CHEAPER EDITION, with numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s. 6d.

"Fully succeeds in its object, and is essentially practical in its execution."—Lancet.

EGYPT IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY;

Or, Mehemet Ali and his Successors until the British Occupation in 1882.

By DONALD A CAMERON,

H.B.M.'s Consul at Port Said. With a Map. Post 8vo, 6s.

From the Times.—"A valuable handbook to the subject. Mr. Cameron has the rare gift of knowing what to leave out, and instead of confusing his pages with unimportant details he presents a clear outline picture filled in just enough to put the reader in possession of the necessary points."

From the Athenæum.—"Mr. Cameron has produced in a small compass an interesting and, in parts, even brilliant epitome of the leading events of Egyptian history from the French to the British occupation, 1798 to 1882."

NEW NOVELS

PUBLISHED TO-DAY. — Crown 8vo, 6s.

SEÑORITA MONTENAR

By ARCHER P. CROUCH,

Author of "On a Surf-bound Coast," "Glimpses of Feverland," "Captain Enderis," &c.

A SOLDIER of MANHATTAN, and HIS ADVENTURES at TICONDEROGA and QUEBEC. By J. A. ALTSHELER, Author of "The Sun of Saratoga." Crown 8vo, 6s.

From the Academy.—"A dashing tale of war, love, and adventure."

From the Pall Mall Gazette.—"A right good story. The excitement is consistently sustained."

London:

SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

NOW READY.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTION

A Study of the Rights, the Origin, and the Social Functions of the Wealthier Classes.

BY

W. H. MALLOCK,

Author of "Labour and the Popular Welfare," "Classes and Masses," &c.

"He does not envelop the subject in a cloud of philosophic phraseology, he is always lucid and orderly, and he relieves his argument by welcome touches of satire and humour. His last book shows no deficiency in these qualities, and it is also perhaps the most complete and sustained effort of reasoning which he has so far produced."—Literature.

HIS GRACE o' the GUNNE By

I. HOOPER, Author of "A Singer of Marly." Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

"Really a clever, entertaining volume.....No common piece of work."—Athenæum.

THE DREAM CHARLOTTE. By

M. BETHAM-EDWARDS. Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"A tale of rare imaginative beauty. Needless to say, the literary charm of the book is great, and the atmosphere of the story true to its historical setting."—Dun 'ee Advertiser.

A MODERN CRUSADER. By Sophie

F. F. VEITCH. Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"But all the novel is replete with animation and with variety of interest and incident."—The Times.

WHO'S WHO, 1898. An Annual Biographical Dictionary. Fiftieth Year of Issue. Containing 1,143 New Biographies. In crown 8vo, 864 pages, bound in cloth gilt, with gilt edges and rounded corners, price 3s. 6d. net.

"This is undoubtedly the bandiest biographical dictionary and compendium of information, referring to prominent persons and their doings, in existence."—Nature.

THE VITALITY of CHRISTIAN

DOGMAS, and THEIR POWER of EVOLUTION. By A. SABATIER, D.D., Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Translated by Mrs. EM. CHRISTEN. With Preface by the Very Reverend the Hon. W. H. FREMANTLE, D.D., Dean of Ripon. Crown 8vo, 96 pages, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net.

"Is really a gem of theological constructive criticism. With marvellous lucidity and penetration Dr. Sabatier states for us here the philosophy and natural history of the dogma, its position and use in the Christian evolution."—Christian World.

THE STORY of GLADSTONE'S LIFE.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Containing 45 Illustrations, mostly Page Portraits, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods. In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

"This is a charmingly written sketch of Mr. Gladstone's public career, with some interesting glimpses at the same time into his private life."—The Observer.

PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL

ECONOMY. Book III. Vol. II. By Prof. J. SHIELD NICHOLSON. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

"The new volume is marked by the same robust practicality and independence of judgment that gave value to its predecessor. The book is one to be heartily commended to the student, the business man, and the politician."—Literary World.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOK

THROUGH the GOLD-FIELDS of ALASKA to BERING STRAITS. By HARRY DE WINDT. With 13 and 33 Full-Page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 15s.

THE LIFE of NAPOLEON III. By ARCHIBALD FORBES. With Photogravure Frontispiece and 33 Full-Page Illustrations. SECOND EDITION. Demy 8vo, cloth, top, 12s.

A LOWDEN SABBATH MORN. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. With 27 Full-Page Illustrations by A. S. Boyd. Fcap. 4to, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

A RACE for MILLIONS By David Christie MURRAY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TALES of TRAIL and TOWN. By BRET HARTE. With a Frontispiece by G. P. Jacob-Hood. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LOVING. By Mrs. Hungerford, Author of "A Modera Circ." &c. CHEAPER EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

PARIS. By E. ZOLA. Translated by E. A. VIZETELLY.

THE DISASTER. By P. and V. MARQUETTE. Translated by F. LEE.

THE SECRET of WYVERN TOWERS. By T. SPENCER, Author of "The Mysteries of Heroa Dyke."

IN the MIDDLE of LIFE. By AMBROSE BRUCE.

SETH'S BROTHER'S WIFE. By HAROLD FREDERIC.

THE LAWTON GIRL. By HAROLD FREDERIC. With Frontispiece by F. Barnard.

TALES of TRAIL and TOWN. By BRET HARTE. With Frontispiece by Jacob-Hood.

TRUE BLUE; or, "The Lass that Loved a Sailor." HENRY RUSSELL.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE HERITAGE of EVE. By H. H. SPERTIGUE. [April 1898]

FORTUNE'S GATE. By ALAN St. AUGUSY, Author of "Fellow of Trinity."

A WOMAN WORTH WINNING. By G. MANVILLE FRENCH, Author of "The White Virgin."

COLONEL THORNDYK'S SECRET. By G. A. HEWLEY, Author of "Rujub the Juggler."

WAS SHE JUSTIFIED? By FRANK BARNETT, Author of "Folly Morrison," &c.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Beyond the Pale," &c.

A WOMAN TEMPTED HIM. By WILLIAM WESTON, Author of "With the Red Eagle," &c.

A MODERN DICK WHITTINGTON; or, A Patron of Letters. By JAMES PAYN, Author of "Lost Massingberd." A NEW EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [April 2]

NEW TWO-SHILLING NOVELS.

LADY KILPATRICK. By ROBERT BUCHANAN. [April 1898]

BY WOMAN'S WIT. By Mrs. ALEXANDER. [April 2]

IS HE THE MAN? By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

THE CHRONICLES of MICHAEL DANEVITCH. By DICK DONOVAN.

UNDER SEALED ORDERS. By GRANT ALLEN.

ROGUES and VAGABONDS. By G. R. SIMS.

THE REVOLT of MAN. By Sir WALTER BESANT.

CHEAPER EDITIONS.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

DEAN SWIFT'S CHOICE WORKS. 1. Prose and Verse. With Memoir, Portrait, and Facsimiles.

CHARLES LAMB'S COMPLETE WORKS. 1. Including "Poetry for Children" and "Prætor Dorus." With Portraits and a Facsimile.

THOMAS HOOD'S CHOICE WORKS. 1. Prose and Verse. With Life, Portrait, and 200 Illustrations.

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN'S COMPLETE WORKS. With Life, Anecdotes, and 10 Full-Page Illustrations.

ARTEMUS WARD'S COMPLETE WORKS. With Portrait and Facsimile.

BRET HARTE'S CHOICE WORKS. 1. Prose and Verse. With Portrait and 40 Illustrations.

THACKERAYANA: Notes and Anecdotes. With Coloured Frontispiece and Hundreds of Sketches by WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.

THE MACLISE PORTRAIT GALLERY. 1. ILLUSTRIOUS LITERARY CHARACTERS. 86 Portraits by DANIEL MACLISE. With Memoirs by WILLIAM BATES, B.C.

GEORGE COLMAN'S HUMOROUS WORKS. 1. "Broad Girth," "My Nightgown and Slippers," &c. With Life and Frontispiece.

THE LIFE of GEORGE CRUIKSHANK. By BLANCHARD JERROLD. With 84 Illustrations and Bibliography.

STRUTT'S SPORTS and PASTIMES of the PEOPLE of ENGLAND. Edited by WILLIAM HOME. With 140 Illustrations.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S HOUSE: a Practical Guide for Selecting or Building a House. By C. J. RICHARDSON. With Coloured Frontispiece and 531 Illustrations.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS:   | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| The Romance of a Rock ... ..                             | 411     |
| The French Revolution through American Spectacles ... .. | 412     |
| The Rifle and the Pen ... ..                             | 412     |
| Rome and Canterbury ... ..                               | 413     |
| The Building of the Empire ... ..                        | 414     |
| A Baboo's Jest ... ..                                    | 414     |
| REFER MENTION ... ..                                     | 415     |
| THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT ... ..                            | 417-420 |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..                                    | 421     |
| JATHAN SWIFT ... ..                                      | 423     |
| THREE BARDS OF THE BUSH: L. HENRY LAWSON ... ..          | 424     |
| THE FABLES ... ..  | 425     |
| THIS LETTER ... ..                                       | 426     |
| THE WEEK ... ..  | 426     |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..                                   | 427     |
| THE ... ..   | 428     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..                             | 429     |
| BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..                                    | 430     |

REVIEWS.

THE ROMANCE OF A ROCK.

Memoir of Major-General Sir Henry Creswicke Rawlinson, Bart. By Canon George Rawlinson. (Longmans & Co.)

THE subject of this memoir went to India as a cadet at the age of seventeen, six years later became staff-officer to a small band of Englishmen sent by the Company to Persia to instruct the Shah's army in European drill. He returned to Persia in time to take part in the Afghan war of 1839, and as political officer helped successfully defend Candahar against Uza Ahmed's troops. At the end of the war, he was appointed by Lord Ellenborough British Resident at Bagdad, holding that post till 1855. On resigning the Company's service, he was nominated a private director, and soon after entered Parliament, returning to Persia for a few months in 1859 as Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary. He resigned this post when Lord John Russell transferred the control of our relations with Persia from the India to the Foreign Office, and remained in England to marry and settle down until he died, full of years and honours, in 1895.

So far, there is nothing to distinguish Sir Henry Rawlinson from the hundreds of acts of good family whose services have always been, happily for us, at the disposal of the Queen in building up our great empire in the East. To most newspaper readers of the present day he will be remembered only as the constant attendant on Shah Nasr-ed-din during his first visit to England, and as one of the most strenuous advocates of a policy of resistance to Russia's advance toward India. Yet his most famous achievement is quite unconnected with either war or diplomacy, and may make his name immortal when our squabbles with Persian, Afghan, and Russian—nay, even our occupation of India—have ceased to be remembered. The story is so romantic that one is tempted in telling it to travel a long way from the sober narrative of the volume before us.

Young Rawlinson had, from the outset of his career, a taste for the history and antiquities of Persia, a leaning which he himself attributed to his conversations with Sir John Malcolm on his first passage to India, and when with the Shah's army he chanced to be quartered at Kirmanshah in Persian Kurdistan. Close to this stands the Rock of Behistun, bearing on its face a trilingual inscription which we now know to be due to Darius Hystaspis, the restorer of Cyrus' empire. The cuneiform or wedge-shaped letters in which it is written had long baffled all attempts to decipher them, Prof. Grotefend, of Copenhagen, having perhaps come nearest to their solution. Some part of this difficulty was no doubt due to imperfect transcription; but about 1836 Rawlinson contrived—as his brother says, at the risk of life and limb—to climb the almost inaccessible face of the rock, and to copy the easiest of the three versions of the inscription. A prolonged study of it enabled him to pronounce it to be in the Persian language, and in 1838 he succeeded in discovering the system by which the Persian words were reproduced in cuneiform characters. The publication of the result in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society brought him the honorary membership of half the learned societies in Europe, together with the assistance from older Orientalists which men of science do not always bestow upon their younger brethren. This success spurred him on to fresh endeavours, and eleven years later he paid another visit to Behistun, and managed, with native help, to obtain a cast of another text which had hitherto been supposed to be out of human reach. This turned out to be a translation of the first, still in cuneiform characters, but in the Babylonian language; and the insight into the Babylonian syllabary thus obtained enabled the discoverer to translate most of the inscriptions which his friend Layard had even then commenced to dig up on the site of the ancient Nineveh. The consequences reached further than either explorer could have expected. Cuneiform texts came to the surface in ever-increasing numbers, and as they were deciphered, historical documents of an antiquity of which no one had till then ventured to dream sprang to light. Archaeologists had hardly managed to digest the evidence of a high civilisation among the Semitic races of Assyria and Babylonia, when it became plain that this was but a legacy from the Sumerian (or, as they were at first called, the "Akkadian") inhabitants of Mongoloid stock, with whom the Semites had early intermingled. Every fresh excavation pushed the ascertainable dates of history further back, until the recent American expedition to Babylonia (see the ACADEMY of September 15, 1897) obtained tablets relating to historical events occurring in 6000 B.C., or 1,000 years before the highest date to which Egyptian history has ever been guessed to extend. To a generation which had been taught to believe that the Jews, or perhaps the Chinese, were the first nation to emerge from the savage state, such discoveries may well have seemed incredible.

This, however, may be thought at first sight to be an academic matter which can only affect university professors or curators of museums; but almost the exact contrary is the case. In theology alone the Assyriological discoveries have worked a change so profound that had it not taken place almost silently, it would long ago have been hailed as a revolution. There is no need to recapitulate all the theories of Biblical inspiration which have been held, from the position of the enlightened Catholic who held, like Philo, that the religious value of the Pentateuch was chiefly allegorical, down to that of the sturdy Protestant who believed, like Akiba, that every word of it was in a special way dictated by God, and written down in his own hand by Moses himself. It is sufficient to say that, before the decipherment of the cuneiform texts, the legends of the Creation, the institution of the Sabbath, the Garden of Eden, the Fall of man, and the Deluge were considered by Christians of every sect to be parts of a history revealed only to the Jewish nation and preserved among them by supernatural means. But now that it has been shown that all these stories, with many accompaniments derived from their polytheistic religion, were inscribed on clay tablets by the early inhabitants of Babylonia thousands of years before Moses could have existed, it is impossible, in the words of one of the most determined opponents of the Higher Criticism, to blind ourselves to the fact that "the narrative is ultimately of Babylonian origin." So, too, the recovery of the annals of the kings who reigned at Nineveh and Babylon during the period covered by the Historical Books have proved the Old Testament—not, indeed, to be untrue (for, in fact, all late discoveries have abundantly verified its substantial accuracy)—but to contain errors and omissions which make it impossible for anyone acquainted with the facts any longer to uphold the doctrine of verbal inspiration. While, if this is the case with theology, quite as sweeping a change has taken place in the historical sciences. So far from the history of the ancient world beginning with Herodotus, we can now produce the chronicles of empires more highly organised than was ever any Greek state—extending from the Tigris to the Mediterranean, and going back to dates millennia before that which our fathers used to assign for the earliest appearance of man upon the earth. In the presence of such facts, we feel as the pre-Copernican astronomers would have done had they learned that the earth was not the centre of the universe, but only a tiny and unimportant speck in it. Yet all these changes of thought are directly due to Rawlinson's climb up the face of the Behistun rock.

No pains seem to have been spared to make Canon Rawlinson's Memoir of his great brother a worthy record, and, while Lord Roberts prefixes to it an introduction in which, as may be expected, the late Afridi rising and Sir Henry's warnings as to the future of Afghanistan figure largely, the present Baronet contributes a chapter of reminiscences of his father's private life. The task of compilation has not been an easy one, for Sir Henry seems to have kept diaries only in a spasmodic and disjointed fashion, and to have been a bad hand at preserving correspondence, but in the result he stands out clearly as one of the best types of the English soldier-statesman. Carrying into his abstruse studies the dash which had distinguished him in the field, he was yet too much a man of the world to allow himself to become absorbed by them; and it is recorded that his greatest work, The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia, became, before it left the press, almost intolerably irksome to its editor. As an official he was both active and conscientious, never hesitating to resign a post directly he thought he could not fill it efficiently, and never sacrificing what he considered to be the public interest to party convenience. He seems, too, to have borne his honours with grace, and to have been popular with all classes of society; while himself scrupulously just and honourable, nothing ruffled him but some trace of meanness or dishonour in those he had to deal with.

All this and much more can be found in the present memoir, and Sir Henry Rawlinson seems to have been as lucky in his biographer as in everything else. Luck was, indeed, the never-failing attendant of his life; and though lucky in his career, in his marriage, and in all his undertakings, he was never more lucky than in seeing the science of which he laid the foundation spring into vigorous life. Almost alone among the pioneers of science, he had not to leave the care of his fame to posterity, but reaped its full reward during his own life.

"Happier than our own 'Champoleon,'" said M. Maspero in pronouncing his elegy to the Académie des Inscriptions, "he had the good fortune to live long enough to assist at the full blossoming of the science he created. If he had a long and hard struggle before being certain of victory, at least he was able to enjoy for a long time the glory which it gave him, and which was his due."

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION THROUGH AMERICAN SPECTACLES.

Contemporary American Opinion of the French Revolution. By Charles Downes Hazen. (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press.)

THE larger part of this work is composed of extracts from the diaries and correspondence of the three Ministers who successively represented the United States in Paris during the stormy period from 1784 to 1796. All three were men of ability and distinction—Thomas Jefferson, Governor Morris, and James Monroe. All three had intimate opportunities of watching close at hand the great changes which were passing over France, and their letters, while curiously reflecting the separate idiosyncrasies of the writers, present a series of pictures which are of singular interest. Jefferson, flamboyant, humanitarian and theoretical, is ready on a a priori grounds against kings and priests and nobles; and yet when he travels over France and examines the condition of the peasantry has very little to find fault with. Certainly, there is no trace at all in his despatches of the angry unhappiness which made Arthur Young cry out against "the glittering beings" whose neglect and oppression was answerable for the misery he saw through miles of country. While Young was exclaiming, "Oh! if I was the legislator of France for a day I would make the great lords skip again," Jefferson was expressing his surprise at finding the people so comparatively well off. It was only when he was thinking, not of the condition of French agriculture, but of the French Monarchy, that he would record that the nation was "ground to powder by the vices of the form of government." From first to last he took an optimistic view of the changes which were taking place before his eyes, and leaving France within a few weeks of the taking of the Bastille, believed that the transfer of supreme power from king to people would be happily effected without bloodshed. Some of his letters are written with considerable pungency of style. Speaking of the edict emancipating the Protestants, he writes:

"The long delayed edict of the Protestants at length appears here. It is an acknowledgment that Protestants may beget children, and that they can die and be offensive, unless buried. It does not give them permission to think, to speak, or to worship. What are we to think of the condition of the human mind in a country where such a wretched thing as this has thrown the State into convulsions, and how must we bless our own situation in a country, the most illiterate peasant of which is a Solon compared with the authors of this law."

In view of Jefferson's tremendous denunciations of Marie Antoinette in his biography written thirty years' later, it is interesting to note what he had to say at the time. In May, 1788, he writes: "The king, long in the habit of drowning his cares in wine, plunges deeper and deeper, the queen cries, but sins on." On another occasion, he says, "The queen and the princes are infatuated enough to hazard almost anything." Certainly his letters contain very little to support the opinion of his old age, that if the queen could have been shut up in a convent there would have been no revolution. Of the king, he always speaks as of a man meaning very well, but too weak to be trusted of anyone. It is noticeable that Jefferson, in spite of his somewhat violent Republican theories, was always ready in practice to counsel moderation and caution, and, early in 1779, was of opinion that the people had "had as full a measure of liberty dealt out to them as they could bear."

Jefferson was succeeded by a man of a very different temperament. Governor Morris was essentially conservative in his bias, and his letters to Washington show a very clear appreciation of the political situation. He was a friend to monarchy as an institution, believing that it was the form of government most in harmony with the traditions of the French people. This view was certainly not determined by any excessive regard for the king. Writing to Washington, in 1790, he declares that the royal cause might still be retrieved if Louis were not "the small-beer character he is." "But what will you have from a creature who, situated as he is, eat and drinks and sleeps well, and laugh and is as merry a grig as lives." Morris gives graphic descriptions of the proceedings of the Assembly, and numerous instances of the theatrical dilettantism which marked its debates. Some of these are sufficiently comic. On one occasion, when the subject of discussion was a proposal by Necker for a national bank, a deputy "took it into his head to move that every member should give his silver buckle which was agreed to at once, and the honourable member laid his upon the table after which the business went on again. It is difficult to guess whereabouts the floor will settle when it flies so wild. . . . Writing just before the trial of the king, Morris foretells the result correctly, and bases his prediction upon the fact that all parties desire the death of the king. I explain that all the monarchical and aristocratic parties join with the Jacobins on this point, believing "that such a catastrophe would shock the national feeling awaken their hereditary attachment, and turn into channels of loyalty the impetuous tide of opinion." Shrewd as Morris shows himself in his observation of political events he shared the common illusion of the time to the weakness of the armies of the Republic and expected the speedy success of the allied kings.

The appointment of James Monroe Morris's successor in Paris, shortly after the fall of Robespierre, represents a famous passage in the history of American diplomacy which need not detain us here. Monroe was a wild admirer of the Revolution, and the apologist for some of its worst excesses, and watched the early triumphs of Napoleon without a suspicion of what the end was to be. His indiscretions caused him to recall within less than two years. When he took his leave in 1796 the President of the Directory exclaimed, "The French Republic expects that the successors of Columbus, Raleigh and Penn, always proud of their liberty, will never forget that they owe to France." And to this half-truth the American might have replied with another, that the debt was already repaid, that was the alliance with the revolted colonies which had undone the foundations of the monarchy of France.

THE RIFLE AND THE PEN.

Elephant Hunting in East Equatorial Africa.
By Arthur H. Neumann. (Rowland Ward.)

IT is a sign of these literary times that a man who has hunted and shot elephants should think it necessary to write a book about it. One would suppose that of persons he might be excused. Yet apparently it is not so; and here we have a volume of 456 spacious pages, and many illustrations devoted entirely to the account of the author's career as a slaughterer. It matters nothing that, however well he may be able to pull a trigger, he cannot write anything but ordinary commercial English, that he has no eyes for the curious, no interest in social problems. Here is the book all the same. There are, of course, hunters of big game whose records are to be treasured—Mr. Selous, for example, a keen observer of men and nature, a student of politics and customs; but not such is Mr. Neumann, who is a hunter pure and simple. He seems, moreover, to be a hunter attended by extraordinary luck. It is true that in the part of Africa in which he travelled—among the Ndorobo savages of the Lorogi mountains, which lie north of Uganda, midway between Lake Rudolph and Mount Kenia—he was among the first to pursue his trade; but the impression left by his volume is that game was both plentiful, easily found, and easily killed.

When a man has nothing to offer his readers but the story of how he shot his big game, his book must necessarily become monotonous. Mr. Neumann's book is one of the most monotonous that we have ever read. A schoolboy's diary—"Got up, washed, had breakfast," and so on, day after day—is hardly less coloured. How many rhinoceroses and elephants Mr. Neumann slew we cannot say, but he must have been responsible for ridding Africa of some scores. The contest was horribly one-sided. Mr. Neumann carried a double .577, a single .50, a .250 rook rifle, a shot-gun, a Martini-Henry, which he called his "cripple-stopper," and a Lee-Metford, and his aim was deadly. Once, indeed, Mr. Neumann was in danger of his life; but he escaped comparatively unhurt. Against that single misadventure he put the photographs of his stores of skins, and register the opinion that, although every hunter may be the most estimable class of men, they should not be called upon to magnify their prowess in print. This is how the first elephant of the trip was killed:

"She was, however, facing me, her great ears stretched out or slowly flapping. I could only see her head and my object was to get a triple shot. I waited, I think not less than a quarter of an hour for her to turn her head. Once I tried to sneak round farther, but she had another next to her started and I slunk back. I suppose an eddy of wind gave them a slight whiff of me, or they may have heard me moving; probably the latter, as they were not sufficiently alarmed to move when I kept still again. I was not more than ten paces from the elephant in front of me, I should say, and meditated the advisability of putting my bullet right into her eye (which I felt sure I could do), but being uncertain whether such a shot would be fatal from my position, and feeling that my reputation as a hunter, both with my own men and the natives of the country, would be blasted at outset should I make a failure of my first success at elephants, I waited till my arms ached in with holding my heavy gun at the ready. At last, however, she did give me the longed-for chance, and I instantly put a ball between her eye and the ear, dropping her like a tree."

Mr. Neumann, although nominally an elephant hunter, was not bigoted. He never saw a rhinoceros pass without trying for it, and zobras and gazelles, lions and giraffes were all considered fair game. Here is a taste of his unofficial manner:

"Another day I came back to this plain to try to get a shot at the ostriches. I failed to get near them, but, while trying, a giraffe came towards me—apparently not seeing me, or mistaking me for something harmless, so I sat still till it had walked a little past, some 150 yards off, so that the solid bullet I sent into its ribs from my little Gibbs .450 might travel forward. It galloped violently for about 200 yards, and then, after staggering a little, plunged head first, its hind-quarters curiously standing up for a second or two after its neck was on the ground. It is not often one has the chance of seeing a giraffe fall plainly, as they are generally shot among bush. More often they, like most animals, fall backwards when mortally wounded."

On another occasion, Mr. Neumann shot two lionesses, after having been banked off one in the following inconsiderate manner: "I tried to get a shot, but it would not wait, and with an irritable swing or two round and up of its tail, and sulky growls, made off into the bush before I could get near enough." However, the sportsman soon after found two others and slew them. While he was examining one of his victims, he heard a growl and, looking round, saw that the other was not yet actually dead. "I at once gave her a raking shot from in front of and above her, finishing her tough life; but before going right up to her and kicking her, I chucked a stone on to her head as a test." To have killed the creature was enough. She might have been spared this further indignity of description.

Just at the end of his book, Mr. Neumann bethought him that possibly the Ndorobo might have interest for some readers, and he offers a page or so describing their characteristics. There is a pleasant hint of irony in the following passage:

"In contrast with the natives of Southern Africa, who cannot be said to have any notion of a Supreme Being, these have a distinct belief in God, and ascribe all events to His ordering. Asked what they know of Him, they told me: 'We only know that He made all things. If it rains, we say it is God; when the wind blows, we say here, too, is God; and when the white man comes, we say this again is God's doing.'"

Here let us leave our gallant hunter.

ROME AND CANTERBURY.

A Vindication of the Bull "Apostolica Cura."
By the Archbishop and Bishops of the Diocese of Westminster. (Longmans.)

It may be surmised that, for the present at least, this controversy is laid to rest. What has happened has been this: Representatives of the High Church party made indirect overtures to Rome for the reconsideration of the question of Anglican orders. Are the orders of the Anglican Church orders in the sense of the Roman Catholic Church? Do they, that is, imprint an ineffaceable character upon the soul of the recipient, and invest him with a supernatural power of effecting the change of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ in which consists the sacrifice of the New Law?—or is the ordination service merely a formal commission to read the Book of Common Prayer in the congregation? These were the questions laid before the Papal tribunal. Rome took the matter in hand, considered and weighed, finally gave her decision. Said the Pope in the Bull Apostolica Cura: The immutable principles of the Church's theological science do not permit us to regard your orders as a sacramental thing. Setting aside the controversy as to a breach in the line of the succession—granting, if you will, that Parker was consecrated according to some rite, since the controversy upon that point seems infinite—we find that the changes by which the Anglican ordinal was evolved from the Catholic rite, which it superseded, were all in one direction. They all tended to eliminate every expression which implied the power of sacrifice as inherent in the priestly office. The published writings of your founders, and the construction of your office for the celebration of Holy Communion, are in harmony with this change in the ordination services. It is clear to us, then, that the intention of the Anglican Church in the bestowal of (what it calls) orders positively excludes the sacrificial notion, which to us is the whole raison d'être of the priesthood. Therefore Anglican ordinations are (according to the principles of our theology—principles which must be taken as established) absolutely null and void from the beginning.

The Anglican Primates of England undertook to reply, and they set before themselves a difficult task. They had to convince the Catholic Bishops of Christendom, to whom their letter was addressed, that the Pope was mistaken in his estimate of the Anglican teaching upon the Eucharist—that their Church does in fact teach, and has ever taught, the real presence and the mystical unbloody sacrifice. At the same time they must make it clear to the evangelical and latitudinarian sections of their own communion that they stand fast by the traditional principles of the Reformation. And this is what we mean when we say that the controversy has a comic side. The attempt seems all of a piece with the policy popularly called "jesuitry", and here you have the popish disputants sweeping away sophistries and demanding a plain answer (though, surely, not simple enough to expect one) to a straightforward question. After quoting certain of the Archbishops' equivocal words, "These phrases," they say,

"which are somewhat inaccurately quoted from your First Prayer-book, you seem to be using in Cranmer's sense [receptionalism]. . . . No doubt both these phrases might be understood in a more catholic sense. But it appears to us inconceivable that, if you had really wished to ascribe to your Church belief in a Real Objective Presence, you would have failed to say so with the utmost distinctness, for this is the very turning-point of the question. . . . If, then, we have mistaken your meaning in the passage referred to, will you frankly say so?"

That the Archbishops should give a direct reply to this question while their communion notoriously embraces men of every shade of opinion between Zuinglianism and the Tridentine definition, was, of course, not to be expected. There was scope for speculation only as to the device by which the Metropolitans might pluck their feet out of the net. In their subsequent brief letter to the Archbishop of Westminster, "The Church of England," they write, "has clearly stated her position with respect to this doctrine [transubstantiation], and it is unnecessary to say that we heartily and firmly concur in the judgment which she has pronounced." Of course, the evasion lies in the use of the word transubstantiation, which in the main line of their argument the Roman bishops had been careful to avoid. For from the days of Tract XC. it has been open to members of the Church of England to hold that the Transubstantiation condemned in the Thirty-nine Articles connotes something else than the notion for which the Council of Trent adopted the word as the most fitting name. Thus the snare is broken and the Archbishops are delivered; and the scandal of an internal rupture is once more procrastinated. By a series of accidents the two communions have been brought as near as they are ever likely to approach each other. Henceforward they will go on their several ways: the older still piling up fresh consequences upon its old-world lore; the younger shaking off more and more the ties by which it is bound to a pre-scientific era, and assimilating with more and more alacrity the wisdom of the passing moment—the one growing stiffer in the assurance of a divine mission and the possession of final truth; the other relying always for continued life upon racial ties and its indefinite adaptability.

THE BUILDING OF THE EMPIRE.

The Building of the Empire. By Alfred Thomas Story. 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

To the task of adequately telling the story of England's growth from Elizabeth to Victoria the historian must bring a universal knowledge of modern history, a comprehensive grasp of detail, and a wide and statesmanlike insight into the past, the present, and the future. It would be exaggeration to say that Mr. Story has these qualifications; but, at any rate, he has written two very interesting volumes, and has sketched the lines which the historian of the empire will follow.

The primary cause of England's worldwide expansion is, of course, her island position in the spot most convenient for the departure of the trade routes from the Old World to the New; but only after the discovery of America did England's true mission in the world become apparent, and even then it was some time before she accidentally discovered her destiny. It was the loss of Calais which really turned England from a continental to a worldwide power. Mr. Story begins his book with the England of Elizabeth, and with the splendid tale of the Queen's semi-authorised adventurers, who gradually broke the power of Spain, till then mistress of the sea. The Spaniards were the first adversaries of the empire-makers along the shores of America. Then we came into collision with the Portuguese in the Indies, where we gained a footing in 1611 by Captain Best's naval victory near Surat. After the Portuguese came the Dutch, whose interference with our trade among the islands forced us back on the mainland of India, where we took up the struggle with the French, with whom we fought out the race for empire, also, in America and the West Indies, until at the close of the Napoleonic wars the country had grasped its destiny and was supreme at sea.

Mr. Story has been overmastered by the very magnitude of his subject, which has rather depressed than inspired him. But Mr. Story gets entangled in the threads and smothered in a mass of detail. He has no steady grasp of his subject; the descriptions of the Elizabethan voyages are too full, and the reader is left to find out for himself their connexion with the growth of the empire. The same thing may be said of the first settlements in America, whose history is given without much regard to its reference to the great central idea.

Another defect of the work is that Mr. Story writes not as one who has had a share in the doing of great deeds, but from a sheltered and home-keeping point of view; and as empires are not made by squirting rose-water, this is not the attitude which will be taken up by the ideal historian when he appears. Drake and his fellow seamen were rough-and-ready men, living in rough-and-ready times, and many of their actions were not those of the drawing-room, but they hardly justify Mr. Story uttering such platitudes as:

"There is no need at this time of day for any apology for the motives and actions of the seamen of Elizabeth's age. They lived and fought as seemed to them best, and according to their lights and the circumstances in which they lived. . . . They might have done otherwise than they did if they had had our wisdom to guide them. But they were the rough children of a rude age, for the most part coarse and uncultured; nevertheless, they had that within them which made our later England possible."

Or a little later on, about Clive and Omichund:

"This is an attitude which has been too common in the past in the dealings of the English with subject races. In short, in the building up of the British Empire as it is to-day they have often enough sunk right in expediency; but if that Empire is to continue to stand, it will only be by buttressing it on every side with justice."

This is what the maiden aunt of the mid-Victorian period would have called "quite nice," and is evidently a salve to Mr. Story's conscience for having to write about such rude people. But while empire-making at a distance is to be gently reprobated, at close quarters it is evidently positively shocking. It will scarcely be believed that though Mr. Story professes to bring his work up to the present day, he does not even mention the name of Mr. Rhodes, the greatest empire-maker of modern times, who has added territories as large as France to the British Empire. This will give the measure of Mr. Story's qualifications for dealing with so vast a subject. But in spite of his limitations he has produced a useful and suggestive book, which will fill the gap till the imperial historian comes. The volumes are well-illustrated with reproductions of old prints, which give, as nearly as possible, a contemporary representation of the event and scenes referred to.

A BABOO'S JEST.

The Stylography of the English Language. By Dr. Brojonath Shaha, I.M.S. (Calcutta Patrick Press Co.)

DR. BROJONATH SHAHA is a learned pundit in the Indian Medical Service who has written books upon various subjects palpating with actuality, such as "The Lush Language," "Dehatmic Tattva," "Materic Spiritualism," and "Capillary Bruit." In the midst of all this he has found time to make a jest. In a conversation between him and the head master of a Government boarding school at Rangamati, the latter expressed a very natural opinion that you cannot teach parsing and analysis to students who have not a previous knowledge of the meaning of the words of a sentence. Thereupon Dr. Brojonath Shaha went away and wrote a book to prove that you can. That is the jest. It is very funny. You do it by turning sentences into quasi-mathematical formulæ. The whole theory depends upon observation "and scarcely any deeper intellectual consideration has been its scope." The elements of structure are two bricks or stones—Noun-stone and the Verb-stone—and the first type of arrangement consists of the mono-simple sentence, which is "the alternate juxtaposition of the N and V bricks to the extent of the 9th Term—i.e., four and half pairs of them—unless increased by the same alternate arrangements by the addition of IV or IV | N and PV or PV | N—i.e., 10th, or 10th and 11th terms." From the easy beginning you work up with the "joiners" and "sub-joiners" to Symmetrical Mono-grouped Conjunction, and Complex of P by C' C' Subordinate Conjunction. Ultimately—until, it would appear, without a previous knowledge of the meaning of words in a sentence—you are able to express the first ten lines of the Paradise Lost as  $P_2 \frac{3}{2} R_2 - 2 C_3 \frac{1}{2} N \frac{1}{2} 1 R_3 \ 3 R_2 \ 2 C$  and to answer an examination paper containing such questions as these:

"Write down from your book a compound C' P C' substitutive subordination, a Di-comp with C' P C' substitutive subordination. Give an example of a Mono-simple with increase in the 1st, 3rd, or any odd term. N<sub>2</sub> of Capacity intervened by a comma-connective with G and R formulæ. Illustrate mono-simple sentences each with increased terms, joiners, or sub-joiners respectively with intervention of mono-grouped conjunction connectives and punctual mmas if necessary. Give their G F and F."

keeping up the humour of the thing to the st. Dr. Brojonath Shaha writes with making sides a solemn introduction in which expounds the theory and value of stylography, and ends up with the following ally at the expense of his mathematical leagues:

"The chief utility of this work, besides the conspicuousness on points of philology, is a help to memory, recitation, and composition by showing forth gradual landmarks in each. This, I may venture to say, be a great gain to students; while the teachers will derive the same amount of relief in their works during the hours of literature as they do now when engaged in teaching mathematics. How far I have succeeded in giving mathematical reasoning, or philological demonstration of any writing, remains for the student to grasp or the teacher to impress upon the student, but all I desire is that they should not desert this method of scientific demonstration till they find it practically useless or beyond juvenile comprehension, or if the teacher cannot invent modification and addition more intelligible."

is a noble jest. Excellent Baboo!

BRIEFER MENTION.

Drake and the Tudor Navy. By Julian S. Corbett. (Longmans, Green & Co.)

SOME six-and-thirty years ago, the late James Anthony Froude wrote an article in the Westminster Review which he entitled "England's Forgotten Worthies." And among those worthies which were forgotten in the fifties were Hawkins, Frobisher, Sir Richard Grenville, and Drake. It must be admitted that later years have done something to atone for such forgetfulness. Both Sir Richard Grenville and Drake have had a Homer; nor has there been any lack of writers to celebrate the exploits of that gallant gentlemen whom commerce, religion, or politics, drove forth to the Spanish Main, to the East Indies, or the North-West Passage. It was Froude, with his enthusiasm for Tudor England, who rose from oblivion those merchant venturers not conscious of their own rectitude, gave them the glory when a Spanish treasure ship captured their bows; and for this, if for nothing else, his memory should be blessed. Froude, as we have been so often told, is accurate. His style continually got the better of his facts. And we are almost sorry that the same accusation cannot be brought against Mr. Corbett, who, evidently without any purpose labour, has gathered together from every available source all that is known of Drake.

In the third chapter of the first of these bulky volumes you may compare the methods of Mr. Froude and Mr. Corbett. The first of the expedition which led to the death at San Juan de Ulua, Froude says in English Seamen: The Judith was fought in "by his [Hawkins's] young cousin Francis Drake, who was now to make his first appearance on the stage. . . . Enough now to say he was a relation of Hawkins, the owner of a small smart sloop or brigantine, ambitious of a share in a stirring business." Mr. Corbett relentlessly points out that this is a bit of impressionism, for it was not Drake's first appearance, the ship was neither a sloop nor a brigantine, but a bark, it was probably owned by Hawkins, and Drake had no idea of any stirring business, because Hawkins kept his destination a dead secret. Mr. Corbett is no doubt accurate, but of his accuracy in matters of naval technique we do not presume to judge. We are as ignorant as Mr. Froude of the difference between a bark and a brigantine, nor does it appear to be of much importance whether the Judith was owned by Drake or by Hawkins. What is of importance—we are looking at the book from a literary point of view—is that our blood should be stirred and our pulse quickened as we read. Take the coming of the Armada, to which Mr. Corbett devotes several chapters. Here is a prose epic to be written. But our pulse drops, our blood congeals, as we are stopped short in mid-story to contemplate lists of ships, and learn that the Spanish method of calculating tonnage was different from the English. It is true that there is a catalogue of ships in another epic; but the Iliad would be better reading without it. If you read those chapters of Mr. Corbett's, skipping judiciously, and then sit back in your chair and think, you will have a pretty good picture of that running fight up the Channel; but Mr. Corbett should have drawn that picture, and shovelled his paint and brushes and mahl-stick into an appendix.

The threads of the story are all there, and Mr. Corbett is entitled to praise for his industry in collecting them. It is in the last step that he disappoints us—in the weaving of the threads together into a texture. He has composed an excellent Admiralty minute on the Tudor fleet—its organisation, its tonnage, its manning, its victualling, and so forth. He has collected all the materials for a book; but he has not written it.

Twelve Naval Captains. With Portraits. By Molly Elliot Seawell. (Kegan Paul.)

WE venture to assure Mrs. (?) Seawell that her hope that "English youth will not resent the fact that many of these worthies earned their reputations in conflict with the mother country" has a fair chance of being realised. She tells the stories of her heroes in an admirable tone of impartiality; she has a serviceable command of nautical language, and for anything smacking of the heroic a bright enthusiasm that is quite contagious. Nothing can come of her revelation of the American seaman—for to the human boy of these islands a revelation it will be—but increased respect and goodwill; just as his respect for the Australian colonies has been increased by the misfortunes of Mr. Stoddart's eleven. Take this, for instance:

"Captain Dacres, of the Guerrière [a French-built frigate in the British service], and Hull were personal friends . . . and there was a standing bet of a hat between them on the result in case their two ships ever came to exchanging broadsides."

They came to close quarters at last, and the Guerrière was hopelessly worsted.

The mainmast soon followed the other masts, and in thirty minutes from the time the Constitution's first broadside had been fired the Guerrière lay, a helpless hulk, rolling in the trough of the sea. . . ."

The jack had been nailed to the stump of the mizzen mast, and the men refused to loose it, but the signal of surrender was made by a gun to leeward:

"As Captain Dacres came over the side of the Constitution, Hull . . . gave the British captain a hand, saying with great friendliness, 'Dacres, I see you are hurt. Let me help you.' As soon as Captain Dacres reached the Constitution's deck, he attempted to hand his sword to Hull, who said: 'No, no; I cannot take the sword of a man who knows so well how to use it; but—I'll thank you for that hat!'"

And this in spite of the fact that, in the heat of the engagement, his breeches (he was unnecessarily stout) had split from knee to hip. You cannot bear malice against an enemy of that sort, you know. A capital collection of yarns.

Thomas Cranmer. By Arthur James Mason, D.D. "Leaders of Religion." (Methuen.)

THIS is a study rather than a biography; but it is a study based upon a first-hand acquaintance with Archbishop Cranmer's own letters and writings, as well as upon such trustworthy and exhaustive works as Mr. R. W. Dixon's History of the Reformation. Canon Mason writes of Cranmer in a far more appreciative spirit than has frequently been observed in modern so-called "High" Churchmen in dealing with the great Reformers. He goes far towards making a hero of his subject. Yet the book is by no means uncritical, and it seems to us to draw a very fair picture of Cranmer alike in his personal and his public relations. It is written in a lucid and an interesting fashion. The summary of Cranmer's character given in the last chapter is singularly penetrative and just. Canon Mason breaks a lance on behalf of the Archbishop's bona fides:

"Whatever else he was, Cranmer was no crafty dissembler. He was as artless as a child. Even those actions of his which have brought upon him the accusation of double-dealing—the reservation with which he took the oath at his consecration, the acknowledgment that he should not have withdrawn his recantation if he had been allowed to live—are instances of his naive simplicity. He may sometimes have deceived himself; he never had any intention to deceive another. Trustful towards others, even to a fault, he had little confidence in himself. His humility amounted almost to a vice. His judgment was too easily swayed by those who surrounded him—especially by those in authority. In this way he frequently yielded or consented to things imposed upon him by others which he would never have thought of by himself. He sheltered himself under the notion that he was a subordinate, when by virtue of his position he was necessarily a principal, and was surprised, and sometimes even irritated, that others did not see things in the same light."

There is a strain of special pleading in this;

but, on the whole, it strikes us as a true estimate of an honest but not very strong man. Canon Mason's book quite sustains the high reputation of the series in which it appears.

The Records of the Borough of Northampton.
Edited by Christopher A. Markham and Rev. Charles J. Cox. (Elliot Stock.)

THE Corporation of Northampton decreed, some years ago, the publication of the records of their borough. These now come to us in two substantial volumes, buckram bound, and bearing the arms of the town, and the motto, Castello Fortior Concordia. The Bishop of London has contributed a preface; the title-pages are printed in black and red; and the volumes, in short, lack no element of dignity. An introduction by Mr. W. Ryland D. Adkins prepares the ground for the reader, who is reminded that Northampton became important only at the Norman Conquest. Halfway between Winchester and York, halfway also between the Welsh Marches and the East Coast, Northampton was the predestined stronghold of Norman and Plantagenet kings. Between the arrival of the Conqueror and the completion of his Domesday Book, the town increased from 60 to 330 houses. Thenceforward its progress was steady. One fact in Northampton's early history arrests the reader. During the Barons' War the students of both Oxford and Cambridge fled thither, and a university was founded under royal sanction. It might have been there to this day, but Oxford was strong enough to crush the arrangement in 1262. We can do no more than point out that these volumes display, in orderly sequence, every record of importance pertaining to the civic progress of Northampton. They will be of real service to students of English municipal history. One is glad to find the corporation of a comparatively small town carrying to a successful issue a project so enlightened.

Library Administration. By John Macfarlane. "Library Series." (George Allen.)

THIS is a useful work upon a technical and highly difficult subject, written by an expert. It deals with the organisation of the staff of a library, with the methods of acquiring, preserving and issuing books, and with the various competing systems of cataloguing and shelf-arrangement. It is, of course, as Dr. Garnett points out in the brief introduction which he contributes, "a disseminator of information" and "a stimulus to reflection," rather than a "code." And this is necessarily so, for many of the topics treated of, the best way to draw up a subject-index, for instance, are still debatable and hotly debated. Necessarily also, it embodies largely the views and experience of the British Museum, of which Mr. Macfarlane is an active official. But he has taken great pains to supplement his knowledge of the methods more immediately familiar to him by careful inquiries into the practice of the Bodleian and of the great foreign libraries. The laymen, whose ignorance of library administration is generally profound, may learn much from so comprehensive and lucid a survey; and the manual, together with the companion volume by Mr. Burgoyne on Library Construction, should be in the hands of every practical librarian, and of every municipal body which contemplates a free library.

Lincoln. By the Rev. A. Clark, M.A.
"College Histories." (F. E. Robinson.)

Two or three Oxford colleges—Corpus, Merton, Pembroke come to mind—have already adequate histories issued by the Oxford Historical Society. In the rest, although as a rule there are ample materials for a record of the past, these remain in the obscurity of archives, and are not put to their proper purpose of stimulating the piety of the present. Mr. Robinson proposes in a series of twenty-one volumes to remove this reproach. Each college will now have its monograph, entrusted to a competent hand, if possible a member of the foundation, and liberally illustrated with views and plans. A similar series will deal with the sister University. The enterprise opens well, for no more competent writer of a college history could well be imagined than Mr. Clark, who, through his long work on Anthony à Wood and Aubrey, and on the University Register, must be thoroughly steeped in Oxford sentiment and Oxford tradition. He has produced a most excellent and interesting narrative, popular in the sense that it is only a narrative, and that the documents on which it is founded are not printed, or even, as a rule, referred to, but by no means merely popular if that implies anything shallow or superficial in the treatment. Lincoln was originally founded, early in the fifteenth century, by Richard Fleming, Bishop of Lincoln, who intended it to be a bulwark of the true faith against the heresies of the Wycliffites. It has never been a college of the first rank, but during the greater portion of its career has, nevertheless, borne an honourable reputation. Mr. Clark traces the fortunes of the foundation down to the present day, noting its occasional appearances upon the stage of history, its notable men, the growth and architectural peculiarities of its buildings. He finds its golden age in the middle of the eighteenth century, when its wealth had been increased by the benefactions of Lord Crewe, while its common-room was illustrated by the commanding intellect of John Wesley. Over the troublous days of the present century, the period covered by that extraordinary autobiography of Mark Pattison, Mr. Clark passes very gingerly. Of Pattison himself he tells two characteristic stories. One is given in the words of an old Lincoln parson:

"Coming to Oxford on some business I took the opportunity of looking up Pattison in the evening. He received me very cheerfully, offered me a cigar, and lit one for himself. He was standing on the hearthrug with his back to the grate, chatting away, when there came a timid knock at the door, and an undergraduate entered with a sheet of paper in his hand, theme or composition of some sort. Pattison beckoned the man to come forward, took the sheet, and looked over it, puffing slowly at his cigar. Then he crumpled the paper up in his hand, threw it in the man's face, and pointed to the door."

The other story is of a youth whom Pattison invited to accompany him on walk:

"A timid undergraduate waited at the lodgings at the appointed hour, followed the rector across the quadrangle, and then, when the tutor had stepped out through the wicket, essayed literary opening to the conversation by volunteering 'the irony of Sophocles is greater than the irony of Euripides.' Pattison seemed lost in thought over the statement and made no answer till the two turned at Iffley to come back. Then he said, 'Quote.' Quotations not being forthcoming, the return and the party took place in silence."

But surely the historian of the future will have to beware of the contamination of the Pattison mythos by the Jowett mythos, vice versa.

We recommend Mr. Clark's volume to the patriotic purses of all Lincoln men.

Islands of the Southern Seas. By Mich Myers Shoemaker. (Putnam's Sons.)

"So—if you are minded for such a jaunt let us be off, for the ship is ready." The jaunt alluded to in Mr. Shoemaker's too, too sprightly preface starts from San Francisco. The traveller touched at Molokai, and reflected in terms of unimpeachable commendation upon the career of Father Damien; of course he photographed the tomb and a lot of other things. He did Hawaii's Honolulu, saw the lions and photographed them; was "very glad to get back to hotel." He visited Samoa; a photograph of Stevenson's tomb is evidence. The jaunt presently interested itself in New Zealand in the Maories and their tattooing—most interesting subjects of the kodak. The prisons of Port Arthur are gruesome to treat. The horrid traditions of the prisoners are perpetuated—the tradition, for instance, of the men who to ward off insanity occupied the hours of the confinement in the dark cells in searching for a pin flung at random upon the floor; and several excellent photographs illustrate the scenes of these horrors. Australia, poetically described as "the Land of the Never Never"—but why?—is found to be a place of extreme interest. As to its political condition and its relation to the mother country, here is what Mr. Shoemaker had time to find out:

"The different sections of the Continent govern themselves, England merely sending out a Governor-General for each, but his little more than a figure-head. . . . In my thinking, Australia is a collection of republics. There is no military rule in England, and I saw no British soldiers in the land. England does not demand soldiers from Australia, but Australia has once twice sent her men to the assistance of the Mother Country in times of war. The provinces have their own navies, though I did see a British ships of war."

Extraordinarily observant person, Mr. Shoemaker! Much of his time was spent in Java, and some admirable photographs came of it. The book is one of those of which an impatient reviewer is wont to say in haste that it has not a dull page from cover to cover.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE BISHOP'S DILEMMA.

BY ELLA D'ARCY.

Readers of the Yellow Book will remember that Miss D'Arcy's name is usually accompanied a clever story, hence they may be prepared here for something better than common. The Bishop in question controlled the Roman Catholic diocese of West London. He was worldly and his name was Wise, and his dilemma was whether to marry her Fayler, a conscientious young priest. To learn the fortunes of the Bishop and her Fayler it will be necessary to read this brief novel, but we may just hint here that Mary Deane played her part in them. Roman Catholics will not like the story over much. (John Lane. pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE WOMAN IN GREY.

BY MRS. C. N. WILLIAMSON.

A long novel by the author of The Barn-Stormers. The story is set at Lorn Abbey, and is replete with clock-towers, and corridors, and ghostly manifestations, and supposed murder: in the end a ghastly mystery is unravelled, and the woman in grey, revealed as a young woman with a sad story, elects to wear other colours than grey, and indulges other than morbid moods. (Routledge & Sons. pp. 6s.)

THE COAT ROMANCES.

BY E. LIVINGSTON PRESCOTT.

Seven short stories of Army life, by the author of Searlet and Snow. The first tells how Tommy Robins of the White Guards, a scapegrace, but an excellent soldier at bottom, was promoted to a major by sheer mistake, and made good his appointment by fighting. "Judgment by Default," "Sentry-Go," and "The Blue-Eyed Babe: a Romance of a Junior Subaltern," are all readable stories. (F. Warne & Co. 288 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE DOCTOR'S EXILE.

BY GEORGE BOURNE.

George Bourne, we should guess, is, like many Georges, a cynic. The novel is of the private life of medical men, and is bitter and cynical. How Dr. Mitchell loved a patient's wife, and how he set out to poison the patient and so remove an awkward obstacle, but repented — with this a large portion of the book is devoted to. But there is much more beside, and many reflections on the art which are well worth reading, and some good characterisation. (John Lane. 230 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE LITTLE BILL OF SALE.

BY ELLIS J. DAVIS.

The money-lender is having a bad time just now. Select committees and novelists are bent on curbing him. In this book the author endeavours "to expose some of the tricks of the money-lending fraternity, who thrive upon bills of sale under those wonderful pieces of legislative incompetency known as the Bills of Sale Acts of 1878 and 1882." The writhings of poor Tomkins in the hands of Sleimy, from whom he has borrowed £30 on a bill of sale, and Sleimy's ultimate discomfiture, are described with spirit and clearness. (John Long. 229 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE BACHELOR GIRL IN LONDON.

BY S. E. MITTON.

This story of the fortunes of Judith Danville, a struggling young journalist, is a careful representation of a phase of modern London which is not yet staged in fiction. The story is wholly laid in London, and the policeman, and the cabman, and the 'bus-conductor, and the Embankment lights, are ever present; while the hero is by no means unspotted from the London world. (Hutchinson & Co. 19 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

Tales of Unrest. By Joseph Conrad. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

MR. CONRAD has seen strange things in strange lands, and he can describe what he has seen impersonally, incuriously, without sentimentality, and without wailing. He is not eloquent, and hysteria is unknown to him; but he has grit, and the epithets "nervous, artful, buxom," also describe his English. These tales, like his last fine book, The Nigger of the Narcissus, march straight on: where they are tragic the tragedy was inevitable. The artist selects and tells. That selection is his concern and his alone. Things horrid and inexplicable may happen, and it is not his affair to suggest why heaven remains sealed and unanswering any more than it is his business to explain why illusions are often better aids to living than the naked truth. He tells, and the critic's business is with the sincerity and method of presentment, not with the choice of subject. We rise from the reading of these Tales of Unrest strengthened, not depressed. For the work is sincere, and it deals with realities.

Mr. Conrad is a writer's writer. He is for those who joy in a good sentence, a deft characterisation, or the way the knots of an exposition are tied. But these tales must not be taken with a hop, skip, and a jump. Those who want brisk dialogue and breathless action must go elsewhere. You must assimilate his background, if you would grasp the significance of the figures that dot his middle distance. Mr. Conrad is a painter in landscape who could have worked entirely in genre, but he chose the other. Like the great landscape artists, he brings equal facility to a sunset or to a man working in a field, and the man is real, part of the harmony, not a lay figure dumped down as a sop to those who clamour for "human interest." For example, let us take a passage from the story called "The Lagoon."

"Nothing moved on the river but the eight paddles that rose flashing regularly, dipped together with a single splash; while the steersman swept right and left with a periodic and sudden flourish of his blade describing a glinting semicircle above his head. The churned-up water frothed alongside with a confused murmur. And the white man's canoe, advancing up-stream in the short-lived disturbance of its own making, seemed to enter the portals of a land from which the very memory of motion had for ever departed. . . . The men poled in the shading water. The creek broadened, opening out into a wide sweep of a stagnant lagoon. The forests receded from the marshy bank, leaving a level strip of bright green reedy grass to frame the reflected blueness of the sky. A fleecy pink cloud drifted high above, trailing the delicate colouring of its image under the floating leaves and the silvery blossoms of the lotus. A little house, perched on high piles, appeared black in the distance.

"The steersman, pointing with his paddle, said, 'Arsat is there. I see his canoe fast between the piles.'

Three of the stories treat of life in the Eastern Archipelago, where "green islets scattered through the calm of noonday lie upon the level of a polished sea, like a handful of emeralds on a buckler of steel." Of these "Karain: a Memory" is the longest and the most ambitious. It is the story of a noble and masterful Malay, and how he was cured by a young Englishman of a terrible illusion on the principle that like things are cured by like. The ruse is quite successful. "He left us, and seemed straightway to step into the glorious splendour of his stage, to wrap himself in the illusion of unavoidable success." Here is a picture of a Dutch trader. It is Karain who is speaking:

"He traded and planted. He despised our joys, our thoughts, and our sorrows. His face was red, his hair like flame, and his eyes pale, like a river mist; he moved heavily and spoke with a deep voice; he laughed aloud like a fool, and knew no courtesy in his speech. He was a big, scornful man, who looked into women's faces and put his hand on the shoulders of free men as though he had been a noble-born chief."

The story called "The Idiots" brings us nearer home—to France. It is a terrible little tale about a peasant proud of himself, proud of his wife, proud of the bit of land he owned, proud of the thought that sons will be born to him who will grow up by his side, and carry on his name when he is laid away. Children are born to him—but one and all are idiots. The end is the murder of the husband, and the suicide of the wife. That is how things happened in this unfortunate family. And the world went on much the same. Strangers even became used to the idiot children shouting from the hedgerows.

"There are unfortunate people on the earth," says the mother of the murderess and suicide. "I had only one child. Only one! And they won't bury her in consecrated ground."

"It is very sad," replies the Marquis of Chavanes. "You have all my sympathy. I shall speak to the curé. . . . "Good day, Madame."

Here is a final taste of Mr. Conrad's quality :

"That child, like the other two, never smiled, never stretched its hands to her, never spoke; never had a glance of recognition for her in its big black eyes, which could only stare fixedly at any glitter, but failed hopelessly to follow the brilliance of a sun-ray slipping slowly along the floor. When the men were at work she spent long days between her three idiot children and the childish grandfather, who sat grim, angular, and immovable, with his feet near the warm ashes of the fire. The feeble old fellow seemed to suspect that there was something wrong with his grandsons. Only once, moved either by affection or by the sense of proprieties, he attempted to nurse the youngest. He took the boy up from the floor, clicked his tongue at him, and essayed a shaky gallop of his bony knees. Then he looked closely with his misty eyes at the child's face and deposited him down gently on the floor again; and he sat, his lean shanks crossed, nodding at the steam escaping from the cooking-pot with a gaze senile and worried."

Well observed, is it not?

One of the tales in this volume, "The Return," treats a modern subject, such a subject as has obsessed Mr. Marriot Watson more than once. To this study of a conjugal fatality Mr. Conrad brings the same vivid observation, the same restraint, the same artful choice of words, and the same sincerity of expression. He has written some half-dozen volumes, but it is by The Nigger of the Narcissus and these Tales of Unrest that he becomes a writer to be reckoned with. His full achievement, we believe, is still in the making.

* * * *

Comedies and Errors. By Henry Harland.
(John Lane.)

THE short story is an odd and wondrous thing. Publishers tell us that commercially it has little value, while (according to an enthusiastic "literary agent") the demand for it by magazine editors is enormous and increasing—and, indeed, anyone may see for himself that this is so. What strange quality has it that people will devour it when sandwiched between advertisements and an illustrated interview, and turn away when it is offered to them bound up with its fellows in a book? We ought all to be full of useful information concerning the short story, for it has been much discussed; one expert has lectured amiably upon its idiosyncrasy; another, with the nicest skill, has written round and round it in reviews; the drawing-rooms of culture have echoed to its panegyric. And now, we know of it—precisely nothing. It is the most difficult form of fiction, some say; but these do not happen to be novelists—not even novelists who have written good short stories. It must be the record of either an incident or a mood: a pretty-sounding definition, which would exclude several of the very best short stories ever accomplished. But surely the short story must be short? It need not be: look at Captains Courageous. If only a master had analysed it for us, laid bare the essentials of the form! De Maupassant wrote with absolute vision about style, and expressed clear ideas, too, on the true nature of fiction in general; but as to the subject of his own special craft he was silent. And other masters keep the same silence.

Mr. Harland has his limitations, and may not be what is commonly called a virile writer; but indubitably he has given to the short-story form a shapeliness, a distinction of contour, a delicacy in detail, an effective value, and, above all, an economic simplicity, beyond the performance of others. He has carried the technique of a particular art further than any of his contemporaries.

Regarding Comedies and Errors, it chiefly contains stories which appeared in the Yellow Book, stories which one has savoured before and is eager to savour again. One of the most typical—and to our own mind easily the best—is "The Friend of Man." Herein are shown Mr. Harland's qualities at their brightest: his skill in evoking character from trifles, his finesse in making beautiful curves towards a climax, his wonderful power to group incidents, and that selective, pictorial faculty which enables him to set down so briefly a complicated and polychromatic effect. Take, for an example of the last, the description of the scene at the Casino:

"Thanks to the heat, the windows were open wide; and through them one could see, first, a vivid company of men and women, strolling backwards and forwards, and chattering busily in the electric glare of the terrace; and then, beyond them, the sea—smooth, motionless, sombre; silent, despite its perpetual whisper; inscrutable, sinister, merging itself into the vast blackness of space. Here and there the black was punctured by a pin-point of fire, a tiny vacillating pin-point of fire; and a landsman's heart quailed for a moment at the thought of lonely vessels braving the mysteries and terrors and the awful solitude of the sea at night. . . ."

So that the voice of the croupier, perfunctory, machine-like, had almost a human, almost a genial effect, as it rapped out suddenly, calling upon the players to mark their play."

With what sharp, astringent effectiveness comes the last sentence "The Friend of Man" offers an excellent instance of the short story which victoriously tramples on laws laid down for its conduct, thus making all generalisations futile. If there could be any rule applying universally to the form, it would be that introductions, prologues, are inadmissible. The actual action must commence at once. Now "The Friend of Man" has twenty-four pages introduction and six pages story proper; and it happens to be completely successful. The story proper is a significant perhaps conclusive, incident in the history of a character. The introduction discloses the history itself, through the recollection of a young man whose memories go back to his infancy. It is done well, with mastery of material, and a highly complex subtle pathos. Moreover, it has real pathos. Mr. Harland seldom attempts a sort of deep feeling. He is all for half-tones, tranquil loves, mixed pleasures, regrets not entirely bitter. Most of his persons are highly civilised and too cosmopolitan for the simplicities of great passion. He does not deal with children of nature. And there, some time, will count against him: that he is never elemental, so that he cannot see one thing at a time. To catch him at the height of his virtuosity you must choose a very light theme—say, "The Invisible Prince," in which a gossamer trifle of an intrigue is contrived and managed, wholly by means of dialogue, after a fashion which must simply dazzle those who have tried to do the same sort of feat.

Each of the twelve tales in the book has its special interest, its peculiar technique; but they are all expressions of one artistic individuality—an individuality which demands from itself a delicate perfection and gets it, though at some cost of bigness in enterprise undertaken. The term "distinguished literary artist" is sadly misused. In the authentic, the only sense, not many distinguished literary artists arise in twenty years; but limit the phrase as strictly as you will, it must include Mr. Harland.

ANTHOLOGIES IN LITTLE.

III.—THOMAS CAMPION.

THOMAS CAMPION is one of the boons which the modern reader owes to the scholarly labours of Mr. A. H. Bullen, and now that we have him we marvel that we could have spared him so long. Until Mr. Bullen issued his fine edition, the best of Campion's work lay mouldering in forgotten century song-books, unknown to the public and neglected even by professed antiquaries. Yet among the lyrists of our tongue he must rank, for pure singing quality, second only to Herrick, if to him. A practical musician, he was deliberately for the accompaniment of flute and viol, and it is only to such an accompaniment that his songs render up their full charm. Merely read, they lose something of their dainty melody, their unexpected turns and lingering repetitions. Taught to music, Campion introduced into English lyric a grace which it had not before, and has hardly recovered since.

Campion's personal history is obscure. He was born quite in the middle of the sixteenth century, and died in 1620. Like his better-known, though by no means so great, contemporary, Thomas Lodge, he was by profession a physician. He was mixed up, not particularly to his discredit, in the mysterious murder of Sir Thomas Overbury. He wrote some Latin epigrams, and a treatise on English Poesie, in which, echoing from afar the defunct theories of Gabriel Harvey's Areopagus, he sought to discredit that habit of English rhyming which became him so well. He wrote some court masques, which the courtiers had not quite the sense to appreciate. The series of music-books for which he wrote words, sometimes to his own tunes, sometimes to those of other men, began in 1601, and lasted to his death. The burden of his songs is occasionally devout, more often amorous. He has a happy touch for the jubilant notes of love, as well as on love's pathos; runs the whole gamut of the passion, with unailing melody and a distinction of manner rare among Jacobean :

"A FACE.

And would you see my mistress' face?
It is a flowery garden place,
Where knots of beauties have such grace
That all is work and nowhere space.

It is a sweet delicious morn,
Where day is breeding, never born:
It is a meadow, yet unshorn,
Which thousand flowers do adorn.

It is the heaven's bright reflex,
Weak eyes to dazzle and to vex:
It is th' Idea of her sex,
Envy of whom doth worlds perplex.

It is a face of Death that smiles,
Pleasing, though it kills the whiles:
Where Death and Love in pretty wiles
Each other mutually beguiles.

It is fair beauty's freshest youth,
It is the feign'd Elysium's truth:
The spring, that winter'd hearts renew'th;
And this is that my soul pursu'th."

"JUSTVM ET TENACEM.

The man of life upright
Whose cheerful mind is free
From weight of impious deeds,
And yoke of vanity;

The man whose silent days,
In harmless joys are spent,
Whom hopes can not delude
Nor sorrow discontent;

That man needs neither towers
Nor armour for defence,
Nor vaults his guilt to shroud
From thunder's violence.

He only can behold
With unafrighted eyes
The horrors of the deep
And terrors of the skies.

Thus, scorning all the cares
That fate or fortune brings,
His book the heaven he makes,
His wisdom heavenly things.

Good thoughts his surest friends,
His wealth a well-spent age,
The earth his sober inn
And quiet pilgrimage."

"WHEN THOU MUST HOME.

When thou must home to shades of underground,
And, there arrived, a new admirèd guest,
The beauteous spirits do engirt thee round,
White Iope, blithe Helen, and the rest,
To hear the stories of thy finished love
From that smooth tongue whose music hell eau move;

Then wilt thou speak of banqueting delights,
Of masques and revels which sweet youth did make,
Of tourneys and great challenges of knights,
And all these triumphs for thy beauty's sake:
When thou hast told these honours done to thee,
Then tell, O, tell, how thou didst murder me."

"CHERRY RIPE.

There is a garden in her face
Where roses and white lilies grow;
A heavenly paradise is that place
Wherein all pleasant fruits do flow.
There cherries grow which none may buy,
Till 'Cherry Ripe' themselves do cry.

Those cherries fairly do enlose
Of orient pearl a double row,
Which when her lovely laughter shows
They look like rose-buds filled with snow;
Yet them nor peer nor prince can buy,
Till 'Cherry Ripe' themselves do cry.

Her eyes like angels watch them still,
Her brows like bended bows do stand,
Threatening with piercing frowns to kill
All that attempt with eye or hand
Those sacred cherries to come nigh,
Till 'Cherry Ripe' themselves do cry."

"FOLLOW YOUR SAINT.

Follow your saint, follow with accents sweet!
Haste you, sad notes, fall at her flying feet!
There, wrapped in cloud of sorrow, pity move,
And tell the ravisher of my soul I perish for her love:
But, if she scorns my never ceasing pain,
Then burst with sighing in her sight, and ne'er return again.

All that I sang still to her praise did tend,
Still she was first, still she my songs did end;
Yet she my love and music doth both fly,
The music that her echo is and beauty's sympathy:
Then let my notes pursue her scornful flight!
It shall suffice that they were breathed and died for her delight."

MR. I. ZANGWILL.

A SKETCH AND INTERVIEW.

THE child of foreign Jewish parents in humble circumstances [says a writer in the New York Bookman], Mr. Israel Zangwill was born in London in 1864, passed his early childhood in Bristol and Plymouth, and returned to spend his youth among those East-end scenes which he has portrayed in The Children of the Ghetto. Admitted into the Jews' Free School, Spitalfields—the largest elementary school in the British Empire—he won three scholarships, became a pupil teacher, and, in due course, a full-fledged teacher.

In his first year he conducted a large class of sixty boys, with whom he accomplished the hitherto unprecedented feat of passing 100 per cent. in the sixth standard. It was a tour de force that he set himself to execute of set purpose. He wished to use his success as a lever for protesting against the system of elementary instruction then in vogue. Corporal punishment was not allowed, but was resorted to sub rosa. He considered that a moderate amount of such punishment was indispensable to the maintenance of discipline. At the same time, he declined to do anything that was not open and above board. His difference of opinion with the management on this question led to his resignation and not a little unpleasantness. He left, without means or "character" the school which now proudly claims him as its own. Thanks to his agitation, which the Union of Teachers recognised by a special vote of thanks, the régime has since been modified. Elementary teachers are no longer driven to employ the cane in dishonest secrecy.

His first book, The Premier and the Painter, had already been published (in collaboration with a fellow-teacher) while he was still at the Free School. Though the writers were unknown, and exhibited their literary inexperience by crowding into a single volume enough wit and matter for three or four, The Premier and the Painter attracted the approving notice of some discerning critics. He had also at this time written several of his Ghetto Tragedies. The editor who in the earlier stages of Mr. Zangwill's career bought and published most of his work was Mr. Jerome K. Jerome.

There was a period in his early career when Mr. Zangwill edited a comic paper, Ariel, which he has described as one of those publications which are most appreciated by their free list. One of the Punch staff recently told him that it was the only comic paper they took seriously, and which they used to read so as to avoid repeating its jokes. They were not always successful.

He lives in a London suburb, and in a house the visitor to which is at once struck by the complete absence from his surroundings of anything betokening smug prosperity. Horse-riding and travel are the only two luxuries he permits himself, and both are indispensable to his work. A highly temperate liver, he does not even smoke. His library is a barely furnished and untidy-looking apartment, filled with books that are for use and not for ornament. There are no first editions, no leather bindings; but his collection contains the best and most serviceable things that have been written in three or four languages, and a preponderance of works on metaphysics, of which he is a close student. They have been collected by his brother, Louis Zangwill ("Z. Z."), who lives with him, and often writes his novels at the same table.

In this connexion it may be mentioned that so far from having made the reputations of his two brothers, Louis and Mark, both the novelist and the artist have suffered from a relationship which has overshadowed them. People naturally rush to the conclusion that there cannot be three clever men in one family, and they attribute whatever publicity the younger men may have attained to the influence of their brother. Louis Zangwill had to adopt the pseudonym "Z. Z." to save confusion.

As to Israel Zangwill's methods of work, they may be described as irregular. He writes in great spurts of industry, which are preceded by weeks in which he can do nothing except read and study. When this feeling has worn off he begins to grow restless. Then he takes up his writing again, and never puts it down until he has finished. He requires frequent change, and finds a long stay in London depressing.

Asked by his interviewer about his future plans, Mr. Zangwill gave the interesting information that he intends to drop the Ghetto for a time. "I shall alternate my Jewish work with an ordinary novel. One very distinguished man said to me: 'Zangwill, you can write the play of my life.' But I don't want to write the play of his life. Richard Mansfield in America has been at me for years; he wants to play The King of the Schnorrer's, and once offered me a carte blanche commission to write no less than four plays for him."

"What other plans?"

"One day I shall collect my verses; and some day my more important criticisms or essays, preceded by that article on Criticism which I purposely excluded from Without Prejudice, when it appeared in volume form."

Mr. Zangwill has done a deal of lecturing in various parts of the world.

Within the past twelve months he has lectured in Palestine, Holland and Ireland. I asked him when he was going to America on a lecturing tour. "Major Pond," he answered, "has made up his mind that I am going next year, but I have no such intention at present. I rather shrink from the publicity and glare of it all. Lecturing in a small country like Holland or Ireland is a recreation. If ever I do go to the States, it will be an old promise to an intimate friend that will primarily take me there."

APHORISMS AND EPIGRAMS.

VII.—WILLIAM BLAKE.

RESUMING our series of Aphorisms and Epigrams, we give below a selection of the latter from the "MS. Book," known to every student of William Blake.

In their recent work on Blake Messrs. E. J. Ellis and W. B. Yeats describe this MS. book as a little volume of about a hundred pages, each measuring six and a half inches wide by eight inches high, having for its title "Ideas of Good and Evil." Each page contains a drawing in the middle; and some of these drawings were used as first sketches of certain of the poet-artist's published designs. In the margins epigrams run riot: "These are generally on artistic subjects, and contain hits at Hayley (the 'H.' of the following epigrams), Sir Joshua Reynolds, Stothard, Cromek, and all Blake's pet aversions." The reader will see that they have an unmistakable flavour of their own:

The angel that presided o'er my birth
Said, "Little creature formed for joy and mirth, Go! live without the help of anything on earth."

To God.

If you have formed a circle to go into,
Go into it yourself and see what you would do.

If on earth you do forgive
You shall not find where to live.

A PITIFUL CASE.

The villain at the gallows tree,
When he is doomed to die,
To assuage his bitter misery
In virtue's praise does cry.
So Reynolds, when he came to die,
To assuage his bitter woe,
Thus aloud did howl and cry:
"Michael Angelo! Michael Angelo!"

Can there be anything more mean,
More malice in disguise,
Than praise a man for doing what
That man does most despise?
Reynolds lectures exactly so
When he praises Michael Angelo.

Raphael, sublime, majestic, graceful, wise,
His executive powers must I despise?
Rubens, low, vulgar, stupid, ignorant,
His powers of execution I must grant.

As the ignorant savage will sell his own wife
For a button, a buckle, a bead, or a knife,
So the wise, savage Englishman spends his whole fortune
For a smear or a squall that is not picture or tune.

The Sussex men are noted fools,
And weak in their brain pan,
I wonder if H—the painter
Is not a Sussex man.

To H—.

You think Fuseli's not a great painter. I'm glad.
This is one of the best compliments he ever had.

To H—.

Thy friendship oft has made my heart to ache:
Do be my enemy, for friendship's sake.

My title as a genius thus is proved,
Not praised by Hayley or by Flaxman loved.

P— loved me not as he loved his friends,
For he loved them for gain to serve his ends.
He loved me for no gain at all,
But to rejoice and triumph at my fall.

STOTHARD.

S—, in childhood, upon the nursery floor,
Was extremely old and most extremely poor.
He has grown old, and rich, and what he will,
He is extreme old, and extreme poor still.

Columbus discovered America, but Americus Vesputius finished and smoothed it over, like an English engraver, or Correggio Titian.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16, 1898.

No. 1354, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.                                   | 0 15 3  | 0 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
|   | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

THE EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A NEW edition of the Letters to A. P. Watt the annual reminder of his enterprise which the chief literary agent of this country sets forth, lies before us. Not being Mr. Watt, we can read it without blushing; but he— we must grow ruddier than the cherry. The new collection has eight new letters, among them one from Mr. Guy Boothby, the young Australian writer, who, on the threshold of his career, was counselled by Mr. Kipling to work hard and put his trust in Watt. That he has been assiduous the publishers' letters prove; and here, in this letter, is further proof of his fidelity to Mr. Kipling's agent. But Mr. Watt might have returned the compliment by seeing that the title of Mr. Boothby's Bushigrams was correctly given.

THE other new letters include one from Mr. Morley Roberts, in which he says: "I think I ought to tell you that I have come to the conclusion that a man who writes cannot really be said to exist without an agent, and his opinion is the result of great experience in mismanaging my own affairs." There are publishers that think otherwise.

THE Looker-on in Blackwood is exercised in the case of Mr. Stephen Phillips. He has admiration for the new poet, but he has fears too. Thus begins the examination: "Since then a book of poems by a writer little known heretofore has made more noise than any similar publication since Alexander Smith fired his rocket skyward. Here, however, the genius is no illusion. There are passages in this small book of a hundred pages that march with the footfall of the immortals; stately lines with all the musical meaning of the highest poesy; and when that can be truthfully said of any new-comer into a land bereaved of poetic grandeur, it may be denied that his welcome can be too extravagantly grateful."

BUT the reviewer is very severe upon Mr. Phillips's faults. These he divides into faults of permission and commission. Among the former is a too ready acceptance of a phrase that "will do" instead of searching further for the phrase that is best. Thus, "when Apollo warns Marpessa that if she marries Idas a time will come when her eyes will be 'of all illusion cured,' 'cured' is the wrong word precisely (seeing that the illusion was her happiness), and a hack word too." Among Mr. Phillips's faults of commission is the trick of tagging his verse with lines and half-lines that have no purpose but to fill out the measure or supply a rhyme.

THE Looker-on then turns to the "Woman with the Dead Soul" and "The Wife," and disapproves of both. "The truth about both is, that beautiful as they are in form, in movement, in accent (with strange lapses, however, such as recall the whilom flower-girl in the Duchess), their beauty is not equal to their offences, and does not atone for them." And so on. Finally, the reviewer gives a number of reasons why he has entered so fully into Mr. Phillips's case. These are two of them: "Because, if Mr. Phillips's poetic faculty is a full and lasting fund, it will be a grave misfortune if the author of 'Marpessa' is confirmed in the practice of his morbidities. Because, in the fact, that 'Marpessa' is a far finer, more spacious, more noble piece of work than the rest, there is hope that its author can be turned from his errors."

St. George, the organ of the Ruskin Society at Birmingham, announces that the Trustees of St. George's Guild are issuing a series of photographs of the examples of Art contained in the Ruskin Museum collection. They comprise reproductions of original drawings by Mr. Ruskin himself, and by the artists whom he specially employed for the purpose. The examples will serve either as extra illustrations to The Principles of Art, as expounded by Mr. Ruskin, and in which volume they are fully described, or for the purpose of being framed; and they are therefore to be obtained either mounted or unmounted.

THE private soldier who greeted Mr. Kipling so felicitously on his arrival at Cape Town has now "obliged again." He has sent to the Chronicle from the Cape a Barrack-room Ballad of his own, which has merit enough to stand alone. The subject, oddly enough overlooked by Mr. Kipling, is the death of a soldier, and his regiment's sudden change of attitude towards him. Here are two stanzas:

"'E'd little brains, I'll swear,
Beneath 'is ginger 'air,
'Is personal attractions, well, they wasn't very large;
'E was fust in ev'ry mill,
An' a foul-mouthed cur, but still We'll forgive 'im all 'is drawbacks—'e' as taken 'is discharge.

'E once got fourteen days,
For drunken, idle ways,
An' the Colonel said the nasty things that colonels sometimes say;
'E called him to 'is face
The regiment's disgrace—
But the Colonel took 'is 'at off when 'e passed
'im by to-day."

The little poem, which is called "Ginger James," has the true note.

IS this a maxim among Johnsonian students: "Here's a man devoting his life to editing Bozzy; let us leave a brick at him"? John Wilson Croker did useful and patient work on Boswell's Life, and then Macaulay pronounced his notes a tissue of errors. And now Dr. George Birkbeck Hill, having quarried the Johnsonian field for years, is formally arraigned by Mr. Percy Fitzgerald. Mr. Fitzgerald's indictment comes to us in a quarto volume containing eighty-six double-column pages filled with Dr. Birkbeck Hill's "mistakes, misapprehensions, wild flounderings, and speculations."

WE have looked through the volume. The dust of editorial fisticuffs rises on every page, and we weary of the spectacle of one editor pummeling another. Many of Mr. Fitzgerald's corrections may be just. But his criticisms, as a whole, strike us as vexatious. Here is the sort of thing:

"The editor [Mr. Birkbeck Hill] gravely discusses all these matters. 'He [Johnson] might have returned either by the Oxford coach, which left at 8 a.m.—fare 15s.'; and, mark this: 'There were no outside passengers.' Here we touch firm ground, for, of course, Johnson must have travelled inside—that is, if he did travel by this vehicle. Or did he take "'The Machine," which left the "Dear Inn" every Monday, Wednesday, &c., at 6 a.m.'? 'The Machine' or Oxford coach? Who can tell? The editor adds resignedly: 'What time these coaches neared London we are not told.' Johnson would prefer knowing what time they reached London.

But there is a further important point—viz., that "'The Machine" was not licensed by the Vice-Chancellor.' Then more details about 'The Machine': It carried six inside passengers. And the serious point of luggage: 'Each inside passenger was allowed six pounds of luggage; beyond that weight a penny a pound was charged.' Bradshaw is not 'in it' with all this. Still the point is left unsettled: Had Johnson luggage? and how much? In default of evidence, the editor does the next best thing—he speculates. 'Had Johnson sent heavy luggage?—and how likely that was!—'he might have sent it by the University old stage waggon, which left'—and so on. And thus, bewildered by 'The Machine,' the 'Oxford coach,' the 'heavy waggon,' &c., we are left no wiser. I repeat, it seems incredible that any one could bring himself to write such things."

WE are not impressed by Mr. Fitzgerald's ridicule of Dr. Hill's method, as shown in this passage. Dr. Hill's speculations about the coach, and the Doctor's luggage, strike us as amusing. To Mr. Fitzgerald they seem dull and superfluous. Well, Mr. Fitzgerald is not Dr. Hill, and within the covers of Boswell there ought to be room for individual editing. On the whole, Dr. Hill's silence under this attack strikes us as being more admirable than Mr. Fitzgerald's garrulity.

In an address read at a meeting of the New York Branch of the Walt Whitman Fellowship: International, Mr. Le Gallienne has been delivering his true opinion of his fellow-members of the Omar Khayyam Club with a frankness that is not likely to be too pleasing to that body. Thus was the reference introduced: "Now look here, you Whitmanites, all I want to say is this—and I hope you won't think it impolite of me—you are, of course, delightful people, delightful hosts, but what I am chiefly concerned to know is—are you all real Whitmanites? . . . It means something to call ourselves Whitmanites—or it means nothing. If it means nothing, why not call ourselves by one of the many other immemorial names that mean nothing? Why not, for example, join the Respectables?" Such was Mr. Le Gallienne's spirited outburst.

AND then, by way of pointing his criticisms, he added:

"We have a club in London dedicated to the worship of Omar Khayyam. Think of the roses and raptures which that name suggests! But should you ever part the portière of vine-leaves and roses that screens with gaudy paganism the proprieties of its banqueting hall, what do you find? Forms slim as the cypress and wine-glad faces fair as the moon? No doubt there are members who would be Omar Khayyamites if they dared, members, indeed, who are Omar Khayyamites strictly under the rose; but all that the visiting eye beholds is a company of respectable middle-aged gentlemen over their claret. They look for all the world like old-maidish officials of the Board of Trade, and if you look for vine-leaves in their hair, you will for the most part find neither vine-leaves nor hair."

This is criticism from within, with a vengeance.

AND here we might quote the very free adaptation of "Persicos Odi" which some one has recently made with reference to Persian poetry:

"Boy, I dislike a paraphrase of Omar Done into English second-hand from Persian;
Roses distilled with patchouli's aroma
Are my aversion.
Give me instead the feast one faithful drew to, Trumpeted forth by neither 'Star' nor herald;
That loaf of bread, that jug of wine, and you, too,
Rare old FitzGerald."

WHEN Mr Schofield, who describes Björnson and Ibsen in the current Atlantic Monthly, told Björnson that he had seen "John Gabriel Borkmann," this was the emphatic answer of the author of In God's Way. "Oh, that's a piece I can't stand: entirely pessimistic and useless; not the kind of thing we want at all. It won't do anybody any good." Subsequently, in talking of another matter, Björnson repeated his article of faith: "What we want in the future is a literature which will make men better."

A STORY of Ibsen told in the same article is a little puzzling to us. It is to the effect that Ibsen, being strongly averse from talking of his own work, and occasionally having to rebuke inquisitive persons, once replied to a stranger who asked him what he had meant by Peer Gynt, "Oh, my dear madam, when I wrote Peer Gynt only our Lord and I knew what was meant; and as for me, I have forgotten." It is a good story, but has been told so often and so long of Browning that we know not how to receive it. Is it true? And if true, did Ibsen remember Browning's reply? Or did Browning remember Ibsen's? Or did both men arrive at their wit independently?

MR. SCHOFIELD records one important conversation: "One morning when I was sitting in his study, on the sofa (the place of honour in Norway as in Germany), he became delightfully talkative. He spoke freely of his plays, and explained why he thought 'The Emperor and the Galilean' the best and most enduring of them all. He seemed for once to be off his guard, and expressed opinions on various subjects. Suddenly he fell into a reverie. Unwilling to interrupt it, I was forced to listen for some time—rather uneasy, I admit—to the passing trolley cars, which kept up their incessant hissing in the street below. Finally, he said slowly, almost unconscious of my presence, 'Yes, I have tried always to live my own life—and I think I have been right.'"

THE quaint and simple description of "A London Sabbath Morn," which Stevenson wrote in the Burns stanza for the Scots section of his Underwoods, has been illustrated by a fellow Scot, Mr. A. S. Boyd, and published by Chatto & Windus. The result is an attractive book. Mr. Boyd's manner is a little harsh, but he has humour, and his admiration for the poem, and interest in the scenes it records, have lent his pencil sympathy. Most persons would be grateful for a glossary.

A NEW illustrated edition of The Vicar of Wakefield has been added by Messrs. Service & Paton to their standard novels. The artist, Mr. C. E. Brock, has made some charming pictures, one or two of them having a true Goldsmithian character. In the meeting of the Vicar and Olivia in the inn, the same incident as played at the Lyceum Theatre is distinctly recalled, which leads to the suggestion that the stage might be used by illustrators more than it is. Some of the scenery in "Olivia" was beautiful enough for reproduction as background in any book, and Sir Henry Irving's Dr. Primrose, Miss Terry's Olivia, and the late William Terriss's Squire Thornhill could hardly have been more picturesque. Perhaps in the illustrated edition of The Little Minister, which some day is certain to come, the artist will take hints from the Haymarket production.

APROPOS of illustrations, the frontispiece to Beauchamp's Career, in the new edition of Mr. Meredith's novels, seems to us singularly unnecessary. The fact that there is yachting in the book has led to the inclusion of a photogravure plate, after a picture in the manner of Copley Fielding, entitled "Off the Needles." Good novels are not so badly in need of pictorial aid as this suggests

It is fortunate, perhaps, that more books are projected than ever come to be written, and more written than are published; but now and then one hears of a scheme which one would like to see completed. "Temple Scott," who contributes a letter on English literary affairs to the Chicago Dial, says: "An author, unknown to fame, is writing a pamphlet with the following title: 'A Proposal Humbly offered to the Ch-n-c-ll-r of the Exch-q-r, For the better regulation of the Publication of Books, and for bringing within modest bounds the pride and vanity of authors, as well as the arrogance of publishers.' He has taken his text from Horace: 'Insani sanas nomen ferat, æquas iniqui, Ultra quam satis est, virtutem si petat ipsam.' I cannot tell you whether the tract will ever be published or not." We hope that it will

THE May number of the Idler will contain an authoritative article upon the career and influence of the late Mr. Aubrey Beardsley, by Mr. Max Beerbohm, illustrated by drawings that are little known, and some that have never before been published.

THE Council of University College, London, have appointed Mr. H. L. Callendar, M.A., F.R.S., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and now Professor of Physics in the McGill University, Montreal, to the Quain Chair of Physics in University College about to be vacated by Prof. Carey Foster.

IT has been arranged to hold the Booksellers' Dinner, under the auspices of the above institution, at the Holborn Restaurant, in the King's Hall, on Saturday, May 7. The committee have pleasure in stating that the Right Hon. James Bryce, D.C.L., M.P., has kindly consented to occupy the chair, and Mr. Sydney S. Pawling the vice-chair.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN announces a work, in two volumes, of interest to collectors of Japanese art, entitled A Japanese Collection, by Mr. Michael Tomkinson. It will be illustrated with about 125 photogravure plates of inros, swords, ivories, tsuba, pouches, pipes, fakusa, netsuke, embroideries, brocades, and lacquer.

MR. ALLEN also announces a new volume by M. Maeterlinck, entitled Wisdom and Destiny. For the appearance of Mr. Phil May's illustrated edition of David Copperfield October has been fixed.

MR. JOHN LONG will publish at once a volume of bizarre stories, to be called The Sea of Looe, by Walter Phelps Dodge, the author of A Strong Man Armed.

MISS CATHERINE M. PHILLIMORE is about to publish, through Mr. Elliot Stock, a study on Dante at Ravenna. It will treat of the less known part of Dante's life, and will show how much the poet was influenced by the place of his residence during the closing years of his life. Several illustrations from local photographs are included in the volume.

REPUTATIONS RECONSIDERED.

JONATHAN SWIFT.

IN a preface to the first collected edition of Swift's works, published in 1762, the editor fortifies himself against omitting one piece, or even a single sentence, of his author by adducing the opinion of the most learned men in Europe that "all his Weeds were Flowers in the best Gardens, and all the Trash, the Chippings of the richest brilliant Diamonds." But, good lack, if you turn over the leaves of those thirteen substantial volumes how much now appears obsolete and superfluous! For much is pure journalism, done, according to the fashion of the time, in pamphlets; and nothing is more changeable than the aspect of public affairs. It is true the keen historical student may force himself to wade through the political disquisitions, but it would be mere affectation to pretend that they possess any literary interest. His moral essays, whether they took the shape of letters or of sermons, belong to the same category. Had Dean Swift left only these behind, he and his works would have been long ago whelmed in oblivion. Yet even among them one is constantly meeting something to recall the fact that they were composed by the most brilliant writer of a brilliant age. For instance, sandwiched between the "Contests and Dissensions at Rome and the "Sentiments of a Church of England Man" is the delightful paper, scarce covering two pages, called "A Meditation upon a Broomstick," an inimitable parody of the Honourable Robert Boyle. Further on, we come to the dream of the lion and the virgins and the famous Tatler on les petites morales, with its vivid picture of squiredom in the days of Queen Anne. They are, it is true, only trifles, yet such trifles as genius alone is able to produce. It is the same throughout the other volumes. Swift as a controversialist is no longer readable, even as a writer of letters he is not attractive, but the moment he touches upon any theme that gives play to his invention, his observation and his satirical humour, he stands out as the man of his age.

Thackeray is less successful with Dean Swift than with any of the other wits he tried to present in Esmond, and this was the more remarkable inasmuch as there is a certain kinship of genius between the two. Each, as it were, stood on a height, and observed life and character, but neither to any great extent had the gift of sympathetic creation. The world of Henry Esmond is coloured by the personality of Thackeray, and so it is with Swift; but the Victorian novelist, loving elegance and refinement, and caring little for the boisterous, burly force characteristic of the days of Anne, ever lends a softening tint to his picture. He leaves an impression of fine women as delicate in their manners as the ladies of our own day. If he ventures to carry them over the borders of gentility it is only to show

"two pairs of the finest and roundest arms to be seen in England (my lady Castlewood was remarkable for this beauty of her person) covered with flour up above the elbows, and preparing paste and turning rolling pins in the housekeeper's closet."

His society is all like this. The men are in large periwigs and beautiful waistcoats and gold-hilted swords. Their conversation is gay and gallant and witty, as becomes beaux and fops, and a gentlemanly "Damme" does not detract from its general character. Who would guess from this evidence alone that the country described was that of the Yahoos! Let us change the spectacles of Thackeray for the bright, sharp eyes of the Dean, and how the glory of the time begins to fade. We take up the Guide to Polite Conversation, and find what is evidently a realistic picture of the manners of the time, imbedded though it be in a scathing burlesque of society small-talk. The most characteristic bits are unfit for the polite ears of the present day. Among other items of information we learn that a beauty and fortune was accustomed to spit at a dinner party, that there was nothing unusual in a fashionable young gentleman pulling her on his lap when occasion presented, that noble lords jested broadly before their hostess, and ladies talked in a manner hoydens would be ashamed of now. Here is a short specimen of the manners of the time, which has the additional merit of illustrating the cleverness with which Swift satirised the proverbs and, as we call them now, the dichés that formed the conversational stock-in-trade of the great.

"[All is taken away and the wine set down. Miss gives Neverout a smart pinch.]

NEV.: Lord, Miss, what d'ye mean? D'ye think I've no feeling?

MISS: I'm forced to pinch, for the Times are hard.

NEV. (Giving Miss a Pinch): Take that, Miss; what's Sawce for a Gousse is Sawce for a Gander.

MISS (Screaming): Well, Mr. Neverout, if I live that shall neither go to Heaven nor Hell with you.

NEV. (Takes Miss's Hand): Come, Miss, let us lay all Quarrels aside and be Friends.

MISS: Don't be mauning and gauming a Body so. Can't you keep your filthy Hands to yourself?"

The savage pleasure Dean Swift took in unmasking the Yahoo-ism of fine ladies is still more strikingly exemplified in the unfinished Directions to Servants, which in coarseness, vigour, and irony are unexcelled by anything the author did, and in the poems which, valueless as they are as poetry, are of priceless value as documents illustrative of the age. Almost alone among his contemporaries, the Dean prized the homely virtues of cleanliness and decency, carrying them to an excess in his own person, and he is never tired of showing that under the brave outward show of wigs, and laced hats and ruffles, of paint and powder and furbelows, the national habits could as yet only be described as filthy. His animadversions gain in strength even by his limitations. He had little appreciation of those eternal beauties that encompass human life in every age, be it in Ithaca or the London of Queen Anne: witness the vivid description of morning in the city. There are all the everyday and sordid figures—the immoral Betty stealing from her master's bed "to discompose her own," "the slipshod Prentice" cleaning up and opening his master's shop, the housemaid with her mop, the youth seeking old nails in the kennel, the voices of the small-coal man, the chimney-sweep and the brick-dust woman, the duns meeting at his lordship's gate, the bailiffs taking their stand, and school-boys with satchels in their hand. It is keen and cynically observant; it lacks only "the light that never was," a touch of that glory of the morning which falls on city and on field alike, to have been poetry in essence as well as in form. And he was equally blind to what of passion and pathos and romance lay behind the ugly exterior facts of human life.

Yet it would be a false estimate of Dean Swift that dismissed him as a realist and nothing more. The work of his that bears the unmistakable impress of immortality, Gulliver's Travels, is born of an imagination as romantic as that of Scott, as close and firm as Defoe's. Their moral or allegory has long ceased to interest anyone but the pedant, and the only longueurs in them consist of the disquisitions in which are set forth the wickedness of self-complacent England. Not to amuse, but to find machinery for his preaching, he invented worlds as strange and delightful as the scenery of the Arabian Nights. By concentrating his imagination on detail, by stroke upon stroke of realistic description, he makes his Lilliputs, his Brobdingnagians, his Houhynms, as real to us as Crusoe's man Friday or the Old Man of the Sea. England has greatly changed, and the moral is no longer applicable, but new generations find these histories as fresh and readable as the story of Cinderella is to every new occupant of the nursery. But even here his success is not won by any command over character. The Brobdingnagian maid who set Gulliver astride on her nipple, the Lilliputian nobles who held a tournament on his handkerchief, and the white mare-servant of the wise Houhynm lord are but so many figures and mouthpieces. Like Thackeray, Dean Swift painted life as seen from his own eminence, vigilantly and, in a deep sense, truly; yet never in a way to make you feel that the company of shadows have assumed flesh and blood, that we no longer listen to one man speaking through many masks, that every man and woman of the troop is uttering his own deepest thoughts, is animated by her own passions. This supreme gift belongs to another type of artist, the type to which Shakespeare and Walter Scott belonged. But there is not a more searching test of imagination than the creation of a fairyland, one that for the time being imposes itself on the mind as vividly as Dante's Hell, or the enchanted island of the Tempest; and by so much as imagination is greater than wit, and irony, and all the other mental gifts, so do Gulliver's Travels excel all else in Swift.

In this writer, however, the manner is of equal importance with the matter, and the briefest notice would be incomplete without some word about his great and unique style. He lived when English prose was at its high-water mark. It is true that everybody who wrote at all tried to write verse, but an utterly false taste in verse prevailed. The majestic harmonies of Milton and the sweeping energy of the Elizabethans were alike unrivalled by Dryden and Pope, who, with undeniable gifts, worked under a bad convention. It was the day when Cato became the rage and Colley Cibber was in his glory, and people thought much of verse no man can read now.

But it was an era rich in prose, the richest in our history. Over and over again it has happened that the prose of a whole period has been ruined by the worship of a bad ideal. Someone with an inherently defective style arises and wins success despite his weakness. Then that great, good-natured, ill-judging British public assumes that the manner is the best, and lends a cold ear to those who do not adopt it, and so a period of bad English sets in. Lyly was the first conspicuous sinner with his Euphuës. Sir Thomas Browne set a bad example to Dr. Johnson, who, in his turn, led hosts of successors astray. The bad models of our own day—I speak of them only as models, not as passing judgment on their merits—have been Macaulay, Carlyle, and Ruskin. That one and all of them could write noble English is altogether outside the question. The assertion simply is, that whoever tries to imitate the mechanical cadences and antitheses of Macaulay, Carlyle's licentious disregard of form, or Ruskin's love of ornament, is meeting failure—artistic failure, at any rate—more than half-way.

But the strength of the great prose-writing of Queen Anne's time is that it belonged to no school. Fielding fashioned a style that exactly suited the expression of his own frank, ironical, sunny-natured self. His novels may be searched in vain for an affected word—for a word, that is, which does not seem the most natural for the occasion. It was the method Addison pursued, with a very different temperament; and it was the method of Jonathan Swift. We have been admitted to his workshop in a passage that deserves to be conned by everyone who would write well. It occurs in the preface afore-mentioned.

"The Author [writes the editor] consented to the printing on the following conditions: 'That no Jobb should be made but full Value given for the money; that the Editor should attend him early every Morning, or when most convenient, to read to him, that the Sound might strike the Ear as well as the Sense the Understanding, and had always two Men Servants present for the purpose; and when he had any Doubt, he would ask them the meaning of what he heard? Which, if they did not comprehend, he would alter and amend, until they understood it perfectly well, and then he would say, This will do; for I write to the Vulgar more than to the Learned.'"

The story reminds us of Molière and his housekeeper; of Dante and his resolve to forsake Latin and write his epic in the common tongue, that the unlearned might understand; and of Homer and the rich folk-songs of many lands, which, without exception, were addressed to the rude bulk of humanity. To be clear is the first merit of prose, and Swift has this merit to the highest degree. Yet it is obvious that plain speech is not of itself a means to salvation. Where there is mental poverty it only advertises the barrenness of the land, which is the reason why so many are driven to be complicated and obscure, so as to obtain the show of a distinction not really belonging to them. The question, then, to be decided is, whether a writer is strong enough to appear without borrowed plumage, and with his shortcomings bare. M. Sainte-Beuve, in his introduction to the works of Molière, relates with approval Tieck's story of Lord Southampton despatching his servant to the inn where the young Shakespeare listened silently while Marlowe harangued the company, and asked him to give a message to him who had the most human face. But Swift's bore not the impress of all that humanity feels, and his writing is marked by one or two strongly developed characteristics rather than by a multitude of emotions. The passion of love he may have felt, though we cannot here enter upon the pitiful stories of Vanessa and Stella; it is not at all in his writing. And how far his contempt of women was balanced by mercy and charity no one but himself knew. It belonged to his nature to cloak and hide whatever was most pure and devout in his character, and he consistently showed his worst to the world. His writing has few, if any, of the great and masterly phrases that embellish the pages of Browne. He did not strive after the limpid purity of Addison. You find no suggestion of that union of pathos, sentiment, and humour invented by Laurence Sterne, and so often attempted in our own day. Even his irony lacks the genial polish that lends unbounded charm to Fielding. It is, indeed, irony of an entirely different kind, begotten, perhaps, in mercy and compassion, but born in wrath and bitterness. Not unseldom it has the effect of an ingrained habit of mind, but oftener still it is edged by the very deepest feeling. His writing is certainly no milk for babes, but is strong, coarse meat for men.

It seems to me a pity that there should be a rage for the complete works of an author much of whose writing had only a passing interest. The best alone is worth preserving, and in the Dean's case there can be little dispute about what the best is. His masterpieces are undoubtedly the various travels and adventures of Lemuel Gulliver. With these should be included the Tale of a Tub and the Journal to Stella, perhaps also the Battle of the Books. Some of the briefer essays are so excellently written and preserve so vivid a picture of the times that a volume might be made of them. The Polite Conversation as a literary curiosity is worth preserving, and so are the Directions to Servants. A number of the poems deserve preservation for the sake of their local colour and their picture of manners; certainly "the humble petition of Frances Harris" is so perfect a transcript of the eighteenth century chamber-maid that the humorist will not let it die. Thus, few of our writers have left behind a larger body of strong and vital work; but there is almost an equal amount of controversy and sermon that should be tossed to oblivion: things that but cumber the writer's fame.

P.

THREE BARDS OF THE BUSH.

I.—HENRY LAWSON.

NEARLY eight years have passed since Lamb reviewed Barron Field's First Fruits of Australian Poetry in the Examiner, and now Australia counts her poets by the score. Her papers are filled with song—rough and ready, it is true, far removed from the Sydney Judge's echoes of Andrew Marvell and the Midsummer Night's Dream; but song none the less.

"I first adventure; follow me who list:
And be the second Austral harmonist."

Such was the couplet at the head of Lamb's quaint and savoury little article. With three Austral harmonists who have listed to follow we are now concerned—with Mr. Henry Lawson, Mr. Edward Dyson, and Mr. A. B. Paterson—all young men, not far advanced in their careers, and each with something to say and a direct way of saying it. This is not, perhaps, their order of merit, but it is the order in which it seems best to take them: beginning with Mr. Lawson's In the Days when the World was Wide, passing on to Mr. Dyson's Rhymes from the Mines, and ending with Mr. Paterson's The Man from Snowy River.

There are living Australian writers—settlers or natives—who may be able to do better work. Mr. Brunton Stephens, for example, has a high reputation, but from this triad we get the genuine outlook of men who have done things first and have written of them afterwards. They give us Australian life, whether of the station or the mines, of the bush or the city, from within: matter before manner. Manner will, of course, come later; art for art's sake, and all the rest of it; just now Australia is still too young, too busy, to be bothered with it.

Mr. Lawson, whose prose volume, While the Billy Boils, was reviewed in these columns last year, has much of the poet's dower of scorn. He rages at the inequality of the world, at pretence and self-righteousness, at the encroachments of civilisation. His is the temperament that is for ever looking back—both to his own and the world's early days. Thus he sings:

"They tried to live as a freeman should—they were happier men than we,
In the glorious days of wine and blood, when Liberty crossed the sea;
'Twas a comrade true or a foeman then, and a trusty sword well tried—
They faced each other and fought like men
in the days when the world was wide.

* * * * *
We fight like women, and feel as such; the thoughts of our hearts we guard;
Where scarcely the scorn of a god could touch, the sneer of a sneak hits hard;
The treacherous tongue and cowardly pen,
the weapons of curs, decide—
They faced each other and fought like men
in the days when the world was wide."

Mr. Lawson, like all those who pit the past against the present, probably argues on insufficient data; but he is entitled to his standpoint, and he is true to it too. His intolerance, moreover, never extends to the unfortunate. Cynical he certainly is, and an impatient censor of pettiness, but let there be a touch of generosity, a hint of picturesqueness, in a scoundrel and his smile is won. He has the Colonial's hatred of circumscribed spaces and social ordinances. He wants to be allowed to do as he likes, to wear what he likes—in short, to be free. Hence his poetry is the poetry of the emancipated, the poetry of the wayfarer under broad skies, whether by land or sea. Here is Mr. Lawson on shipboard :

“A god-like ride on a thundering sea,
When all but the stars are blind,
A desperate race from Eternity
With a gale-and-a-half behind.
A jovial spree in the cabin at night,
A song on the rolling deck,
A lark ashore with the ships in sight,
Till—a wreck goes down with a wreck.

A smoke and a yarn on the deck by day,
When life is a waking dream,
And care and trouble so far away
That out of your life they seem.
A roving spirit in sympathy,
Who has travelled the whole world o'er—
My heart forgets, in a week at sea,
The trouble of years on shore.”

The “simplifying sea” has not had many more vigorous tributes.

One cannot help wishing that Mr. Lawson would always write his poetry at sea ; then he might keep bitterness out of it. As it is, his bitterness is against him. In his prose it rarely asserts itself, but in his poetry it is always showing through the lines. We cannot but regret it. A man with so keen an eye for character, so vigilant an observer, so sound a humorist as Mr. Lawson proves himself to be in While the Billy Boats, is wasting time in reiterating trite attacks on society. We would give all his reflections on mankind in the abstract for another lyric as good as this commentary on Salvation Army persistence :

“When the kindly hours of darkness, save for light of moon and star,
Hide the picture on the signboard over
Doughty's Horse Bazaar ;
When the last rose-tint is fading on the distant mulga scrub,
Then the ‘Army’ prays for Watty at the entrance of his pub.

Now, I often sit at Watty's when the night is very near,
With a head that's full of jingles and the fumes of bottled beer,
For I always have a fancy that, if I am over there,
When the ‘Army’ prays for Watty, I'm included in the prayer.

Watty lounges in his armchair, in its old accustomed place,
With a fatherly expression on his round and passive face ;
And his arms are clasped before him, in a calm, contented way,
And he nods his head and dozes when he hears the ‘Army’ pray.

And I wonder does he ponder on the distant years and dim,
Or his chances over yonder, when the ‘Army’ prays for him ?
Has he not a fear connected with the war-
place down below,
Where, according to good Christians, all the publicans should go ?

But his features give no token of a feeling in his breast,
Save of peace that is unbroken and a conscience well at rest ;
And we guzzle as we guzzled long before the ‘Army’ came,
And the loafers wait for ‘shouters,’ and—they get there just the same.

It would take a lot of praying—lots of thumpiug on the drum—
To prepare our sinful, straying, erring souls for Kingdom Come ;
But I love my fellow-sinners, and I hope,
upon the whole,
That the ‘Army’ gets a hearing when it prays for Watty's soul.”

That is a piece of true humour, and we look to Mr. Lawson for more of the same character.

Messrs. Turner & Sutherland, in their work on The Development of Australian Literature (Longmans & Co.), are severe upon Mr. Lawson's reply to his critics under the Byronic title “Australian Bards and Bush Reviewers” ; but it seems to us he has reason. It is annoying to have one's name continually linked with a predecessor, and Mr. Lawson has individuality of his own which should have been recognised and respected. This is his retaliation :

“While you use your best endeavour to immortalise in verse
The gambling and the drink which are your country's greatest curse,
While you glorify the bully and take the spieler's part—
You're a clever Southern writer, scarce inferior to Bret Harte.

If you sing of waving grasses when the plains
are dry as bricks,
And discover shining rivers where there's only mud and sticks ;
If you picture ‘mighty forests’ where the mulga spoils the view—
You're superior to Kendall, and ahead of Gordon too.

If you swear there's not a country like the land that gave you birth,
And its sons are just the noblest and most glorious chaps on earth ;
If in every girl a Venus your poetic eye
discerns,
You are gracefully referred to as the ‘Young Australian Burns.’

But if you should find that bushmen—spite of all the poets say—
Are just common brother-sinners, and you're quite as good as they—
You're a drunkard and a liar, a cynic and a sneak,
Your grammar's simply awful and your intellect is weak.”

We like this. It has spirit. And Mr. Lawson is too true to himself to care so much for hostile opinion as to forswear his own beliefs. Let him continue to find the bushmen common brother-sinners, and to write about their sinning and repenting, and we, at any rate, will gladly read him. Besides he has, what the Bush Reviewers would seem to have overlooked, love of country. A poet with love of country has at least one asset which must not be disregarded. Mr. Lawson's patriotic poem, “The Star of Australasia,” is one of the best things Australia has done.

PURE FABLES.

I.

CLASSIFICATION.

The morning stars sang together.
And a person of delicate ear and nice judgment discussed the singing at length, and showed how and wherein one star differed from another, and which was great and which was not.

And still the morning stars sang together.

II.

THE UNTAMEABLE.

Fate forgot to clip a poet's wings. So that there was no holding him, and his friends despaired.

And then a book he had written began to sell. And within the lapsing of a moon you might have seen him eat sugar out of ladies' hands.

III.

MEDIUM.

A worker in verse made a book upon Love, and got nothing for it. And a worker in prose made a book upon the same matter, and was able to take his family to Bexhill for a week.

“It is a mundane world,” said the verseman.

“But it suits me very well,” said the proseman.

IV.

THE PERSONAL NOTE.

“Eheu!” sighed a poet, “The people will not be moved ; and I have shown them my heart !”

“Thy heart,” quoth his friend “is nothing. . . . Show them their own !”

V.

BODLEY.

A Bodley poet died, and passed unto the country which hath been for the souls of poets from the beginning.

And while he was yet newly arrived, a company of souls waited upon him with a greeting, and inquired if he would be kind enough to inform them how he chanced to fare thither.

And he smiled and said, “I am the author of certain slight verses.”

“What name ?” demanded they.

And he told them his name.

“We have heard of you,” they answered.
“Sixty-four heavy-leaded pages triennially !
Now, everybody here hath written tomcs— few, or many, according to the number of his mortal years.”

“Ah,” remarked the Bodley poet, “and everybody in the world of the flesh is saying how badly all you fellows want editing down.”

VI.

SUGGESTION.

A man ranged cowslips on a stall, and wondered how many he should give for a penny.

And another man, passing, caught the gleam and the odour of them, and had a vision of a blue valley touched with gold, and April scattering desultory rains.

T. W. H. C.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

NEVER was a published correspondence so badly, so injudiciously edited as that of Ernest Renan and M. Berthelot. A man of science may have attained all possible glory in his special department, but that is insufficient reason to regard himself as a delightful or even an interesting letter-writer. Never was a duller, a more insignificant correspondent than the eminent M. Berthelot; and yet, with an inexcusable vanity, he publishes his thousand and one mediocre and passably trivial letters to Renan, while the public only wanted those of the immortal dead. One reads the mighty tome to the bitter end, asking in vain the word of the riddle. Who on earth sighed for the letters of M. Berthelot, of even Mme. Berthelot, of whom the world has never heard, any more than we have heard of hundreds of respectable Mesdames Chose, excellent housekeepers, faithful guardians of the bourgeois home, with nothing to say, but who have the fortune not to say it? Among those of Renan at least half of the letters might have been suppressed. Those relating to his family, to his private affairs, have not the slightest value. The public has nothing to learn from the domestic side of Renan's character, while the family, still living, has much to resent and deplore in this futile desecration of a much too recent existence. After several centuries it is of the deepest interest to humanity to read Philip II.'s most charming domestic correspondence, because here we are fronted with a psychological problem. But poor Renan, writing about whooping-cough and scarlatina, says nothing the man across the way might not have said, expresses in our common language sentiments common to the costermonger, the grocer, and the peer.

The evil of this indiscriminate publication lies in the fact that really important letters, letters that here in Paris created a sensation, and whose value will increase and not diminish with posterity, are lost in a heap of rubbish. Renan's letters on Rome ought to have been published apart, so impressive, so fresh, so original are they. Here is a Rome new to us: Renan's Rome—a lucid creation. No poet's dream this, no startling impressionism, no revised Wincklemannism, but a point of view solidly individual. "I had not understood the meaning of a popular religion, accepted naively, without criticism by a people; I had not understood a people ceaselessly creating in religion, taking its dogmas in a true and breathing fashion. Make no illusion, this race is as Catholic as the Arabs of the Mosque are Moslem. Its religion is the religion, and to speak against it is to speak against its interest, as it feels it, just as real as every other need of nature." "I have found in this people, in their faith, their civilisation, an incomparable loftiness, poetry and ideality." He went to Rome to sneer, and remained to admire. There he found nothing cheap, nothing vulgar, the ideal everywhere. Paris, London, are centres of comfort and profanity; Rome is the home of the soul, the spirit, and the Madonna has conquered Renan. Here to dwell, renouncing action, thought, criticism, nourished upon soft impressions, adoring in spirit, living the noble life of the soul. Hitherto he had interpreted Catholicism through the abhorred caste of priests and prelates; now he recognises it as a spontaneous and simple faith of the people. "You would never believe how much this race lives in the world of imagination." All these letters on Rome are of the highest value. The pity they are lost among so many of no value whatever.

Daudet's posthumous novel, Soutien de Famille, is, like most of Daudet's recent work, dull and heavy. Daudet mistook his vocation, to our eternal regret. He was meant to teach us the lesson of life through laughter, with the fine point of irony imperceptibly blunted by tenderness. He was a "little-son" (as a more significant term than our own grandson) of Cervantes; a very little son, it is true, but family resemblance was strong enough to ensure our gratitude and admiration. He was never meant to preach, or to reform; but the latter-day morosity of fiction entered his system like a fatal poison, and instead of telling us, with his delicate Southern smile, life for sure is a miserable farce, but let us agree to outwit destiny, and by our gaiety turn it into a pleasantry, he took it into his head to mount the pulpit, and there detonate against modern vices and exhort us to the practice of old-fashioned virtues. Good enough, doubtless, for a Tolstoi, an Ibsen, whose genius is fashioned for this magnificent, but gloomy task. But Daudet! With Les Contes Choisis, Le Petit Chose, Tartarin—the sublime, the delicious, the unforgettable Tartarin behind him! The radiant, tender, ironical Alphonse Daudet, with a severely buttoned coat and high collar, a pair of spectacles instead of the interrogative and impertinent eyeglass, the Merovingian mane plastered into clerical order, voice toneless and severe, vanished the sunny smile, the inapproachable delicacy of touch, the magic charm, vanished the grace and wit. This is the Daudet of Soutien de Famille. A notable novel of a surety; a scathing satire upon the theatrical pomposity of the French attitude in public and private life. A big businessman, unable to meet his liabilities, commits suicide, and orators and friends gather round his eldest son, a vain and feeble lad, and gloriously address him as the family breadwinner. The boy is at once crushed by the importance of his rôle. At school he confides to a comrade his resemblance to Hamlet. Both have a part to play beyond their power. From dint of dwelling on his ruthless destiny, the boy is for ever incapacitated for earning even his own bread. He is supported first by his mother, then by his younger brother, then by his mistress, and, terrified by the unexpected responsibility of fatherhood, becomes a soldier. Here he has no bread to earn, nothing to think of but the automaton march to "One, two; One, two," and here he finds his insignificant destiny.

The Revue de Paris this month publishes the political manifestoes of the four brilliant leaders of Parliament. Brilliant is, of course, a relative term applied to a French Parliamentarian. Heaven only knows what French politics mean. Whatever each party may have at heart, it certainly is not the dignity of the nation, the respect of law, of justice, of humanity. A Socialist deputy defies the Government, qualifies the magistrature as infamous, casts mud in handfuls at constituted authority. The gratified Chamber at once orders that the speech shall be posted on the walls outside the House, all over the city, and all over the country. One wonders why. M. Poincaré, whose manifesto is certainly the most remarkable of the four, may be regarded as the spokesman of the Constitutional Republicans. He believes, incorrigible pessimist that he is, that the future is sufficiently obscure to justify the darkest apprehensions. M. Denys Cochin clamours for monarchy, which is not particularly promising with nothing better than a Duke of Orleans in view. Alas! poor France. H. L.

THE WEEK.

IT may be many years before the world receives all that can be given to it of the writings of Sir Richard F. Burton. It was Burton's habit to work at several books at a time. Books, or partly executed works, were apt to accumulate on his hands, and on his death, in addition to forty-eight published works, there remained twenty MSS. in different stages of completion. Lady Burton was arranging for the successive publication of these books when she died; and now the task of dealing with them has been entrusted by her sister, Mrs. Fitzgerald, to Mr. W. H. Wilkins, who, as is well known, enjoyed the confidence of Lady Burton. Mr. Wilkins gives interesting accounts in his preface to The Jew, The Gypsy, and El Islam, just issued. "The first part—'The Jew,'" writes Mr. Wilkins, "has a somewhat curious history. Burton collected most of the materials for writing it from 1869 to 1871, when he was Consul at Damascus. His intimate knowledge of Eastern races and languages, and his sympathy with Oriental habits and lines of thought, gave him exceptional facilities for ethnological studies of this kind. Disguised as a native, and unknown to any living soul except his wife, the British Consul mingled freely with the motley populations of Damascus, and inspected every quarter of the city—Muslim, Christian, and Jewish. His inquiries bore fruit in material, not only for this general essay on the Jew, but for an appendix dealing with the alleged rite of human sacrifice among the Sephardim or Eastern Jews, and more especially the mysterious murder of Padre Tomaso at Damascus in 1840. There is little doubt that his inquiry into these subjects was one of the reasons which aroused the hostility of the Damascus Jews against him; and that hostility was a powerful factor, though by no means the only one, in his recall by Lord Granville in 1871."

Burton several times thought of publishing his work on "The Jew"; but the advice of friends, and considerations of self-interest, deterred him. He fully intended, however, to issue the book when he had retired from the Consular Service. He died five months before his term of office (at Trieste) had expired. Mr. Wilkins is therefore fully justified in publishing the book now; but he still withholds the startling appendix on the alleged rite of human sacrifice among the Sephardim and the murder of Padre Tomaso.

Concerning the second sketch, "The Gypsy," Mr. Wilkins writes:

"Burton's interest in the Gypsies was lifelong; and when he was a lieutenant in the Bombay army and quartered in Sindh, he began his investigations concerning the affinity between the Jats and the Gypsies. During his many travels in different parts of the world, whenever he had the opportunity, he collected fresh materials with a view to putting them together some day. In 1875 his controversy with Bataillard provoked him into compiling his long contemplated work on the Gypsies. Unfortunately other interests intervened, and the work was never completed. It was one of the many unfinished things Burton intended to complete when he should have quitted the Consular Service. . . . Even as it stands, however, 'The Gypsy' is a valuable addition to ethnology; for apart from Burton's rare knowledge of strange peoples and tongues, his connexion with the Gypsies lends to the subject a unique interest. There is no doubt that he was affiliated to this strange people by nature, if not by descent."

The third paper, "El Islam; or, The Rank of Muhammadanism among the Religions of the World," is one of the oldest of the Burton MSS. Mr. Wilkins judges it to have been written soon after Burton's pilgrimage to Mecca in 1853.

THE new biographical edition of the Complete Works of W. M. Thackeray, which Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. have projected, is inaugurated this week by the publication of Vanity Fair. Thackeray wished that no biography of him should appear. It is certain that the world has never ceased to desire one. Hence the compromise effected in this edition of his works. Mrs. Ritchie, his daughter, will contribute to each volume in this edition her memories of the circumstances under which her father produced it. Such memoirs, when complete, cannot fall far short of being an actual biography. For example, we have a biographical introduction to Vanity Fair forty pages in length, and in it Mrs. Ritchie contrives to give much information about its author, beginning—not in 1845, the date of the book—but in 1817, "when the little boy, so lately come from India, found himself shut in behind those filigree iron gates at Chiswick of which he writes when he describes Miss Pinkerton's establishment." We select for quotation the following passage in Mrs. Ritchie's sketch, relating to the launching of Vanity Fair:

"I still remember going along Kensington Gardens, with my sister and our nurse-maid, carrying a parcel of yellow numbers, which she had given us to take to some friend who lived across the Park; and as we walked along, somewhere near the gates of the Gardens, we met my father, who asked us what we were carrying. Then, somehow, he seemed vexed and troubled, told us not to go on, and to take the parcel home. Then he changed his mind, saying that if his grandmother wished it, the books had best be conveyed; but we guessed, as children do, that something was seriously amiss. The sale of Vanity Fair was so small that it was a question at that time whether its publication should not be discontinued altogether. I have always been told that it was Mrs. Perkins's Ball which played the part of pilot or steam-tug to that great line-of-battle ship Vanity Fair, and which brought it safely off the shoals. In later days I have heard my father speak of those times, and say that besides Mrs. Perkins's Ball a review in the Edinburgh Review by Mr. S. Hayward greatly helped the sale of Vanity Fair. We have still one or two of the early designs of the Vanity Fair drawings—Jos holding Becky's skein; old Sedley in his coffee-house, with his head in his hands, waiting for prosperity to come back to him; and, among the rest, Becky at the fancy fair selling to Dobbin with two or three hats fitted on to his head and shoulders. There is also a little sepia suggestion for the picture of Becky's first introduction to a baronet, and a first rough suggestion for the cover, two little pencil warriors with a flying pennant, on which are inscribed the titles of the book."

Mrs. Ritchie has this tantalising note about Miss Becky Sharp:

"I may as well also state here, that one morning a hansom drove up to the door, and out of it emerged a most charming, dazzling little lady dressed in black, who greeted my father with great affection and brilliancy, and who, departing presently, gave him a large bunch of fresh violets. This was the only time I ever saw the fascinating little person, who was by many supposed to be the original of Becky."

Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. have selected a simple red binding for the series, with Thackeray's initials in monogram on the front cover, and the illustrations are Thackeray's own. The edition has real importance.

THE BOOK MARKET.

AMERICAN PRICES FOR ENGLISH BOOKS.

THAT America is draining the Old Country of her books is a commonplace of book-selling. One wonders how long it will be before English collectors will have to send to New York for treasures which are becoming every year fewer in their own country. Doubtless, such a day is still far off. But how formidable the American collector has become may be gathered from a long and elaborate list of prices fetched by books in New York since 1856, which the New York Times has just published. The year 1856 was selected as the starting-point of the list, because in that year, for the first time, a book was sold in New York for 200 dols. (about £40). The list includes the most significant prices obtained on all the important sales held in New York since that date. As showing, therefore, the growth of book-collecting in America, it has historical interest. We cannot print an eight part of it; but we have thought it interesting to give a list of prices (in English money) paid in New York during the last seven years for English standard works in rare editions. We reproduce, also, the New York Times' bibliographical notes:

Milton's "Comus," dark blue morocco, by Matthews ... .. £85 0 0

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| Milton's "Lycidas," dark blue morocco, by Bedford ... ..  | £63 0 0 |
| (The only copies of "Comus" and "Lycidas," that have come into an American auction room. Now in the possession of Marshall C. Lefferts. They were once Mr. Kalbfleisch's, and later Mr. Foote's, both of whom disposed of them at private sale.)  |         |
| Milton's "Paradise Lost" ... ..   | 43 0 0  |
| (First edition, and the issue with the author's name in large capitals. Corner of last leaf mended. Turner's copy, which brought £33.)  |         |
| Barclay's "Ship of Fools," London, printed by Pynson, 1509, brown morocco, by Bedford ... ..  | 165 0 0 |
| (Now in library of Marshall C. Lefferts.)   |         |
| Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," 1600, James Roberts, red morocco, by Haday ... ..  | 145 0 0 |
| Shakespeare's "Lear," 1603, Nathaniel Butler, short imprint ... ..  | 85 0 0  |
| Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," n. d. ... ..  | 105 0 0 |
| (Utterson's copy, which brought £19.)   |         |
| Shakespeare's "Troilus and Cressid," 1609, red morocco, by Bedford ... ..   | 158 0 0 |
| Shakespeare's "Merry Wives," 1619, original covers ... ..   | 150 0 0 |
| Shakespeare's "Richard the Third," 1622 ... ..  | 54 0 0  |
| Shakespeare's "Poems," red morocco, by Bedford ... ..   | 100 0 0 |
| (Shakespeare.) "Sir John Oldcastle," 1600 ... ..  | 50 0 0  |
| Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis," 1636, blue morocco, by Bedford ... ..   | 230 0 0 |
| (One of two known perfect copies, the other being in the British Museum. Brought £49 10s. in London in 1856; rebound by Bedford, was sold in 1857 for £56. Later passed into the possession of Almon W. Griswold; purchased at Ives sale by Marsden J. Perry, of Providence, R. I.; at Cerser sale it had brought £55.) |         |
| (Hieronymus.) "Vitas Patrum," printed by De Worde ... ..  | 72 0 0  |
| (The Perkins copy, which brought £180. Now in library of Marshall C. Lefferts.)   |         |
| "Laws of Virginia," 1662 ... ..   | 41 0 0  |
| (Title-page torn slightly.)   |         |
| Allot's "England's Parnassus," purple morocco, by Bedford ... ..  | 42 0 0  |
| Braithwaite's "Barnabae Itinerarium," blue morocco, by Ramage. ... ..   | 40 0 0  |
| E. B. Browning's "Battle of Marathen," uncut, morocco, by Riviere ... ..  | 66 0 0  |
| (8 by 5½. Cost Mr. Foote in London £14.)  |         |
| Browning's "Pauline," uncut, original boards ... ..   | 42 0 0  |
| Cowley's "Poetical Blossoms," blue morocco, by Walker ... ..  | 44 0 0  |

|  |     |   |   |
|--|-----|---|---|
| De Foe's "Robinson Crusoe," three volumes, red morocco, by Bedford. (Now in library of H. C. Sturges.)   | 62  | 0 | 0 |
| Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield," two volumes, levant morocco, by Riviere ... ..   | 68  | 0 | 0 |
| (Cost Mr. Foote, in New York, 75 dols. Now in Boston Public Library.)  |     |   |   |
| Gray's "Elegy," morocco, by Riviere ... ..   | 54  | 0 | 0 |
| Herbert's "Temple," Cambridge, Thos. Buck and Roger Daniel, n.d.   | 210 | 0 | 0 |
| (6 by 3 3-16. One of two known copies of the undated edition of "The Temple," the other being in the Huth library. At the Brand sale in 1807 it was bought by Richard Heber for £3, and was resold at his sale in 1834 for £10. At Pickering sale, 1854, was resold for £19 15s., and again at Daniel sale, 1864, for £30 10s. About twenty years later Mr. Foote paid 250 dols. for it in this city. It is now in the Hoe library.) |     |   |   |
| Lamb's "Rosamond Gray," uncut, blue morocco, by Ruban... ..  | 70  | 0 | 0 |
| (6½ by 4½. Cost Mr. Foote, in London, £5.)   |     |   |   |
| Lamb's "Poetry for Children," two volumes, original calf ... ..  | 84  | 0 | 0 |
| (Now in library of E. D. Church.)  |     |   |   |
| Lamb's "Prince Dorus," uncut, original covers ... ..   | 48  | 0 | 0 |
| (Now in library of Dean Sage.)   |     |   |   |
| Lovelace's "Lucasta," morocco, by Stikeman ... ..  | 44  | 0 | 0 |
| Milton's "Poems," morocco, by Ruban ... ..   | 74  | 0 | 0 |
| Milton's "Paradise Lost," morocco, by Alfred Matthews ... ..   | 105 | 0 | 0 |
| (First edition and the issue with the author's name in small capitals 7½ by 5¼. Cost Mr. Foote, in New York, 65 dollars. Now in library of W. A. White.)   |     |   |   |
| Tennyson's "Idylls," morocco, by Ruban ... ..  | 45  | 0 | 0 |
| (Proof sheets, with Tennyson's corrections, of "Enoch Arden." Cost Mr. Foote, in London, £10. Now in library of Harry B. Smith.)   |     |   |   |
| Caxton's "Chronicle of England," 1480 ... ..   | 100 | 0 | 0 |
| (110 leaves between signatures C and S. Gardner's copy.)   |     |   |   |
| Milton's "Paradise Lost" ... ..  | 79  | 0 | 0 |
| (First edition, and the issue with the author's name in small capitals.)   |     |   |   |
| Shakespeare: First Folio, red morocco, by Stamper ... ..   | 100 | 0 | 0 |
| (11½ by 7½. Verses, title-page, except portrait, preliminary leaves, and last four leaves of Cymbeline in facsimile.)  |     |   |   |
| Shakespeare: Third Folio ... ..  | 75  | 0 | 0 |
| (Title-page, first preliminary leaf, and last leaf in facsimile.)  |     |   |   |

|  |    |   |   |
|--|----|---|---|
| Shakespeare's "King John," 1611  | 46 | 0 | 0 |
| (The Steevens and Roxburghe copy. At Steevens sale, £1 18s.; at Roxburghe sale, £1 3s.)  |    |   |   |
| Shakespeare's "Richard the Second," 1634, morocco, by Hammond ... ..   | 42 | 0 | 0 |
| Spenser's "Shepherd's Calendar," 1586 ... ..   | 60 | 0 | 0 |
| (The Roxburghe, Sykes, and Heber copy. At Roxburghe sale, £21; at Sykes sale, £9; at Heber sale, £3 3s.; resold in 1854 for £4 10s.) |    |   |   |

A significant thing in the above list is the high prices which the American collector is willing to give for the rare editions of such modern writers as Lamb, Browning, and Tennyson. The list is, indeed, suggestive reading; how ripe and English must be some bookshelves in the palaces of New York and Boston. Yet, who knows?—the wind of fashion veers strangely, and perhaps English collectors will ere long be keen buyers of Mather's Wussukwhonk en Christianene, Dickinson's God Protecting Providence, Williams's Bloody Tenant yet more Bloody, Alsop's Character of the Province of Maryland, and other American tit-bits.

DRAMA.

TWO AMERICAN PLAYS.

"PLUS ça change, plus c'est la même chose," said Alphonse Karr on one occasion of French Ministries. The remark might very properly be applied to melodrama apropos of the annual visits paid us by the American companies under the control of the Frohman management. Outwardly there is little resemblance between "The Heart of Maryland," now being presented at the Adelphi, and the class of entertainment with which the theatre has so long been identified. "The Heart of Maryland," like its immediate predecessor, "Secret Service," is a story of the American Civil War. Almost without exception the male characters wear the uniform of the North or the South; the female interest, such as it is, is wholly identified with the combatants on one side or the other; questions of military movements, tactics, treatment of prisoners, espionage, and other incidentals of campaigning constitute the burden of the action. But at bottom the story is identical with that of the conventional melodrama associated with the names of Pettitt, Sims, and other popular purveyors. The villain basely plots against the heroine's honour and the hero's life, and after all but succeeding is duly foiled and handed over to justice, so that the curtain falls upon a happy ending. Nothing is really changed but the clothes and the names of the dramatis personee. As usual, the action works up to a sensational device in the third act; but even this exhibits no novelty, being reproduced from a melodrama of fifty years ago, written by a once well-known, but now forgotten, journeyman of letters, Albert Smith.

What, then, is the literary value of Mr. David Belasco's latest handiwork? I am afraid the answer must be "nil." Mr. Belasco enjoys a certain reputation in the United States as a dramatist, but it is that of a "nailer-up"—as the Americans graphically express it—rather than an inventor of dramatic effects. One looks in vain in this latest Adelphi production for any freshness of idea or any originality of treatment, though we are given to understand that "The Heart of Maryland" has, during the past two years, enjoyed a considerable degree of success in its own country. That this should be so augurs ill for the success of the American invasion of the London West End theatres, which the Frohman management is now so energetically conducting. "Secret Service" was, no doubt, a play of exceptional merit; but, generally speaking, the American drama occupies a lower level than the English. The proper home of such a piece as "The Heart of Maryland" is not the Adelphi, but the Surrey. American invention exhausts itself in mechanical pursuits; it has none left for the stage.

Such interest as "The Heart of Maryland" may inspire depends solely upon its somewhat opportune presentment of the features of grim-visaged war. Fighting is supposed to be going on in the wings in every act; the noise of artillery is unceasing; files of prisoners and wounded men cross the stage at intervals; laconic messages are constantly being received and despatched; the stage resounds with hoarse and unintelligible words of command. If this is not war up-to-date, it sufficiently fulfils the public notion of war. Drama, however, it is not. The first two acts convey no coherent idea to the spectator; it is impossible to tell in what relation the five-and-twenty or thirty characters, an army in themselves, stand to each other. From first to last, indeed, the author never succeeds in interesting us in the fate or fortunes of any particular set of characters. A Southern lady is understood to be in love with an officer on the opposite side, but the latter proves a very mediocre sort of hero, who is not called upon to do anything more heroic than to fold his arms and scowl when, being caught within the enemy's lines, he is accused of being a spy. More sympathetic is the character of a Southern general, who, recognising in this same suspected spy his own son, promptly orders him to be court-martialled. Meanwhile an undoubted traitor is an officer high up in the Southern service, who is in secret communication with the enemy; and at the very headquarters of the Southern forces sympathy with the North is manifested in a practical form. The greater part of the action, in short, is confusing, very like war possibly, but not in the least like a well-made drama, with issues clearly and unmistakably standing out.

WHETHER the author's plans are tending one does not perceive till half the play is over. Then it begins to be seen that the villain, one Colonel Thorpe, in the Southern service, is not only false to his own side but has designs upon the heroine also, to whose lover, Colonel Kendrick, of the Federal army, he bears a deadly grudge; and the situation thus created reaches its climax when, Thorpe having refused to save Kendrick from execution as a supposed spy, the heroine secures her lover's escape, and then hangs on to the clapper of a huge bell to prevent its being rung to alarm the guard. This is the device which Mr. Belasco has borrowed from Albert Smith, and it may be regarded as at least not less effective than Mr. Vincent Crummies's real pump and water. The length and the extreme insignificance of the cast render it difficult to identify half the performers whose names are set forth in the programme. What is still more unfortunate, the acting, in the case of the handful of characters who bear the story on their shoulders, does not rise above the transpentine or East End standard, though this may be mainly the author's fault. Mrs. Leslie Carter, a society actress, who has taken to the stage rather late in life, exhibits a certain degree of power as the heroine, and Mr. Maurice Barrymore as the hero, Mr. E. J. Morgan as the villain, and Mr. Harry Harwood as a bustling Southern general, stand out creditably from the mass of their associates.

A MUCH more successful American venture is the importation to the Shaftesbury of the company of the Casino Theatre—the Gaiety of New York—who bring with them an olla podrida of the sort popularised in this country by the late Fred. Leslie and Mr. Arthur Roberts, an omnibus piece run by clever music-hall comedians, singers and dancers, on go-as-you-please lines. The Belle of New York, as this mixture is called, is scarcely so coherent in plan as the "musical comedy" of the day—it belongs more to the extravaganza or burlesque which flourished in this country ten years ago—but there is no reason why it should not appeal to the public who support "The Circus Girl" and "The Geisha," and the still more numerous patrons of the music-hall. At the head of the Casino Company there is an eccentric actor of considerable originality, Mr. Dan Daly, quaint, drily humorous and resourceful, who helps largely to make the performance the success it is. But there are at least half-a-dozen other members of the company who on the English variety stage would attract attention and command popularity. Among these may be mentioned Miss Edna May, a sweet singer and graceful actress, well-qualified to play the part of "the belle" for which she is cast; Miss Phyllis Rankin, who also sings attractively; Mr. J. E. Sullivan, an unctuous low comedian; and various eccentrics of one kind and another, including a whistler and a male dancer, both of whom bring down the house by their respective tours de force. In fact, the performance is remarkably rich in music-hall "turns" and in grotesque odds and ends of characterisation. The "book," which is by Mr. Hugh Morton, is of a well-contrived omnibus character, while the score, by Mr. Gustave Kerker, is always lively, and embraces one or two pretty songs. The whole performance is pervaded by a characteristically American flavour which ought to prove agreeable to the frivolous-minded public.

J. F. N.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"American Wives and English Husbands." By Mrs. Gertrude Atherton. A treatise, in the form of a novel, on international marriages has been widely and favourably reviewed. The Saturday Review's critic prefaces his praise by recalling the "crude vulgarity of Patience Sparhawk," a work which, he thinks, in no wise indicated the advent of that first-rate woman-novelist which America "has long wanted." But American Wives and English Husbands shows a great advance. He writes:

"The plot might easily have been stronger, especially in its final catastrophe; at least four or five subsidiary characters could well be spared, and Mrs. Atherton's narrative style lapses from its usual lucid correctness frequently enough to exasperate the English reader. These things, however, should count but small obstacles in the way of Mrs. Atherton's progress towards the distinction we believe to be waiting for her, and we base our belief much less on her present power to tell clearly an interesting story and to draw credible characters than on her very singular comprehension of the two widely sundered families of the Anglo-Saxon race."

The final catastrophe to which the critic takes objection does not, he thinks, seriously mar the story:

"After all, the real interest of the story inheres in her relations with her husband. The shock of the conflict of two temperaments so wholly antagonistic could not fail, even with less competent treatment, to be of interest; and in Mrs. Atherton's hands the quiet, unobtrusive drama of character becomes of the highest significance. The principal merit of the book resides not merely in picturesque description, not merely in vivacious dialogue and graphic story-telling, but above all in Mrs. Atherton's power to deal broadly and strongly with the broad and strong passions of life as they are visible in acute racial conflicts."

The Spectator's critic is not so enthusiastic as some of his brothers. He writes:

"The book is a strange compound of extravagance and intuition. Mrs. Atherton is, on the whole, a far severer critic of her compatriots than of us, though she certainly does not spare the venal aristocrats of the Old Country. Her sympathies, again, are much more with the South and the West than with the North or East. New England does not appeal to her, and Chicago excites her antipathy. The dénouement strikes us as rather strained, the betrothal of the children absurd, and the admirable Cecil a decided prig. But the American women are drawn from the life; and in depicting their love of life and pleasure and admiration, as well as their capacity for hatred, Mrs. Atherton writes with a sort of fierceness that is curiously impressive."

"Claudius Clear," of the British Weekly, thinks this story should place Mrs. Atherton in the front rank of women novelists. He concludes by drawing its moral:

"As for the lessons, they are plain enough. If a man marries an American woman for her money, and for her money only, without respect and without love, he will suffer for it, and probably suffer more than he would if he married an English wife under similar circumstances. On the other hand, if a man marries an American woman for love, the condition of happiness is that one or the other should be willing to merge individuality. It is hard for the woman to do so. If she is brilliant and beautiful, she has experienced such courtship and reverence as English girls know nothing of. It will be very hard for her to lay this aside and to be satisfied with a share in the life of her husband. Even if she does it for a while she may not do it always. It is pretty clear that things in the happy marriage of this book might very easily have gone wrong. If the wife had gone to California her married life would have been wrecked. On the other hand, things being as they were, the husband had the superior brightness of America, and the loss was all the wife's. But I suppose Mrs. Atherton would say that if an English husband could be found to merge his individuality in that of an American wife, the marriage in that case also would be happy. That, however, would be a far more difficult thing, and probably the authoress intends to tell us that the marriage of an American wife with an English husband is in all cases a great risk, but that if it is happy it may be the most happy of all marriages. However, these are considerations with which most of us are not troubled, being contented in our own country. What will win readers to this volume is, as I have said, the extreme freshness, relish, vivacity, and grace of the treatment. What the typical American girl is among women, that American Wives and English Husbands is among novels."

"There is not a dull page in the book; it is informed throughout with that most fascinating quality, in all works of art—the point of view": thus the critic of the Daily News.

"The Sundering Flood." By William Morris.

THE Times critic is, to say the least, cold. His opinion of Mr. Morris's prose romances is thus briefly expressed:

"These attempts to re-create an imaginary past are more fit for poetry than for prose, however archaic; and whereas William Morris, in the Earthly Paradise, succeeded in producing an extraordinary illusion of reality, the same cannot be said of his prose romances: The Water of the Wondrous Isles, The Sundering Flood, and the rest of them. At best they are good imitations of The Four Sons of Aymon and similar old friends; though William Morris had so steeped himself in mediæval literature and art, and was himself so true a poet, that his imitations are a very different thing from those of anybody else. We notice that this comely volume, though published by Messrs. Longman, bears the ominous statement, 'Printed by John Wilson and Son at the University Press in Cambridge, U.S.A.' Is this to be a common result of the American Copyright Act? Are English publishers, in order to save the expense of double printing, going habitually to have their books set up in America?"

The Standard critic is much of the same mind. He thinks that the late Mr. Morris's prose romances are very hard to classify: he would call them "affectations, fumes, literary bric-a-brac." The anachronisms in the story are acutely dealt with, regard being had to the fact that the story is put into the mouth of a friar of Abingdon:

"At p. 6 we read that 'there was no great man amongst them, neither king, nor earl, nor alderman.' The terms give a date at once, which is not seriously disturbed by words like 'kenspeckle,' 'graithly,' 'birdalone,' nor by such surnames as Wulfgrinsson and Thomason. All this is near enough for romance. But at p. 76 we find 'bever' used for meat and drink, a good fourteenth-century word, but of very ill-accord with the others; soon afterwards we have a baron to fit in with our alderman as best we may; he is 'preux,' this baron. We read of 'rascaile' used collectively of the 'Aunturs of King Arthur and Sir Gawaine'; more than all, at p. 359, we come plump upon a House of Friars! Now, to speak of friars is to speak of a date as certain as that of the Diamond Jubilee. There were assuredly no aldermen when the Minorites landed in England. Of course, Mr. Morris, in his pose of fourteenth-century clerk, might anachronise to any extent; he might throw friars back as far as he chose; but then he should not drag Anglo-Saxon terms (which the fourteenth-century could not know) forward to meet them. Sir Walter Scott introduced a friar into Ivanhoe at an age when friars were not; and he talked in the Fair Maid of Perth of 'evening mass'; but Sir Walter never tried to be a mediæval clerk. He was himself, wrote his own language, and became immortal. This also is just what Chaucer did, and this Mr. Morris did when for once he wrote News from Nowhere, and succeeded in being far more truly of Chaucer's company than ever before or since."

The critic of the Outlook philosophises on Mr. Morris's mission as a writer of Early English as follows:

"To know why this book is penned so curiously, you have to learn that there was once a period when the English people had Latinised their language into dulness; and (with that swing of the pendulum by which all things are worked among the violent and incontinent sons of men) there forthwith arose a number of young writers who discovered that Saxon was pictorial, and went headlong to Saxonise the language, and thrust out Latin with a pitchfork. Amongst these wielders of the pitchfork none was more eager than Mr. Morris, none so uncompromising with the evil thing, nor so sedulous in setting his gardens with slips from Early English. For a time the movement triumphed exceedingly, to the great ultimate good of our tongue; simple and Saxon English was preached to the young littérateur—even by Tit-Bits—while the extremer spirits began to write something as near Early English as gods and publishers would stand. Alas! tamen usque recurret! And this is why this waif of the Saxon movement comes like a last year's leaf into a day which knows it not—a relic of the day when les jeunes were Saxonising, in a day when les jeunes are Latinising and the pendulum is swinging slowly and surely to the other side again. For les jeunes are always on the side of depressed causes, and we have to redress the balance by bearing the Latin standard, because they advanced too exterminatingly the Saxon standard. It is a strange lesson on the durability of schools and movements, this book. Even Rossetti scarce remained faithful to the cause in its sternness; witness the elaborate Latinisms of his sonnets. But Mr. Morris, no less an Abdiel in literature than Mr. Holman Hunt in painting, even from the grave sends forth this testimony to a cause lost through the extremity of its triumph; being dead, he yet speaketh—Early English. It is so short a while ago that movement, yet already we have to be reminded why he talks this tongue."

The Daily Chronicle's critic once more indulges in good-natured mimicry of the author's Saxon:

"The book, though not by any means the noblest piece of the Master's work, is a worthy conclusion to it. The story is much clearer and more direct than the Wondrous Isles, and it is entirely free from any puzzling suggestions of allegory of which that romance had plenty. At the same time, it loses perhaps in the sense of mystery which fairy romance demands. There is nothing really unked or henspeckle about it; and furthermore, we had liefer be in love with Birdalone of the Isles than with Elfhild, gracious and loving though she is. The story is indeed the life of a man, as the Isles was of a woman, and as such there is little to wyte in it. For in sooth if one called it a right good book, us seemeth he were not over big-wordy, and we should yeasay him. Moreover, if some humble clerk at the hour of bever goes to a cheaping-shop, and louting low to the drudgling giveth him the sele of the day, and asketh for this book, nor is debt-tough but draweth from his pouch the half of one silver mark, we do him to wit that belike he will make good catch; for it is the Master's voidee-cup."

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Week ending Thursday, April 14.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

ORDER OF DIVINE SERVICE FOR PALM SUNDAY, ACCORDING TO THE USE OF THE CHURCH OF ROME. London and Leamington Art and Book Co.

PILATE'S GIFT, AND OTHER SERMONS. By the Right Rev. G. A. Chadwick, D.D. Religious Tract Society. 5s.

THE SERVICE OF THE MASS IN THE GREEK AND ROMAN CHURCHES. By the Rev. Charles H. H. Wright, D.D., Ph.D. The Religious Tract Society. 1s.

THE CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES: THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH, CHAPTERS XL.—LXVI. With Introduction and Notes by the Rev. J. Skinner, D.D. Cambridge University Press. 4s.

HYMNS FROM EAST AND WEST: BEING TRANSLATIONS FROM THE POETRY OF THE LATIN AND GREEK CHURCHES, ARRANGED IN THE ORDER OF THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. By the Rev. John Brownlie. James Nisbet & Co.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE JEW, THE GYPSY, AND EL ISLAM. By the late Captain Sir Richard F. Burton. Edited, with a Preface and Brief Notes, by W. Wilkins. Hutchinson & Co.

SYRIA AND EGYPT FROM THE TELL EL AMARNA LETTERS. By W. M. Flinders Petrie. Methuen & Co. 2s. 6d.

WILLIAM MOON AND HIS WORK FOR THE BLIND. By John Rutherford. Hodder & Stoughton.

POETRY, CRITICISM, BELLES LETTRES.

STORIES FROM DANTE. By Norley Chester. Frederic Warne & Co. 3s. 6d.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

AN ELEMENTARY COURSE OF PHYSICS. Edited by Rev. J. C. P. Aldous, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 7s. 6d.

NOTES ON OBSERVATIONS: BEING AN OUTLINE OF THE METHODS USED FOR DETERMINING THE MEANING AND VALUE OF QUANTITATIVE OBSERVATIONS AND EXPERIMENTS IN PHYSICS AND CHEMISTRY, AND FOR REDUCING THE RESULTS OBTAINED. By Sydney Lupton, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.

REFLECTIONS ON THE FORMATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF RICHES. By Turgot, 1770. The Macmillan Co. 3s.

ELEMENTARY CHEMISTRY, PRACTICAL AND THEORETICAL. By T. A. Cheetham, F.C.S. Blackie & Son. 1s. 6d.

ESSAYS ON MUSEUMS AND OTHER SUBJECTS CONNECTED WITH NATURAL HISTORY. By Sir William Henry Fowler, K.C.B. Macmillan & Co. 12s.

NEW EDITIONS OF FICTION.

THE JEALOUSIES OF A COUNTRY TOWN (LES RIVALITÉS). By H. de Balzac. Translated by Ellen Marriage. With a Preface by George Saintsbury. J. M. Dent & Co.

THE FROZEN PIRATE. By W. Clark Russell. Sampson Low. 6d.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA: REVISED LISTS OF ANTIQUARIAN REMAINS IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY. Vol. VIII. THE QUEEN'S EMPIRE: A PICTORIAL AND DESCRIPTIVE RECORD. Vol. I. Cassell & Co. 9s.

THROUGH PERSIA ON A SIDE-SADDLE. By Ella C. Sykes. A. D. Innes & Co.

EDUCATIONAL.

THE UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES: A HISTORY OF ROME. By W. F. Mason, M.A., and W. J. Woodhouse, M.A. W. B. Clive. 4s. 6d.

ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS: LUCRETIUS; PINDAR. (Cheap re-issue.) 1s. each.

JUVENILE.

BULBS AND BLOSSOMS. By Amy Le Feuvre. Religious Tract Society.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE GRAND TACTICS OF CHESS: AN EXPOSITION OF THE LAWS AND PRINCIPLES OF CHESS STRATEGICS. By Franklin K. Young. Roberts Brothers (Boston, U.S.A.).

THE NEW YORK FIRE DEPARTMENT: A PAPER BY HUOH BONNER, CHIEF OFFICER. C. & E. Layton. 1s.

EGYPTIAN SELF-TAUGHT (ARABIC): WITH ENGLISH PHONETIC PRONUNCIATION. By C. A. Thimm, F.R.G.S. E. Marlborough & Co. 2s.

VICTORIAN ERA SERIES: THE FREE-TRADE MOVEMENT AND ITS RESULTS. By C. Armitage Smith, M.A. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d.

Price SIX SHILLINGS.
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
 No. 384, will be published on APRIL 18th.
 CONTENTS.
 I. THE STATE and CONDITIONS of LABOUR.
 II. RECENT SOLAR ECLIPSES.
 III. ENGLISH JESUITS and SCOTTISH INTRIGUES, 1581-82.
 IV. GENERAL BOURBAK.
 V. BABYLONIAN DISCOVERIES.
 VI. NOVELS of AMERICAN LIFE.
 VII. THE UNDERSTANDING of ARCHITECTURE.
 VIII. ANTIQUITIES of HALLAMSHIRE.
 IX. PETER the GREAT.
 X. A SCOTTISH BORDER CLAN.
 XI. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION and MODERN FRANCE.
 London: LONMANS, GREEN & Co.

READY APRIL 18th. Price FIVE SHILLINGS.
 THE
ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.
 Edited by S. E. GARDINER, D.C.L., LL.D., and R. L. POOLE, M.A., Ph.D.

Articles. CONTENTS of No. 50.
 THE EARLY HISTORY of BABYLONIA.—II. THE RULERS of SHURPURA or LAGASH. By Sir H. H. Howarth, K.C.I.E., M.P.
 THE PARLIAMENT of PARIS. By Professor PROTHERO, Litt.D.
 THE COSACKS in the EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.
 By H. HAYLOCK.
 NELSON and the NEAPOLITAN REPUBLICANS. By F. P.
 BADHAM.
 Notes and Documents.
 The Chronology of Theophanes in the Eighth Century, by Thomas Hodgkin, D.C.L.—Pope Sylvester II. and Stephen I. of Hungary, by Lewis E. Krost.—Oxfordshire Traces of the Northern Insurgents of 1065, by F. Baring.—Vacarius: a Correction, by Professor Liebermann, LL.D.—The Forged Bull to St. Augustine's, Canterbury, by J. H. Round.—A Fifteenth-Century
 Assessment of Wages, by Miss E. A. McArthur.—Lady Katherine Grey and Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford, by W. L. Rotton.—A Royalist Account of the Withdrawal of the King's Forces from Taunton, 13th Dec., 1644, by the Rev. James Coleman.—Autobiography of Archbishop King, by the late Rev. J. W. Stubbs, D.D.—British Converts to Catholicism in Paris, 1702-1789, by J. G. Alger.
 Reviews of Books.—Notices of Periodicals.—List of Recent Historical Publications.
 London: LONMANS, GREEN & Co.

8vo, 6s.
THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,
 No. 374, will be published on WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20.
 CONTENTS.
 I. PUSEY and WISEMAN.
 II. TRADE UNIONISM in PRACTICE and THEORY.
 III. LETTERS of NAPOLEON.
 IV. POEMS of T. E. BROWN.
 V. PREHISTORIC ARTS and CRAFTS.
 VI. POEMS of BACCHYLIDES.
 VII. GARDINER'S PROTECTORATE.
 VIII. MYSTERIES of ANIMAL and BIRD LIFE.
 IX. ASTRONOMY of DANTE.
 X. MILITARY ESPIONAGE in FRANCE.
 XI. CHANGES in the UNCHANGING EAST.
 XII. THE IRISH UNIVERSITY QUESTION.
 London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

MR. MURRAY'S
 NEW EDITION
 OF BYRON'S POETICAL

AND
PROSE WORKS

To be completed in Twelve Volumes.
Vol. I. of the Poetry will be published on WEDNESDAY, the 20th inst.

Crown 8vo, 6s.
 JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.
E P P S 'S
 GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A
 BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

F. V WHITE & CO'S LIST.
 POPULAR NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

At all Libraries, Booksellers', and Bookstalls.
 JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S NEW NOVEL.
THE PEACEMAKERS. By the AUTHOR of "BOOTLE'S BABY," "THE TRUTH TELLERS," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF
 "THE BEETLE."
THE HOUSE of MYSTERY. By RICHARD MARSH.
 "It is a clever tale, and deserving of many readers."
Scotsman.

BY ESME STUART.
THE STRENGTH of TWO. By the AUTHOR of "ARRESTED," "A WOMAN of FORTY," &c.

JEAN MIDDLEMAY'S NEW NOVEL.
BLANCHE CONINGHAM'S SUR-
 RENDER. By the AUTHOR of "DANDY."

NEW NOVEL BY E. YOLLAND.
MISTRESS BRIDGET. By the Author of "IN DAYS of STRIFE."

BERTRAM MITFORD'S NEW ROMANCE.
 In cloth gilt, 3s. 6d., with Illustrations by
 A. D. M'CORMICK.

THE INDUNA'S WIFE. By the AUTHOR of "THE KING'S ASSEGAL," &c.

NEW ROMANCE BY HUME NISBET.
 In cloth gilt, 3s. 6d., with Frontispiece.
FOR LIBERTY. By the Author of
 "A SWEET SINNER."

F. V. WHITE & CO., 14, Bedford Street, Strand.

JUST PUBLISHED.
HISTORY OF AUSTRALIA
 By G. W. RUSDEN.

Second Edition, Revised and brought down to April, 1897. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 36s.

Uniform with above.
HISTORY OF NEW ZEALAND.
 Second Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 45s.

MELVILLE, MULLEN & SLADE, 12, Ludgate Square, E.C.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS TO "THE ACADEMY."

The following have appeared, and the numbers containing them can still be obtained;
 or Complete Sets may be had separately.

|                          |         |                             |          |
|--------------------------|---------|-----------------------------|----------|
| BEN JONSON ... ..        | 1896.   | WILKIE COLLINS ... ..       | March 20 |
| JOHN KEATS ... ..        | Nov. 14 | JOHN MILTON ... ..          | " 27     |
| SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... .. | " 28    | WILLIAM COWPER ... ..       | April 3  |
| TOM HOOD ... ..          | " 25    | CHARLES DARWIN ... ..       | " 10     |
| THOMAS GRAY ... ..       | Dec. 5  | ALFRED, LORD                | " 17     |
| ROBERT LOUIS             | " 19    | TENNYSON                    | " 17     |
| STEVENSON                | " 19    | HENRY WADSWORTH             | " 24     |
| SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..  | " 26    | LONGFELLOW                  | " 24     |
|                          |         | ANDREW MARVELL ... ..       | May 1    |
|                          |         | ROBERT BROWNING ... ..      | " 8      |
|                          |         | THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..       | " 15     |
|                          |         | PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... .. | " 22     |
|                          |         | CHARLES DICKENS ... ..      | " 29     |
|                          |         | JONATHAN SWIFT ... ..       | June 5   |
|                          |         | WILLIAM MAKEPEACE           | " 12     |
|                          |         | THACKERAY                   | " 12     |
|                          |         | WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..        | " 19     |
|                          |         | SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..   | " 26     |
|                          |         | ALEXANDER POPE ... ..       | July 3   |
|                          |         | DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..      | " 10     |
|                          |         | FRANCIS BACON ... ..        | " 17     |
|                          |         |                             | 1898.    |
|                          |         | HENRIK IBSEN ... ..         | March 26 |

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!
 "A brilliant book."—Sketch. "Particularly good."—Academy.
 6s. net, claret roan, gilt, illustrated.
LONDON in the TIME of the DIAMOND JUBILEE.
 London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Letter from H.M. the QUEEN.
 "Sir Henry Ponsonby is commanded by the Queen to thank Mr. Darlington for a copy of his Handbook which he has sent to Her Majesty."
 "Nothing better could be wished for."—British Weekly.
 "Far superior to ordinary Guides."—London Daily Chronicle.
 Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by J. BARTHOLOMEW.
 Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.
THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING; A. W. KINGLAKE; and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

|  |                      |
|--|----------------------|
| BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST.                              | THE CHANNEL ISLANDS. |
| THE NORTH WALES COAST.                                   | THE ISLE of WIGHT.   |
| BRECON and its BEACONS.                                  | THE WYE VALLEY.      |
| ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW.                             | THE SEVERN VALLEY.   |
| BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.             |                      |
| BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.        |                      |
| LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED and SNOWDON.        |                      |
| ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLETH and ABERDOVREY.        |                      |
| BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, CRICCIETH and PWLLHELL.     |                      |
| MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER and CHELTENHAM. |                      |
| LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.             |                      |

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the Leading Hotels throughout the World.

"The most comprehensive and interesting Handbook to our vast city that we have seen."—The World.
 "Most emphatically tops them all."—Daily Graphic.
 "The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

Sixty Illustrations. 3s. 6d. net. Twenty Maps and Plans.
LONDON AND ENVIRONS.
 By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.
 London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Ltd.
 The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers'.

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED,

Beg to announce that they have in preparation

AN EDITION DE LUXE OF THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS,

with Drawings, Artistic Borders and Initials by GEORGE WOOLLISCROFT RHEAD, R.E., FREDERICK A. RHEAD, and LOUIS RHEAD, who have been actively engaged for the last three years in illustrating this favourite English classic.

The Rev. H. R. HAWEIS, M.A., will contribute a Special Preface.

The ATHENÆUM says: "These excellent examples of the right way of illustrating Bunyan possess those masculine qualities, that directness, and the robust energy that the themes demand. As to the higher elements we associate under the name of design, there is not the slightest doubt Bunyan, could he go to Bond Street and study the works of the Messrs. Rhead, would recognise in them a crowning mercy, specially reserved till now for himself."

* * This Edition will be limited to 200 Copies for England and America, numbered and signed by the Artists, printed on Hand-made Paper, and bound in buckram, price Two Guineas net. A Prospectus will be forwarded on application.

WITH PEARY NEAR the POLE. By Eivind Astrup. Illustrated with Sketches and Photographs

by the Author. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

Mr. Astrup was a great personal friend of Lieut. Peary, and accompanied that intrepid pioneer on his two expeditions northward. Taking care to avoid a repetition of the scientific story of their travels, he has devoted himself to giving us a vivid picture of the adventures that befell their parties, of the wonderful life they led, the strange animals and the stranger people they encountered.

SCIENTIFIC ASPECTS of CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES. By G. F. Wright, D.D., Professor of the Harmony of Science and Revelation, Oberlin College. Crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, 7s. 6d.

"Dr. Wright is abreast of the latest results in science; he approaches questions of Biblical criticism in the true spirit of a critic, he takes a broad view of the whole ground of controversy, and in this volume he has made a substantial contribution towards defining the proper limits of the two modes of thought and setting them in right relation to each other."—New Age.

"A work of great worth—a work, too, which ought to be widely read."—Presbyterian.

SIDE-SLIPS: or, Misadventures on a Bicycle. By R. Andom, Author of "We Three and Troddles."

Numerous Sketches by A. Frederics. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

This volume deals in a lively way with the manifold humorous and practical affairs incidental to cycling and cyclists. It contains details of a brief but not uneventful tour in the Eastern counties, and much supplementary matter of a fictitious and facetious nature of interest to all cyclists, would-be cyclists, and have-been cyclists. [Shortly.]

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

AUTHORISED TRANSLATION.

THE HOPE of the FAMILY. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. Translated by LEVIN CARNAC. 8vo, buckram, 6s.

The Pall Mall Gazette on the French Edition: "Is destined, we think, to rank among the very best of his novels."

A MAORI MAID. By H. B. Vogel. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The author, the son of a former Prime Minister, and himself an ex-Minister of Lands in the colony, has given us in this novel a most interesting picture of New Zealand life interwoven with a touching love story and adventures in search of gold.

THE KEEPERS of the PEOPLE. By EDGAR JEPSON, Author of "Sybil Falcon," "The Passion for Romance." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Absorbingly interesting. It is written with considerable skill, and reveals a wonderful imaginative power on the part of the author."—Scotsman.

"Ranks among the powerful and original books of the season."—Star.

SECOND EDITION.

THE INCIDENTAL BISHOP. By GRANT ALLEN, Author of "What's Bred in the Bone," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Grant Allen has achieved a distinct success in the field of imaginative literature.... He has, in fact, given us a novel that contains originality, humour, tragedy, and pathos."—Morning Post.

"A work of great power, well-sustained interest, and conspicuous literary merit."—Daily Telegraph.

THE REV. ANNABEL LEE. By ROBERT BUCHANAN, Author of "God and the Man." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Embodies an essentially bold and strong idea.... his book will find many readers by reason of its eternally appealing theme."—Daily Mail.

THE VIRGIN of the SUN: a Tale of the Conquest of Peru. By GEORGE GRIFFITH, Author of "The Angel of the Revolution," "Valdar the Ot-Born," "Men who have Made the Emoire," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Frontispiece by Stanley L. Wood, 6s.

"A very successful attempt to perform a somewhat difficult and laborious task, and the author ought to find his reward in the popularity of his novel."—Aberdeen Free Press.

LADY JEZEBEL. By Fergus Hume,

Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

SECOND EDITION.

THE ZONE of FIRE. By Headon

HILL, Author of "Guilty Gold." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "A most thrilling tale of the episodes of a Soudan campaign, in which Maxim guns and war correspondents are blended with the romance of the Arabian Nights. There is an ingeniously complicated plot, which is ingeniously unravelled."—Times.

THE SHROUDED FACE. By Owen

RHOSCOMYL, Author of "Battlement and Tower," "The Jewel of Yaya Galon." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [May.]

THE MASTER-KEY. By Florence

WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [May.]

HAGAR of HOMERTON. By Mrs.

HENRY E. DUDENEY, Author of "A Man with a Maid." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [May.]

NEW 3s. 6d. FICTION.

THREE WOMEN and MR. FRANK

CARDWELL. By W. PETT RIDGE, Author of "A Clever Life." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"One of the best books of the year, and should have a great run."—British Weekly.

"The best thing that Mr. Pett Ridge has done."—Star.

LUCKY BARGEE. By Harry Lander,

Author of "Weighed in the Balance," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Lucky Bargee" takes to the river, and his life there is depicted with a marvellous realism; later on he is educated as a gentleman, and ultimately ceases to be a mere polished savage by the gentle influence of one of the most charming heroines of modern fiction.

THE MARQUIS of VALROSE. From the French of CHAS. FOLEY. Translated by ALYS HALLARD. 3s. 6d.

This is a stirring story, taken from one of the most touching episodes of the Civil War of La Vendée.

PAUL BECK: the Rule-of-Thumb

Detective. By M. McDONNELL BODKIN, Q.C. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Paul Beck, the Rule-of-Thumb Detective, is an Irish Sherlock Holmes, with a very original yet logical method for the detection of crime.

SECOND EDITION.

THE SKIPPER'S WOOING. By

W. W. JACOBS. 3s. 6d.

"It contains scenes which we shall not be able to recall without a smile for many weeks to come.... It is a good story, well told, and full of humour and drollery."—Daily Telegraph.

SECOND EDITION.

THE INVISIBLE MAN. By H. G.

WELLS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"This is a wonderful story; grotesque, indeed, as the title-page has it, but deepening as it goes from the farcical to the fearful and tragical. 'The Invisible Man' has been happy in his biographer, if in nothing else."—Scotsman.

"LATTER-DAY STORIES."

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Portrait, 2s. 6d. each.

NEW VOLUME.

AN EGYPTIAN COQUETTE. By

OLIVE HOLLAND, Author of "My Japanese Wife," &c.

"Full of go and brightness, and never once becoming dull."—Glasgow Daily Mail.

Vol. I. MISS BETTY. By Bram

STOKER, Author of "Dracula."

"A very charming story. Miss Betty is a figure in fiction to be remembered."—World.

Vol. II. VAN WAGENER'S WAYS.

By W. L. ALDEN, Author of "His Daughter," &c.

"Full of spontaneous and rollicking humour."—Daily Telegraph.

"Such a book is something of a godsend, and the man who can excite a hearty laugh as he does is really a benefactor to the race."—Dundee Advertiser.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE WILL BE FORWARDED ON RECEIPT OF POST CARD.

C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1355.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1898.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

CATALOGUE of BOOKS on Architecture, Heraldry, Costume, Furniture, Sport, Yaks, &c., F&B.—FOR SALE, all five copies: GALTON'S Hereditary Genius, 3s. 6d.; English Men of Science, 3s. 6d.; Natural Inheritance, 3s. 6d.; Finger Prints, 2s. 6d.—M'LENNAN'S Studies in Ancient History, 2nd Ser. (Excursions), 6s. 6d.—SIMPSON'S Buddhist Praying Wheel, 4s.—WHYMPER'S Great Andes, 10s. 6d.—SYMONDS'S Michelangelo, 2 vols., 14s.
J. HITCHMAN & CO., 128, Barker Pool, Sheffield.

H. J. GLAISHER'S New CATALOGUE of REMAINDERS, post free on application to H. J. GLAISHER, Discount and Remainder Bookseller, 57, Wigmore Street, Cavendish Square, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,

Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 90, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SEAL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated and other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanam, London."

CARRIAGES INSURED AGAINST ACCIDENTS caused by Collision, the Falling, Bolting, or Kicking of Horses, or by being Run into by other Vehicles. Policies issued for the Year or Season only. Prospectuses post free.—IMPERIAL ACCIDENT, LIFE STOCK AND GENERAL INSURANCE CO., LD., 17, Pall Mall East, London, S.W. Agents wanted.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY OFFICE, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

WANT WATER COLOURS.—T. B. Hardy—R. W. Fraser, 1893-7—Tully Lott—R. Wane—Shalders—Rowbotham—Louise Rayner. Also choice Books, including Dickens, 30 vols., originals or reprint (circa 1876).—THOMSON, Fenwick Street, Manchester.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE for WOMEN,

30, Handel Street, Brunswick Square, W.C.

The SUMMER SESSION will begin on MAY 2nd, 1898. Fees for Lectures and Hospital Practice, £125, if paid in one sum; £135, if paid in four instalments. The Prospectus, giving full information as to Classes, Scholarships, Prizes, &c., will be sent on application to Miss DOCTIE, M.B., M.A., Secretary.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and SCHOOL.

The SUMMER SESSION will begin on MAY 2nd, 1898. Students can reside in the College within the Hospital walls, subject to the collegiate regulations.

The Hospital contains a service of 750 beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly £500 are awarded annually.

The Medical School contains large Lecture Rooms and well-appointed Laboratories for Practical Teaching, as well as Dissecting Rooms, Museum, Library, &c.

A large Recreation Ground has recently been purchased.

For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to the WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

A Handbook forwarded on application.

WANTED.—English GIRL, to join three others, aged 18, who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French Instruction, 30 Guineas a quarter.—CHAPERON, Office of THE ACADEMY, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made into qualified to take charge of a similar business. Small progressive salary. Must write shorthand. May reside with editor or proprietor.—Address M. M. care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Avon Lodge, West Kensington, W.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS OF ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the high approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X, care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

LONDON LIBRARY,

ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP of LONDON, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.

TREASURER—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBERY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

THE FAUNA of BRITISH INDIA, including Ceylon and Burma. Published under the Authority of the Secretary of State for India in Council. Edited by W. T. BLANFORD, M.D., with numerous Woodcuts.

COMPLETION OF THE VERTEBRATES.

MAMMALIA. By W. T. BLANFORD, F.R.S. 1 vol., complete, price £1.

FISHES. By F. DAY, C.I.E., LL.D. 2 vols., price £1 each.

BIRDS. By EUGENE W. OATES, F.Z.S. Vol. I., price £1; Vol. II., 15s.; Vols. III. and IV., by W. T. BLANFORD, F.R.S., price 15s. each.

—REPTILIA and BATRACHIA. By G. A. BOULENGER. 1 vol., complete, price £1.

MOTHS. By Sir G. F. HAMPSON, Bart. 4 vols., price £1 each.

HYMENOPTERA. Vol. I. WASPS and BEES. By Lieut.-Col. C. T. BIRCHAM. Price £1, with Four Coloured Plates.

London: TAYLOR & FRANCIS, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street. Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK & Co. Bombay: THACKER & Co., Limited.

Berlin: R. FRIEDLANDER & SOHN, Carlstrasse, 11.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes to the market, which are especially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.;

48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and

81 BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.,

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTIONS of FAMOUS WORKS of ART.

AUTOTYPES of the OLD MASTERS in the GREAT CONTINENTAL GALLERIES.

AUTOTYPES of MODERN BRITISH ART.

AUTOTYPES of WORKS by ARTISTS of the PRE-RAPHAELITE SCHOOL.

AUTOTYPES of PICTURES in the NATIONAL GALLERY.

AUTOTYPES of DRAWINGS by OLD MASTERS.

AUTOTYPES of SELECTED WORKS from the PARIS SALONS.

Those interested in Art, and in the recent developments of the Photographic Reproduction of Pictures, are invited to inspect the Company's extensive Collection of Autotypes and Autogravures of all Schools, now on view at their Gallery, 74, New Oxford Street, where may also be seen a series of examples framed in mouldings of specially designed patterns, made to oak, walnut, and other hard woods. Framed Autotypes form acceptable artistic gifts, and are eminently suited for the adornment of the Home.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE.

Now ready, New Edition of 160 pages. With upwards of One Hundred Miniature Photographs of Notable Autotypes, and Twenty-three Tint Block Illustrations. For convenience of Reference the Publications are arranged Alphabetically under Artists' Names. Post free, ONE SHILLING.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO
"THE ACADEMY."

The following have appeared, and the numbers containing them can still be obtained; or Complete Sets may be had separately.

|                          |         |                               |          |
|--------------------------|---------|-------------------------------|----------|
|                          | 1896.   | WILKIE COLLINS ...            | March 20 |
| BEN JONSON ...           | Nov. 14 | JOHN MILTON ...               | " 27     |
| JOHN KEATS ...           | " 21    | WILLIAM COWPER ...            | April 3  |
| SIR JOHN SUCKLING ...    | " 28    | CHARLES DARWIN ...            | " 10     |
| TOM HOOD ...             | Dec. 5  | ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON }       | " 17     |
| THOMAS GRAY ...          | " 12    | HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW }  | " 24     |
| ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON } | " 19    | ANDREW MARVELL ...            | May 1    |
| SIR WALTER SCOTT ...     | " 26    | ROBERT BROWNING ...           | " 8      |
|                          | 1897.   | THOMAS CARLYLE ...            | " 15     |
| SAMUEL RICHARDSON.       | Jan 2   | PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ...      | " 22     |
| THOMAS DE QUINCEY        | " 9     | CHARLES DICKENS ...           | " 29     |
| LEIGH HUNT ...           | " 16    | JONATHAN SWIFT ...            | June 5   |
| LORD MACAULAY ...        | " 23    | WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY } | " 12     |
| ROBERT SOUTHEY ...       | " 30    | WILLIAM BLAKE ...             | " 19     |
| S. T. COLERIDGE ...      | Feb. 6  | SIR RICHARD STEELE            | " 26     |
| CHARLES LAMB ...         | " 13    | ALEXANDER POPE ...            | July 3   |
| MICHAEL DRAYTON ...      | " 20    | DOUGLAS JERROLD ...           | " 10     |
| WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR }   | " 27    | FRANCIS BACON ...             | " 17     |
| SAMUEL PEPYS ...         | March 6 |                               | 1898.    |
| EDMUND WALLER ...        | " 13    | HENRIK IBSEN ...              | March 26 |

A CHARMING GIFT BOOK!

"A brilliant book."—Sketch. "Particularly good."—Academy.
6s. net, claret roan, gilt, illustrated.

LONDON in the TIME of the DIAMOND JUBILEE.

London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Llangollen: Darlington & Co.

DARLINGTON'S HANDBOOKS.

Letter from H.M. the QUEEN.

"Sir Henry Ponsonby is commanded by the Queen to thank Mr. Darlington for a copy of his Handbook which he has sent to Her Majesty."
"Nothing better could be wished for."—British Weekly.
"Far superior to ordinary Guides."—London Daily Chronicle.

Edited by RALPH DARLINGTON, F.R.G.S. Maps by BARTHOLOMEW.

Fcap. 8vo. ONE SHILLING EACH. Illustrated.

THE VALE of LLANGOLLEN.—With Special Contributions from His Excellency E. J. PHELPS, late American Minister; Professor JOHN RUSKIN, LL.D.; ROBERT BROWNING; A. W. KINGLAKE; and Sir THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

- BOURNEMOUTH and NEW FOREST. THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.
- THE NORTH WALES COAST. THE ISLE of WIGHT.
- BRECON and its BEACONS. THE WYE VALLEY.
- ROSS, TINTERN, and CHEPSTOW. THE SEVERN VALLEY.
- BRISTOL, BATH, WELLS, and WESTON-SUPER-MARE.
- BRIGHTON, EASTBOURNE, HASTINGS, and ST. LEONARDS.
- LLANDUDNO, RHYL, BANGOR, BETTWSYCOED and SNOWDON.
- ABERYSTWYTH, BARMOUTH, MACHYNLETH and ABERDOVEY.
- BARMOUTH, DOLGELLY, HARLECH, GRIGCIETH and PWLLHELL.
- MALVERN, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, GLOUCESTER and CHELTENHAM.
- LLANDRINDOD WELLS and the SPAS of MID-WALES.

1s.—THE HOTELS of the WORLD. A Handbook to the Leading Hotels throughout the World.

"The most comprehensive and interesting Handbook to our vast city that we have seen."—The World.

"Most emphatically tops them all."—Daily Graphic.
"The best Handbook to London ever issued."—Liverpool Daily Post.

Sixty Illustrations. 3s. 6d. net. Twenty Maps and Plans.

LONDON AND ENVIRONS.

By E. C. COOK and E. T. COOK, M.A.

Llangollen: DARLINGTON & CO.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Ltd.
The Railway Bookstalls, and all Booksellers'.

Writer's Cramp.

"G. J., aged 33, wrote 7-8 hrs. daily... after about 7 yrs. of this employment the initial symptoms of writer's cramp first declared themselves... I learn the cramp now affects the whole arm and he intends to abandon his present occupation for another of a totally different description."

Bham Medical Review.

"I may add in my practice as a surgeon, I have found the gold-nib preventative as well as a corrective of writer's cramp—no slight recommendation, I think."

Herbert Vine, M.B., C.M.

Send for Illustrated Price List or call—

MABIE, TODD, & BARD,

83, Cheapside; 95, Regent Street; 21, High Street, Kensington.

FOUNTAIN PENS AND STYLOS:

The objections to them, and how they have been met.

Ceteris paribus everyone would rather use a fountain pen that carries its own ink, and can, therefore, be used anywhere and at any moment, in preference to an ordinary pen, which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

But fountain pens have acquired a bad name from two or three general objections to them. "A fountain pen is all very well," people say, "but it has to be carried upright, otherwise the ink comes out in your pocket; in fact, the ink spills and makes a hideous mess on the smallest provocation. By way of compensation, when you want to write, the ink retires to the barrel (if it isn't all spilled into your pocket) and refuses to emerge until the pen has been shaken and thumped until it squirts out a blot on the carpet."

This used to be true; but the CAW PEN has met the difficulty. It does not have to be carried upright, it can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. On the other hand, until the CAW PEN is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

The CAW PEN is not merely the only fountain pen which anyone cares to use who has once seen it as a pocket pen, but it is so convenient for desk use that it supersedes all other pens whatever.

It is easily filled, and having a wide mouth does not clog with air bubbles during that operation. Price from 12s. 6d.

"Caw pens have a repute beyond their neighbours."—Westminster Budget.

The objection to Stylographic Pens is that the point rarely suits the writer's hand, and cannot be adjusted.

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN can be adjusted in an instant. It has not all the advantages of the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Price from 5s.

British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

People's Edition, price 6d. with Portrait. Special terms for quantities.
JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V... with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."
London: ALEXANDER & SHERBURN, Furnival Street, E.C.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.

JUST PUBLISHED.

At all the Libraries, Booksellers', and Bookstalls.

THE POTENTATE.

A Romance.

By FRANCES FORBES-ROBERTSON.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A steel bright romance of the middle ages..... passages of love and adventure martialled by a skilled hand."

The Academy.

"A fascinating romance."—The Pall Mall Gazette.

"Admirably written."—The Daily Chronicle.

THE MACMAHON; or, the Story of the Seven Johns. By OWEN BLAYNEY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE DARK WAY of LOVE. By CHARLES LE GOFFIE. Translated by WINGATE BINDER. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SONGS of LOVE and EMPIRE. By E. NESBIT. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"It is poetry, true poetry, poetry that should live." The Pall Mall Gazette.

AN ESSAY on COMEDY. By George MEREDITH. NEW EDITION. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A Pocket Edition of Mr. GEORGE MEREDITH'S SELECTED POEMS, printed on hand-made paper, will be ready next week, price 6s. net.

2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, WESTMINSTER.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S NEW BOOKS.

THE WAR of the WENUSES. By C. L. GRAVES and E. V. LUCAS. Being Vol. LXXVIII. of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
"A good book was never spoilt by a good parody, and Mr. Wells himself will be the first to laugh over 'The War of the Wenuses.'"—The Daily Telegraph. "Every reader of Mr. Wells's book must possess himself at once of this deliciously humorous parody."—The Observer. "I read it one night while sitting at a solitary meal, and I have not had a headache since."—Books of To-day.

"At last the bicycle has its poet."—The Referee.

LEGENDS of the WHEEL. By ARTHUR WAUGH. Demy 16mo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
"The bicycle has an able singer in Mr. Arthur Waugh, whose 'Legends of the Wheel' include some happily-turned pieces."—The Daily Mail. "These 'Legends' should be in the hands, or the wallet, of every cyclist."—The Globe. "Mr. Arthur Waugh has written the best collection of cycling verses which has yet been published."—The Daily Telegraph.

FIGHTING for FAVOUR. By W. G. TARBET. Author of "In Oor Kailyard," "Il-Gotten Gold," &c. & Vol. XXXI. of Arrowsmith's 3s. 6d. Series. Crown 8vo, cloth.
"Fighting for Favour," a romance by W. G. Tarbet, which Mr. Arrowsmith, the Ulysses of country publishers, has just added to his cheap series of novels. The dialogue is not too kill-ey, whilst the fight with the pirates, whether on land or sea, is as stirring a bit of writing as any published of late."—Punch.

A POINT of VIEW. By CAROLINE FOTHEREGILL. Author of "The Comedy of Cecilia," "A Matter of Temperament," &c. Vol. XXXII. of Arrowsmith's 3s. 6d. Series. Crown 8vo, cloth.
"A novel to be read."—The Star. "A cleverly told tale."—The Newsagent.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPSON, MARSHALL & Co., Ltd.

EPPS'S COCOAINE

COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.

The choicest roasted nibs (broken-up beans) of the natural Cocoa on being subjected to powerful hydraulic pressure give forth their excess of oil, leaving for use a finely flavoured powder—"Cocaine," a product which, when prepared with boiling water, has the consistence of tea, of which it is now, with many, beneficially taking the place. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system. Sold only in labelled tins. If unable to obtain it of your tradesman, a tin will be sent post free for 5 stamps.—JAMES EPPS & CO., Ltd., Homeopathic Chemists, London

THE PORTFOLIO:

ILLUSTRATED MONOGRAPHS ON ARTISTIC SUBJECTS.

No. 36. APRIL. Published April 16th.

GREEK BRONZES. By A. Stuart Murray, LL.D., Keeper of the Greek and Roman Antiquities in the British Museum. With 4 Photogravures and 41 other Illustrations. 3s. 6d. net.

CONTENTS.

- I. ARCHAIC STATUETTES.
- II. ARCHAIC ETRUSCAN STATUETTES.
- III. STATUETTES of the AGE of POLYCLEITOS and MYRON.
- IV. STATUETTES of the AGE of PHEIDIAS.
- V. STATUETTES of the AGE of PRAXITELES and LYSIPPOS.
- VI. GAULISH BRONZES.

No. 35. JANUARY.

RUBENS. By R. A. M. Stevenson. With 2 Copperplates, 8 Illustrations in Sepia, and 24 other Illustrations. 3s. 6d. net.

"Exceedingly interesting—without doubt one of the handiest and most compact lives of Rubens."—Scotsman.
"The illustrations of this number are as abundant and good as usual."—Spectator.

LONDON: SEELEY & CO., LIMITED, 38, GREAT RUSSELL STREET.

NEW VOLUME OF THE VICTORIAN ERA SERIES.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE FREE TRADE MOVEMENT AND ITS RESULTS.

By G. ARMITAGE-SMITH, M.A., Principal of the Birkbeck Institution.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, Old Bailey.

IMPORTANT.

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, should subscribe to the

PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

ESTABLISHED 1837.

Among the many attractions of its columns the following may be mentioned:—

Literary articles (including leader on some prominent topic of the moment) announcements of forthcoming volumes, notes on current events in connection with the publishing world, reviews (often illustrated) of new books and magazines, correspondence, &c., &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of

NEW BOOKS of the WEEK

(the most complete list issued) giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number upwards of a thousand

OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS

are advertised for, thus affording readers an excellent opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and attention is particularly drawn to the fact that annual subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS of SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money-payments should be made.

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ... ..         | 8s. 6d.  |
| " Six Months ditto ditto ... ..   | 4s. 6d.  |
| " Three Months ditto ditto ... ..   | 2s. 6d.  |
| To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage ... .. | 11s. 0d. |

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,

No. 384.—APRIL, 1898.—Price 6s.

- I. THE STATE and CONDITIONS of LABOUR.
- II. RECENT SOLAR ECLIPSES.
- III. ENGLISH JESUITS and SCOTTISH INTRIGUES, 1551-52.
- IV. GENERAL BOURBAKI.
- V. BABYLONIAN DISCOVERIES.
- VI. NOVELS of AMERICAN LIFE.
- VII. THE UNDERSTANDING of ARCHITECTURE.
- VIII. ANTIQUITIES of HALLAMSHIRE.
- IX. PETER the GREAT.
- X. A SCOTTISH BORDER CLAN.
- XI. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION and MODERN FRANCE.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1897.
SIXTY-FIRST YEAR OF ISSUE OF ANNUAL CATALOGUE.

THE

ENGLISH CATALOGUE of BOOKS FOR THE YEAR 1897.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 224, cloth limp, 6s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

It contains a much longer List of Works than last year's Catalogue, including an addition of some 1,400 more Titles, but the price remains the same, viz., 5s. net, cloth limp; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

NOW READY.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

ARISTOCRACY AND EVOLUTIONA Study of the Rights, the Origin, and the Social Functions of the Wealthier Classes.

BY

W. H. MALLOCK,

Author of "Labour and the Popular Welfare,"
"Classes and Masses," &c.

"He does not envelop the subject in a cloud of philosophic phraseology, he is always lucid and orderly, and he relieves his argument by welcome touches of satire and humour. His last book shows no deficiency in these qualities, and it is also perhaps the most complete and sustained effort of reasoning which he has so far produced."—Literature.

HIS GRACE O' THE GUNNE.By I. HOOPER, Author of "A Singer of Marly."
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

"Really a clever, entertaining volume.....No common pieces of work."—Athenæum.

"A sturdy, vigorous, and wholesome story, and one well worth reading."—Literary World.

"For the further developments of this thrilling tale, which culminate in a supremely heroic climax, we must crave our readers' permission to refer them to Part II. of "His Grace o' the Gunne," which is even more rife with sensational incident than the first half of that powerful and fascinating work."—Daily Telegraph.

WHO'S WHO, 1898.

An Annual Biographical Dictionary. Fiftieth Year of Issue. Containing 1,143 New Biographies. In crown 8vo, 864 pages, bound in cloth gilt, with gilt edges and rounded corners, price 3s. 6d. net.

"This is undoubtedly the handiest biographical dictionary and compendium of information, referring to prominent persons and their doings, in existence."
Nature.

THE VITALITY OF CHRISTIAN DOGMAS, AND THEIR POWER OF EVOLUTION.

By A. SABATIER, D.D., Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Translated by Mrs.
EM. CHRISTEN. With Preface by the Very Reverend
the Hon. W. H. FREMANTLE, D.D., Dean of Ripon.
Crown 8vo, 96 pages, cloth, price 1s. 6d. net.

"It is really a gem of theological constructive criticism.
With marvellous lucidity and penetration Dr. Sabatier states for us here the philosophy and natural history of the dogma, its position and use in the Christian evolution."
Christian World.

THE STORY OF GLADSTONE'S LIFE.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Containing 45 Illustrations, mostly Page Portraits, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods. In 1 vol., extra crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

"This is a charmingly written sketch of Mr. Gladstone's public career, with some interesting glimpses at the same time into his private life."—The Observer.

PRINCIPLES OF POLITICAL ECONOMY.

Book III. Vol. II. By Prof. J. SHIELD NICHOLSON.
Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

"The new volume is marked by the same robust practicality and independence of judgment that gave value to its predecessor. ....The book is one to be heartily commended to the student, the business man, and the politician."—Literary World.

A. &amp; C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S
LIST.*GENERAL LITERATURE.*THE POEMS of WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE WYNDHAM, M.P. Demy 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

"One of the most serious contributions to Shakesperian criticism that has been published for some time, and its publication assures to Mr. Wyndham an honourable place among men of letters. He comes well equipped with knowledge, and is well endowed with some higher critical gifts
.....this extremely interesting volume."—Times.

THREE YEARS in SAVAGE AFRICA.

By LIONEL DEOLE. With an Introduction by H. M.
STANLEY, M.P. With 100 Illustrations and 5 Maps.
Demy 8vo, 21s.

"It will take a permanent place among the very best books of travel. It combines solidity and liveliness, and carries the reader gaily through. A fine full book."
Pall Mall Gazette.

A FRONTIER CAMPAIGN.

By Viscount FINCASTLE, V.C., and Lieutenant P. C.
ELLIOTT-LOCKHART. With a Map and Illustrations.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It shows on every page the heroism of our troops and their officers. We can heartily commend this volume."
St. James's Gazette.

WITH the MOUNTED INFANTRY

and MASHONALAND FIELD FORCE, 1896. By Lieut.-Colonel ALDERSON. With numerous Illustrations and Plans. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Immediately.]

This is an account of the military operations in Mashonaland by the officer who commanded the troops in that district during the late rebellion. Besides its interest as a story of warfare, it will have a peculiar value as an account of the services of mounted infantry by one of the chief authorities on the subject.

CAMPAIGNING on the UPPER NILE

and NIGER. By Lieutenant SEYMOUR VANDE-
LEUR. With an Introduction by Sir G. GOLDIE,
K.C.M.G. With 4 Maps, Illustrations, and Plans.
Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"So good that it would have been welcome at any time.
Upon the African question there is no book procurable which contains so much of value as this. Sir George Goldie's introduction is a remarkable paper; the utterance of a clear and statesmanlike intelligence, marked by the fullest knowledge and by that imaginative insight which belongs to a born ruler of men."—Guardian.

ENGLISH LYRICS. Selected and

Edited by W. E. HENLEY. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

"Mr. Henley has exercised his individual taste and judgment, which have here served him and his readers to admiration."—Scotsman.

"On almost every page of this volume there are lines of beauty."—Academy.

A HISTORY of the GREAT NORTH-

ERN RAILWAY, 1845-95. By CHARLES H. GRIN-
LING. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.
"The only adequate history of a great English railway that has as yet appeared."—Times.

"Admirably written, and crammed with interesting facts."—Daily Mail.

THE DECLINE and FALL of the

ROMAN EMPIRE. By EDWARD GIBBON. A New Edition. Edited, with Notes, Appendices, and Maps, by J. B. BURY, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin. In 7 vols., demy 8vo, gilt top, 8s. 6d. each;
crown 8vo, 8s. each. Vol. V.

THE MINISTRY of DEACONESSES.

By CECILIA ROBINSON, Deaconess. With an Introduction by the LORD BISHOP of WINCHESTER, and an Appendix by Professor ARMITAGE ROBIN-SON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

This book is a review of the history and theory of the office and work of a Deaconess, and it may be regarded as authoritative.

THE LIBRARY of DEVOTION.

Post 8vo, 2s.; leather, 3s.

THE CONFESSIONS of ST. AUGUS-

TINE. Newly Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by C. BIGG, D.D., late Student of Christ Church.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR.

By John
KEBLE. With Introduction and Notes, by WALTER LOCK, D.D., Warden of Keble College, Ireland Professor at Oxford.

Messrs. Methuen's Catalogue and New Book Gazette
sent to any address.

METHUEN &amp; CO., 36, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S
LIST.*FICTION.*THE STANDARD BEARER By S. R.

CROCKETT, Author of "Lochinvar," "The Raiders,"
&c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Just published.]

THE CROOK of the BOUGH. By

MENIE MURIEL DOWIE, Author of "A Girl in the Carpathians." Crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.]

MISS ERIN. By M. E. Francis,

Author of "In a Northern Village." Crown 8vo, 8s.
[Shortly.]

THE PHILANTHROPIST. By Lucy

MAYNARD. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.]

VAUSSORE. By Francis Brune.

Crown 8vo, 6s. [Shortly.]

CROSS TRAILS. By Victor Waite.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

A Romance of Adventure in America and New Zealand.

BIJLI the DANCER. By James Blythe

PATON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A Romance of India.

ACROSS the SALT SEAS. By J.

BLOUNDELLE-BURTON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BETWEEN SUN and SAND. By

W. C. SCULLY, Author of "The White Hecatomb."
Crown 8vo, 6s.

SIMON DALE. By Anthony Hope.

Third Edition. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A brilliant novel. The hero is a perfect hero of romance."—Athenæum.

"A bright and gallant story."—Graphic.

"The style is virile and distinguished, and the whole tale most entertaining reading."—St. James's Gazette.

"The dialogue is so alert, the spirit of the actors so indomitable, and all so charmingly told."—World.

"The dialogue is witty and brilliant. The picture of Nell Gwynne is full of life and colour."
Westminster Gazette.

"Everybody will read it, and it is certain that everybody will enjoy it."—Speaker.

"A narrative of unflinching interest, with a spirit, vivacity, and naturalness that fairly carry away the reader."
Globe.

A VOYAGE of CONSOLATION. By

SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN, Author of "An American Girl in London." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

"Humour, pure and spontaneous and irresistible, brightens every page of this exhilarating story."
Daily Mail.

"A most delightfully bright and refreshing book."
Daily Telegraph.

THE VINTAGE By E. F. Benson,

Author of "Dodo." Illustrated by G. P. Jacomb-Hood.
Crown 8vo, 6s. [Third Edition.]

A Romance of the Greek War of Independence.

"The leading characters stand out and the love-story is told with charm and delicacy."—Westminster Gazette.

"An excellent piece of romantic literature; a very graceful and moving story."—Saturday Review.

"The book is full of vivid detail."—Daily Telegraph.

THE KLOOF BRIDE. By Ernest

GLANVILLE, Author of "The Fossalker." Illustrated.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Second Edition in the press.]

A Story of South African Adventure.

"Scene after scene of stirring interest follow each other in almost bewildering rapidity. Without doubt Mr. Glanville can write a tale of adventure."—Scotsman.

"The story grows more exciting as it proceeds, and hair-breadth escape is the greater part of the order of the narrative."—South Africa.

JOSIAH'S WIFE. By Norma Lorimer.

Crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.]

"A witty and interesting book. Josiah is a noble character, and Camela is bewitching."—Queen.

"It has literary finish and deep feeling."—Daily Mail.

"A well-told story."—Daily Chronicle.

"Written in a bright and witty style."
Pall Mall Gazette.

Messrs. Methuen's Catalogue and New Book Gazette
sent to any address.

METHUEN &amp; CO., 36, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

CONTENTS.

| REVIEWS :   | PAGE    |
|---|---------|
| A Woman and Burns... ..                           | 437     |
| Plain Words about the Jews ... ..                 | 438     |
| Mr. Wyndham's Shakespeare ... ..                  | 439     |
| Mr. Binyon's Poems ... ..                         | 440     |
| An Observer in Malay ... ..                       | 441     |
| BRIEFER MENTION ... ..                            | 442     |
| THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT ... ..                     | 443-446 |
| NOTES AND NEWS ... ..                             | 447     |
| PRIMROSES ... ..                                  | 449     |
| THREE BARDS OF THE BUSH: II., EDWARD DYSON ... .. | 449     |
| THE WEEK ... ..                                   | 450     |
| THE BOOK MARKET ... ..                            | 451     |
| DRAMA ... ..                                      | 452     |
| CORRESPONDENCE ... ..                             | 453     |
| BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..                      | 453     |
| BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..                             | 454     |
| Announcements ... ..                              | 454     |

REVIEWS.

A WOMAN AND BURNS.

Robert Burns and Mrs. Dunlop. Correspondence now Published in Full for the First Time. With Elucidations by William Wallace. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

WE congratulate Mr. Wallace, at any rate, on his creative use of language. To have subscribed himself editor of this correspondence would have been a hackneyed and waybeaten mode; but as its elucidator he makes his bow before the curtain with a decided novelty and swagger. In one respect his commentary answers the title: it is brief and businesslike, avoiding the amplitude to which the modern editor is given, and needing the verve of Mr. Henley to render fascinating.

But there our praise must mainly end. The letter of Mr. Ewing (librarian of the Mitchell Library, Glasgow), in the Scotsman of March 31, has established, we fear, numerous sins of omission and commission against Mr. Wallace. He is convicted of several errors in bibliographical statement—one particularly, in which he has undertaken to correct the editors of the Centenary Burns with more zeal than prudence. What is worse, though in his preface he loses no chance of gibing at the Centenary editors, he is shown by Mr. Ewing calmly to have adopted the results of their labours without a word of acknowledgment. The correspondence was placed in the hands of those editors, who not only paved the way for the present publication by calling attention to it after it had been forgotten, but drew on it largely for their edition of Burns, both in notes, we believe, and text: yet Mr. Wallace writes as if he were the first to make use of its valuable new matter in regard to early draughts of poems and bibliographical detail. A still heavier sin is that it is not "published in full." The source on which both he and the Centenary editors have drawn is the Lochryan MSS. now in America. From these he has, indeed, tolerably completed Mrs. Dunlop's letters. But of Burns only four new letters are given, though many (Mr. Ewing shows) still remain to be found, and are quite possible to search for. Finally, with the exception of these four, none of Burns's letters—Mr. Ewing avers—are given more completely than when they were published, twenty years ago, by Scott Douglas.

Still, there is considerable gain in having this correspondence for the first time even so far complete. It sheds light on several points of Burns's bibliography, and gives us a detailed picture of the most disinterested among Burns's numerous connexions with women. Mrs. Dunlop is by far the most presentable of his female correspondents. The dreary specimens we have hitherto had of the poet's inamoratas have created an anticipatory shudder at the forthcoming of a new batch of letters between the Scots Bard and any of the Scots Bard's feminine admirers. Happily, in the first place, Mrs. Dunlop was not an inamorata. She was a staunch and tender friend. There is none of the stilted sentimentality which has already sickened us in the egregious Maclehose; the lady does not pule as "Clarinda," the Bard does not rant as "Sylvander." It is honest Robert Burns and Frances Dunlop. And good reason; the lady was in her sixties, complains of her deafness, confesses incipient blindness. The more to Burns's credit—it is a new light on his character that he could maintain a loyal and affectionate correspondence with a woman old enough to be his mother, who could appeal neither to his senses nor even community of age. At first, while Burns is in the heyday of his early Edinburgh triumph, there is more than a suspicion that the warmth is on the lady's side. But he returns to his Ayrshire home, the fine friends forget him, as fine friends forget a new toy which is no more a new toy, and is also a toy out of sight; and then he opens his heart to the lady who is unforgetful. His letters grow long, habitual, confidential, affectionate; and the connexion endures to within eighteen months of his death. Why it gave way then must be sought, we think, to some extent in a review of Mrs. Dunlop's character.

The main interest of this book lies, to our mind, in her letters. Beyond the pleasing picture of affection, constancy, and forbearance towards a lady so advanced in years, there is no particular addition to our knowledge of the poet in Burns's letters. Nor are her letters brilliant: not very witty, not very cultivated, not models of style, not very wise. But they are the untutored display of a character; a character clamantly feminine, belonging to a marked order, such as we may any of us meet, regard, love, and smile at in our life-experience. They are human, and touch the human in us after a fashion rare in that eighteenth century. It is a type sufficiently frequent, as we have said. A woman warm-hearted, voluble, clinging, exacting, with bridling vanity (yet a vanity frank and forgivable), impulsive, wanting tact (yet by flashes and fits tactful), half-read, with half-taste (yet firmly convinced of her judgment), at once uneasily fearful of her deficiencies and comfortably self-complacent. A harmony of incongruities lovable withal, and often maternally wise towards her wayward poet; being by no means a fool, nor by any means a sage.

And all this is set in a situation which Englishmen have agreed to think ridiculous: the situation of an elderly woman retaining a youthful heart, and fixing an engrossing affection on a young man. It is a standing dish for laughter in Mr. Gilbert's operas; and the English public laughs con amore at every jeer. We fail to find it ridiculous, though we find it abundantly piteous. The youthfulness of her letters is remarkable; their playfulness, their warmth, their quite girlish sentiment and sentimentality. She writes perpetually, at the most garrulous length; she demands perpetual answers; she tortures herself if the poet lets a month pass without an answer; nay, when she can find no misery on that score, she torments herself because he does not complain and expostulate if she leaves him without a letter! Does it mean that he is indifferent to her letters? He once published a poetical address to her. Thenceforward she is continually pluming herself on it, with childlike openness; and now and again hints ("hint" is too weak a word!) that she thinks it full time for another. With her insatiable exactingness, one may lawfully surmise that the poor poet found her at times d—d troublesome! She lectures him very deservedly on his indecencies; with wisdom and independence, but with little of the tact necessary for so touchy and independent a man. The climax comes when she impetuously charges with indelicacy "Tam o' Shanter." Burns evidently resents it bitterly. He ceases to write. Thereupon she sends him a note on a scrap of paper; a lovely example of the offended female icily marking her displeasure, yet secretly and tentatively fishing for a reconciliation, on the verge of climbing down, but trying whether an assumption of dignity will enable her to escape without it: a note all in the frigid third person, "Mrs. Dunlop," and "Mr. Burns," with a variety of other beautifully characteristic touches. Burns forgives her the climbing down, responding with a brief note in which the friendliness is an obvious effort. But then he falls silent again; and finally she virtually does climb down, in a letter imploring him to write, and torturing herself in wonted manner. When we consider that Burns himself was a by no means immaculate man; and that the lady heard more evil of him than good, it is little cause for wonder, between the woman's exactions and the man's faults, if there was a breach at the last. There is much cause for wonder that the breach was postponed to the very end of the poet's life.

We have said enough to show that this book is worth reading by those to whom human nature is always fraternally interesting. Mrs. Dunlop's style is ungrammatical, disjointed, impetuously piled up to a degree. But this very deficiency is itself characteristic and harmonious, and to the lover of flesh and blood letter-writing has its own charm of nature. And many things shall be forgiven to her and Burns, because she is not Clarinda, and he is not Sylvander.

As for Burns's own letters, we hardly find them an interesting picture of the poet.

They are sentimental, sentimental as his beloved "Man of Feeling," Henry Mackenzie; there is far too much rant about "manly independence," and discontented railing on the rich in the best Hyde Park manner. Mr. Wallace quotes a certain "defence" of the "practice of making Fescennine verse." It amounts to a statement that such things are the thoughtless product of men's convivial hours, and should not be repeated to women. Weak enough, surely, seeing that Burns not only deliberately published such verse in a book circulating among all sorts and conditions of men—and women—but obstinately refused to omit them from a second edition at the lady's request—nay, even flung in a few extra, by way of makeweight! Burns himself would hardly have styled this feeble palliation a "defence." And he would certainly have scorned Mr. Wallace's manner of seeming to abate the offence by a disingenuous euphemism. When a blackguard scrawls obscene lines on a public place we call it indecent rhyme; when a poet scrawls licentious lines on a public page we call it, forsooth, "Fescennine verse!" Burns himself, who, at any rate, like Dryden, was no hypocrite, called his performances in this sort by a very plain name, which would shock Mr. Wallace's Burnsian delicacy if we repeated it. Mr. Wallace also mentions a letter by which, it appears, the poet disposes in advance of the modern view that he was "a lewd peasant of genius." We confess our unassisted dulness has not been able to identify the letter intended.

As to the question of whether, and why, Mrs. Dunlop deserted Burns, we have already implied our opinion, which is not Mr. Wallace's. It is plain to us that she did, and the reason obvious from the internal evidence of the letters themselves. Her exactingness, her Sahara of words (her letters are of enormous length), her failures in tact, wearied the poet. His letters fell off; she tore her hair, implored, humbled herself, in vain. At last he sends a brief apology, with a poem. Bitterly offended, she takes most feminine revenge by criticising the poem in such a purposefully irritating fashion as might sting a meeker poet than Burns. Result, another long silence. Thereafter the lady's own letters begin to languish, while Burns still offends by silence, and she comments on it with every sign of hurt dignity. She goes to London, and her previous remark is very curious. She observes that few of her friends have returned from London the friends they were before, and wonders whether such will be the case with her. She immediately rebuts the idea; yet—was she already meditating the end? In any case, so it happened. She writes from London one by no means fervid letter, and then ceases. Burns writes, assumes too late the attitude of remonstrance and regretful suit on his side; but she answers not. He had wounded her pride, bitterly scarified her vanity; and she would not have been the woman she clearly was if she had not rejoiced to inflict on the poet what he had inflicted on her—and with feminine interest. Moreover, she was now among a fresh circle and fresh interests, no longer so dependent on Burns's letters as when she was in a Scotch country district. London buried what was really dead before. As for Burns's previous neglect, in addition to the reasons mentioned, he was full of anxiety, trouble, depression, and whiskey—and he was a poet. Is it not enough? Let those answer who know something of poets and anything of women.

PLAIN WORDS ABOUT THE JEWS.

The Jew, the Gypsy, and el Islam. By the late Captain Sir Richard F. Burton. Edited by W. H. Wilkins. (Hutchinson.)

THE late Sir Richard Burton was like that Synesius whom Charles Kingsley describes as combining a strong practical faculty with a very muddy speculative one, and especially proud of his weakest side. Gifted with a force of character which enabled him to dominate Orientals as a shepherd-dog rules sheep, with a perhaps unequalled readiness of resource, and with a vast colloquial knowledge of most living languages, he yet often turned aside from the adventures wherein his soul rejoiced to plunge into questions of doctrine or linguistics for which he was fitted neither by nature nor training. But such excursions into the unaccustomed are seldom profitable, and although Burton's indomitable will made him overcome in some measure the difficulties which attend the beginner, he brought to such studies a full share of the defects to which the Greeks thought all self-taught and late learners liable. In the three essays which make up the volume before us we find much hasty judgment, much misconception of evidence, much looseness of statement. Yet such is the charm of Burton's strong and original personality that it cannot be denied that they are extremely interesting.

Nowhere are Burton's limitations more clearly to be seen than in the essay on the Jew. One could not be in the essayist's company for two minutes without perceiving that the Jews were of all races the one with which he was least in sympathy. He despised alike their solid virtues and their squalid vices, and it is not therefore surprising to find him—à propos of their re-settlement in Palestine—thus including the whole nation in one sweeping condemnation:

"A people whose highest idea of religious existence are the superstitious sanctification of the Sabbath, the washing of hands, the blowing of ram's horns, the saving rite of circumcision, and the thousand external functions compensating for moral delinquencies, with Abraham sitting at the gate of Hell to keep it closed for Jews; a community which would declare marriage impossible to some twelve millions of Gentiles, forbid them the Sabbath, and sentence to death every 'stranger' reading an Old Testament; which would have all the Ger who are not idolaters without religion, whilst forbidding those whom it calls 'idolaters' (the Christians) to exercise the commonest feelings of humanity; which would degrade and insult one half of humanity, the weakest sex, and which would sanction slavery, and at the same time oppress and vilify its slaves by placing them on a level with oxen and asses; a faith which, abounding in heathen practices, would encourage the study of the Black Art, would loosen every moral obligation, would grant dispensations to men's oaths, and would sanction the murder of the unlearned; a system of injustice, whose Sanhedrins, at once heathenish and unlawful, have distinguished themselves only for force and fraud, for superabundant self-conceit, for cold-blooded cruelty, and for unrelenting enmity to all human nature—such conditions, it is evident, are not calculated to create or to preserve national life. The civilised world would never endure the presence of a creed which says to man, 'Hate thy neighbour unless he be one of ye,' or of a code written in blood, not in ink, which visits the least infractions of the Rabbinical laws with exorcism and excommunication, with stoning and flogging to death. A year of such spectacles would more than suffice to excite the wrath and revenge of outraged humanity; the race, cruel, fierce, dogged, and desperate as in the days of Titus and Hadrian, would defend itself to the last; the result would be another siege and capture of Jerusalem, and the 'Chosen People' would once more be prostrate in their blood, and be stamped out of the Holy Land."

We do not go to Bois-Guilbert for the true character of Isaac of York, nor can we wonder that the Jews of Damascus, in which city Burton was consul at the time these lines were written, made things so unpleasant that Lord Granville was in some measure compelled to recall him.

This, however, would now matter little if Burton had known how to support his indictment by scientific proof; but this is exactly what he could not do. With the rapid glance of a man of action, he seized upon the facts as they presented themselves to his eye, and knew nothing of what he would doubtless have considered the tedious and useless labour of verification. Nearly the whole of his essay is inspired by an attack of Judæophobia brought on by his misconception of the rate at which he supposed the Jewish nation to be increasing. Yet his own book proves the negative. In 1853, we read, the Jews of Great Britain numbered 30,000, and in 1890 90,000. When we consider the vast Jewish immigration which recent events in Russia have poured in upon us, the greater part of this increase may appear to be due to immigration alone. In the same space of time, our whole population has leapt from twenty millions to thirty-three, so that the increase of the Jews has hardly kept pace with that of the rest of the inhabitants. Or, let us take the statement (probably much exaggerated) which Burton quotes from Dio Cassius, that nearly two millions of Jews perished in the wars against Trajan and Hadrian. This would suppose, by the usual rule, a population of twelve millions, while Whitaker's Almanack gives the total number of Jews now in the world at seven. It hardly needs Dr. Jacobs' recently collected evidence to prove that the Jews are both in fertility and bodily vigour inferior to the Western races.

Can we say anything better of Burton's evidence as to Jewish "ferocity"? In his chapter on the continuity of Jewish tradition, he gives a sort of calendar of Jewish outrages against Christians, from which we give a few excerpts:

"A.D. 1255.—Jappen, one of the chief Jews of Lincoln, and others of his faith, kidnapped a lad eleven years old, beat him with rods, cut off his nose and upper lip, broke some of his teeth, and pierced his side.

A.D. 1336.—The Jews of Gustow, in Vandalia [Pomerania], insulted a Host.

A.D. 1348.—The Jews were accused of poisoning the wells and men, and of causing the plague which then devastated Europe. Many wereslain, and thousands driven away from Germany. . . .

A.D. 1518.—The Jews ill-treated consecrated Hosts, and murdered Christian children in the Electorate of Brandenburg.

A.D. 1811.—A Christian woman disappeared in the Jewish quarter of Aleppo.

A.D. 1839.—A flask of blood passed through the Custom-house of Beyrout."

And so on. Between 1518 and 1811 only one set of outrages is reported, in other cases there is nothing to connect the Jews with the crimes recorded by tradition; in yet others the author thinks it sufficient to observe that the Jews were rabbled or expelled on suspicion. Would even a modern atrocity-monger condemn on such evidence a people who have, after all, produced a Spinoza, a Herschell, and a Beaconsfield?

This apart, there is much in the essay which will be read with interest by the general reader, and which he would probably find a difficulty in obtaining elsewhere in so digestible a form. The account of the Sephardim, Ashkenazim, and other sects into which the Jews of the Holy Land are divided is most instructive, and, as Burton here gives us facts collected by himself, it is doubtless to be depended upon. It will, too, astonish many to find that the Talmud commands that all Gentiles found reading the Law of Moses should be put to death; that in it Jews are forbidden to speak well of Gentiles, or to make them presents; that alms given to God by Gentiles are "so many sins"; that it is the duty of the Jew to cheat and rob the Gentile, "when not in fear of the authorities"; and that a Jewish physician is recommended to treat Gentile patients only for practice, and to kill them if possible. It is true that such ordinances were, for the most part, the dicta of the Rabbis of Jabneh at a time when they were smarting under the hooks and scourges of Hadrian, and that they receive the same regard from modern Jews as the Levitical Law does from ourselves; but the fact that they should ever have been drawn up at all goes far to justify Tacitus' theory that the Jew of his time was "the enemy of the human race."

We do not propose to dwell long upon the essay on the Gypsy, which arose, curiously enough, out of a controversy in the ACADEMY of 1875-1876 between Burton and M. Paul Bataillard as to which of the two had been the first to point out the resemblance—they each called it the identity—of the Gypsies with the Jats of India. Burton was as fluent in Romany as in most tongues, and was even thought by his wife, with the faith in the unproven common to the Burton household, to have gypsy blood in his own veins. His theories about the gypsies would, therefore, be entitled to much respect, but we look in vain here for information about gypsy magic and the like which is not taken from earlier writers. In the one exception to this that we have discovered—to wit, his statement that gypsy chiromancy is the same as that in use all over the world—he is in direct conflict with the late Lord Lytton, who in his youth spent nine months in a gypsy encampment, and declared that the whole system of gypsy divination differed in every respect from that practised by more civilised "occultists."

And so we come to the essay on el Islam, written immediately after Burton's daring pilgrimage to Mecca, and, therefore, considerably earlier than those which precede it in the book. Burton's admiration of Islam is well known, and he here gives reason for it:

"The recurring purpose which runs through the world is chiefly manifested by the higher esteem in which man holds man. David made him little lower than the angels. Christianity, a system of ascetism, confirms this estimate. We are fallen beings, fallen not through our own fault; condemned to eternal death, not by our own demerits; ransomed by a Divine Being not through our own merits. El Islam, on the contrary, raised men from this debased status, and with the sound good sense which characterises the creed, inspired and raised him in the scale of creation by teaching him the dignity of human nature."

Yet he confesses that Islam has found itself powerless against Western races; and while he praises the wise rule which compels every Moslem, whether preacher or layman, to live by "some honest secular calling" (even the Sultan, he says, makes and sells toothpicks), he has no condemnation for the fanaticism, the cruelty, and the hatred of learning which has too often accompanied its propagation. Perhaps he saw in these last but the innate defects of the Semitic race, in which he was not, it may be, far wrong. How he would have enjoyed the smashing of the Mahdi!

Thus we leave with regret a book which, although in no sense a contribution to science, is yet a fitting memorial of one of the most wonderful men of our century. Though the essays are well printed, we are afraid that we cannot congratulate Mr. Wilkins on his editing. Burton was no academic scholar, but he would never have written "passima" for "pessima," "didascalica" for "didascalica," nor "Helispotes" for "Heliopolis." Neither would he have called the Spanish minister Mendizalel, nor have spoken of the gypsies as making road-signs out of fur-twigs. Mr. Wilkins also makes the statement that Anna Commena was "Empress of Constantinople"—a mistake from which a perusal of Count Robert of Paris might have saved him.

MR. WYNDHAM'S SHAKESPEARE.

The Poems of Shakespeare. Edited with an Introduction and Notes by George Wyndham. (Methuen.)

Ecce iterum the Sonnets! And with the Sonnets this time the too often neglected narrative poems. And not a mere essay, or study, or bellicose pamphlet, but a goodly volume, set forth in Messrs. Constable's best type, rich with Introduction and Text and Notes, all the complete paraphernalia of the library edition. The book is pleasant to the eyes and light to the hand. Certainly no one could wish to read his Shakespeare in more desirable form. From Mr. Wyndham, after that admirable introduction to the "Tudor Translations" reprint of North's Plutarch, one is sure of honest workmanship and criticism at once thorough and fine. Nevertheless we must confess to approaching his edition with some trepidation. Under which king will this Bezonian serve? And whether it be Pembroke or Southampton, can he possibly have anything to say about the question which has not already been said, well said and said to iteration, either by Mr. Tyler on the one side, or by Mr. Sidney Lee on the other? It is distinctly relieving to find that the Personal Question does not loom so large in Mr. Wyndham's eyes as to hopelessly obscure the many more important issues which the Sonnets raise. On the contrary, he relegates it remorselessly to its proper place in the background:

"The controversy," he says, "has its own interest; but that interest, I submit, is alien from, and even antagonistic to, an appreciation of lyrical excellence. I do not mean that the Sonnets are 'mere exercises' written to 'rival' or to 'parody' the efforts of other poets. Such curiosities of criticism are born of a nervous revulsion from conclusions reached by the more confident champions of a 'personal theory,' and their very eccentricity measures the amount of damage done, not by those who endeavour, laudably enough, to retrieve a great lost life, but by those who allow such attempts at biography to bias their consideration of poems which we possess intact. If, indeed, we must choose between critics who discover an autobiography in the Sonnets, and critics who find in them a train of poetic exhalations whose airy iridescence never reflects the passionate colours of this earth, then the first are preferable."

But given the fact of personal experience, of an intimate and passionate kind, underlying the composition of the poems, can we not be content with that? Would added details really help us to understand, when the experience has been so universalised, so idealised, by the poet's genius, so shot about with fancy and so shaped by the subtle operation of the speculative intellect, as to be almost cut away from the frail cords that bind it to earth?

"In Shakespeare's Poems, as in every great work of art, single experiences have been generalised, or, rather, merged in the passion which they rouse to a height and a pitch of sensitiveness immeasurable in contrast with its puny origins. The volume and intensity of an artist's passion have led many to believe that great artists speak for all mankind of joy and sorrow. But to great artists the bliss and martyrdom of man are of less import, so it seems, than to others. The griefs and tragedies that bulk so largely in the lives of the inept and the inarticulate are—so far as we may divine the secrets of an alien race—but a small part of the great artist's experience: hardly more, perhaps, than stimulants of his general sense of the whole world's infinite appeal to sensation and consciousness."

We do not quite go all the way with Mr. Wyndham. You cannot, after all, except by a dangerous abstraction, isolate the personality of the artist from the personality of the man. Nor are artists really such a race apart as they are here represented; they have "organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions," as we have; their intuitions and idealisms, different in degree rather than in kind, slide insensibly into those of ordinary humanity. Whatever, then, vitally affects our conception of Shakespeare's personality is not insignificant for the study of his art. We cannot pretend to think that it does not matter whether the relations shadowed forth in the Sonnets were with a petty sensualist like Pembroke, or a man like Southampton, who, though often "too rash, too unadvised, too sudden," had at least his touches of heroism in him. We do not feel sure that Mr. Wyndham has quite appreciated the moral distance between the two men. Southampton braved disgrace by marrying Elizabeth Vernon in defiance of the queen. Pembroke had a secret intrigue with Mary Fitton. Trouble ensued. She whined to him to marry her; and he refused. A sordid story enough! Yet Mr. Wyndham, apparently under the influence of the "gospel of strength," merely comments, "In truth 'twas a dare-devil age of large morals and high spirits."

Surely, then, the Personal Question is not unimportant, although we believe it to be insoluble, or, at least, unsolved. Nevertheless, like Mr. Wyndham, we are a little weary of it; we feel that it has bulked larger in the discussion of the Sonnets than it deserves, and we gladly acquiesce in Mr. Wyndham's decision not to treat it with any elaboration of detail. His own judgment is briefly given as follows. After assigning the composition of the Sonnets on general grounds to the years 1599-1602, he adds:

"Further confirmation of an almost decisive character has been adduced by Mr. Tyler. But I pass his arguments, since they are based, in part, on the assumption that the youth in question was William Herbert; and although Mr. Tyler would, as I think, win a verdict from any jury composed and deciding after the model of Scots procedure, his case is one which cannot be argued without the broaching of many issues outside the sphere of artistic appreciation."

In certain dissertations which find a place in his unusually full and interesting notes, Mr. Wyndham does, however, contribute something to the unravelling of one or two of the problems connected with the literary history of the Sonnets. He has taken the trouble to analyse the use of capital and italic letters in the First Quarto; and has come to the conclusion that this is not, as Mr. Sidney Lee seems to think, due to purely arbitrary whims on the part of the printer, but is rather based upon principles perfectly intelligible in their day, and now obsolete. And he has found a new clue for the dating of the Sonnets in the lines:

"From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud pite April (drest in all his trim)
Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing:
That heauie Saturne laught and leapt with him."

This must mean, thinks Mr. Wyndham, that the planet Saturn was a conspicuous feature in the sky during the April referred to, and he has astronomical authority for the statement that the only available years during which this could have been the case were 1601, 1602, and, possibly, 1600. The argument is ingenious, but not quite convincing. That other astronomical passage: "The mortall Moore hath her eclipse in-dur'de,"

Mr. Wyndham would explain by reference to an actual eclipse, that of May 24, 1603, for choice. "Mortall," he says, "can mean in deadly case." Possibly it can; but the obvious meaning of a "mortall Moore" is surely not an immortal planet, but a woman, and that woman Elizabeth. On the other hand, it cannot be Elizabeth's "death" that is referred to, for to "endure" an eclipse is precisely not to die. It is rather some sickness or notable but surmounted danger to State and throne that must be in question.

For the brief summary of Shakespeare's career contained in Mr. Wyndham's introduction we have nothing but praise; the section on the "Poetomachia," or war of the theatres, is particularly clear and good. But the golden merit of the book is in its sheer critical quality. Inevitable, in writing of Shakespeare, not to feel and say much that has been felt and said before; yet, with the "Venus and Adonis" and the "Lucrece" criticism has often dealt but perfunctorily, and we do not remember to have read anywhere quite such a fine analysis of their magnificent art as Mr. Wyndham gives us, an analysis rendered the more pleasurable by his own very acute sense of and control over the beauty of prose style. Let us take, for an example, what Mr. Wyndham says on the contrasting imagery of the two poems. Of the "Venus and Adonis"—

"The laughter and sorrow of the poem . . . are rendered by images, clean-cut as in antique gems, brilliantly enamelled as in mediæval chalices, numerous and interwoven as in Moorish arabesques; so that their incision, colour, and rapidity of development, apart even from the intricate melodies of the verbal medium in which they live, tax the faculty of artistic appreciation to a point at which it begins to participate in the asceticism of artistic creation."

Then, of the "Lucrece":

"If the 'Venus' be a pageant of gesture, the 'Lucrece' is a drama of emotion. You have the same wealth of imagery, but the images are no longer sun-lit and sharply defined. They seem, rather, created by the reflex action of a sleepless brain—as it were fantastic symbols shaped from the lying report of tired eyes staring into darkness; and they are no longer used to decorate the outward play of natural desire and reluctance, but to project the shadows of abnormal passion and acute mental distress. The poem is full of nameless terror, of 'ghastly shadows' and 'quick-shifting antics.'"

The treatment of the imagery, and the verbal melody of the Sonnets, is equally fine. And even finer is the discussion of certain large imaginative ideas which are the very root and centre of that acutely personal, and yet splendidly generalised, body of verse. In some passages of subtle and interpretative criticism Mr. Wyndham shows the Sonnets "steeped in Renaissance Platonism," full of notions of Ideal Beauty, and of a Love and Constancy for which the terrene limitations of time and space have no longer their significance. He concludes with an eloquent passage, in which he sums up his theory of the relations of Shakespeare's art to the experience which served as its material:

"It matters nothing to Art that Titian may have painted his Venus from the Medici's wife: Antinous gave the world a Type of Beauty to be gazed at without a thought of Hadrian. But the case is not altered when the man who rejoices or suffers is also the man who labours and achieves. It matters nothing to Art that Luca Signorelli painted the corpse of his beloved son; and it is an open question if Dante loved, indeed, a living Beatrice. Works of perfect Art are the tombs in which artists lay to rest the passions they would fain make immortal. The more perfect their execution, the longer does the sepulchre endure, the sooner does the passion perish. Only where the hand has faltered do ghosts of love and anguish still complain. In the most of his Sonnets Shakespeare's hand does not falter. The wonder of them lies in the art of his poetry, not in the accidents of his life; and, within that art, not so much in his choice of poetic themes as in the wealth of his IMAGERY, which grows and shines and changes: above all, in the perfect execution of his VERBAL MELODY. That is the body of which his IMAGERY is the soul, and the two make one creation so beautiful that we are not concerned with anything but its beauty."

Mr. Wyndham impresses us as likely to take a high place in the ranks of contemporary criticism. He is not entirely emancipated from the domination of the paradox and the phrase; but he has a clear head and a stately way of expressing himself; he is willing, in a hurried age, to write leisurely and serenely, out of an acquaintance with his subject which is far more than merely superficial; and, above all, he has shown that his studies and his enthusiasms are by preference directed to the best things.

MR. BINYON'S POEMS.

Porphyryon: and Other Poems. By Laurence Binyon. (Grant Richards.)

MR. LAURENCE BINYON has essayed a poem of greater compass than the modern versifier generally ventures to launch himself upon. Porphyryon, a narrative in five books, occupies some fifteen hundred lines. And this is in itself satisfactory. There is one glory of the lyric, and another of the epic, indeed; but an ambitious young poet is well advised not to shirk the challenge to his staying powers, which the effort of continuous composition implies. The idea of the poem, borrowed from Rufinus' Historia Monachorum, is briefly this. A young ascetic is visited in his desert cell by a vision of ideal beauty, which as suddenly quits him. He pursues her into the world, hoping once again to recover that rapture. But the cities yield her not, neither Antioch with its pomp of wanton luxury, nor the shock of arms in the breach of a beleaguered fortress. She who came in solitude may not be found amid the greater solitude of the homes and haunts of men. Only in the agony of tragic death does the beatific vision gleam once more upon the exalted senses of the youth. In Porphyriion there are many things to charm, things delicately apprehended and delicately said, touches of a mind uncommonly sensitive to the glory and loveliness of the world. Certain passages linger in the memory; this description of the first faint perturbations in the lad's hermit soul:

"Now, at calm evening, the just-waving boughs

Of the lone tree began to trouble him:
Almost he had arisen, following swift
As after beckoning hands. Now every dawn
At once disrobed him of tranquillity.
Fever had taken him; and he was wrought
Into perpetual strangeness, visited
By rumours and bright hauntings from the world.

And now the noon intolerable grew:
The very rock, hanging about him, seemed
To listen for his footfall, and the stream
Commented, whispering to the rushes. Ah,
The little lizard, blinking in the sun,
Was spying on his soul!"

Or again, this fine realisation of the moment when Porphyriion has surmounted the last mountain-ridge which bars him from the world, and stands looking through the night towards the great Syrian plain:

"When on the infinite horizon, lo!
Sending an herald clearness, upward stole
Tranquil and vast, over the world, the moon.

Delicately as when a sculptor charms
The ignorant clay to liberate his dream,
Out of the yielding dark with subtle ray
And imperceptible touch she moulded hill
And valley, beauteous undulation mild,
Inlaid with silver estuary and stream,
Until her solid world created shines
Before her, and the hearts of men with peace,
That is not theirs, disquiets: peopled now
Is her dominion; she in far-off towns
Has lighted clear a long-awaited lamp
For many a lover, or set an end to toil,
Or terribly invokes the brazen lip
Of trumpets blown to Fate, where men besieged

For desperate sally buckle their bright arms.
All these, that the cheered wanderer on his height

In fancy sees, the lover's secret kiss,
The mirth-flushed faces thronging through the streets,

And ships upon the glimmering wave, and flowers

In sleeping gardens, and encounters fierce,
And revellers with lifted cups, and men
In prison bowed, that move not for their chains,

And sacred faces of the newly dead;
All with a mystery of gentle light
She visits, and in her deep charm includes."

Mr. Binyon has mastered many of the mysteries of modern blank verse, so soft and various with its artfully disposed accents and resolved feet and distributed pause. Yet we are bound to say that, for all its grace, the poem fails as a whole to stimulate or to satisfy. It lacks fibre, strenuousness, the dramatic instinct. The theme suggests its moments of tragedy, but the tragic handling is absent. The emotion does not thrill; it is without breadth and simplicity—above all, without strength of treatment. The very abundance of beauty in the poem wars against its effectiveness; the outlines are blurred in indistinct prettiness; you cannot, so to speak, see the wood for the trees. To take an instance. Porphyriion bursts into a hall of revel at Antioch, and is enslaved by a woman, not her whom he sought. Mr. Binyon was bound to use the utmost resources of his art to make this woman vivid, convincing. Actually, of three women described, she is the least visualised, the least defined. The two women whom Porphyriion passes by allure more; and so the scene is robbed of its climax.

Our feeling as regards "Porphyriion" extends also to the other poems printed with it. We recognise the refinement, the scholarship, the poetic intention of all that Mr. Binyon writes. But there is so little of it that appears really inevitable, that impresses us with an immediate intuition of something necessary to be said. This, however, arrests us, as a more than usually authentic utterance:

"MAY EVENING.

So late the rustling shower was heard:
Yet now the æry west is still.
The wet leaves flash, and lightly stirred
Great drops out of the lilac spill.
Peacefully blown, the ashen clouds
Uncertain height on height of sky.
Here, as I wander, beauty crowds
In freshness keen upon my eye.

Now the shorn turf a glowing green
Takes in the mossy cedar's shade;
And through the poplar's trembling screen
Fires of the evening blush and fade.
Each way my marvelling senses feel
Swift odour, light, and luminous hue
Of leaf and flower upon them steal:
The songs of birds pierce my heart through.

The tulip clear, like yellow flame,
Burns upward from the gloomy mould:
As though for passion forth they came.
Red hearts of peonies unfold:
And perfumes tender, sweet, intense,
Enter me, delicate as a blade.
The lilac odour wounds my sense,
Of the rich rose I am afraid."

That is felt; and it has atmosphere. Yet has not another written:

"The winds that in the garden toss
The Guelder-roses give me pain,
Alarm me with the dread of loss,
Exhaust me with the dream of gain"?

Must we select another poem for especial mention, it should be "Martha"—a fantastic London tragedy, beautifully imagined and powerfully rendered, with precisely that directness, that grip of the essential and exclusion of the superfluous, the absence of which we have regretted in "Porphyriion."

AN OBSERVER IN MALAY.

Studies in Brown Humanity. By Hugh Clifford. (Grant Richards.)

IN his new volume, Mr. Clifford, at the beginning of the sketch entitled "At the Heels of White Man," expresses his anxiety as to the state of England's account in the Day-book of the Recording Angel "for the good and the bad we have done—both with the most excellent intentions." The intentions will, no doubt, count for something, though, of course, every nation's conquests are paved with good intentions; or it may be that the Recording Angel, looking compassionately at the strife of hearts, may disdain to enter into the Eternal Book the facts of a struggle which has the reward of its righteousness even on this earth—in victory and lasting greatness, or in defeat and humiliation.

And, also, love will count for much. If the opinion of a looker-on from afar is worth anything, Mr. Clifford's anxiety about his country's record is needless. To the Malays whom he governs, instructs, and guides he is the embodiment of the intentions, of the conscience and might of his race. And of all the nations conquering distant territories in the name of the most excellent intentions, England alone sends out men who, with such a transparent sincerity of feeling, can speak, as Mr. Clifford does, of the place of toil and exile as "the land which is very dear to me, where the best years of my life have been spent"—and where (I would stake my right hand on it) his name is pronounced with respect and affection by those brown men about whom he writes.

All these studies are on a high level of interest, though not all on the same level. The descriptive chapters, results of personal observation, seem to me the most interesting. And, indeed, in a book of this kind it is the author's personality which awakens the greatest interest; it shapes itself before one in the ring of sentences, it is seen between the lines—like the progress of a traveller in the jungle that may be traced by the sound of the parang chopping the swaying creepers, while the man himself is glimpsed, now and then, indistinct and passing between the trees. Thus in his very vagueness of appearance, the writer seen through the leaves of his book becomes a fascinating companion in a land of fascination.

It is when dealing with the aspects of nature that Mr. Clifford is most convincing. He looks upon them lovingly, for the land is "very dear to him," and he records his cherished impressions so that the forest, the great flood, the jungle, the rapid river, and the menacing rock dwell in the memory of the reader long after the book is closed. He does not say anything, in so many words, of his affection for those who live amid the scenes he describes so well, but his humanity is large enough to pardon us if we suspect him of such a rare weakness. In his preface he expresses his regret at not having the gifts (whatever they may be) of the kailyard school, or—looking up to a very different plane—the genius of Mr. Barrie. He has, however, gifts of his own, and his genius has served his country and his fortunes in another direction. Yet it is when attempting what he professes himself unable to do, in telling us the simple story of Umat the punkah-puller, with unaffected simplicity and with half-concealed tenderness, that he comes nearest to artistic achievement.

Each study in this volume presents some idea, illustrated by a fact told without artifice, but with an effective sureness of knowledge. The story of Tukang Burok's love, related in the old man's own words, conveys the very breath of Malay thought and speech. In "His Little Bill" the coolie, Lim Teng Wah, facing his debtor, stands very distinct before us, an insignificant and tragic victim of fate with whom he had quarrelled to the death over a matter of seven dollars and sixty-eight cents. The story of the "Schooner with a Past" may be heard, from the Straits eastward, with many variations. Out in the Pacific the schooner becomes a cutter, and the pearl-divers are replaced by the Black-birds of the Labour Trade. But Mr. Clifford's variation is very good. There is a passage in it—a trifle—just the diver as seen coming up from the depths, that in its dozen lines or so attains to distinct artistic value. And, scattered through the book, there are many other passages of almost equal descriptive excellence.

Nevertheless, to apply artistic standards to this book would be a fundamental error in appreciation. Like faith, enthusiasm, or heroism, art veils part of the truth of life to make the rest appear more splendid, inspiring, or sinister. And this book is only truth, interesting and futile, truth unadorned, simple and straightforward. The Resident of Pahang has the devoted friendship of Umat, the punkah-puller, he has an individual faculty of vision, a large sympathy, and the scrupulous consciousness of the good and evil in his hands. He may well rest content with such gifts. One cannot expect to be, at the same time, a ruler of men and an irreproachable player on the flute.

JOSEPH CONRAD.

BRIEFER MENTION.

Points of View, and Other Poems. By G. Colmore. (Gay & Bird.)

"THESE soliloquies," says the author, "deal mostly with one particular moral offence considered from the stand-points of those who sin and those who sit in judgment." They do; and, which is worse, they deal with this offence not tragically, but casuistically, in the fashion for which Browning will have to answer at the last day. They are less poems than studies in ethical pathology. Mrs. Colmore muses in a garden:

"But my thoughts still circle, wheel-like,
Round the thing I want to know,
What the other women feel like
When the paths they follow go
From the sunlight of the hillside
To the valley down below."

The theme is a thoroughly morbid one, and the quality of sheer poetic force displayed in the handling is not sufficient to raise it into the spheres of art. Nine-tenths of the matter is not fused or illumined at all. This is not poetry:

"For 'owever bad I seems,
And 'owever much to blame,
It's 'eavingly vot a woman dreams,
Before she comes to shame."

No more is this:

"And later on I said I'd go
And fetch my husband from his club,
And drive him to a flower-show
To see some bulbs he wants to grow,
And some new foreign shrub."

It is not all quite as bald as this, but to this level it constantly tends to sink; and at the best the verse is rhetorical merely, untouched by beauty and vexing the spirit. We think it a pity, for Mrs. Colmore has shown in an earlier volume that she has an undeniable, if slender, lyric and elegiac gift.

Egypt in the Nineteenth Century; or, Mehemet Ali and his Successors until the British Occupation of 1882. By D. A. Cameron. (Smith, Elder.)

EGYPT is a land with a future. It is also a land about which, at the present moment, clusters a multitude of conflicting imperial interests of a very practical kind. Any book, therefore, which sets the mind of the every-day person upon the right line of outlook and retrospect is of importance. Such a book is Mr. Cameron's; for its straightforward arrangement, its clear method, its lucid style, and for the businesslike atmosphere of practical common sense which pervades it, it would not be easy to praise it overmuch. The story begins with the domination of that unique body the Mamelukes—but here are the landmarks as Mr. Cameron discerns them:

"... Nelson and Napoleon, Mehemet Ali's massacre of the Mamelukes, Ibrahim's victory at Konia, Napier at Acre; Waghorn's Overland Route, De Lesseps' Canal, the revolt of Arâbi, and Lord Wolseley's triumph at Tel-el-Kebir. These, again, cluster into one fact, the long struggle between England and France for the control of the Egyptian route to India."

And meanwhile what of the Egyptians, the legitimate owners of the soil? Through the story of rival claimants for sovereignty, told with the aplomb of the excited imperialist, the patriotic Briton, enthusiastic for law, order, and punctual dividends, you catch glimpses of a Helot race toiling first for one master then for another, drained of their life-blood to supply the luxury of the Mamelukes, digging canals with their fingernails to forward the ambition of Mehemet Ali, oppressed and despised by whoever for the moment might be their master—the sons of the men who, when Europe was sparsely inhabited by savage tribes and the Tartars were barbarous nomads, upreared the pyramids and read the skies.

The Life of the Rev. James Morison, D.D. With Six Portraits. By William Adamson, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

PRINCIPAL MORISON was a favourable specimen of what is probably an almost extinct school of Scotch divines. He was a man of first-rate abilities, which he had cultivated strenuously; of spirituality, and he made of it a social force; of natural eloquence, and he used it to the highest ends he knew. So far as the wider questions of the century—indeed, so far as the great literature of the world was concerned, he does not count. Fate cast his lot in a provincial sphere. His school was Edinburgh University in its darkest hour; his career was determined by circumstances and his own predilection: a Presbyterian pulpit and a place among the preachers of a secession from a sect. Within the narrow limits of such a career he gave evidence of magnanimity. He set himself early to work to modify the more tigerish aspect of Calvin's doctrine of election, and manfully stood to his guns when he was arraigned before the assembly of his peers, and was formally excommunicated. But he was probably the one man of first-rate ability among them, and by his ejection the outcast gained rather than lost. A useful and honourable career came to an end in 1893. Here are the last words of Mr. Gladstone's oration on the occasion of his funeral:

"Our hearts are sore with sense of loss, and sometimes we think it cannot be that he has gone, and that we shall never hear his gentle word or see his kindly face again on earth. Yet as we recall alike his life and death, his warfare and his victory, his splendid service here and his rest now with Christ, we, looking up to his Lord and ours, sum up all we think and all we feel in the one word—Hallelujah."

Dr. Adamson has done his work admirably. The most indifferent reader will hardly fail to catch the contagion of his earnestness and enthusiasm.

Life and Letters of Thomas Kilby Smith, Brevet Major-General, United States Volunteers, 1820-1887. By his Son, Walter George Smith. (Putnam's Sons.)

GENERAL SMITH was a busy man, an enthusiastic soldier, and from his youth upwards accustomed to do things on a large scale. Especially was he accustomed during the evil days and nights of the Civil War to write to his mother, his wife, and his other friends and relatives at a length which fills the thoughtful reviewer with astonishment. Everything he had to say was necessarily of interest. He was in the thick of things, he was no end of an excellent officer; but he was cursed by fate with a pen of electrical agility, and a style that scintillated with the cheapest glitter of colonial rhetoric. Here is a passage taken quite by hazard; it occurs in a familiar letter written to his mother:

"The North-western Indians are up in arms to renew the massacres that chilled us with horror in the annals of the early pioneers. Again is the reeking scalp torn from the living victim's head. Again is the unborn child torn quivering from its mother's womb, and cast quivering upon her pulseless heart; again is the torch applied to the settler's cabin, the forts and blockhouse besieged by the ruthless savage, the tomahawk and rifle ever busied in their murderous work."

However, Mr. Smith has been well advised in publishing these letters. They furnish valuable landmarks of the course of events, they abound in interesting touches to illustrate the characters of men prominent in affairs, and between their lines may be discerned the notes of a strong and amiable character.

THE ACADEMY SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1898.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE DESTROYER.

BY BENJAMIN SWIFT.

This remarkable book, the third novel by the author of Nancy Noon and The Tormentor, is dedicated to Maurice Maeterlinck in these words: "Sir, I offer these rude Northern chapters, not because they are fit to be offered, but because even a rude gift may be allowed to express a sincere admiration." Here is a fragment of dialogue which explains the title of this powerful study. A girl (later she marries a wreck of a man who goes mad on his wedding night) has asked Dr. Bode, who owns a private asylum, "what mostly helps to fill a place like this?"

"Ah, what interest have you in that?"

"I'm not a baby, and I don't shudder like mamma."

"I'm glad, then," he said. "Your sex is generally cowardly in face of scientific truths. . . . It's the war god who most fills our home here."

"The war god?"

"Yes. There are so many of them! But I mean Love. Love is a war god, not easy-going at all, as weak novelists make out, but terrible, he. Hundreds here are all shot through by his arrows."

"Love is a Destroyer, then?"

"Yes, he may become a Destroyer in two ways. I mean if you obey him to excess, and also if you disobey him altogether."

Mr. Swift has brain and a point of view. (T. Fisher Unwin. 266 pp. 6s.)

THE ROMANCE OF ZION CHAPEL.

BY RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

In The Quest of the Golden Girl Mr. Le Gallienne was gay; here for the most part he is sad. The manner is, however, the same, the admixture of Prose Fancies, and human nature as he would like it to be; and there is the same appeal to the teens. The story tells of the Rev. Theophilus Londonderry, minister of New Zion Chapel, Coalchester, and his love for Jenny, his landlady's daughter, and after of the arrival of Isabel Strong, reciter, and his love for her. And once he kissed Isabel on the vestry stairs, and Jenny saw it, and straightway she sickened, and in time, after many chapters, died. Whereupon Theophilus Londonderry mourned for a while, and then found solace, first in a prima donna, and then in Isabel Strong once more; finally falling sick of consumption himself. And the end of it all was that Isabel opened a sealed packet and produced a phial containing a green liquid, and pouring some into two glasses of port, Theophilus and she each drank one, and thus passed away together. And "Whoso would say of these two lives, 'How sad!' let him consider the quality of his own happiness; and whoso would regard the life of Theophilus Londonderry as a failure, let him, too, consider the value of his own success." A juvenile book with some pretty writing in it. (John Lane. 297 pp. 3s. 6d.)

MRS. DE LA RUE SMYTHE.

BY RICCARDO STEPHENS.

Mr. Anthony Hope having written the Dolly Dialogues, Mr. Stephens was stirred to produce this work—or so we imagine. The narrator of these conversations is one Dr. Tregenna, and the topics are diversified and very modern, such as Governesses and Simplicity, Duty and the Classes, Manners and the Masses. Here is a specimen: "'I am a firm believer,' Mrs. Smythe said, 'in Providence.' This generous admission, an unsolicited testimonial, would, I was sure, be of the greatest use to Providence, when applying for any situations where the highest references were required." The book weighs more than any work of frivolity ought to do, and the cover is disfigured by a positively atrocious design, which, on the evidence of the title-page, we learn to be the work of Mr. Charles Robinson. May there be some mistake! (Bliss, Sands & Co. 292 pp. 6s.)

THE LOST LAIRD.

BY J. E. MUDDOCK.

Another Jacobite story. The leaves in—where was it?—Vallombrosa did not fall thicklier than the glib products of historical romancers. "Some months had passed since the hopes of the Stuarts and of the Jacobites alike had been for ever extinguished on the fatal field of Culloden, though the Highland glens were still being scoured for rebels, and no one who valued his life and his liberty dare express sympathy with the hunted Prince." That is the beginning. And there's plenty of it to follow. Mr. Muddock is no believer in ellipses, he tells everything. (Digby & Long. 323 pp. 6s.)

HOW I DISHED THE DON.

BY JO VANNY.

A book with such a title should be popular just now in America. Mr. Jo Vanny tells his stories from the standpoint of a bagman. All are Spanish in character, the last a description of a bull fight in the historic present. There is a certain jauntiness in the book which may be found attractive by some. (Digby & Long. 236 pp. 3s. 6d.)

MARS.

BY S. DARLING BARKER.

Mars is one of those heroines whom an author allows to smoke cigarettes, and talk slang, and do twenty "shocking" things under cover of the often-repeated adjectives "wayward," "original," "impulsive." When Lord Bewdley—proposing—says, "There is no reason why we should not hit it off together," Mars replies, "So we can; come into the forest and let us shy at bottles; it will do you more good than stumbling through this love-making." But there came a time when "most of the day was occupied with dressmakers." A pleasant, amusing, unimportant, love-story. (Hutchinson & Co. 340 pp. 6s.)

A GALAXY GIRL, AND OTHER STORIES.

BY LINCOLN SPRINGFIELD.

The "Galaxy Girl," the first of these four stories, is a pleasant tale of a wicked baronet who fells his wife to the ground, killing her. He takes her body away in an actress's dress-basket and throws it into a well. The rest is detectives, and false accusation, and suicide. (W. Thacker & Co. 319 pp. 6s.)

SEÑORITA MONTENAR.

BY ARCHER P. CROUCH.

A stirring romance of the War of Chilian Independence. The hero, John Wildash, an ex-lieutenant of the English navy, has been cashiered for striking a superior officer, but is now given a commission on the Chilian ship O'Higgins, which sails under Lord Cochrane against the frigates of Spain. There is plenty of fighting and adventure, and Wildash's love of a haughty Spanish girl is not so hopeless as it looks at first. (Smith, Elder & Co. 376 pp. 6s.)

UP FOR THE GREEN.

BY H. A. HINKSON.

A rattling story of the Irish Rebellion of 1798, by the author of Golden Lads and Girls. The author has founded several of his incidents on the personal recollections of one Samuel Riley, a Cork man, who was captured by the rebels while on his way to Dublin in September, 1798. There is the usual love match, uniting loyalist and rebel families. (Lawrence & Bullen. 327 pp. 6s.)

PAUL BECK.

BY M. McDONNELL BODKIN, Q.C.

Paul Beck is described as "the rule-of-thumb detective," and we have here a number of smartly told stories of his exploits. These concern a diamond robbery, a murder by poisoning, a case of swindling at cards, and other crimes. Each story ends with a snap like this: "'I will hang the man,' interposed Mr. Beck with a touch of returning cheerfulness. And he did." (C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd. 204 pp. 3s. 6d.)

BY VIRTUE OF HIS OFFICE.

This is the type of love-story in which the failure of two people to marry each other is compensated—after lifelong bitterness—by the marriage of their children. "His soul winged its way into the unknown land. . . . And so the two plighted their troth for ever." It is an old recipe, and it has been worked out here in the old way. (Jarrold & Sons. 317 pp. 3s. 6d.)

LADY JEZEBEL.

An unpleasant story laid in a lone fen country, where Mrs. Grant, or "Lady Jezebel," as the country side calls her, dwells under suspicion of having murdered two husbands. The first husband turns out to be alive and to be confined in her dreary "haunted" house—a leper. "Give me some brandy, I feel weak," says one of the characters on whom the duty falls of revealing the unholy mystery. The reader wants it too. (C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd. 267 pp. 6s.)

BY ROWLAND GREY.

The whole thing passed quickly and silently. Then Diego quietly lifted the twitching body from the chair, and placed it on the floor. 'Now we can divide more conveniently,' he said."

It is strong meat, but if such matters are to come into fiction, Mr. Waite's is a good way to introduce them.

* * * *

A Soldier of Manhattan, and his Adventures at Ticonderoga and Quebec.
By Joseph A. Altsheler. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THE home supply of historical novels is so large that we cannot see any reason why it should be reinforced from abroad—particularly if the novel is of indifferent quality. Mr. Joseph A. Altsheler, we take it, is a native of the United States of America, and his Soldier of Manhattan is of very indifferent quality indeed—nay, more, it may be justly described in common parlance as "pretty bad." His story covers about the same ground as Robert Louis Stevenson's fine ballad about Ticonderoga—like that it even introduces a Highland officer—and Gilbert Parker's Seats of the Mighty, and by comparison even with the latter his performance is not worth mention. But there is a point of view from which it may well be taken note of, though only to be condemned. Mr. Joseph A. Altsheler would seem to have told his story for no other purpose than to prove that the American soldier was in those troublous times of George III. not only as good as the British, but "a darned sight" better—the which is supererogatory at this time of day, and altogether beside any purpose of art. There is a British officer named Culverhouse, who is clearly meant to be good-natured, stupid, conceited, and entirely typical of his country. Here is a passage concerning an adventure of a scouting party in the backwoods, of which Culverhouse is one, and Zebedee, a backwoods "boy," is another:

"We paused again by a little brook that whispered a song as it threw coils of silver over the pebbles.

'I suggest that we go no further,' said Culverhouse, as he gasped for breath. 'It is not becoming in an officer in His Majesty's service to fly thus from any danger at all, far less from any danger that he cannot see, and that he does not even know to exist.'

'The danger's real enough, I tell you,' said Zebedee. 'Them woods behind you are swarming with the Hurons, an' they mean to have us.'

'I suppose it's as you say,' said Culverhouse. 'I'm willing to admit I do not know much about this manner of making war.'

'What queer people these red fellows are!' said Culverhouse again, meditatively. 'And how they violate all the rules of war!' . . . 'And what a sanguinary desire they evince to obtain our scalps!' continued Culverhouse. He felt for his hair, which was very abundant, and then said ruefully to me, 'To think I should be threatened with such a fate. I, who have danced with a princess of the blood royal!'

There is a good deal more of such skimble-skamble stuff, which sets forth no possible person at all, but a creature of mere farce, and of farce with an animus.

* * * *

Niobe. By Jonas Lie.
(W. Heinemann.)

REVIEWS.

Cross Trails. By Victor Waite.
(Methuen & Co.)

MR. WAITE is a stalwart recruit to the ranks of romance makers. We can say that at the outset emphatically and without qualification. He has a vigorous gift of narrative, and his sympathies are with action and mystery. Nature is not more careless of the single life than he. In the first few chapters of this very lengthy—too lengthy—story men die like flies, brained and poignarded and shot; yet every death is all in the reader's interest. The mortality is less frequent later in the book, but only because occasion does not demand it, not because Mr. Waite has repented. We are glad to say that such repentance is not in him.

As for the story itself, it is, for 180 pages, absorbing: to get the eyes from the paper requires a physical wrench; but at p. 181 the second part begins, and we have for ever left South America and its murderous Gauchos for the uninspiring sheep farms of New Zealand, and thenceforward the interest is partly submerged, and a man and woman of no value whatever to the main idea are introduced, and there are the beginnings of an injury to the seventh commandment, together with other unnecessary accessories; and a corresponding prolixity of style makes it possible for our eyes to leave the paper again and again of their own accord. The book, by the way, does not end until p. 456, so that there is some work in store for these eyes if they are conscientious.

The story is of three roving Englishmen in the Argentine, one of whom possesses a chart of hidden treasure, dating from the days of Drake's pursuit of the Spanish galleons. This paper is the objective of a Gaucho named Pedro Diaz: and how one of the Englishmen is killed in a magnificent fight against odds, and how the others escape, and how they quarrel and Edwards alone remains, and how he is followed hot foot, leaving murder continuously in his wake, until he at last escapes on board a Yankee skipper's ship and Pedro Diaz again possesses the chart, it is the business of Part 1 to relate, and Part 1 does so with splendid spirit and force; Part 2 shows the deterioration of Edwards and the subsequent search for treasure and frustration all round, and most heartily we wish it were better. Let us quote from Part 1 a cold-blooded scene:

"'Now to business,' the landlord said, when they had drunk. 'Certainly,' said Pedro, with a glance at Diego; 'we will proceed to business.'

He took from under his poncho a small roll of Argentine paper money and a heavy belt and flung them on the table. As he emptied out the glittering contents of the belt, the landlord's eyes sparkled more brightly than the gold, and he glanced cautiously at Pedro with an expectant expression.

'Is that window safe?' asked Diego. He rose to close the shutter. When he had made it fast, he had to pass behind the landlord's seat to go back to his own; as he did so, something glistened in his hand. With a swift movement he placed his left hand over the landlord's mouth and bent back his head, while, with the right, he drew the 'facou' quickly across the man's throat with an upward turn. There was a stifled cry and a gurgle.

Niobe is throughout reminiscent of Ibsen's last drama and there can be no longer any hesitation in adding Jonas Lie's name to the roll of Northern pessimists. In Niobe and in John Gabriel Borkman there is the same central idea of the utter unrelenting selfishness of mankind. Every character in the novel, as in the play, lives, moves, and has his being without the slightest regard for those around him. Moreover, both Borkman and Kjel (who might be called the hero of Lie's novel) are the victims of the same tragedy: speculation ruins both. It is against this modern spirit of speculation that Lie, who now always writes with a most clearly defined purpose, is preaching. He is no humorist—Schulteiss, who might have relieved the gloom somewhat, is a sorrowful and grotesque figure—and Niobe does not make pleasant reading by any means. It is, as it is evidently meant to be, "all tears." The last scene is rather too melodramatic, and just lacks the touch of the inevitable. Kjel, by his wild speculation, has killed his father and dragged the whole family into ruin. His mother "stood as if paralysed—her face pale with despair. A shadow of madness came over her face.

She heard again the 'woe, woe'—long wailings in the air, like a supernatural shriek.

She saw Minka sitting talking, and striking out with her arms like an automatic puppet, distorted—creaking of emptiness.

And there was Endre, with no future before him, walking about preaching dynamite.

Then suddenly she saw Kjel before her with the convict's collar of iron round his neck.

Her rigid face became ashy grey, corpse-like, as she glided into the lumber-room.

She quietly searched among Arnt's things for his tin box with the dynamite cartridges, which he had hidden away, then seized the axe, and, with a wild cry of terror, struck the fatal blow. . . ."

No, Niobe is certainly not an exhilarating book.

* * * *

A Departure from Tradition. By Rosaline Masson.
(Bliss, Sands & Co.)

THE title-story is the best. Authors of short stories do generally manage to put the best foot foremost in a volume. It is of a young wedded couple, whereof the grey mare considers herself, not without reason, the better horse, and proposes to her husband that he shall keep house while she pursues her studies in literature and science. Naturally he makes a hash of it, but, under the advice of an ingenious friend, proposes to replace all the servants by young and pretty lady-helps, thus bringing about a rapid reversion to the normal order of domestic things. The story borders on farce, but it is told with some humour.

"My wife got up. 'I am now going to my study, dear,' she said sweetly. 'I must ask you to see that I am not interrupted till luncheon.' At the door she turned and gave me one look.

I took down a list of all the things the cook wanted, and promised to telegraph to London for them. I told her there was a man there who got my cigars and everything for me, and he would see to it; but still I left her looking unsatisfied.

But the cook was not all. The housemaid waylaid me in the passage. She wanted to know about the thorough-cleaning, and if James (so his name wasn't William) was to blacken the boots. I said that certainly James was to blacken the boots: he seemed an idle fellow; and I told her I strongly objected to the process of thorough-cleaning, and would never sanction it. She might get up in the night, if she liked, and 'thorough-clean'; but the rooms were always to present their normal aspect during the day. Then I tried to escape; but the smart table-maid was waiting for me at the front door. She wanted to know about 'Sundays out,' and if James was to carry up her coals for her. I told her that I was sure James would carry anything she wanted, and that she must settle about her Sundays herself: I never interfered with people's religious observances. She was the only one who looked pleased."

The remaining contents of the book are unequal in merit: some of them are mere padding, and, what padding should not be, thin. "Not Tender, but True" has more matter in it than some of its fellows. A collier, grieving grimly for the loss of his first wife, is bidden by his master to take a second. He proposes to a widow, who relates the event:

"'Deed, ma'am, I never kent the man, the ill-faced chiel that he is! I canna mind that I ever spoke wi' him in all my life. And he came in and threw two rings on to my knee, and, says he, 'They're Annie's rings, ye can tak' them or leave them,' says he. 'Then I'll leave them!' says I, 'and will you please to leave me, John Forbes!' says I."

Miss Masson writes tolerably good English; but that is becoming really a common trick. How grateful should we be if some of these ready writers would but restrain their pens until they have made sure that there really is something that they want, and need, to say.

"MAINLY ABOUT MYSELF."

To the two volumes of his Plays, Pleasant and Unpleasant, published this week, Mr. Bernard Shaw contributes lengthy and very readable prefaces. We shall notice these remarkable plays (seven in all) at length on another occasion: in the meantime we quote from one of the prefaces the following little essay in autobiography:

"There is an old saying that if a man has not fallen in love before forty, he had better not fall in love after. I long ago perceived that this rule applied to many other matters as well: for example, to the writing of plays; and I made a rough memorandum for my own guidance that unless I could produce at least half a dozen plays before I was forty, I had better let playwriting alone. It was not so easy to comply with this provision as might be supposed. Not that I lacked the dramatist's gift. As far as that is concerned, I have encountered no limit but my own laziness to my power of conjuring up imaginary people in imaginary places, and finding pretexts for theatrical scenes between them. But to obtain a livelihood by this insane gift I must have conjured so as to interest not only my own imagination, but that of at least some seventy or a hundred thousand contemporary London playgoers. To fulfil this condition was hopelessly out of my power. I had no taste for what is called popular art, no respect for popular morality, no belief in popular religion, no admiration for popular heroics. As an Irishman I could pretend to patriotism neither for the country I had abandoned nor the country that had ruined it. As a humane person I detested violence and slaughter, whether in war, sport, or the butcher's yard. I was a Socialist, detesting our anarchical scramble for money, and believing in equality as the only possible permanent basis of social organization, discipline, subordination, good manners, and selection of fit persons for high functions. Fashionable life, open on indulgent terms to unencumbered 'brilliant' persons, I could not endure, even if I had not feared its demoralizing effect on a character which required looking after as much as my own. I was neither a sceptic nor a cynic in these matters: I simply understood life differently from the average respectable man; and as I certainly enjoyed myself more—mostly in ways which would have made him unbearably miserable—I was not splenetic over our variance.

Judge, then, how impossible it was for me to write fiction that should delight the public. In my nonage I had tried to obtain a foothold in literature by writing novels, and had actually produced five long works in that form without getting further than an encouraging compliment or two from the most dignified of the London and American publishers, who unanimously declined to venture their capital upon me. Now it is clear that a novel cannot be too bad to be worth publishing, provided it is a novel at all, and not merely an ineptitude. It certainly is possible for a novel to be too good to be worth publishing; but I doubt if this was the case with mine. I might indeed have consoled myself by saying with Whately, 'These silly people don't know their own silly business'; for when these novels of mine did subsequently blunder into type to fill up gaps in Socialist magazines financed by generous friends, one or two specimens took shallow root like weeds, and trip me up from time to time to this day. But I was convinced that the publishers' view was commercially sound by getting just then a clue to my real condition from a friend of mine, a physician who had devoted himself specially to ophthalmic surgery. He tested my eyesight one evening, and informed me that it was quite uninteresting to him because it was 'normal.' I naturally took this to mean that it was like everybody else's; but he rejected this construction as paradoxical, and hastened to explain to me that I was an exceptional and highly fortunate person optically, 'normal' sight conferring the power of seeing things accurately, and being enjoyed by only about ten per cent. of the population, the remaining ninety per cent. being abnormal. I immediately perceived the explanation of my want of success in fiction. My mind's eye, like my body's, was 'normal': it saw things differently from other people's eyes, and saw them better.

This revelation produced a considerable effect on me. At first it struck me that I might live by selling my works to the ten per cent. who were like myself; but a moment's reflection showed me that these must all be as penniless as I, and that we could not live by, so to speak, taking in one another's washing. How to earn daily bread by my pen was then the problem. Had I been a practical common-sense money-loving Englishman, the matter would have been easy enough: I should have put on a pair of abnormal spectacles and aberrated my vision to the liking of the ninety per cent. of potential bookbuyers. But I was so prodigiously self-satisfied with my superiority, so flattered by my abnormal normality, that the resource of hypocrisy never occurred to me. Better see rightly on a pound a week than squint on a million. The question was, how to get the pound a week. The matter, once I gave up writing novels, was not so very difficult. Every despot must have one disloyal subject to keep him sane. Even Louis the Eleventh had to tolerate his confessor, standing for the eternal against the temporal throne. Democracy has now handed the sceptre of the despot to the sovereign people; but they, too, must have their confessor, whom they call Critic. Criticism is not only medicinally salutary: it has positive popular attractions in its cruelty, its gladiatorship, and the gratification given to envy by its attacks on the great, and to enthusiasm by its praises. It may say things which many would like to say, but dare not, and indeed for want of skill could not even if they durst. Its iconoclasms, seditious, and blasphemous, if well turned, tickle those whom they shock; so that the critic adds the privileges of the court jester to those of the confessor. Garrick, had he called Dr. Johnson Punch, would have spoken profoundly and wittingly; whereas Dr. Johnson, in hurling that epithet at him, was but picking up the cheapest sneer an actor is subject to.

It was as Punch, then, that I emerged from obscurity. All I had to do was to open my normal eyes, and with my utmost literary skill put the case exactly as it struck me, or describe the thing exactly as I saw it, to be applauded as the most humorously extravagant paradoxer in London. The only reproach with which I became familiar was the everlasting 'Why can you not be serious?' Soon my privileges were enormous and my wealth immense. I had a prominent place reserved for me on a prominent journal every week to say my say as if I were the most important person in the kingdom. My pleasing toil was to report upon all the works of fine art the capital of the world can attract to its exhibitions, its opera house, its concerts and its theatres. The classes eagerly read my essays: the masses patiently listened to my harangues. I enjoyed the immunities of impecuniosity with the opportunities of a millionaire. If ever there was a man without a grievance, I was that man.

But alas! the world grew younger as I grew older: its vision cleared as mine dimmed: it began to read with the naked eye the writing on the wall which now began to remind me that the age of spectacles was at hand. My opportunities were still there; nay, they multiplied tenfold; but the strength and youth to cope with them began to fail, and to need eking out with the shifty cunning of experience. I had to shirk the platform; to economize my health; even to take holidays. In my weekly columns, which I once filled full from a magic well that never ran dry or lost its sparkle provided I pumped hard enough, I began to repeat myself; to fall into a style which, to my great peril, was recognized as at least partly serious; to find the pump tiring me and the water lower in the well; and, worst symptom of all, to reflect with little tremors on the fact that my mystic wealth could not, like the money for which other men threw it away, be stored up against my second childhood. The younger generation, reared in an enlightenment unknown to my schooldays, came knocking at the door too: I glanced back at my old columns and realized that I had timidly botched at thirty what newer men do now with gay confidence in their cradles. I listened to their vigorous knocks with exultation for the race, with penurious alarm for my own old age. When I talked to this generation, it called me Mister, and with its frank, charming humanity, respected me as one who had done good work in my time. Mr. Pinero wrote a long play to shew that people of my age were on the shelf; and I laughed at him with the wrong side of my mouth.

It was at this bitter moment that my fellow citizens, who had previously repudiated all my offers of political service, contemptuously allowed me to become a vestryman—me, the author of Widowers' Houses! Then, like any other harmless useful creature, I took the first step rearward. Up to that fateful day I had never stopped pumping to spoon up the spilt drops of my well into bottles. Time enough for that when the well was empty. But now I listened to the voice of the publisher for the first time since he had refused to listen to mine. I turned over my articles again; but to serve up the weekly paper of five years ago as a novelty!—no: I had not yet fallen so low, though I see that degradation looming before me as an agricultural labourer sees the workhouse. So I said 'I will begin with small sins: I will publish my plays.'

APHORISMS AND EPIGRAMS.

VIII.—Joubert.

"INSPIRE, but don't write," was Le Brun's maxim, and Joubert added: "This is what should be urged upon the professors of the present day. But they will write, and will not resemble the Muses." "Ah, well!" exclaimed Sainte-Beuve, after quoting them both, "he [Joubert] followed his own counsel. Among his friends he was audience, orchestra, and conductor." Here are some of the literary maxims which earned for Joubert this praise from Sainte-Beuve:

Before employing a fine word, find a place for it.

Liquid, flowing words are the choicest and the best, if language is regarded as music. But when it is considered as a picture, then there are rough words which are very telling—they make their mark.

Every perfectly appropriate expression strikes a chord in the mind; and if the mind is satisfied, it cares little whether the ear be pleased.

Ideas never lack words: it is the words that lack ideas. As soon as an idea is fully perfected, the word discovers and presents itself, and clothes the idea.

With some writers the style grows out of the thoughts; with others the thoughts grow out of the style.

The art of saying well what one thinks, is different from the faculty of thinking. The latter may be very deep and lofty and far-reaching, while the former is altogether wanting. The gift of expression is not the same as that of conception: the first makes great writers, the second great minds. And, further, there are those who, while fully endowed with both qualities, cannot always give them play, and often find that the one acts without the other. How many people have a pen and no ink! How many others have pen and ink but no paper—no matter upon which to exercise their style!

Thoughts there are that need no embodying, no form, no expression. It is enough to hint at them vaguely: a word, and they are heard and seen.

Every author has his dictionary and his manner. He is fond of words of a certain tone and colour and form, of certain turns he gives his style, of a characteristic phraseology which has become customary to him. He has, in a measure, his own grammar, and pronunciation and genre, his own foibles and oddities.

All styles are good if only they are employed with taste. There are countless expressions which are faults in some writers and beauties in others.

The true mark of the epistolary style is cheerfulness and urbanity.

The mind must rest as well as work. To write too much ruins it; to leave off writing rusts it.

Three things are necessary to the producing of a good book: talent, art, and a practised hand—in other words, nature, industry, and habit.

The end of a book should always call to mind its beginning.

The last word should be the last word. It is like a finishing touch given to colour; there is nothing more to add. But what precaution is needed in order not to put the last word first!

A good literary judgment is a faculty that attains its full growth very slowly.

The pleasure of comedy lies in laughter; that of tragedy in tears. But the laughter must be agreeable, and the tears comely, if they are to honour the poet. In other words, tragedy and comedy must make us laugh and weep decently. Nothing that forces a laugh or compels a tear is commendable.

It does not suffice so to write as to catch and hold the reader's attention: it has also to be satisfied.

That cannot be called polite literature which affords no pleasure, and is ill at ease. Criticism, even, should not be without its charms. When quite devoid of all amenities it is no longer literary.

It is not enough for a book to be good; it must be the work of a good author. We must see in it not only its own beauties, but also the excellence of the master's hand. It is always the idea of the workman that causes admiration. The traces of his work, the impression of his special skill, give the book, when in other respects carefully finished, an additional attraction. Talent ought so to treat whatever it handles, and so to place its works before us, that it may be able, without affectation, to reflect itself in them: Simul denique eluceat opus et artifex.

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1896.

No. 1355, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

|   | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
|   | £ s. d. | £ s. d.      | £ s. d.    |
| If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .               | 0 13 0  | 0 6 6        | 0 3 3      |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom. . . . .                | 0 15 3  | 0 7 8        | 0 3 10     |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . . | 0 18 0  | 0 9 0        | 0 4 6      |

The ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

IT is quite a question whether an author ought to be allowed to spring seven distinct plays on the public in the way that Mr. Bernard Shaw has just done. A play is as complete a thing as a novel, though it mercifully leaves more to the reader's imagination. Yet whereas novels come out one by one, Mr. Shaw's plays come out seven at a blow. What is the critic to do? Already, we observe, the two volumes have been reviewed at considerable length in various places, and the spectacle of the critics struggling to get a firm hold of their author has afforded some entertainment. Probably it has afforded Mr. Shaw more: his pleasure in the embarrassment of his critics is, we believe, intense.

MEANWHILE, in spite of our remonstrances, we express the opinion that the publication of Mr. Shaw's plays is a remarkable occurrence in literature. But what will the dramatist do now? Age, he asserts in his preface, is upon him; he has collected his works; his career as a novelist ended years ago; he frolics as a musical critic no more; his critical work on the drama must begin soon to pall upon him. What is the next step? Parliament?

MR. MURRAY's new edition of Byron is to extend to twelve volumes, and to include some thirty new poems. The first volume, which has just appeared, is portly. It is bound in grey-blue cloth studded with B's beneath coronets; and a miniature of Byron dated 1815 forms the frontispiece. The poems have been edited by Mr. Ernest Hartley Coleridge, who is the son of the Rev. Derwent Coleridge, and grandson of the poet. Mr. Coleridge is the editor of the edition of his grandfather's letters which Mr. Heinemann published a year or so ago.

FOR a large collection of Shakespeare lore our readers are referred to the Birmingham Weekly Post of April 16. Among other matters is a letter which has cunningly been extracted by the editor from Sir Henry Irving. The Lyceum actor-manager writes:

"The popularity of Shakespeare on the stage is pretty well attested by the fact that at the present moment he is being played at three theatres in London. There are superior persons, I believe, who say that he is popular only with playgoers who never read him. My experience is that a Shakespearean production is always a stimulus to the reading as well as the playgoing public. There is no symptom that the double interest in Shakespeare is likely to decline within any calculable period."

MEANWHILE, further proof of the Bard's popularity comes from Bliss, Sands & Co., whose business premises, by the way, are almost in the shadow of the Lyceum. They send us an early volume in a new edition of Shakespeare's Plays, intended, we presume, to combat the Temple series. The price is sixpence net for the cloth, and a shilling net for the leather; and the form is quite simple and attractive, although we could wish the ink were darker. The title of the new edition is, however, a little difficult—the "Pocket Falstaff." "Pocket Falstaff" is rather like a contradiction in terms. Our imagination cannot conceive it.

THE fabulist, "T. W. H. C.," whose gift for inventing parables has already been exercised very entertainingly in these columns, sends the following:

"THE ETERNAL BOOK.

Quoth the miller's wife to the miller: 'An thou visit this fair, thou shalt buy us all a fairing; as, a top for Jack, ribands and a necklet of bugle for Marian, and combs for each of the maids.'

'And for thyself?'

'For myself, good luck, I desire a sweet love-tale stuffed with piteous words.'

"RÉCHAUFFÉ.

A piper stood in the market-place and piped a tune so villainous that the people assailed him with blows.

And next year he came again with a new tune that set them all a-dancing.

And they filled his hat with ha'pence, and said 'Excellent!—now play something else!'

And being more or less put to it for matter, the piper ventured on the tune for which, a twelvemonth back, he had suffered blows.

And the people were ravished."

"SHOCKING.

'Go carefully with young So-and-So.'

'Ah, why?'

'He brought me his first story: and as it was pretty good, I told him that we might deal. And then he asked me what sum I intended to pay him on account of royalties.'

'Dear, dear, dear, dear, dear, dear, dear!'

MR. HARRY FURNISS's new satirical magazine, Fair Game, made its appearance this week. It is, for a monthly, novel in size, approximating to that of the Illustrated London News. Within the covers Mr. Furniss and his associates combine the functions of censor and humorist. Mr. Furniss's own drawings have all the spirit and ingenuity that we expect from him; the literary contents are bright and various; and paper and print excellent.

THE Diamond Jubilee impulse still stirs among the larger publishing firms. There are at this moment several gigantic publications in progress whose sole purpose is the magnification of the Empire—its army, its ramifications, its navy, and its diversity. Its diversity is perhaps more insisted upon than any other characteristic in Messrs. Cassell's contribution to patriotism which lies before us—The Queen's Empire. In this remarkable album of pictures, some of which are, by the way, miracles of photographic art, extremes are continually meeting. A scene of chess players in Ludgate Circus faces one of snake charmers in India; Boulter's Lock comes next to a regatta at Malta, which is followed by the boat club at Rangoon; a Skye crofter's home is contrasted with a Burmese village; ice-boat sailing on the St. Lawrence with "glorious Goodwood"; and so on. To this extraordinary, yet fascinating and instructive, jumble of scenes Mr. Arnold Forster, M.P., puts a preface.

ANOTHER Diamond Jubilee work is the volume entitled Nelson and His Times which Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode have printed for Messrs. Harmsworth. The authors are Lord Charles Beresford and Mr. H. W. Wilson, and we can conceive of nothing more patriotic. A free distribution of this book in our villages, and the Navy would be overstocked. The history is illustrated with almost unparalleled completeness.

WRITING in the British Weekly a Man of Kent gives the following information concerning the new Cornish Magazine: "The credit of the idea belongs to Mr. Joseph Pollard, of Truro, who has bookshops in no fewer than three Cornish towns—successful bookshops too, I am glad to say, and especially glad at a time when booksellers are everywhere complaining. Mr. Pollard is raising a capital of from £1,500 to £2,000, a large part of which has been already subscribed by patriotic Cornishmen. Mr. Quiller Couch, the most eminent of living Cornish writers, and a devoted lover of his county, on being approached by Mr. Pollard, undertook the editorship. The periodical will be planned on the newest lines, will give stories by Cornish authors, biographies of eminent Cornishmen, accounts of famous buildings in Cornwall, and will give special attention to the doings of Cornishmen abroad."

IN the preface which Mr. Barrie has written for Mr. G. W. Cable's novel, The Grandissimes, a new edition of which is promised, he will be found to describe his own adventures in New Orleans. Mr. Barrie has also written an introduction to a work by Mrs. Oliphant.

THINGS rarely happen singly. Hard upon Mr. Laurence Housman's Spikenard comes a slender volume of devotional poetry entitled The Little Christian Year, which proceeds from the Unicorn Press. The author, who remains anonymous, has set forth to provide the Holy Days and Seasons of the year with a suitable thought. This, for example, is pretty. The period is After Easter, and the companion passage: "He showed Himself alive after His passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days"—

"IN THE WOOD.

I spied a flower on Easter Day,
Though soil'd snow under hedges lay,
And fields were brown and skys were grey.

And, each day since, some herald thing,
A bursting bud, or whirring wing,
Bears witness to the waxing Spring."

Epiphany has this:

"IN THE FIELDS.

A hundred stars, a thousand stars
Begem to-night the splendid skies;
A thousand stars, a million stars,
And, 'neath each one, He lies, He lies!"

Ascension Day this:

"AT SUNSET.

A sounding rain at dawn to-day
In silver flashes earthward rang:
Then slow, huge clouds, distressful, grey,
Hid all the laughing blue away,
And draggled birds no longer sang.

But now at eve the sounding rain,
Which fell at dawn, like silver ringing,
Returns in pomp to heaven again;
Purple and gold adorn its train,
And all the happy birds are singing."

And this quatrain accompanies The Transfiguration:

"ON THE MOUNTAIN AFTER VESPERS.

The Preacher was so harsh and loud,
His Christ so far, his God so grim:
The voice is sweet from yon soft cloud,
'This is My Son; O, hear ye Him!'"

BETWEEN "five shillings net" and "six shillings subject to discount" there is, we presume, sixpence to choose. Hence the public may be gratified that Mr. Meredith's Essay on Comedy, which appeared last year at the former price, has now been added to the new edition of Mr. Meredith's works at the latter. We prefer it in the former.

A SUGGESTION made to us last November by a correspondent, that an Academy of forty women writers should be formed in England, in addition to an Academy of forty male writers, may have seemed merely whimsical; but at this moment the same idea is being broached in Paris. Indeed, a list of forty women writers has been drawn up, and it includes members so widely separated as Gyp and Louise Michel. A woman's Academy would be a curious experiment; and in one particular it might work more satisfactorily than the Academy already in existence: the formal calls which male candidates find so trying and humiliating would be, to the ladies, merely "part of the fun."

MR. CLIVE HOLLAND writes: "In your issue of April 9, a short notice of my recent novel, An Egyptian Coquette, appeared, in which your reviewer described it as 'a piece of very unreal sensationalism.' From this verdict I have no intention of here dissenting. But, as I presume it was the finding of Taosiri's body in a state of perfect preservation although not embalmed that gave rise at least in part to this opinion of the book, the publication of the enclosed account (of a Times correspondent writing from Cairo two days after my book appeared) of the finding of bodies in a tomb under almost precisely, and certainly under most strangely, similar circumstances may prove of interest, with parallel passages from the book. Thanking you in anticipation for the insertion of this letter and enclosure in your paper:

The Times Correspondent.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY AT THEBES.

"Cairo: April 4.

As a sequel to his discovery of the tomb of King Thothmes III. at Thebes, M. Loret has discovered and opened the tomb of Amenophis II., a king of the XVIIIth Dynasty, who reigned some 1,500 years B.C. The find is among the most interesting ever made in Egypt.

The tomb is entered by a steep, inclined gallery, which terminates in a well of some 26 ft. in depth. . . .

None of the four bodies has been embalmed, but, owing to the dryness of the atmosphere, they are all in a most complete state of preservation, with the features perfect. . . . they have the appearance of being asleep. . . .

The . . . tomb is a chamber of magnificent proportions in perfect preservation. The roof supported by massive square columns. . . the walls are entirely covered with paintings, the colours of which are as vivid as if laid on only yesterday. . . . and contains the mummy intact, with chaplets of flowers. . . ."

"THEN you're going home to tell the public all about us in 'Plain Tales from the Veldt'?" So spake an interviewer to Mr. Rudyard Kipling at Buluwayo. "No, no," said Mr. Kipling, as the conversation is reported in the Pall Mall, "nothing of the kind, so don't you run away with the idea! Mine is only a flying visit. I'm not up here for work, and am fairly at sea in these parts. Besides, the town will have grown out of all knowledge in another twelve months." "So on the whole you've been favourably impressed, Mr. Kipling?" "Impressed! I have never been so impressed with any community in the whole world."

MRS. HARRIET M. M. HALL sends us the following commentary on Mr. Stephen Phillips's poem, "Christ in Hades":

Pagan is thy conception of that stay
Which Christ, the Lord of Life, made in full sway

Of power gained o'er Death, and to reclaim Spirits imprisoned—who then in His name,
And to His call attentive, were set free!
He went into their dreary midst to speak;
Not the cold Shade thou pictured Him to be,
In words magniloquent. No treach'rous fame
Was His—vain hopes to raise amongst the dead
Passing as false elusive gleams that streak
Their darkness—never bringing dawn. He sped
Throughout those regions misty to give light
By words Divine—and His alone that might:
Thy Christ is dumb—he is not God our Head.

The Crook of the Bough, the new novel by the author of A Girl in the Karpathians, is the result of a long journey through the Balkan States, where Miss Menie Muriel Dowie (Mrs. Henry Norman) found the motive and a great part of the environment. The hero and heroine embody the strange relation, half attraction, half repulsion, of East and West, and the story is concerned with the development of the character of an English girl, the sister of a prominent young politician, in Constantinople, and of a Turk, a member of the Young Turkey party, in London.

When War Breaks Out is the title of a little paper-backed booklet containing a forecast of Britain's next great naval struggle. Mr. H. W. Wilson and Mr. Arnold White are the joint authors. The plan of the book is simple: Andrew D. Jones receives his instructions as war correspondent to Cable's Weekly, a New York journal, on September 10, 1900. He is asked to "concisely describe," in his letters, "the strategic, naval, industrial, and financial condition of Britain during the war with Russia and France"; and his letters follow. The lessons enforced after a thrilling narrative of Britain's hard won victory are these: that for a generation or two we must be less patient with petty encroachments, and that we must organise a food supply against war-time.

EDITORS of literary reviews are liable to odd requests. Accompanying a set of unrhymed lines comes, from Cyprus, this letter: "I have the honour to inform you I am able to contribute with original poetry, translated into simple English phrases, poetry being the ideas and not the verses. In many books I saw verses turned into prosaic style and presented to readers as poetry equally well. Moreover, you could easily get my poems versified." The poet who cheerfully suggests that one may easily get his raw material versified is a new kind.

PRIMROSES.

A MAN of feeling whom I knew used to wear his ties according to the colour of the days. On Sundays he would beam in cloth of gold; on Mondays, in a moony whiteness, Tuesdays were sacred to the red of war, and Wednesdays to Wodin's blue; Thursday's token I forget, but the green badge of liberty on Friday and the saturnine hues which closed the cycle of the week made, I remember, an impressive contrast. Without following this precedent to the letter—for a man cannot hang his sentiments round his neck—there are yet some time-relations in nature and art which call for sympathetic recognition. If the days have no fixed colours, at least the seasons have their poets. No man, it may be presumed, would recite Gray's Elegy in front of Niagara Falls; but it needs a subtler sense of harmony to discover the conditions of time and place in which each poet may be most appropriately read, and the signs are apt to escape a generation which has deserted its Shepherd's Calendar for the Citizen's Diary. A recent Quarterly reviewer, for instance, wrote Mr. William Watson down at the voice of blustering March. The selection was a little hasty, perhaps, for Mr. Watson's elegiac musings suggest to a sensitive ear more of November's torpor at the back of the "wild west wind." But if this method be pursued, it should be possible to present poetic incumbents to most of the seasons of the year. June is Tennyson's, by right indefeasible of music as deep-chested as her own. Milton should be read in August, when nature seems to move in blank verse. February's short days of quickening life I reserve for Mrs. Alice Meynell, whose fabric and texture of mind compel her to brevity and self-repression, to restrained emotions and reticent epithets, to thoughts which stretch into the future, and blossom beneath another sun. Mrs. Meynell's Sonnet in February is the locus classicus for the language of the month. It enlarges that vocabulary of silence which a recent writer on Style has dwelt upon, and the "procession of negatives," out of which the summer is fashioned, is brought visibly before our eyes by the seventeen words or phrases of denial in the course of its fourteen lines.

Some months in my calendar are still vacant; but when April is opening the heart, and Peter Bell's primrose points in great shining patches the modest moral of its being, I take down Wordsworth from the shelf. He belongs to April by every right which nature and sympathy can confer. He was born in April, and he died in April, and the mild, caressing fragrance of the month seems to have settled on his senses. At no other season of the year does man come nearer to nature than when the mysterious thrill of spring is moving all created things, and no poet confessed less consciously to his sympathy with this manifestation than the singer of the primrose and its month. His very faults were April follies, sins against tact and worldliness in art, impossible to the measured experience and stately rhythm of the year's maturity. His faults were his virtues in excess, the qualities of April rendered too literally.

On April 20, 1798, Wordsworth began "Peter Bell," and the hundredth anniversary of this event may well be utilised, in an age when centenaries are popular, to mark the lesson of the Wordsworthian primrose. It may even help us to understand the problem of the "Primrose Sphinx," whose statue was heaped the day before with bunches of this humble flower. What was it, then, that Peter Bell missed, when

"In vain, through every changeful year,
Did Nature lead him as before;
A primrose by a river's brim
A yellow primrose was to him,
And it was nothing more"?

What more should the yellow primrose be to the countless Peter Bells of this world, to whom no miraculous revelation is vouchsafed, even by so modest an instrument as the faithful ass in Wordsworth's parable? The poet has answered our question himself, both directly and by implication. When he tells us that

"To me the meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears,"

he is stating a literal truth of his experience. When he writes that

"One impulse from a vernal wood
May teach you more of man,
Of moral evil and of good,
Than all the sages can,"

he is recording a fixed article of creed by which he regulated his conduct. And these aphorisms lead us to the stanzas on "The Primrose of the Rock," where Wordsworth categorically describes the precepts which the flower reveals. The stanzas were written at Rydal in 1831, but the poet "first spied that primrose tuft, and marked it for his own," on an April day in 1802, four years after the composition of the story about Peter's primrose on the river's brim. Prof. Knight quotes the following note from Dorothy Wordsworth's Grasmere Journal:

"April 24, 1802.—We walked in the evening to Rydal. Coleridge and I lingered behind. We all stood to look at Glow-worm Rock—a primrose that grew there, and just looked out on the road from its own sheltered bower."

It helps us to realise how deeply the meaning of the yellow primrose was graven on Wordsworth's mind, when we remember that nearly twenty years elapsed between this grave adventure and its poetic record. In this centenary week of the inception of "Peter Bell" we may duly pause for a moment to respect the April flower. Wordsworth calls it in all seriousness:

"A lasting link in Nature's chain
From highest heaven let down!"

And he defines the association as follows:

"The flowers, still faithful to the stems,
Their fellowship renew;
The stems are faithful to the root
That worketh out of view;
And to the rock the root adheres
In every fibre true.

Close clings to earth the living rock,
Though threatening still to fall;
The earth is constant to her sphere;
And God upholds them all:
So blooms this lonely Plant, nor dreads
Her annual funeral.

Here closed the meditative strain;
But air breathed soft that day, . . .
And to the Primrose of the Rock
I gave this after-lay.

I sang—Let myriads of bright flowers,
Like Thee, in field and grove
Revive unenvied; mightier far
Than tremblings that reprove
Our vernal tendencies to hope,
Is God's redeeming love. . . .

Sin-blighted though we are, we too,
The reasoning Sons of Men,
From one oblivious winter called
Shall rise and breathe again;
And in eternal summer lose
Our three-score years and ten.

To humbleness of heart descends
This prescience from on high,
The faith that elevates the just
Before and when they die;
And makes each soul a separate heaven,
A court for Deity."

Faith, hope, and love—while April is painting our woods and copses with tufts of this green-gold flower, it is not seemly to add a word to this prescient vision from on high. The promise is abundantly fulfilled, from a single impulse of spring to teach more morality than all the sages can, and we can better appreciate the genuine ring of the rest of the "Poems of Sentiment and Reflection" which Wordsworth wrote a hundred years ago.

But one word in conclusion. If it is the function of the primrose to convert Peter Bell by an "hour of feeling"; if Wordsworth's poems are to help us to realise our capacity for perfection as a primrose is perfect in April, is there anything so intrinsically inappropriate in the choice of that flower for Disraeli's honour? To many people the Primrose League seems a kind of sentimental monster, born of bad grammar and bred by snobs. But though it be true that Disraeli's sole mention of the primrose was as a possible flavouring for a salad, yet the Wordsworthian primrose may well have been his favourite flower. The man who professed himself on the side of the angels against the apes, who cast ridicule, in Tancred, on the "fish" theory of derivation, was surely of the faith which makes each soul a court for Deity. The "something more" which the primrose revealed to Wordsworth was familiar to Disraeli too, and he would be rash who should say that the emblem of April's awakening is inappropriate to either.

L. M.

THREE BARDS OF THE BUSH.

II.—EDWARD DYSON.

"We specked as boys o'er worked-out ground,
By littered flat and muddy stream,
We watched the whim horse trudging round,
And rode upon the circling beam,
Within the old uproarious mill,
Fed mad, insatiable stamps,
Mined peaceful gorge and gusty hill
With pau, and pick, and gad, and drill,
And knew the stir of sudden camps.
By yellow dams in summer days
We paddled at the tow; for weeks
Went seeking up the tortuous ways
Of gullies deep and hidden creeks.

We worked the shallow leads in style,
And hunted fortune down the drives,
And missed her, mostly by a mile—
Once by a yard or so. The while
We lived untrammelled, easy lives

Through blazing days upon the brace
We laboured, and when night had passed
Beheld the glory and the grace
Of wondrous dawns in bushlands vast.
We heard the burdened timbers groan
In deep mines murmurous as the seas
On long, lone shores by drear winds blown,
We've seen heroic deeds, and known
The diggers' joys and tragedies."

Such is Mr. Dyson's experience. And having all the time—superimposed upon his love of the untrammelled easy life of the miner—a sense of romance (which helped him to those excellent lines :

" We heard the burdened timbers groan
In deep mines murmurous of the seas
On long, lone shores by drear winds blown")

he has been able on leaving behind him the old life to remember and perpetuate some of its best impressions.

Mr. Lawson gives us the outlook of the somewhat saturnine, yet clear-sighted, Sun-downer; Mr. Paterson, as we shall see, is the stockman's and rough rider's bard—a galloping, dare-devil muse is his; Mr. Dyson rounds off the types with the miner.

Here from within we have the Australian miner complete: the young miner, the old miner, the miner in luck and the miner out of it, the miner in love and the miner in peril. Mr. Dyson knows it all. We do not care particularly for his descriptive ballads of accident, somewhat in the manner of our own "Dagonet"; nor for his deliberately comic efforts, the most ambitious of which is the story of the emu with such a passion for sitting that it sat on the bald head of its drunken owner until he died; nor for the realistic studies of improvident and vicious settlers. What we prize in Mr. Dyson, as in Mr. Lawson, is the presentation of some observed oddity of human nature. We like, for example, the pathetic case of Old Ben, in whom, despite his years and decrepitude, the old gold fever still burned, no matter how often rebuffs chilled it:

" 'I'm off on the Wallaby!' cries Old Ben,
And his pipe is lit, and his swag is rolled;
'There is nothing here for us old-time men,
But up north, I hear, they are on the gold.'
And he shuffles off with a feeble stride,
With his ragged swag and his billy black;
He is making tracks for the other side,
O'er the river deep, on the Great Divide;
But at night, dead beat, he travels back."

'Are you bound out back, Ben?' the children cry,
And they peer at him through the fence,
and shout.

'Well, it's so long, Ben,' as he hobbles by,
With his 'Ay, ay, sonny lad—tramping out!'

On his back he's bearing his house and bed,
As he bore them both in his manhood's
pride,

Pressing on each day till his strength has fled,

By the force of a dauntless spirit led—
There's a rush somewhere on the Sydney side."

And here is a little piece of quiet, humorous observation from Mr. Dyson:

" There's a fresh track down the paddock
Through the light woods to the creek,
And I notice Billy Craddock
And Maloney do not speak,
And The Snag is slyly bitter
When he's criticising Bill,
And there's quite a foreign glitter
On the fellows at the mill.

Sid M'Mahou's turned out a dandy,
With a masher coat and tie,
And the engine-driver, Sandy,
Curls his whiskers on the sly:
All the boys wear paper collars,
And their tombstone shirts of nights,
So it's ten to one in dollars
There's a new girl up at White's."

The poet goes on to bemoan the consequences of Miss Kitty's attractions:

" With the gloves we have no battle;
Now they sneak away and moon
Round with White, discussing cattle
All the Sunday afternoon.
There's a want of old uprightness,
Too, has come upon the push,
And a sort of cold politeness
That's not called for in the bush.

They're all off, too, in that quarter;
Kate goes several times a week
Seeing Andy Kelly's daughter,
Jimmy's sister, up the creek;
And this difference seems a pity,
Since their chances are so slim—
While they're running after Kitty,
She is running after Jim."

This is capitally done. Mr. Dyson has described the immemorial impingement of fresh femininity on the rough camp, with much freshness. We wish he had oftener enjoyed this mood.

It is the kind of thing we want from him. To describe mining life even in rattling verse, with much diversity of metre, is for us, at any rate, not enough. The poet must keep one eye on his fellow-men: he must be very vigilant for the human interest. These Sydney Bulletin bards—for it is to the stimulating encouragement of Mr. J. F. Archibald, the editor of that paper, that the three volumes before us probably are due—will, we trust, come to understand this even more than they now do. The great poet's endowment of beauty and penetration is not theirs; but they have a power of words; they know how to present their observations attractively; they live in a country where human nature is far less complex than with us, and therefore more easily studied; and they have clear eyes and quick sympathies. What we want from them is human documents. We want their eyes to take the line of least resistance, and their invention to be taxed only in the composition of stirring verse. Few men can be makers; but it is within the compass of all to be recorders, and those that are humble enough can record faithfully.

THE WEEK.

THE event of the week has been the inauguration of Mr. Murray's new and exhaustive edition of Lord Byron's Poetical Works. The first volume contains just over 500 octavo pages. The frontispiece portrait is from a miniature painted in 1815 by James Holmes. We refer in our "Notes and News" column to Mr. Ernest Hartley Coleridge's editorship; and in our "Book Market" column we give the opinions of a number of leading booksellers on the possibility of a revival of interest in Byron's poetry. The feature of Mr. Murray's edition is admittedly the completeness and correctness of its text; and in the following passage Mr. Coleridge explains the results he has arrived at in this direction:

"The text of the present issue of Lord Byron's Poetical Works is based on that of The Works of Lord Byron, in six volumes, 12mo, which was published by John Murray in 1831. That edition followed the text of the successive issues of plays and poems which appeared in the author's lifetime, and were subject to his own revision, or that of Gifford and other accredited readers. A more or less thorough collation of the printed volumes with the MSS. which were at Moore's disposal, yielded a number of variorum readings which have appeared in subsequent editions published by John Murray. Fresh collations of the text of individual poems with the original MSS. have been made from time to time, with the result that the text of the latest edition (one-vol. 8vo, 1891) includes some emendations, and has been supplemented by additional variants. Textual errors of more or less importance, which had crept into the numerous editions which succeeded the seventeen-volume edition of 1832, were in some instances corrected, but in others passed over. For the purposes of the present edition the printed text has been collated with all the MSS. which passed through Moore's hands, and, also, for the first time, with MSS. of the following plays and poems, viz., English Bards, and Scotch Reviewers; Childe Harold, Canto IV.; Don Juan, Cantos VI.-XVI.; Werner; The Deformed Transformed; Lara; Parisina; The Prophecy of Dante; The Vision of Judgment; The Age of Bronze; The Island. The only works of any importance which have been printed direct from the text of the first edition, without reference to the MSS., are the following, which appeared in The Liberal (1822-23), viz.: Heaven and Earth, The Blues, and Morgante Maggiore.

A new and, it is believed, an improved punctuation has been adopted. In this respect Byron did not profess to prepare his MSS. for the press, and the punctuation, for which Gifford is mainly responsible, has been reconsidered with reference solely to the meaning and interpretation of the sentences as they occur.

In the Hours of Idleness and other Early Poems, the typography of the first four editions, as a rule, has been preserved. A uniform typography in accordance with modern use has been adopted for all poems of later date. Variants, being the readings of one or more MSS. or of successive editions, are printed in italics immediately below the text. They are marked by Roman numerals. Words and lines through which the author has drawn his pen in the MSS. or Revises are marked MS. erased.

Poems and plays are given, so far as possible, in chronological order. Childe Harold and Don Juan, which were written and published in parts, are printed continuously; and minor poems, including the first four satires, have been arranged in groups according to the date of composition. Epigrams and jeux d'esprit have been placed together, in chronological order, towards the end of the sixth volume. A Bibliography of the poems will immediately precede the Index at the close of the sixth volume.

The edition contains at least thirty hitherto unpublished poems, including fifteen stanzas of the unfinished seventeenth canto of Don Juan, and a considerable fragment of the third part of The Deformed Transformed. The eleven unpublished poems from MSS. preserved at Newstead, which appear in the first volume, are of slight if any literary value, but they reflect with singular clearness and sincerity the temper and aspirations of the tumultuous and moody stripling to whom 'the numbers came,' but who wisely abstained from printing them himself."

The first volume contains those poems, to which Byron appended the note: "The only Apology necessary to be adduced, in extenuation of any errors in the following collection, is, that the Author has not yet completed his nineteenth year." It also contains the Hours in Idleness and the English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

The first volume is issued of a Catalogue of Drawings by British Artists, and Artists of Foreign Origin Working in Great Britain. This work is being compiled by Mr. Laurence Binyon, and will be completed in five or six volumes. The catalogue is arranged in alphabetical order of the artists' names, and owing to the fact that the Museum collection contains so many drawings by artists whose names fall very early in the alphabet, the first volume carries us no farther than the letter C. Of the 353 pages in the volume, the larger number is appropriated to John Wykeham Archer, Thomas Bewick, William Blake, Randolph Caldecott, Edward Calvert, George Chinnery, John Constable, and David Cox. But George Cruikshank exceeds all these. The collection of his sketches is Brobdingnagian; it numbers 3,869 pieces, and occupies 73 pages of the catalogue. Subject to various over-representations of this kind, the collection is fairly proportionate throughout; but the drawings vary greatly in their artistic merit and in the kind of interest they excite. Mr. Binyon writes:

"At one end of the scale the interest is one purely of record, curiosity, and research, as in the case of the topographical sketches or fancy compositions of amateurs like Lady Calcott, Dr. Crotch, the musician, or the famous surgeon, Sir Charles Bell; at the other end it is the interest of fine art in some of its purest forms, as in the accomplished work of early or later masters of water-colour like J. R. Cozens or David Cox, or the exquisite pastoral dreams and harmonies of Edward Calvert."

Mr. Binyon reminds us that besides the drawings actually in its keeping, others of great interest are the property of the Museum by reversion, as, for instance, those bequeathed to the trustees by the Rev. C. J. Sale in 1896, subject to the life-interest of his widow.

THE BOOK MARKET.

IS BYRON READ NOW?

THE VIEWS OF BOOKSELLERS.

TWO new and important editions of Byron's Poetical Works, published by Mr. Murray and Mr. Heinemann, and edited respectively by Mr. Ernest Hartley Coleridge and Mr. William Ernest Henley, are now being offered to the public, after years of comparative inactivity in the issuing of Byron's poetry. Are we to infer that these new editions are produced to meet an ascertained demand? Is Byron's decline in favour—so often alleged—real or imaginary? and if real, is it about to be arrested and to be followed by a reaction? These questions, prompted by the enterprises of Mr. Murray and Mr. Heinemann, are answered below by a number of booksellers to whom we have submitted them. We arrange the replies under the localities from which they come.

LONDON (CITY).

MESSRS. JONES & EVANS write:

"Byron has certainly not sold largely of late years. This is perhaps attributable to the fact that no good edition was available, the current ones being anything but desirable for really good buyers. The present exhaustive editions are certainly called for urgently, if Byron is to be reckoned as a living poet worthy of a permanent edition in good taste, and of proper editing.

No 'boom' need be expected, but a more steady demand than for many years ought decidedly to be looked for, now thoroughly good editions are obtainable. We have many customers who still buy, and, therefore, presumably read and praise Byron, and now we can offer these handsome and valuable reprints we shall hope to make more customers still.

The great drawback is that two editions, so thoroughly well done, are in the market together. Competition of this sort is not a desirable thing when the dignity of letters is considered and the pockets and shelf room of the book-buying public is also considered. Lovers of Byron would have liked to have seen these editions amalgamated. Mr. Murray has the advantage over Mr. Heinemann because of his unrivalled mass of material, but the notes Mr. Henley furnished to his first volume for Mr. Heinemann prove him to be the editor one most desired to see at this work, and if his work could only have been added to the definitive text Mr. Murray alone can give us, the result might have approached perfection. It will be a nice point for the critics to decide, when the two sets are complete, which shall have the permanent place—Mr. Murray's for text, or Mr. Heinemann's for quality of editing and commentary."

LONDON (STRAND).

MESSRS. A. & F. DENNY write:

"In reply to your inquiry, we think there is room for a good edition of Lord Byron's works, but we should hardly think there would be sufficient demand for two such. The sale of library editions has declined of late years on account of the very indifferent choice for buyers. But there is still a very large public for the cheap editions, the sale of which shows no falling off. We should hardly like to prophesy a great Byron stir, although the large paper edition issued by John Murray has been entirely taken up.

Much interest at present centres in the 'Letters,' which are being made such a special feature in these new editions, and great disappointment has been felt by Mr. Henley's admirers at the restrictions which have been placed upon him by the owners of the copyrights of them. To summarise, we think that what one edition loses in editing it gains in completeness, and vice versa."

LONDON (LEICESTER-SQUARE).

MESSRS. BICKERS & SONS write:

"We certainly believe that an exhaustive edition is necessary, and we do not think any decline in sales has happened during recent years. We always have a very steady demand, but we do not anticipate a 'boom.'

We are inclined to believe that great interest in Byron will be revived owing to the new matter which is promised both in the poems and letters."

LONDON (OXFORD-STREET).

MESSRS. TRUSLOVE & HANSON write:

"There is a steady but constant demand for Byron's poems, and, we think, room for one good complete edition. The format of Mr. Murray's new edition is so excellent in every respect that its success is ensured. Book-lovers will not be able to resist it. We are anticipating a good demand for it, but do not think there is likely to be a new Byron reign."

DUBLIN.

MESSRS. HODGES, FIGGIS & Co. write:

"Although not anticipating a great revival of interest in Lord Byron's works, we think that a really good and exhaustive edition would meet with favour at the present time. Many of our customers are keenly interested in the edition about to be issued by Mr. Murray, and we anticipate a good demand for it. We cannot say much about Mr. Henley's edition, as the great delay in publishing the second volume discourages intending purchasers.

On the whole Byron sells fairly well here, and has not shown signs of diminishing popularity during recent years. We find it necessary to keep a good stock of the one-volume editions in both cloth and leather bindings; and the 'Selections,' in the 'Golden Treasury Series,' is constantly inquired for."

BIRMINGHAM.

MR. C. COMBRIDGE writes:

"I do not think there will be an adequate demand for the two expensive new editions.

The demand for Byron's poems the last few years has undoubtedly been gradually decreasing. I think a great increase of Byron's readers most improbable. The demand for Byron with me is very small, and for the past ten years at least I have kept only a small stock of his poetry, for which there has been a very slight demand."

BRISTOL.

MESSRS. GEORGE'S SONS write:

